Once this package settlement of small private claims is nailed down, attention will then focus upon the large pending claims between the United States Government and the Government of Iran. Those claims deal mostly with military equipment and credits. The United States Government attorneys preparing the briefs on those military claims can be expected to expedite their work with a view to reaching a mutually acceptable financial settlement between the White House and the Government of Iran. There exists a judgment fund that is administered by the U.S. Department of Justice that could be tapped for resolving government-to-government claims. It is an open-ended authorization, so it could be used by President Bush without having to come to the Congress anew to meet any financial obligations incurred by the U.S. Government pursuant to a package settlement of government-to-government claims approved by the tribunal.

[From the Washington Post, May 10, 1990]

ACCORD NEAR ON U.S., IRAN SMALL CLAIMS—LARGER DISPUTES REMAIN UNRESOLVED

(By Don Oberdorfer)

The United States and Iran are "very close to agreement" on settling nearly 2,500 small claims arising from the 1979 Iranian revolution, paving the way for faster progress on resolving major financial disputes between the two countries, the State Department announced yesterday.

The announcement came after Tehran Radio said agreement had occurred on the small claims at the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal at The Hague.

No agreement has yet been signed because "some important details remain," the State Department said.

A senior State Department official expressed optimism that the small claims, by far the largest number under litigation at The Hague, can be resolved soon, perhaps even before the next trip to the Netherlands by State Department legal adviser Abraham D. Sofaer and Iranian representatives.

Sources said Sofaer had hoped to wind up the small claims issues at The Hague last week, but was unable to do so when Iran suddenly sought to add another claim to those that had been settled.

State Department officials and—according to Tehran Radio—chief Iranian negotiator Ali Nobari said the issue has nothing to do with release of American hostages held by pro-Iranian groups in Lebanon. From time to time, political leaders in Iran have said the return of Iranian financial assets under discussion at The Hague would hasten the hostages' release, but the United States has consistently rejected such a connection.

Nevertheless, some experts on Iran said that any settlement could be cited by Iranian President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani or others urging release of the hostages as evidence that a more conciliatory policy toward the United States is paying off.

The Bush administration, still smarting from the Iran arms sales scandal in the Reagan administration, has declared it will make no deals to secure release of the remaining U.S. hostages.

At the same time, President Bush instructed the State Department last year to "clear out the underbrush" on claims issues as expeditiously as possible to eliminate this cause of friction with Iran.

In the small claims which are close to settlement, Iran will pay $105 million to 2,370 U.S. claimants mostly private citizens whose property was confiscated or who were not paid for goods and services provided before to the Islamic revolution.

A few of these claims involve loans to Iran made by the U.S. Agency for International Development, officials said.

As part of this package, the United States will pay $400,000 to 108 Iranian claimants.

Still unresolved are the largest claims by Iran against the United States: $2.9 billion that Iran claims to be owed from foreign military sales accounts maintained in this country by the shah's government and $400 million that Iran claims from military equipment purchased by the shah but which the U.S. government refused to deliver.

In addition, an estimated $5 billion in oil claims by major U.S. firms for properties expropriated by the revolutionary government are still outstanding.

Since U.S.-Iran negotiations on claims intensified last summer, a substantial number have been settled each month, usually without publicity.

If progres continues at the current pace, the process could be largely concluded in several months to a year, according to a State Department official.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE WILLIAM J. KIMBLES IV

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, Maryland agriculture lost a good friend with the passing of William J. Kimbles IV. He was well respected in the agricultural community, especially for his efforts on behalf of the Maryland Agricultural Fair Board. As a member of the fair board, he worked tirelessly to promote our county fairs throughout the State. He exemplified the values we hold dear in our rural communities as a husband and father, and as a member of his church, the bank board, and the Maryland Farm Bureau.

Mr. Speaker, a dear friend of mine, Edna M. White, has written a fine testimonial to Mr. Kimbles' memory. I would like to offer her statement to our colleagues for their consideration today.

The members of the Maryland Agricultural Fair Board Chairman, Philip Brendel; Vice President, Joe Free; Secretary, Walter Buck; Executive Committee At Large, Edna M. White; Past President, Joy Swabb and members Frank Downey, John Barton, and Executive Secretary Chris Bloom would like to honor the memory of William J. Kimbles, IV for his outstanding dedication to the Fairs and Shows in the State of Maryland. In his own fair, Queen Anne's County, he was well known as a tireless worker in all aspects of the organization. Mr. Kimbles was heavily involved in improving Maryland agriculture and providing opportunities for the farming communities through his service on the Bank Board and Maryland Farm Bureau. He is survived by his wife Lynn and their four children, who exemplify the values and ideals Mr. Kimbles held dear. His work with children and youth in the community through his church, earned him the respect of his neighbors and friends.

The Maryland Agricultural Fair Board salutes Mr. William J. Kimbles, IV, as a friend and colleague who has supported the agricultural community in the State of Maryland and whose passing will not diminish the legacy he has left his community, family and friends. He was a shining example of what a good citizen should be. If you asked him what his contribution was he probably would have replied: "I haven't done anything extra, just my share." We thank you for your share "Billy". Your works and memory will always be a part of our lives.

MY AUNT CARRIE SILAS HONORED

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, May is Older Americans Month, and although they should be honored every day for their contributions to society, the month of May brings special recognition to our older citizens.

This week in Newark, my Aunt Carrie Silas, a senior citizen of 85, was honored by the North Newark Senior Citizen Center. She has the distinction of having the largest family out of all of the senior citizens at the center. Her branch of the family tree began with 9 children; she now has 36 grandchildren, 63 great-grandchildren, and 5 great-great grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, I think my aunt embodies the proud spirit of so many women who have given their time and talents to build a better future for their families, their communities, and for our entire Nation.

Aunt Carrie has never stopped taking on challenges. She raised her children while also working outside the home most of her life. She managed to find time to pursue other interests, and at age 85, she still likes to travel.

If you asked any of Aunt Carrie's family about the special times they remember most, they would tell you about the fish fries every Friday at her house. They would recall the time she spent knitting and crocheting sweaters and blankets for all of the members of the family.

As Mother's Day approaches, it is fitting that we honor the millions of women like Aunt Carrie who have taught us so many valuable lessons. One of the reasons that our Nation has grown and prospered is because of those who have devoted their time and talents to strengthening the cornerstone of our society, the family. Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues will join me in conveying a message to Aunt Carrie and to all of these special women that their lifelong work is truly valued and appreciated.

THE RAND CORP.'S 40TH BIRTHDAY

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday May 10, 1990

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today both to thank and to congratulate the RAND Corp. on the occasion of its 40th year in service to our Nation. Since its inception as a private, nonprofit corporation, RAND has been a leader in scientific, educational, and political research critical to the welfare and security of America.

A pioneer in the development of space and defense technology since the end of World War II, RAND was responsible for many groundbreaking achievements in these areas vital to our national security in the early days of the cold war. At the same time, its research on Soviet society and East-West relations helped to ease superpower tensions by broadening understanding between the two nations.

Since then, RAND has broadened its scope of research to include feasibility studies on numerous issues including health care financing and education finance reform. These studies coincided with their founding of RAND Graduate School of Policy Analysis which offers specialized training in nearly all areas of public policy research.

RAND recently published the results of its 7-year experiment in curbing drug abuse, Project Alert. The study targeted seventh- and eighth-graders, concentrating on educational programs designed to prevent the use of gateway drugs such as tobacco, alcohol, and marijuana. The results should prove extremely helpful to policymakers in the coming years.

The RAND Corp. has established a reputation as one of the most respected policy research organizations in the country. They are an important national resource. I ask my colleagues to join with me in honoring RAND Corp. for its outstanding work and acknowledging its contributions to our country.

A SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE TO CROATIAN FRATERNAL UNION LODGE NO. 738, NEW BRIGHTON, PA

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today before the full U.S. House of Representatives to designate a special tribute and honor to Croatian Fraternal Union Lodge No. 738 of New Brighton on the worthy occasion of its 60th anniversary.

Chartered April 27, 1930, to promote fraternity, fellowship, and ethnic tradition, lodge No. 738 has carried on the Croatian legacy with meetings conducted in English, honoring liberty and democracy.

"The Beaverites," as lodge No. 738 became known, were the only English-speaking Croatian lodge in Beaver County when chartered. Three of the charter members celebrate with us today. They are: Nick Czetnic of Fallston, Barbara Trgovac of New Brighton R.D. 1, and George J. Slavic of Economy, and I also honor these three individuals.

In addition, it ought to be noted here that 30 lodge members—including two women—served under the American Stars and Stripes in World War II, and, fortunately, were not lost in that conflict.

Today, lodge No. 738 has 346 active members and 640 certificate holders, with quarterly meetings at S.S. Cyril and Methodius Church Social Hall.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I rise before the Congress today to acknowledge Croatian Fraternal Union Lodge No. 738 as a fine and proper example for all fraternal organizations not only in my 4th Congressional District and in Pennsylvania, but also as an excellent example for all fellowship groups nationwide.

THE ROCHESTER INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY'S 1990 HORTON SCHOLARS

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to recognize a special group of student scholars from the Rochester Institute of Technology [RIT] in Rochester, NY. These students have recently received academic scholarships, based on outstanding academic performance at RIT, under the Horton Scholars Program. The endowment fund to support this scholarship program was established in 1987 with the proceeds from a memorable gala event in celebration of my 25th year in the Congress.

The accomplishments of these students in their academic careers at RIT have been exemplary. Candidates for these scholarships must be in good academic standing, demonstrate financial need and be full-time students. From the following descriptions, I think you will agree that this is an exceptional group of students.

Leslie McPherson is studying biomedical photography and plans to pursue a career in biological photography in a medical or research setting. Leslie originally attended the College of Fine and Applied Arts at RIT from 1971 to 1973. Financial commitments forced her to take a leave from school. She has held a wide variety of jobs, ranging from a truck driver and sales clerk to elementary school aide and engineering technical trainee. Due to a progressive hearing loss, she was unable to continue working on a full time basis. After the birth of her daughter, Megan, Leslie decided to return to RIT to complete her bachelor's degree. According to Leslie's academic adviser, she is an outstanding role model. She is an informed consumer of support services and is persistent in addressing her educational needs. Leslie is from Rochester, NY.

John DeBole is a full time MBA student from Grand Island, NY. In addition to his full time studies, John holds a part time position as a research assistant in the office of the president of RIT and also volunteers as a tutor for literacy volunteers in his spare time. John holds a bachelor's degree in electrical engineering and plans to pursue a career which will utilize this financial expertise and technical knowledge as a financial analyst for a technical organization.

David Price is also a graduate student at RIT, working on a master's degree in electrical engineering. David also received his bachelor's degree at RIT in the microelectronic engineering program. David gained valuable work experience during his years at RIT through cooperative education stints at Motorola, Tektronix, and in the Center for Microelectric Engineering at RIT, as a factory manager, a teaching assistant and researcher. David is also a Digital Equipment Corp. Fellow. His hometown is Machias, NY.

Diane Noble is a fourth year accounting major from Canton, NY. She is enrolled in RIT's College of Business, having transferred to RIT after receiving her AAS degree in retail management from Canton Agricultural and Technical College. She has excelled in her academic work at RIT, having earned dean's list grades in her first two quarters at RIT.

David Borkholder, of Hamlin, NY, is a third year student in microelectronic engineering at RIT where he has made the dean's list every quarter. David has already entered the corporate world through a cooperative education experience in Eastman Kodak Co.'s research laboratories and will certainly continue to excel after graduation from RIT.

Mr. Speaker, the caliber and accomplishments of these students makes me very proud to be associated with them and with RIT. I am very confident that the education that they are receiving at the Rochester Institute of Technology will enable them to continue to achieve and to be successful in the years ahead.

THE RAILROAD POLICE CERTIFICATION ACT OF 1990

HON. DENNIS E. ECKART

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation designed to protect this Nation's 2,820 railroad police officers. Titled The Railroad Police Certification Act of 1990, this bill will provide these law enforcement professionals with the necessary authority they need to carry out their sworn duties.

Currently, there are only 42 railroads in the United States that are large enough to have their own police departments. These 42 railroad police departments are responsible for safeguarding 82 percent of the Nation's rail mileage. In an average year, America's railroad police investigated 55,000 crimes—not including trespassing—and made 13,000 arrests for incidents ranging from vandalism to murder. In addition, these same officers also arrested an additional 75,000 individuals for trespassing, having already apprehended, warned and released 300,000 persons without making an arrest.

According to the railroad industry, the problem of cargo theft today exceeds $1 billion annually for all modes of transportation, and statistics gathered by the Association of American Railroads show that claims paid for losses of cargo in the possession of rail carrriers, due to theft and vandalism, have reached as high as $429 million in recent years. These figures do not include property and equipment damage, injury to and theft from employees, and criminal activity which directly affects passengers, patrons, and the general public.

Railroad police personnel are often responsible for the surveillance and protection of sensitive military shipments moving by rail under special tariff or contract arrangements. In the past, this has been accomplished through a system of Rail Surveillance Service [RSS] and Tank Surveillance Service [TSS]. In recent years, however, the Military Traffic Management Command [MTMC] has established Rail Armed Guard Escort Service [RAGES] for some shipments of explosives and extra sensitive material, which require an armed railroad police escort, in view of increased international terrorist activity. The Department of Defense is concerned that railroad police, under certain circumstances, lack sufficient authority to carry out their responsibility. Interstate authority would remedy this shortcoming.

Currently, railroad police officers are granted law enforcement authority through the enactment of statutes by the various State legislatures. Generally, these police powers are based upon employment by a railroad company, residency within the jurisdiction in which this authority is granted, and the successful completion of mandated training and/or certification requirements. The credentials thus received serve both the industry and the public well when confined to situations which arise within the specific jurisdiction. The railroad industry, however, is interstate in nature and is therefore subject to actions which often span multiple territorial limits. Frequently, a crime occurring in one State may not be discovered until the cargo or passenger has passed into another State. The lack of interstate authority on the part of railroad police drastically hampers their investigation authority and, in many cases, nullifies the arrest powers of the railroad police officer seeking to carry out his/her duties. In some instances, it is even conceivable that an officer might be subject to civil or criminal proceedings merely for attempting to do his/her job of protecting company property or the safety of the public.

The legislation I am introducing today, Mr. Speaker, is a simple measure that seeks to confer on these officers the authority to cross jurisdictional boundaries for the purposes of protecting interstate commerce and to safeguard the domestic railway system.

In recognizing the administrative nightmare created for railroad police and their employers by the current statutory treatment, this legislation would provide that any officer employed by a rail carrier and already certified or commissioned under existing State law shall be authorized to enforce the laws of any jurisdiction in which that rail carrier owns property in order to protect both passenger and cargo in interstate commerce. This bill will not confer direct powers to anyone who is not certified or commissioned as a police officer by a State. The legislation will also not tamper with whatever training requirements are mandated by the States prior to the granting of a police commission.

Passenger and freight railroads both have a vested interest in the augmentation of the ability of their police departments to investigate crimes against interstate commerce and the apprehension of the perpetrators of these offenses. It is not uncommon to utilize a task force approach, drawing manpower from multiple companies and also from the public sector, to work on a particular set of circumstances within a given area, as criminal elements show no more respect for company property lines than they do for jurisdictional boundaries.

Federal law already provides the mechanism for the protection of cargo, employees, property, and equipment in interstate commerce by railroad. What is needed is the authority to effectively utilize the manpower resources of the railroad companies for the enforcement of these laws. This is the goal of my legislation. Similar interstate authority was granted to the railroad police employees of Amtrak (see 45 U.S.C. §545(j)). Support for this grant of interstate authority was initially recommended as early as 1971 by the Senate Select Committee on Small Business (See Report on Cargo Theft—Railroad Industry, June 9, 1971) and later by the Federal Railroad Administration in 1973.

Railroad police have a long and proud history of providing valued law enforcement service to both the industry and the public. The officers employed by the rail carriers have enjoyed a close cooperative relationship with Federal, State, and local police agencies, all of whom would be hard pressed to provide the equivalent amount of protection to interstate commerce. Public interest consideration clearly demonstrate the need for railroad police departments to be given the tools to enhance their effectiveness as law enforcement agencies.

I urge the expeditious consideration of this legislation.

SMALL BUSINESS WEEK

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, this week is Small Business Week. Thus, I think it is an appropriate time to comment on the importance of small businesses in the United States. Too often, we tend to focus on larger enterprises, subscribing to the belief that bigger is better. But individual entrepreneurship is the heart of our economic system, the mainstay of capitalism. In an important sense, small business in America is big business.

There are more than 12 million small businesses in the United States. In fact, 97 percent of all American companies are small businesses. A small business is defined as a privately owned business that employs fewer than 500 people. These figures add up, however, as half of all working Americans are employed by small businesses. In addition, small businesses are often the birthplaces of new ideas and the latest technology developments. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, they produce 24 times more inventions than large companies. In the words of Lyndon B. Johnson,

> The small businesses of America are the foundation of our cherished system of free, competitive enterprise . . . and are a fertile source of new ideas and new products to enrich the lives of our citizens and stimulate the growth of our economy.

In accordance with this information, it would seem logical for our Nation to make every effort to foster the growth and well-being of smaller companies. Unfortunately, it appears that many small businesses, particularly in the Northeast, are now encountering what might be called a credit crunch. Bankers, facing increasingly critical regulators, have begun to tighten up loan availability. Naturally, the businesses that are hardest hit are smaller and newer companies. According to a survey conducted by the Massachusetts Industrial Finance Agency, a number of businesses have found that banks have suspended existing lines of credit, renegotiated the terms of credit lines, reevaluated the value of collateral for outstanding loans, and in a few cases, reclassified loans without apparent reason. Other profitable companies with good credit have reported being turned down after applying to renew outstanding loans.

Newspapers, too, give accounts of numerous small businesses that have come across these and other problems. Some fledgling companies that have recently turned profitable, with rising sales, find it impossible to get a borrowing rate lower than 15 percent, plus a 1-percent origination fee. According to Lewis Shattuck, president of the Smaller Business Association of New England, "small-business borrowers are paying an average of 3 to 5 percentage points above the prime rate, more than twice the differential they were paying 12 to 18 months ago." In addition to the banks, corporations, and funds that supply venture capital are becoming more conservative in their investment policies, preferring to invest money in more mature companies. This compounds the entrepreneur's problem in procuring capital to start up or sustain a fledgling business.

It is true that there are opportunities for small companies in foreign markets. Japanese corporations are, increasingly, investing money in ventures that commercial banks will not support. Japanese investment in American industries and properties will give more incentive to the American companies to improve quality and production in order to compete with Japanese businesses.

Even so, let us not lose sight of the fact that our Nation needs to foster conditions that will allow small businesses to compete in today's international economy. Foreign investments provide opportunity, but we cannot allow them to be the primary source of life-support for one of our most significant business sectors. America's economic policies should support our Nation's large population of small businesses. Without them, competition as we know it would all but disappear, the spirit of entrepreneurialism quashed. We need to provide more credit sources and remove regulatory and statutory barriers to stimulate these entrepreneurs.

In the words of one of our Founding Fathers, John Hancock:

> The more people who own little businesses of their own, the safer our country will be, and the better off its cities and towns; for the people who have a stake in their country and their community are its best citizens.

MARKING 5 YEARS OF ONSITE DAY CARE AT B&B ASSOCIATES OF SOUTH WINDSOR, CT

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to note the fifth anniversary of onsite day care at B&B Associates, a printing firm in my district in South Windsor, CT.

We all know that the demographics of the American family have changed dramatically in recent years. These changes have created new challenges for working parents. B&B Associates has been enormously successful in meeting the parenting needs of its 200 employees and creating a healthier and productive environment.

Its onsite day care facility was one of the first such facilities to be licensed in Connecticut and it is one of the smallest companies in the United States to offer onsite day care for its employees. In the last 5 years, B&B employees have not only been liberated from the concern about their children's care but also they have had the pleasure of sharing impcrtant moments with their children. Employees have shared in holiday festivities and the children's creative projects and activities. This has boosted everyone's spirit and sense of community.

Presently, there are only 330 such facilities across the country. There need to be more. B&B is leading the way in meeting family needs, promoting a sense of community, and increasing productivity in a changing society.

I congratulate B&B on its success. In the coming years, we will continue to be faced with challenges in meeting family needs. B&B has set a standard for meeting these needs and improving the American workplace. I hope that its success will be emulated.

Thank you very much.

ALAIR TOWNSEND: A LEADER IN PUBLIC LIFE AND PUBLISHING

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, this evening I have been asked to present the Professional Women in Construction and Allied Industries Business Leadership Award to a woman whose achievements are well known and respected. Alair A. Townsend, publisher of Crain's NY Business, is a superb example of how women can succeed in the world of public service and business. Her career is a reflection of the remarkable effort of an extremely gifted, determined individual. The Professional Women in Construction and Allied Industries recognize that she has set a standard of excellence which can and should be emulated.

As the Assistant Secretary for Management and Budget of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, she was responsible for a massive budget. From this critical position with the Federal Government, she became the first woman to be budget director of New York City. She then served as the deputy mayor for finance and economic development, working to preserve a favorable economic climate for established businesses in New York while making New York a more competitive location for new businesses through the use of a variety of incentives. Two of the most notable examples of her success were the decisions of both NBC and Chase Manhattan Bank not to relocate. In 1989, she was named publisher of the highly regarded Crain's NY Business where she has continued to excel.

I would like to congratulate Alair Townsend on an outstanding career, and on receiving the prestigious Business Leadership Award. It is a tribute that she wholly deserves.

FAIR IS FAIR—SOCIAL SECURITY JUSTICE ACT

HON. JACK BROOKS

OF TEXAS

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER

OF WISCONSIN

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, the Social Security Administration has been selectively refusing to follow court decisions that have favored claimants, and have forced those individuals to bear the costs of hiring lawyers to relitigate already decided legal issues. If the Social Security Administration does not like a circuit court decision, it arrogates the right to refuse to follow it even in the same circuit. This contemptuous behavior, codified by SSA in regulations issued this past January, is simply unfair.

From 1981–1986, the Social Security Administration has tied up 315,000 cases dealing with the issue of medical improvement, even though the claimants had won in nine different Federal circuits. The Social Security Administration not only refused to abide by legal decisions already decided in Federal district courts between circuits—intercircuit—they refuse to apply the decision of the district court in the circuit in which it has already been decided—intracircuit.

One of their tactics is looking at the legal decision so narrowly, as to say that most of the decisions cannot be applied to similar circumstances. From 1985–1990, out of 800 cases decided in Federal district court, the Social Security Administration found only 36 represented the same issue, and that 764 broke new legal ground.

The questions become, how many adverse decisions must the Social Security Administration receive before they can quit forum shopping? Who should bear the costs of individual interpretations of the law—the individual claimant or the Social Security Administration?

The unconscionable behavior of the Social Security Administration has not gone unnoticed, however. The special blue ribbon Federal Courts Study Committee on Judicial Reform condemns this practice in its report to the Congress dated April 2, 1990 (pg. 59–60). The American Bar Association condemned this practice in ABA Resolution No. 114, and called for enactment of a statutory prohibition against both intracircuit and intercircuit nonacquiescence.

This bill forces the Social Security Administration to follow circuit court decisions. It also provides that when the Social Security Administration loses in two circuits, it must seek Supreme Court review, and, if unsuccessful, follow the decision in all circuits. And last, it gives the claimant a viable method of forcing the Social Security Administration to follow decisions, or, in the alternative, seek statutory changes.

This bill protects all our constituents from unfair procedures, and reestablishes the rule of law against unfair regulatory practices.

THE SHAWNEE NATIONAL PARKWAY ACT OF 1990

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation entitled the "Shawnee National Parkway Act of 1990" which seeks to establish a national parkway as a unit of the National Park System in southern West Virginia.

This proposed parkway, running along the ridges of southern West Virginia, has caught the minds and imaginations of many of us looking to open up the southern coal counties; to make them more accessible, to provide that missing link in our transportation system.

At this time, the Federal Interstate Highway System in the Nation has been completed. In southern West Virginia and particularly in Raleigh County, we have benefited from interstates like I–77 and I–64. But, they do not traverse counties like McDowell, Mingo, Woming, or Logan. Nor do they provide east-west access for Mercer or any of the other counties south of Raleigh.

Likewise, as we struggle to complete the Appalachian Regional Commission's Highway Program—and in particular the unfinished portions of corridor G which runs from Charleston through Logan and Williamson—there is still that missing east-west link.

For this reason, a number of concerned citizens are advancing an east-west proposal called the Shawnee Parkway. I think all those supporting this proposal recognize that this represents a monumental task. In these days of tight State and Federal budgets, one does lightly expect that a vast new stretch of roadway of the magnitude of the Shawnee Parkway will easily be built.

However, I do not hold it as an impossibility. At this juncture, in fact, I believe that the concept of scenic parkways, byways or interstate connectors is gaining momentum throughout the Nation. We have completed the Interstate System. With the next Federal highway bill, to be considered by the Congress next year, the question's will be this: Now that the interstates are completed, what next?

As part of the new highway bill, I believe that Congress will give serious consideration to building a new system of interstate connectors. Roadways that fill gaps in the existing system.

Under this definition, there can be no doubt that there are few places that better meet this criteria than right here in southern West Virginia. An east-west highway, or parkway—call it what you will—with access from the New River Parkway and I–77 through the southern coal counties to Kentucky, where it could link up with the Daniel Boone Parkway and the Mountain Parkway near Pikeville.

The Shawnee Parkway proposal is similar to two existing national parkways that are administered by the National Park Service. These are highly scenic, limited access parkways that not only serve the same purpose as an interstate, but are tourism attractions as well.

In Virginia and North Carolina, the Blue Ridge Parkway stretches from the Shenandoah National Park to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. This was the first national parkway.

The Natchez Trace Parkway follows an old Indian trail through Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee. It connects Natchez, MS, with Nashville, TN.

It is important to note that both were constructed under Roosevelt's National Industrial Recovery Act in the mid-1930's on land donated to the Federal Government by the States, built with CCC labor, and later transferred to the administration of the National Park Service. As such, even during the New Deal, the Federal Government said "No Deal" unless the State contributed the land because of the sheer magnitude of the undertaking.

There should be no doubt in any of our minds that constructing the Shawnee Parkway would equal the existing Blue Ridge Parkway as an engineering feat.

Under this legislation, the State of West Virginia would be responsible for donating the land for the right-of-way for the proposed parkway to the Federal Government for administration by the National Park Service. The parkway would then be constructed to national parkway standards with funding provided on an 80-percent Federal and 20-percent State match basis.

I look forward to continuing my work with those interested in the Shawnee Parkway. It will take a great deal of cooperation. In particular, the State must join the Federal Government in partnership if we are ever to make the dream of the Shawnee Parkway a reality.

COMMENDING WILLIAM J. BRADY FOR BEING SELECTED AS THE STATE OF LOUISIANA 1990 SMALL BUSINESS WINNER

HON. RICHARD H. BAKER

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend William J. Brady, general manager of Halko Industries, Inc., in DeQuincy, LA, who has been named the 1990 Small Business Winner From the State of Louisiana, and to commend all those who have formed small business ventures throughout Louisiana and the Nation.

Mr. Brady formed Halko Industries, Inc., approximately 4 years ago. His company engineers, designs, and manufactures cargo nets and other aircraft materials used in cargo planes.

The week of May 6–12, 1990 was designated as Small Business Week, and Mr. Brady along with other States winners were honored in a 3-day event in Washington DC. Small Business Week allows us the opportunity to focus our attention on the outstanding achievements of individuals like Mr. Brady who make vital contributes to improve our economy.

Small firms employ 6 of every 10 people, provide the majority of new jobs in the Nation, and are more flexible than big business in responding to shifting markets. Clearly, small firms are able to bring new products to the market faster than large businesses, and provide two of every three workers with their first jobs. Of equal importance is the fact that small businesses are responsible for more than half of all the innovations developed during the 20th century.

Clearly, Mr. Brady along with millions of other small business entrepreneurs should receive our utmost support, encouragement, and respect.

THE NATIONAL SUMMIT CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION

HON. PAT WILLIAMS

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing, with my colleague from Pennsylvania Mr. GOODLING, the National Summit Conference on Education Amendments of 1990.

Congress enacted the original education summit conference legislation in 1984. The purpose of that legislation was to have an inclusive, organized discussion about proposals for education reform and about how those proposals could be implemented. That discussion was to involve concerned individuals representing all areas of education, business, labor, and the public. It was be an inclusive approach, recognizing that if we as a nation are going to solve the problems facing education, we must involve as many people as possible in the consideration of how those problems can be solved.

Since the initial enactment of the summit legislation in 1984, a number of events have occurred. Congress has taken the necessary steps to implement the summit. It has appointed its Members to the summit's executive committee. The Congress appropriated $500,000 to carry out the activities of the summit. But to date the all-inclusive summit envisioned by Public Law 98–524 has yet to come about.

The amendments we offer today to the 1984 law will conclude as Congress intended. This legislation changes the composition of the original executive committee. And, given the action to date by the President and the Governors, it amends the summit's agenda to include a consideration of the now existing goals and recommendations. Finally the legislation encourages the critical determination as to how these goals might be implemented, and what levels of government have responsibilities to bear in that implementation.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to be successful in reforming education in this Nation, we need to involve the people who are to carry out those reforms. The legislation Mr. GOODLING and I introduce today is the final legislative step in that direction.

RUTHLESS ASSASSINATION OF DR. KAZEM RAJAVI

HON. JIM BATES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I am certain many of you, with great sadness, have learned of the ruthless assassination of a prominent human rights activist, Dr. Kazem Rajavi, by the Iranian regime's mercenaries in recent weeks. Dr. Rajavi, an outstanding international representative of the Iranian people's resistance for peace and freedom, was the brother of Mr. Massoud Rajavi, the president of the National Council of Resistance of Iran, who has perspicaciously led a popular resistance against the Tehran clerical tyranny for almost a decade.

Dr. Rajavi devoted the last 19 years of his life to unrelented activities against the dictatorships of the Shah and Khomeini. He often attended various international conferences and forums to expose the unabated violations of human rights in Iran and to defend the very rights that the Iranian people had fought for and sacrificed so many lives for under the Shah's tyranny.

After the fall of the Shah, Dr. Rajavi was Iran's first Ambassador to the U.N. headquarters in Geneva. However, shortly after his appointment, he resigned his post in protest to the repressive policies and terrorist activities of the ruling clerics in Iran. He then intensified his campaign against mass executions, arbitrary arrests, and the medieval tortures exercised by the clerics in Tehran. Since the formation of the National Council of Resistance in 1981, Dr. Rajavi had been representing the Iranian Resistance in many international assemblies, and every year headed the resistance delegation to the U.N. General Assembly in New York and the Commission of Human rights in Geneva. His constant and effective efforts, prompting international attention to the horrible situation in Iran, resulted in condemnation of the Iranian clerical despotism by the United Nations and a variety of other human rights organizations in the past few years.

Dr. Rajavi was a resident of France from 1957 to 1968, and subsequently resided in Switzerland, where he was given political asylum. He received six doctorate degrees in the fields of law, political science and sociology from the universities of Paris and Geneva, where he held professorship's post in the last 10 years.

Due to his active and effective role in condemning the medieval autocracy ruling Iran, the regime's authorities despised him and plotted his murder. On many occasions, he was reportedly threatened with death by the Khomeini regime's terrorist-diplomats and personal envoys of Rafsanjani, the Iranian President, to Europe. Nonetheless, he constantly and bravely confronted Khomeini's agents in the various organs of the United Nations, engaging in a full-fledged struggle for human rights and for helping to establish a democratically elected government by the National Council of Resistance of Iran.

As the regime's verbal onslaught on Dr. Rajavi failed to stop his faithful, vigorous activities against the abuses perpetuated under the clerics in Iran, Rafsanjani ordered his proteges in Geneva to shed his blood, and it was on April 24 that Dr. Rajavi, 56, was slain reportedly by 12 bullets fired from a machinegun by two gunmen.

The assassination of Dr. Rajavi by the Tehran agents once again proves to the world that in the past decade, even after Khomeini's celebrated death, things have not changed in Iran; that is, terrorism and repression continue to be the cornerstone of the crumbling regime. The most recent annual report of the Department of State, "Patterns of Global Terrorism," makes clear that "the events of 1989 indicate Tehran continued to view the selective use of terrorism as a legitimate tool to achieve foreign policy." The report calls Iran the most active state sponsor of terrorism last year, backing 28 attacks, including the assassinations of "at least five Iranian dissidents." As the Washington Post, April 27, 1990, puts it, considering Rafsanjani any different from the terrorist clique in Iran is a "ridiculous fable."

We have lost a genuine symbol of service to the great cause of human rights, the embodiment of a people's resolve for peace and freedom. We are honored to salute Dr. Rajavi for giving his life of struggle for human rights a brilliant personification of the utmost devotion.

We rise today to express our profound condolences to his family, especially to his brother Mr. Massoud Rajavi, who as the leader of a nationwide resistance for which his brother sacrificed his life, more than anybody else holds dear the invaluable services that Dr. Kazem Rajavi rendered to the just cause of the Iranian people.

To pay special tribute to Dr. Rajavi, I would like to ask my colleagues to rise and join me in 1 minute of silence.

I also urge the U.S. administration and the U.N. Secretary General to intervene and to take all necessary steps to cease the cowardly acts of terrorism and the continuing wave of summary executions and arbitrary arrests by the Iranian authorities.

NEW SELECT INVESTIGATIVE COMMITTEE

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, Ronald Reagan assumed the Presidency in 1981 saying that "government was the problem." He also said that he was going to wage a war on waste, fraud and abuse.

It now appears, nearly a decade after President Reagan took office, that a series of misjudgments and bad appointments by the administration and a philosphy of refusing to provide effective regulation has resulted in the American people being bilked of billions of dollars in the most substantial waste, fraud and abuse in the history of this country. The HUD scandals, the savings and loan bailout, the Department of Defense procurement scandals—the fact that over half of the top 100 defense contractors are under investigation for fraud—these are but a few of the examples of how waste, fraud and abuse have exploded at the Federal level.

Those who were appointed to serve on regulatory boards are guilty of spectacular failure. They followed President Reagan's directive to provide less government. In short, they didn't regulate much at all, and the people who wanted to take advantage of programs and policies had a field day.

The question is, How deep was the corruption? How extensive are the scandals? What will it cost us?

The role of Congress is to find answers to those questions. We appropriate the money, and the administration administers those programs and is charged with spending that money effectively. These recent scandals raise frightening questions about what happened at the Federal level in the 1980's.

Because we think Congress has a responsibility to understand the dimension of these unprecedented problems, we are proposing the creation of a 15-member select congressional committee to investigate the governmentwide management practices and procedures that have resulted in massive waste, fraud and abuse.

The investigations that have been conducted to date have been useful, but they have not systematically looked at these problems as an endemic problem. Abusive practices that have been identified and eliminated in one department may be continuing in others, for all we know. It's time for us, on a governmentwide basis, to find out what happened and make sure it never happens again.

It's time for a new investigative initiative. The depth and breadth of fraud and abuse investigations that have been identified on a fragmented basis demonstrate the need for a systematic investigation and analysis to restore integrity to Federal agencies and programs.

These are the reasons Mr. RUSSO and I are proposing the creation of this new select investigative committee.

THE AGRICULTURE ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION ACT OF 1990

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, today this Member is introducing the Agriculture Environmental Restoration Act of 1990. This bill proposes an environmental restoration program for the U.S. Department of Agriculture along the lines of the Defense Department Environmental Restoration Program which was established in Superfund legislation of 1980. The purpose of this bill is to clean up sites which were contaminated by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's use of chemicals at grain storage sites over the past 50 years. It is also this Member's intent that facilities used by the Agricultural Research Service to test chemicals would be investigated. The domestic water supplies of a number of Nebraska's communities has been contaminated as a result of past chemical use by the USDA and has necessitated the temporary use of bottled water in some communities. Undoubtedly, numerous private wells also have been similarly contaminated.

As required testing of private wells is expended, this Member expects the number of contaminated wells to increase significantly since the testing of private wells is not currently a routine practice. It is imperative that this testing occur to identify contamination before it can cause serious health difficulties for rural residents and others who depend on private wells.

At this time, two communities in Nebraska's First District have had to find alternative sources of water. At great expense, the community of Waverly developed an entirely new well field and major water service lines; Murdock solved its problem by constructing a major water line to a previously existing rural water system located nearby. In the case of these communities, the problem was caused by existence of carbon tetrachloride, a volatile chemical. Not only could residents not safely drink the contaminated water, but bodily contact with the water subjected residents to health risk. Other communities, similarly affected and including this Member's hometown, have solved their problems by shutting down affected wells, and developing new wells or must do so to restore this necessary water supply. Many additional communities in Nebraska, Kansas and elsewhere are also certain to be at risk. Their situation must be investigated.

In light of the attention that is currently being given to the 1990 farm bill, this Member is uncertain whether there can be immediate action on the Agriculture Environmental Restoration Act. This Member recognizes the need to call attention to this urgent matter by introducing the bill for the earliest possible consideration and action.

DISCLOSURE OF NONPROFIT SOFT MONEY

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, the American people deserve to know who is paying to influence elections for Congress.

During the 1988 elections congressional candidates reported spending almost $450 million.

But no one reported the millions that nonprofit organizations spent on issue slate cards, voter registration, and other election-related activities. Incredibly, our laws do not require such reporting so the real amounts remain unknown.

But what we do know is cause for concern.

According to published sources, a single member of the other body has founded several tax-exempt groups that have raised over $7 million in the last 4 years. That money was used for Democrat targeted voter registration. Among the contributions that have recently come to light was $850,000 from Charles Keating, the former head of Lincoln Savings & Loan.

How many other Keatings are out there, waiting to be revealed?

Mr. Speaker, the best protection against political corruption is the bright light of public disclosure.

Republicans support full disclosure of all nonprofit expenditures related to Federal elections, regardless of the source. We challenge Democrats to join us.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are waiting.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE BIG PINE AND LOWER KEYS ROTARY CLUB

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I extend congratulations to the new Rotary Club of Big Pine and Lower Keys which will convene Saturday, May 12, to celebrate its charter. Charter officers and members and their guests will be joining to honor the efforts of all those involved in establishing this new club. While the Big Pine and Lower Keys Club is celebrating its formation, Rotary Clubs International has been known for years throughout the United States and worldwide for its goal of selfless service to others.

It is with great pleasure and pride that I acknowledge today in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD those charter officers and directors who, with the assistance and guidance of Rotary Special Representative Bob Jordan, have helped make the Big Pine and Lower Keys Club a reality. President Roberta Hamilton, President-Elect Robert Devitt, Vice President and Program Chairman Jamie Grider, Vice President Vincent Taporowski, Secretary Kenneth Wells, and Sergeant-At-Arms Sarah Carey Greene have all accepted the responsibilities of a club officer in order to ensure that the fine quality of Rotary Club community services would be available to Big Pine Key and the Lower Keys.

Director of Club Service Robert Solomon, Director of Vocational Service Irene Hooper, Director of Community Service David Grider, Director of International Service Howard Zimmerman, and Directors Norman Zercher and Edith Swinney round out the list of individuals who have volunteered their time and energy to get the organization off the ground. The Key West, Key West Sunrise, and Marathon Rotary Clubs generously provided territories and the benefit of their experiences in order to assist in the formation of the new Rotary Club. The following community leaders have the distinction and honor of being charter members: Irving Baltuff, William Daniels, Paula Devitt, Robert Devitt, Sarah Carey Greene, David Grider, Jamie Grider, Roberta Hafenbrack, Roberta Hamilton, Deborah Holle, Irene Hooper, Edgar Hunt, Leonard Klippen, Brian McSorley, James Norris, Alma N. Raymond, Leslie Reasin, Richard Reasin, Robert Smith, Robert Solomon, Edith B. Swinney, Vincent Taporowski, Grace Upshaw, Susan Vernon, Kenneth Wells, Bruce Winebarden, Norman Zercher, Dorothy Zimmerman, and Howard Zimmerman.

The result of this cooperative effort is the successful launching of the Rotary Club of Big Pine and Lower Keys. As one who has long observed the benefits that Rotary Clubs provide to the south Florida community, I commend those involved in this project, and I join with them in celebrating the charter and wish them success in all their future ventures.

HEALTH CARE CRISIS IN LITHUANIA

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the Lithuanian-American Community, Inc., has informed me of a health care crisis resulting from the Soviet blockade of Lithuania. According to the Community's report:

Medical facilities have reduced their services to outlying rural districts. Ambulances have greatly reduced their services.

The most difficult conditions are in the hospitals where all surgical, radiological and laboratory testing procedures have been suspended except in life-threatening situations because of a shortage of the most elemental supplies: surgical thread, scalpels, gauze and cotton balls, sterilizing chemicals, surgical gloves, etc. There is no heat for the hospital wards and there is reduced electricity to even the operating rooms.

Mr. Speaker, I believe our country and the other industrial democracies should do all we can to help overcome or at least alleviate the harm done to the health-care system of Lithuania.

FRAUD: FEDERAL CONTRACTORS

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today legislation to mandate the debarment of Federal contractors who are convicted twice of felonious, fraudulent activity.

This past week marked the 33d conviction of an individual for fraud as a result of the ongoing Ill Wind investigation. Rarely a day goes by that we do not read of yet another military contractor that has been indicted, convicted, sentenced, or has plea bargained in connection with procurement or contract fraud, bribery, conspiracy, making false statements, wire fraud, and other serious offenses. Yet as the Wall Street Journal noted on April 12, few convicted felons are prohibited from continuing to compete for, and receive, Pentagon contracts.

Look at some recent examples.

Northrop Industries, one of our biggest military contractors, recently admitted falsifying important test data on parts for the Harrier vertical takeoff jet and the cruise missile.

Northrop pleaded guilty to 34 charges. But 139 other charges were dropped, as were charges against two of Northrop's executives, Joseph Yamron and Leopold Engler, both of whom reportedly were going to return to work.

General Electric was convicted of fraud and other charges in February.

MacHaffie Inc., a California defense contractor, pleaded guilty last month to falsifying results of tests on millions of bolts used in the manufacture of a vast array of U.S. military aircraft: B-1 bomber, F-16 fighter, A-7 Corsair II attack fighter, F-18 Hornet fighter, and the F-14 fighter.

MacHaffie, which admitted its crime, pleaded guilty to Federal conspiracy charges and to making false statements. The company faces a maximum fine of $1.5 million, and its president could face 15 years in jail and another $750,000 fine.

Meanwhile, several billion dollars in aircraft, not to mention the lives of the pilots, are endangered because of this company's greed, and it is not alone.

These are but a few examples in a long list of indictments, convictions, and pleas by those who have sought to profiteer by milking the military and deceiving the American taxpayer. Yes, they are punished. A multibillion dollar corporation has to pay a few million dollars in fines; an executive gets a short prison sentence. We couldn't devise a scenario to better demonstrate that crime pays. The greed of these convicts makes the most egregious welfare cheat look positively virtuous in comparison.

In time of war, deliberate decisions to produce faulty parts that endanger the lives of American military men would not be considered fraud: It would be treason.

I would hate to hear the outcry against such systematic looting and defrauding of the taxpayer if the perpetrator were a school lunch program, or a senior citizen's center. But when these outrageous, illegal acts are committed by corporations that wrap themselves in the flag and take out full page ads in newspapers extolling their patriotism, we treat their offenses like jaywalking.

My legislation mandates debarment of Federal contractors for a period of 5 years upon a second conviction for fraud or other felonious activity within any 10-year time period. This legislation will debar not only specific individuals, but a contracting or subcontracting firm as well. It is not intended to be limited solely to military contracts, although it is quite evident that Defense Department fraud costs taxpayers the greatest amounts of money and presents the greatest danger to national security and the safety of individual citizens.

Is this tough legislation? You'd better believe it is! The time has come for the Congress to show that we are not going to continue to lavish enormous contracts on those who make a practice of subverting the laws and cheating the taxpayers of the United States. And we are going to tell those felons that you cannot buy your way back in the Government contracting business by paying a fine equal to a fraction of your ill-gotten profits.

To those who complain that this debarment penalty will discourage companies from competing for Government contracts, the answer is twofold. First, if they don't commit repeated felonies against the United States, they have nothing to worry about. And second, if they do continue to cheat taxpayers and endanger our security, we don't want them.

I am delighted that the chairman of the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, the Hon. CHARLES E. SCHUMER, joins me as the principal cosponsor of this legislation. Chairman SCHUMER has indicated not only his strong support for this legislation, but his intention to conduct hearings on our bill in the near future.

In addition, 28 other Members have joined us in cosponsoring this legislation. They join me in urging that it receive immediate consideration and approval by the House.

CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the record exodus of Soviet Jews last year and their continued evacuation this year is a very welcome development and serves to show that vigilant human rights advocacy can produce positive results. However, many refuseniks remain in the Soviet Union, and I commend my colleagues, JOHN MILLER and PETER KOSTMAYER, for sponsoring this vigil to ensure that those left behind are not forgotten.

I rise today to call attention to the case of Evgeny Pisarevsky and his family who currently reside in Leningrad. The Pisarevsky family first applied to emigrate in September 1988. In January 1989, they were refused on the vague grounds that "it was not in the interest of the state." The Pisarevsky's believe that they were refused because of a job that Evgeny left over 10 years ago. Their son, Vladimir, was given permission and has since left the Soviet Union. However, in December 1989, the Pisarevsky's hope of joining their son was dashed when authorities once again refused their emigration request.

The continued incarceration of refuseniks such as the Pisarevsky's is in direct violation of the Helsinki accords and the Vienna concluding document which binds the Soviets to adhere to the principle of freedom of emigration. While we remark at the changes that have taken place in the Soviet Union, we must not lose sight of the fact that Soviet Jews are still arbitrarily denied their fundamental rights. In light of the rising tide of anti-Semitism sweeping throughout the Soviet Union, it is vital that all available means be found to facilitate the departure of Soviet Jews who wish to leave.

President Bush and President Gorbachev will be meeting soon at a summit whose highlight will most likely be the signing of a trade agreement creating conditions for a waiver of the Jackson-Vanik amendment. Although the Soviets have been promising that they would pass emigration reform legislation for the past 2½ years, reports indicate that they will finally take this long-awaited step in the next few weeks. What this legislation will mean to the many Soviet Jews, like the Pisarevsky family, who anxiously await its implementation remains to be seen. As cochairman of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, I will closely monitor the emigration performance of the Soviets after this law is codified to ensure that arbitrary refusals and long-term refuseniks become memories of the past.

H.R. 370, THE FREEDOM "TO KILL" ACT OF 1989

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, Thomas L. Jipping of the Center for Law and Democracy at the Free Congress Foundation has prepared an excellent analysis of the Freedom of Choice Act of 1989. The "choice," of course, is to kill unborn children or not. I urge Members to review this important work.

THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE FREEDOM OF CHOICE ACT

(By Thomas L. Jipping, M.A., J.D., director Center for Law & Democracy)

The Freedom of Choice Act is a direct regulation of the states, in their legislative and policymaking capacity, by the federal government. By its terms, this bill attempts to remove from the states the ability to determine abortion policy by dictating the permissible substantive contours of that policy.

* * * * *

The Freedom of Choice Act is unconstitutional. Congress does not have the power to dictate the substantive content of state abortion legislation. The constitutional principle of federalism exists independent of the abortion issue and must be protected regardless of anticipated legislative outcomes on that issue. Regardless of one's views on abortion per se, there can be no more blatant federal attempt to usurp state legislative prerogatives than the Freedom of Choice Act.

The core principle of federalism, enshrined in the Tenth Amendment and at the heart of the American system of constitutional limited government, is directly at stake. Unless choosing abortion is held by the Supreme Court to be a fundamental constitutional right, state legislatures have the constitutional prerogative to determine abortion policy, a prerogative they must actively preserve. Proponents as well as opponents of abortion can join in this call for preserving essential constitutional processes because the very ability to act as a state legislator hangs in the balance. As more and more policy areas are "nationalized," the elected repesentatives of each state's residents are rendered more politically impotent. The Constitution's principle of federalism exists to check this shift.

This analysis will examine, somewhat historically, two phases in the development of abortion policy in the United States. State legislatures determined that policy until 1973. Federal courts have essentially determined that policy since then. Assuming, as the Freedom of Choice Act does, that the Supreme Court reverse its Roe v. Wade decision and removes the constitutional status of the abortion "right," state legislatures should once again be able to determine abortion policy. Congress lacks the power to say otherwise.

STATE ABORTION REGULATION

Connecticut became the first American state to pass abortion legislation in 1821.[1] Since then, "[a]bortion regulation was a matter exclusively for state legislatures." [2] By the 1960s, nearly every state had banned abortion in all circumstances except to save the mother's life.[3]

Between 1967 and 1972, roughly one-third of the state legislatures liberalized their abortion statutes to allow abortions in specified circumstances.[4] Abortion reform in one state was achieved through popular referendum.[5] At least 28 states considered but rejected proposals to reform or repeal their abortion statutes,[6] in at least two of them by popular referenda.[7]

State legislatures exclusively determined abortion policy for more than 150 YEARS in the United States. They successfully channelled currents of popular concern and balanced competing political interests. The mix of policies existing by the early 1970s was evidence of how well this process worked. In any event, this is the scheme the Constitution established for policymaking in this area.

JUDICIAL ABORTION REGULATION

The effort to remove abortion from the state legislative arena began in the 1960s with academic arguments claiming that the Constitution protects a woman's right to choose abortion.[8] In 1969, the California Supreme Court was the first to decide that a state abortion statute violated the U.S. Constitution.[9] State and federal courts considered many cases raising constitutional arguments during the next few years.[10]

By its 1973 decisions in Roe v. Wade,[11] the U.S. Supreme Court put abortion squarely in the federal judicial arena. It held that a "right to privacy" derived from the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment included the right to choose abortion as a means of pregnancy termination.[12] The effect of the Court's decision was to prevent the states from every flatly prohibiting abortion. Abortion is currently legal in the United States for any reason throughout pregnancy.[13]

State legislatures still want to regulate abortion and passed more than 300 abortion bills from 1973 through 1988.[14] The contours of permissible abortion regulation have, therefore, been determined in hundreds of federal court cases,[15] including two dozen that have reached the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court removed abortion as a subject of exclusive state legislative policymaking by designating it in Roe as a fundamental constitutional right. When the Court decides that there exists no such fundamental right, the states will once again be able to determine abortion policy under their inherent police power.

The Court is moving in that direction. By recent its decision in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services,[16] the Court upheld a Missouri statutory provision requiring abortionists to determine fetal viability before performing abortions after 20 weeks of pregnancy. This provision furthered the state's interest in fetal life, but did so during the second trimester. The Court had said in Roe that a state could not legislate to further this interest until the third trimester.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor did not see a conflict between this provision and the Court's abortion precedents and, on that basis, voted to uphold the provision. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, joined by Justices Byron White and Anthony Kennedy, saw a conflict and voted to uphold the provision, feeling that Roe rather than the statute was the source of the conflict and should accordingly be modified. Justice Antonin Scalia saw a conflict and voted to uphold the provision, feeling Roe was the source of the conflict and should be overruled.

The Webster decision was not a declaration of fundamentally new judicial abortion policy. Rather, it was an invitation for more aggressive state legislative activity in this area. A majority of the court clearly views Roe as more problematic than respect for precedent alone can tolerate. That majority seems willing to approve state life-protective legislation and seems more receptive to arguments that Roe should be changed or overruled entirely.

States have accepted the invitation and are responding. The Louisiana legislature passed a resolution calling for renewed enforcement of the state's abortion ban. The Florida legislature considered, but did not pass, several abortion restrictions. The Pennsylvania legislature enacted its 1989 Abortion Control Act which requires spousal consent and a 24-hour waiting period for obtaining an abortion and bans both abortions for sex selection and those after 24 weeks not performed to save the mother's life.[17] On December 6, 1989, the Michigan House of Representatives approved abortion restrictions passed earlier by the state Senate.[18] On January 29, 1990, the Indiana House of Representatives passed three pro-life measures, including a ban on abortions after viability or for sex-selection and a 24-hour waiting period. The next day, the Wisconsin Assembly defeated a bill to repeal that state's abortion ban.[19] The Mississippi legislature passed informed consent and clinic regulation bills.[20] The Virginia House of Delegates passed a parental notification bill on February 11, 1990.[21] Idaho passed a restrictive abortion bill in March, which Governor Cecil Andrus vetoed.[22] South Carolina governor Carroll Campbell signed that state's new parental consent law.[23] Guam governor Joseph Ada signed that territory's strict abortion ban on March 19, 1990.[24]

Clearly, the primary determination of abortion policy is shifting back to state legislatures. That shift will be complete when the Supreme Court overrules Roe and the "right to abortion" no longer has fundamental constitutional status.

Abortion proponents have two options. Both are based on the need to restrict state power to once again determine abortion policy.

First, they can develop constitutional arguments separate from those embodied in Roe.

Building on the academic development during the 1960s, they are already pursuing this approach. In Webster, abortion advocates asked the Supreme Court, "[i]n the unlikely event th[e] Court decides to abandon the rationale of Roe v. Wade, . . . to remand th[e] case for consideration of what other Constitutional principle can support the right recognized in Roe.[25] In addition, organizations filing "friend of the court" briefs in Webster offered various constitutional arguments.[26]

If a constitutional basis for "abortion rights" is foreclosed, their second option is to restrict state abortion regulation through federal legislation. The Freedom of Choice Act is such an attempt. In their rush for political results, however, abortion proponents are trampling the Constitution and the structure it creates for policymaking in an area like abortion. Nothing less than the constitutional principle of federalism itself is at stake.

THE TENTH AMENDMENT

The Tenth Amendment, ratified on December 15, 1791, states: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." This provision formalizes the principle of federalism. The federal government can only exercise powers relinquished by the states or the people.

This principle applies with equal or greater force to Congress as it does to the federal judiciary. As Alexander Hamilton put it: "[T]hat the States will retain all preexisting authorities which may not be exclusively delegated to the federal head . . . may not apply with the same force to the judiciary as to the legislative power, yet I am inclined to think that [it is].[27] President Ronald Reagan demonstrated the overriding importance of this principle by issuing an executive order: "Acts of the national government—whether legislative, executive, or judicial in nature—that exceed the enumerated powers of that government under the Constitution violate the principle of federalism established by the Framers."[28]

Although the position of the states in the federal system has been weakened by recent Supreme Court commerce clause decisions,[29] the Supreme Court has recently stated that the Tenth Amendment continues to protect states "deprived of any right to participate in the national political process or singled out in a way that [leaves them] politically isolated and powerless."[30] One would be hard-pressed to find a better example of federal deprivation of state political power than the Freedom of Choice Act.

THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

When he introduced the Freedom of Choice Act, Senator Cranston stated: "It has long been recognized that Congress has the authority, under section 5 of the 14th amendment and other provisions of the Constitution to enact legislation to restrain States from denying due process and equal protection rights to individuals or interfering with fundamental rights."[31]

Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment states: "The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article." Proponents claim the Freedom of Choice Act enforces the so-called due process and equal protection clauses found in section 1: ". . . nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The Supreme Court has long held that the Fourteenth Amendment does not restrain states from exercising power they traditionally retained. "It cannot be supposed that the states intended, by adopting th[e Fourteenth Amendment], to impose restraints upon the exercise of their powers for the protection of the safety, health, or morals of the community."[32]

The Tenth Amendment would be rendered completely impotent and the principle of federalism would be obliterated if section 5 allowed Congress to simply dictate the substance of state legislation on any subject it chose. It does not. The due process and equal protection clauses in section 1 prohibit state deprivation only of recognized and fundamental constitution rights. Therefore, as Senator Cranston correctly observed, Congress' power under section 5 likewise extends only to preserving fundamental constitutional rights. Section 5 gives Congress power to enforce, not the power to define, those rights.

At this point, it is essential to repeat that the Freedom of Choice Act has meaning only in a post-Roe environment and after the right to choose abortion has lost its status as a fundamental constitutional right. Here we see how the political eagerness of abortion proponents runs roughshod over the principle of federalism and attempts to extend the power granted Congress in section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment to defining what it wants to be fundamental.

It does enough damage to the rule of law and our constitutional scheme of limited government, separation of powers, and federalism when the Supreme Court acts as if it were Congress.

With the Freedom of Choice Act, we can see how it is even more dangerous when Congress acts as if it were the Supreme Court. The degree of freedom assumed by the Supreme Court to determine the meaning of the Constitution's words and provisions is controversial at best. This power, however, belongs even potentially only to the Court, not to Congress.

LESSONS FROM THE PAST

The real test of whether principle is something more than a political tool is when it must be applied against one's preferred position. In 1981, Congress considered S. 158, the "Human Life Bill." The bill stated that "for the purpose of enforcing the obligation of the States under the fourteenth amendment not to deprive persons of life without due process of law, human life shall be deemed to exist from conception." It attempted to dictate state policy on abortion in a pro-life direction, much as the Freedom of Choice Act now would dictate state policy on abortion in a pro-abortion direction.

The arguments against the Human Life Bill included its impact of federalism and those observations fully apply in the present context. Senator Orrin G. Hatch, Republican of Utah and strong opponent of abortion, concluded that S. 158 was unconstitutional. He stated:

"Quite simply, the 14th Amendment is a limitation upon the States, while section 5 of the 14th Amendment is a conferral of authority of Congress. To enhance that Congressional authority, by transforming it from mere authority to establish remedies for substance constitutional violations into authority to define what constitutes such violations, is to significantly erode the division of powers between the State and national governments."[33]

Make no mistake—the Constitution itself it at stake here. Former Solicitor General of the United States Erwin Griswold also expressed opposition to S. 158, stating that the separation of powers and "the appropriate division of powers between the states and federal government" are the two major premises of the United States Constitution.[34]

Professor William Van Alstyne of Duke University School of Law has also noted in this regard:

"If Congress can (a) determine authoritatively what affirmative obligations each State has in respect to the life, liberty, and property of each person, and if Congress can (b) legislate to "enforce" such affirmative obligations as determined by Congress, then indeed the rudiments of federalism are dead, and 10th Amendment is meaningless, and each State becomes but the instrument of a uniform, congressionally determined policy of social welfare." [35]

Former law professor, Solicitor General of the United States, and U.S. Circuit Judge Robert Bork has observed:

"A national legislature empowered to define the meaning of [constitutional provisions] can void any State legislation on any subject and replace it with a Federal statute." [36]

Liberal Senator Max Baucus, Democrat of Montana, cautioned that S. 158 would "set a precedent that will lead to increased federal intervention and an erosion of state authority." [37]

Judge Bork's conclusion applies with equal force to the Freedom of Choice Act:

[T]he version of Section V of the Fourteenth Amendment that is being propounded here in support of this bill . . . federalizes state police powers. Under the equal protection clause and the due process clause together, those are turned over to Congress, and there is no state legislation on any topic that I can think of that cannot be federalized if Congress so chooses.[38]

STATE POLICE POWER

As the Supreme Court noted in Mugler v. Kansas,[39] the Fourteenth Amendment does not restrain states from acting to protect "the safety, health, or morals of the community." This is commonly called the state's police power and has always been recognized as the core of legitimate state authority.[40]

In Mugler, the Supreme Court stated: "It belongs to [state legislatures] to exert what are known as the police powers of the state, and to determine, primarily, what measures are appropriate or needful for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public safety."[41]

The state police power includes the protection of human life itself. The Supreme Court recently observed that "the essential dignity and worth of every human being [is] a concept at the root of any decent system of ordered liberty. . . . [T]he protection of life itself [is] left primarily to the individual states under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments.[42] Chief Justice William Rehnquist, dissenting in Roe, saw the obvious application of this principle to state abortion legislation when he observed that "the drafters did not intend to have the Fourteenth Amendment withdraw from the States the power to legislate with respect to [abortion].[43]

The Supreme Court has recognized that regulating the medical profession is squarely within the state police power. The Court has affirmed the special deference with which it treats such regulation, by which "the legislature [does] not deal[] with traders in commodities, but with the vital interest of public health, and with a profession treating bodily ills.[44]

Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment grants Congress the power to enforce the provisions of that amendment which, in turn, prohibit states from depriving persons of fundamental rights. Only if the Supreme Court holds that abortion has the status of a fundamental constitutional right can the traditional police power of the states even potentially be trumped by Congress. Without that status, abortion is squarely within the state police power.

CONCLUSION

The very existence of the Freedom of Choice Act makes sense only in a post-Roe context in which choosing abortion is no longer a fundamental constitutional right. In that context, abortion is squarely within the traditional state police power. Congress lacks the power to restrain state policymaking by dictating the substantive content of state abortion statues. Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment only gives Congress the power to enforce that amendment's restriction on state deprivation of recognized fundamental rights.

The Freedom of Choice Act violates the bedrock constitutional principle of federalism. Respect for that principle will allow "states to shape their abortion laws . . . according to local preferences.[45] This is not merely a goal or desire; it is a constitutional directive. A proper constitutional scheme will permit state abortion laws once again "to reflect a tolerable accommodation of competing views, differing from state to state in accordance with the differences among their citizens.[46]

State legislators, regardless of their substantive views on abortion, have a fundamental stake in preserving this constitutional principle. Their very ability to function as state legislators is directly at stake. The Constitution requires that they have the prerogative, as well as the responsibility, to determine abortion policy.

[1] Destro, "Abortion and the Constitution: The Need for a Life-Protective Amendment," 63 California Law Review 1250, 1279 (1975); Sauer, "Attitudes to Abortion in America, 1800-1973," 28 Population Studies 53, 57 (1974).

[2] George, "State Legislatures Versus the Supreme Court: Abortion Litigation in the 1980s," in J. Butler & D. Walbert (eds.), Abortion, Medicine, and the Law (3rd ed. 1986), at 23. An 1873 anti-obscenity statute covering topics including abortion advertising represented the only action by Congress relating even incidentally to abortion prior to the 1970s. See J. Mohr, Abortion in America: The Development of National Policy, 1800-1900 (1977), at 196.

[3] See Quay, "Justifiable Abortion—Medical and Legal Foundations," 49 Georgetown Law Journal 395, 447-520 (1961).

[4] See "Abortion in the U.S.: Two Centuries of Experience," in Constitutional Amendments Relating to Abortion: Hearings Before the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (1981), at 357; Tatelovich & Daynes, "From Abortion Reform to Abortion Repeal: The Trauma of Abortion Politics," Commonweal, November 1981, at 644.

[5] See Fujita & Wagner, "Referendum 20—Abortion Reform in Washington State," in H. Osofsky & J. Osofsky (eds.), The Abortion Experience: Psychological and Medical Impact (1973), at 232.

[6] "Abortion in the U.S.," supra note 5, at 357.

[7] See Senate Report No. 465, 97th Cong., 2nd Sess. (1982), at 23.

[8] The first installment was Lucas, "Federal Constitutional Limitations on the Enforcement and Administration of State Abortion Statutes," 46 North Carolina Law Review 730 (1968).

[9] People v. Belous, 71 Cal. 2d 954, 458 P.2d 194, 80 Cal.Rptr. 354 (1969).

[10] See Bopp, "Will There Be a Constitutional Right to Abortion After the Reconsideration of Roe v. Wade?," 15 Journal of Contemporary Law 131, 134 (1989).

[11] 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

[12] The frontal assault on the Tenth Amendment and the position of the states in our federal system represented by the freedom of Choice Act exists independent of this decision's merits. Suffice it to say that Roe v. Wade is likely the most-criticized Supreme Court decision of this century. See Jipping, "Informed Consent to Abortion: a Refinement," 38 Case Western Reserve Law Review 329, 334-36 nn. 17-21 (1988).

[13] For a thorough analysis of the substance of national abortion policy, see Jipping, "National Abortion Policy and Public Opinion: Two Ships Passing in the Night," 1 Bioethics and Public Policy (1990).

[14] See Wardle, "Rethinking Roe v. Wade," 1985 Brigham Young University Law Review 231, 247 n.83; Planned Parenthood Federation, From the World Beyond Washington (Alan Guttmacher Institute), "Washington Memos" from January 15, 1987; January 21, 1988; January 12, 1989.

[15] Nearly a decade ago, Professor Lynn Wardle examined more than 145 reported decisions by lower federal courts dealing with substantive abortion issues. L. Wardle, The Abortion Privacy Doctrine: A Compedium and Critique of Federal Court Abortion Cases (1980), at xiii.

[16] 109 S.Ct. 3040 (1989).

[17] On January 12, 1990, a federal judge enjoined enforcement of the spousal consent and waiting period provisions. See Baer, "Judge Blocks Portion of Abortion Law," Washington Post, January 12, 1990, at A20.

[18] Michigan Governor James Blanchard vetoed this measure on February 23, 1990.

[19] McConagha, "Wisconsin Assembly Refuses to Repeal Old Abortion Law," Washington Times, January 31, 1990, at A6.

[20] National Right to Life Factsheet, March 27, 1990, at 2.

[21] Id. at 3.

[22] Id.

[23] Andrusko, "Governor Campbell Signs S.C. Parental Consent Bill," National Right to Life News, March 15, 1990, at 4.

[24] "Guam Bans Abortion; ACLU Files Suit," ALL News, March 30, 1990, at 1.

[25] Brief of Appellees, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, No. 88-605, at 18-19.

[26] These include First Amendment establishment or free exercise of religion; First Amendment freedom of speech or association; Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual punishment; Ninth Amendment retention of unenumerated rights; Thirteenth Amendment involuntary servitude; Fourteenth Amendment equal protection.

[27] A Hamilton, The Federalist No.82 (R. Fairfield ed. 1981), at 252.

[28] Executive Order No. 12,612. See 52 Fed. Reg. 41,685-86 (1987).

[29] See, e.g., Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528 (1985).

[30] South Carolina v. Baker, 108 S.Ct. 1355, 1361 (1988).

[31] Congressional Record, November 17, 1989, at S16051. What "other Provisions of the Constitution" allow Congress to directly restrain the states in their legislative capacity remains a mystery.

[32] Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 664 (1887).

[33] The Human Life Bill—S.158, Report to the Committee on the Judiciary Made by its Subcommittee on Separation of Powers (1981), at 34 (Additional Views of Senator Orrin G. Hatch).

[34] The Human Life Bill: Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (1981), at 193.

[35] Report on S.158, supra note 30, at 34.

[36] Id.

[37] Id. at 43 (Minority Views of Senator Max Baucus).

[38] Id. at 44.

[39] 123 U.S. 623 (1887).

[40] See generally Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26, 32 (1954).

[41] Mugler, 123 U.S. at 661.

[42] Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749, 758 (1985).

[43] Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 177 (1973) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

[44] Semler v. Oregon State Board of Dental Examiners, 294 U.S. 608, 612 (1935).

[45] Sandalow, "Federalism and Social Change," 43 Law and Contemporary Problems 29, 36 (Summer 1980).

[46] Id.

DRUG CRIME AND DRUG VIOLENCE

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, despite the infusion of the first installments of $9 billion in budgeted Federal antidrug funds this year, the war against drugs is having few visible results in many neighborhoods where drug crime and drug violence are features of everyday life.

Streets are still unsafe and drugs are widely available despite a 113-percent increase in the number of adults arrested for drug trafficking or manufacturing.

In my home State of New Jersey, Federal funding for antidrug enforcement, education, and treatment programs will total $41.4 million this year, up from $20.9 million in 1989.

In 1988, more than 54,000 people were arrested for drug offenses in New Jersey, up from 41,000 in 1987. And the number of arrests is expected to increase again this year.

Although we are spending more money and arresting more people, public frustration levels are rising.

That's because the drug peddlers who make our streets unsafe are often back out on the same corner within 24 hours of being taken into custody.

The drug peddlers and the street thugs associated with the drug trade are tying the courts up in legal knots.

They are manipulating the criminal justice system and using legal loopholes to evade the penalties for their crimes.

That is why we need to close the loopholes in the law that allow drug peddlers and killers to go free.

We must send the message that punishment for criminals and drug offenders is going to be sure and swift.

Right now, people on death row for drug-related murders seem to stand a greater chance of dying of natural causes than of being executed for their crimes.

As one of the sponsors of H.R. 3918, the Violent Crime Control and Criminal Procedures Reform Act, I believe we need to adopt the proposals contained in this legislation to end the abuses of the system that have created escape routes for criminals in our courts.

To make progress in the war against drugs, we must establish credible deterrents to drug trafficking and abuse.

We must restore the certainty of punishment for those who commit drug crimes.

We're not solving any problems by catching a drug peddler on the street and then setting him free in the courtroom.

I urge support for H.R. 3918, which is intended to close the loopholes and to guarantee swift, sure justice for those who violate our laws.

TRIBUTE TO FRANK T. PIZZA

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I place on the record the formal statement accompanying the 1990 Distinguished Toledo Lawyer Award recently presented to Frank T. Pizza, which appeared in the May 1990 edition of the Toledo Bar Association's Newsletter.

Frank T. Pizza has been named the recipient of the 1990 Distinguished Toledo Lawyer Award. Initiated in 1976, the award is given by the University of Toledo College of Law Alumni Association and is presented each year at the law day luncheon of the Toledo Bar Association.

The annual award honors a member of the Toledo Bar for his or her record of significant service to the legal profession and to the community. Recipients are not limited to graduates of the University of Toledo College of Law. Previous recipients have been Roger Smith, Charles Fornoff, Arthur Cline, Merritt Green, Sr., James Slater Gibson, Jamille Jamra, Hon. Frank Wiley, Harry Friberg, Hon. Willis Ludeman, John Eastman, Hon. Robert Franklin, Mary Hamilton, and Jack Callahan.

Frank Pizza is a senior partner of Spengler, Nathanson, Heyman, McCarthy & Durfee. Since joining the firm in 1981 his practice has been primarily devoted to public sector law. From 1950 to 1981 he served the city of Toledo in many capacities, first on the staff of the former Publicity and Efficiency Commission and later as a member of the law department. When he joined the law department in 1958 his two colleagues as police prosecutors were Robert Franklin and Nicholas Walinski. From 1971 to 1981 he was the director of the law department, except for two periods between 1976 and 1979 when he served as acting city manager. During his tenures as law director and acting city manager, Frank Pizza was credited with a major role in resolving some of the city's greatest crises, including the highly charged labor disputes in 1976 and 1979.

Mr. Pizza has held many important positions and received numerous coveted awards. He was the president of the Toledo Bar Association in 1980-81 and president of the Ohio Municipal Attorneys Association in 1977. In 1981 he was presented with the Order of the Heel by the Junior Bar Association of Toledo. He received his college of law degrees from the University of Toledo in 1950 and 1952, respectively. His postgraduate activities on behalf of his alma mater have been many and varied. During the 1960's he served for 6 years as a member and later chairman of the athletic board of control. He was the president of the UT Alumni Association's Blue "T" Award in 1961. A standout tackle on the 1946 and 1947 University of Toledo Rockets football team and a professional football player with the Buffalo Bills, he was inducted into the university's varsity "T" athletic hall of fame in 1980.

MICHIGAN'S 15TH DISTRICT RESPONDS TO 1990 SURVEY

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the results of a survey I sent at the end of March to my constituents in the 15th Congressional District of Michigan. The 20 communities that make up the 15th Congressional District are Taylor, Romulus, Southgate, Wayne, and Westland; Livonia, Garden City, and Dearborn Heights; Saline, York Township, Augusta Township, Milan, Sumpter Township, and Huron Township; Ypsilanti, Ypsilanti Township, Van Buren Township, Belleville, Superior Township, and Canton Township.

The survey asked 12 questions about some of the most important issues facing the Congress this year, and asked my constituents to list the three most critical problems we should be working to solve, as well as the three places they would like to see Federal spending reduced. I have already received nearly 10,000 responses to my survey, which was the 26th I have conducted since I first came to Congress in 1965. More surveys will be returned in the coming weeks, but the time has come to analyze the responses and announce the results. I am truly gratified that so many people took the time to answer and send back the questionnaire.

The survey's first question concerned the capital gains tax proposal the House passed last year—77 percent of my constituents oppose the capital gains tax cut, and the notes they attached to the survey responses make clear why. My constituents make their income through wages and salary, not by selling stocks and bonds, timber, or commercial real estate. A payroll tax cut would be far more meaningful and advantageous to them than a tax preference for capital gains income.

As it usually is among the people of the 15th District, defense spending was singled out as the area where the Federal budget most needs reduction. I asked about two major strategic weapons systems, the B-2 Stealth bomber and the rail garrison MX missile. Large majorities opposed the President's spending plans for both weapons—84 percent oppose spending another $5.5 billion to build five more B-2 bombers, and 71 percent oppose spending $2.8 billion to deploy the rail MX.

My constituents favor troop reductions in Asia to parallel President Bush's plan to reduce our forces in Europe by one-third—68 percent want to see similar reductions in our military personnel stationed in Korea, Japan, and Okinawa.

In keeping with their longstanding hostility to foreign aid, a majority of my constituents oppose the President's proposed assistance program for Panama, the first $420 million of which the House has already approved—64 percent oppose the aid package, despite the fact that our invasion and economic sanctions devastated the Panamanian economy.

By contrast, a program that helps compensate American vicitms of increased foreign imports by paying them unemployment insurance benefits while retraining them for new jobs was strongly supported by my constituents—71 percent oppose President Bush's plan to save $280 million by eliminating the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program.

The question that drew the most lopsided response concerned a bill that I introduced, the Employee and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act. The Whistleblower Act would give employees the right to refuse unreasonably dangerous work and would protect them against retaliation. It would also protect employees who blow the whistle on violations by their employer of laws that protect the public's health and safety. An overwhelming 95 percent of my constituents favor passage of such a law.

Another bill I have sponsored was also strongly supported in the survey response—81 percent of my constituents favor passage of H.R. 770, the Family and Medical Leave Act, the same level of support the bill receives in national polls. The Family Leave Act would require businesses with 50 or more employees to provide up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave to employees who request it after the birth or adoption of a child or to care for a seriously ill child, spouse, or dependent parent. The act, which passed the House on May 10, would also require employers to provide unpaid leave to employees disabled by medical illness.

The last four questions on the survey dealt with environmental legislation, and the responses reflect the powerful feelings Americans in every region feel about protecting the Earth from further degradation—94 percent of my constituents want Congress to force the States to adopt programs that would increase the rate of recycling from 10- to 25-percent of all waste within 4 years, and increase the rate to 50 percent within 8 years.

My constituents are very familiar with beverage container recycling, because Michigan has had a bottle deposit law since 1976—91 percent believe that Congress should enact a national bottle law—strong evidence of the popularity such a law would have with the American people as a whole, once they had the opportunity to live with it.

Michigan's bottle law has been a great success. It keeps 600,000 tons of trash out of our landfills each year, reduces litter, and conserves natural resources. What's more, the bottle law created a net increase of 4,200 jobs in distribution, retailing, and recycling. I am a cosponsor of H.R. 586, the National Beverage Container Reuse and Recycling Act.

The people in my congressional district are willing to pay for environmental protection. They realize, for example, that sewage treatment and clean water cost money—77 percent oppose President Bush's proposed budget cuts for the Clean Water Act's revolving loan program, which makes low-interest loans to communities to build or improve sewage treatment plants. Mr. Bush wants to cut the clean water funds by one-third, to $1.6 billion.

The most surprising response on this year's survey involved the Clean Air Act and the Bryan amendment, which would require auto manufacturers to raise their corporate average fuel economy standards to 34 mpg by 1995 and 40 mpg by 2001. Despite the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association's warning that the Bryan amendment would cause the loss of 50,000 auto industry jobs in Michigan alone, 48 percent of my constituents favor its passage. It may be that people do not believe the MVMA's predictions of terrible job losses. Or it may be that people believe that enormous sacrifices are justifiable in a battle to limit emissions and clean up the air we breathe.

Without making any suggestion of my own on the survey, I asked my constituents to list "the three most critical problems" they think Congress and the President should be working to solve, "even if it means increasing the Federal budget deficit."

For the second year in a row, the environment was the issue that was listed most often as deserving increased attention—half again more frequently than any other. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the House budget resolution, for which I voted, provides $900 million more for the environmental protection than the President's budget proposal. The increase would fund the acquisition of lands for national parks and forest, the cleanup of hazardous waste sites, and enforcement activities of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Health care and health research were the No. 2 spending priority for my constituents. Substance abuse and education were tied for No. 3.

President Bush proposed major cuts in Federal support of health care in the coming year, including a $5.5 billion cut in Medicare. The House budget resolution, for which I voted, rejected $3.8 billion of that cut, provides a $444 million increase in VA hospital and medical care funding, and increases Medicaid for the poor by $280 million.

The House budget resolution also provides $750 million more than the President's budget proposal for health research at the National Institutes of Health. This additional investment could support nearly 16,000 training awards and 7,800 new biomedical research grants.

The congressional education budget is also much larger than the budget proposed by President Bush. We provided a $2.5 billion increase for math and science education, vocational education, dropout prevention programs, compensatory education, handicapped education, and Pell grants for higher education.

On the other side of the coin, Mr. Speaker, I also asked my constituents where they would most like to see Federal spending reduced. As in years past, the top priority for budget cuts was defense spending.

As you know, I voted for the budget alternative that made the most substantial reduction in the Pentagon's budget, a 15-percent cut. My vote was motivated in part by the dramatic changes in the Soviet Union and the CIA's testimony that the Soviet threat to us and the rest of the world is irreversibly reduced. It was also motivated by the recent shocking revelations that the Pentagon has a $34 billion surplus inventory of spare parts—in some instances enough for 200 years—and that it has $25 billion in funds from prior years that were never spent and are not tied to any specific program, weapon, or account. These factors amply justify the $47 billion reduction in President Bush's defense budget for which I voted.

Foreign aid was the second most popular target for budget cutting. Government salaries and pensions were a distant third. There were no significant differences in the Bush budget and the House budget resolution with respect to these issues.

Mr. Speaker, I trust my colleagues will have found these survey results interesting. My district and my constitutents are in many ways a microcosm of the American people. As always, I have learned a great deal from the responses. I hope my colleagues will, too.

SBA REAUTHORIZATION AND AMENDMENT ACT OF 1990

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, this is small business week and I join with many of my colleagues to commend the Nation's small business community for its major contribution to our economy.

It is very appropriate that today I have introduced the Small Business Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 1990 which authorizes the operations of the Small Business Administration through fiscal year 1994. This bill continues to limit direct loan program which is restricted to handicapped, socially and economically disadvantaged, and Vietnam veterans; it slightly expands the Guaranteed Loan Program which provides the bulk of our financial assistance to the small business community; and it expands the level of the surety bond guarantees which are necessary in order for small business contractors to do business with the Federal and State governments and even with most private concerns. For the information of my colleagues, I am pleased to append at the end of this statement a chart showing the proposed program levels for each of the upcoming fiscal years.

The bill also continues to provide the same loan assistance to victims of natural disasters such as Hurricane Hugo and the California earthquake. In this regard, I am please to note that anticipated disaster loan repayments should permit the continued operation of this program without the need for additional appropriations, unless we have a major disaster.

In addition, it continues our policy of emphasizing management and technical assistance to small business. We have found that management problems cause most small business failures, and we have emphasized providing assistance in this area in recent years.

The bill authorizes an increase in funding for the Service Corps of Retired Executives or SCORE Program which enlists retired volunteers to provide their expertise; and it also increases the Small Business Institute or SBI Program authorization which enlists students to undertake management assistance projects.

It also provides additional incentives under the Development Company Program to help achieve national priorities such as rural development and global competitiveness. The Certified Development Company Program resulted from legislation I introduced 10 years ago. In the ensuing decade, these private companies have played a major role in obtaining financing for small business with a combination of private funds and Federal guarantees.

Finally, it extends and modifies our major management assistance program, the Small Business Development Center or SBDC Program.

This program was originally established by legislation in 1980 which created a partnership between the States and the Federal Government to fund management assistance, primarily through universities. In the past decade, these centers, which now operate in 49 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, have provided assistance to 1½ million individuals.

Since each State participant tailors the program to meet its needs and priorities, but within the overall guidelines, the results of the program vary from State to State. But many States have found the program to be so beneficial, including returning even more tax dollars to the State than the amount invested, that they are providing even more money to the center than the required matching grant.

Federal funding is awarded under a formula involving the population in the State. This, of course, will change based on the 1990 census which will reduce the funding in some States. Especially since this formula has remained unchanged and without an adjustment to reflect past inflation in the past decade, to reduce the funding eligibility of a State would seriously and adversely impact the small businesses located there. Thus the bill adjusts the formula to ensure that no SBDC is provided less funds than it can now receive, but it increases the allowance for those which have had population growth.

I am very pleased that Representative NEAL SMITH has joined me by cosponsoring this bill. We plan hearings within the month and anticipate prompt Senate action on a parallel course.

For the information of my colleagues, I am attaching a summary of the bill:

SECTIONAL SUMMARY

The Small Business Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 1990.

Section 1 provides that the bill may be cited as the Small Business Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 1990.

Section 2 sets out the loan and surety bond guarantee levels authorized for 1991 (a general authorization for this year is already enacted) and specifies program levels and provides an authorization for appropriation for each of fiscal years 1992 through 1994 as are shown on the attached chart.

Section 3 authorizes the transfer from the disaster loan revolving fund of such sums as may be necessary for administrative expenses.

Section 4 increases the national program level for the Small Business Development Center Program to $70 million (now $65 million), repeals the 1991 sunset, and clarifies the authority of SBDCs to supply technical assistance as part of management assistance.

Section 5 authorizes SBA to make grants for tree planting by small businesses.

Section 6 extends until October 1, 1994 (now October 1, 1990) the authority of SBA to set the maximum interest rate on the bank loan portion of projects funded as part of the Certified Development Company Program.

Section 7 clarifies the functions of the Office of International Trade within SBA.

Section 8 authorizes the Minority Small Business Commission to accept and use monies which other Federal departments or agencies transfer to it, and authorizes the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition to designate a representative to the Commission in his stead.

Section 9 extends until October 1, 1994, (now October 1, 1990) the authority of the Small Business Administration to provide jointly sponsored training for small firms in cooperation with profit making enterprises.

Section 10 clarifies that a Special Small Business Investment Company (formerly a MESBIC) is limited to 4 tiers of debentures or $35 million from the Small Business Administration (the same as for regular Small Business Investment Companies).

Section 11 makes the position of Deputy Administrator of the Small Business Administration a Presidential appointee, subject to Senate confirmation.

Section 12 requires that if an agency groups together into a big procurement requirement smaller, individual contracts now being performed by small business, it must notify SBA of the change and its reasons therefore and give SBA an opportunity to propose an alternative so that small firms would not be precluded from bidding on the contract.

Section 13 statutorily establishes the eligibility criteria for job creation or job preservation in the development company program at $25,000 in loan eligibility for each job preserved and $40,000 in loan eligibility for each job created.

Section 14 is a technical change to allow close relatives who operate a business to obtain development company financing.

Section 15 provides additional assistance through the development company program (up to $1 million in debenture guarantees instead of $750,000 limit) to businesses which are involved in certain areas of national priority such as rural development, global competition, minority development, etc.

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION—PROGRAM LEVELS

[In millions of dollars]

	Proposed
	1991	1992	1993	1994
General Business Loans	3,500	3,850	4,043	4,245
Direct	0	0	0	0
Guaranteed	3,500	3,850	4,043	4,245
Handicapped Loans	19	20	21	22
Direct	19	20	21	22
Guaranteed	0	0	0	0
Economic Opportunity Loans	24	25	26	27
Direct	24	25	26	27
Guaranteed	0	0	0	0
Pollution Loans	50	53	55	58
Direct	0	0	0	0
Guaranteed	50	53	55	58
Development Company Loans: Guaranteed	520	546	573	602
Veterans Loans: Direct	19	20	21	22
8(a) Loans	10	10	11	12
Direct	10	10	11	12
Guaranteed	0	0	0	0

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION—PROGRAM LEVELS—Continued

[In millions of dollars]

	Proposed
	1991	1992	1993	1994
Investment Company Loans	219	230	242	254
Direct	19	20	21	22
Guaranteed	200	210	221	232
Total Business Loans	4,361	4,754	4,992	5,242
Direct	91	95	100	105
Guaranteed	4,270	4,659	4,892	5,137
Surety Bond Guarantees	1,800	1,890	1,985	2,084

TRIBUTE TO WALTER J. ERDELL AND DR. HAUCK

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Hansjurgen Hauck, chairman and chief executive officer of VDM Nickel-Technologie AG of West Germany and his administrative consultant, Walter J. Erdell. VDM Technologies Corp. is the largest producer in the world of high nickel alloy semifinished mill products.

Walter Erdell received a B.S. in metallurgical engineering from the Case Institute of Technology in Cleveland, OH. Since graduating, Mr. Erdell has been involved in the metal industry in an international marketing and development capacity. Walter is responsible for the development of a new ferritic stainless steel alloy which he named "SEA-CURE." He also developed a proprietary piping system which provides consumers a cost-effective alternative to conventional methods. Besides these industrial innovations, Mr. Erdell is responsible for opening new pipe markets in the United States, Europe, and Northern Africa.

On February 5, 1990, I spoke of the accomplishments and ability of Dr. Hansjurgen Hauck and submitted my remarks into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. As my colleagues may recall, I applauded Dr. Hauck for his research and development efforts in the atomic and metal alloy industries. His insight and knowledge in these fields is well-respected among his peers. Because of this fact, I am submitting for the RECORD a reprint of a speech delivered by Dr. Hauck to the Federal Institute of Geosciences in Hanover. I encourage all Members interested in this critical aspect of our economy to read Dr. Hauck's dissertation.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to pay tribute to Dr. Hauck and Mr. Erdell. Their genuine concern for industry and its workers transcend national boundaries. These two gentlemen are truly innovators and would serve the world well as chief executive officer role models for transnational corporations in the future. As the world unites into a global economy, it is inevitable that transnational corporations lead the way toward a more vibrant and efficient society. We are fortunate to have pioneers such as Dr. Hauck and Mr. Erdell to lead us into this society as we approach the 21st century.

TECHNOLOGY AND THE FUTURE OF METALS

(By Hansjurgen Hauck)

Unlike an overview of a particular field of science or a report on the results of recent research and development, this paper focuses on the future and thereby contains a huge element of speculation. Peering into the future carries with it an enormous potential for error without the opportunity to support our speculations with objective proof.

Aluminum, lead, copper, nickel, steel, zinc, tin and their alloys account for more than 99 percent by volume of all the metal materials used in the world.

Between 1900 and 1986, production of these traditional metals increased from 39.3 million tons to 751.4 million tons, or some 2,000 percent. Steel played a dominant role in this global growth pattern, but perhaps the greatest metal success story is aluminum.

Although the aluminum industry is only about 80 years old, the use of aluminum as an industrial material increased from zero to 15 million tons within this century, making it unique in industrial acceptance.

High growth for all the metals did not begin before or during World War II, but around 1950. It was not the enormous metal consumption for arms production and defense during the two great wars that produced the highest growth rates but the years of peace after 1950.

Although the reconstruction of wartorn Europe and the Far East boosted demand considerably, the high growth rates were not a result of this rehabilitation nor did they represent fulfillment of pent-up civilian demand, which was delayed during the war effort. Statistics show this growth was caused by the mushrooming consumption in the wake of Free World trade and continuously growing affluence, particularly in the industrialized countries. Were it otherwise, growth curves would undulate wildly, as opposed to the steady upward path consumption figures have displayed.

But the years 1900 to 1940 as well were characterized by a remarkable growth in demand for virtually all of these metals, demonstrating an uninterrupted and swift industrial development throughout the world. Our century—and particularly the last 30 years of it—are characterized by high growth rates in the production and consumption of these basic materials.

The worldwide recession in metals usage between 1981 and 1983 should not be overestimated in its significance, as such slacks in demand for short interludes have occurred frequently in the past and will no doubt recur in the future. Undeniably, the demand for the traditional metals has shown such a dynamic growth over the past 85 years that it appears reasonable to extrapolate this growth into the future.

The past has taught us that new technologies have a profound and positive influence on the consumption of traditional metals. The question is, which are the new technologies from today's viewpoint and what effect will they have on the continued importance of the traditional metals.

The term "new technologies," which plays such a decisive role in future developments, can be interpreted in a variety of ways, especially as one applies this term from the general connotation to the species in individual fields of endeavor. I would like to draw your attention to a number of technological fields in which man has been operating—in some cases over two decades:

electronics;

biochemistry;

aeronautics and space technology;

generation and transmission of electricity; and environmental technology.

Electronics requires the physical properties of the traditional metals, such as their electrical and thermal conductivity, their magnetic properties and their expansion characteristics in conjunction with relatively high strength.

The continuing trend toward miniaturization and higher performance imposes ever more stringent requirements regarding the purity and specific strength of the materials—especially strength, because of the smaller and smaller component dimensions.

Traditional metals and their alloys rise to the challenge of these requirements, and similar or other variations find use as vessels or structures of containment as used daily in the consumer and capital goods industries.

Biochemistry is just beginning to enter the industrial stage and may cause a remarkable change in chemical plant engineering. While resistance to corrosion and high temperatures are the chief requirements in selecting materials for chemical plant construction—owing to the processes employed—biochemistry will require additional characteristics of high-quality surfaces and good cleaning properties for small vessels.

Aeronautics and space technology will require better high-temperature materials as turbine combustion temperatures are increased to achieve higher propulsion efficiency.

For the aircraft or missile itself, the main technological emphasis will be on a favorable relationship between strength and weight. This opens up new opportunities for titanium, but also for high-strength traditional steels. For the first time, however, this field demonstrates the limits of traditional metals vs. modern composite materials.

Generation of electricity was heavily impacted by the initial successes of nuclear energy, leading to an entirely new family of construction materials, such as zirconium, hafnium and a series of alloys derived from them. Due to environmental and political considerations, however, energy generation has reverted to more conventional fuel sources such as coal, natural gas and petroleum. Again, the traditional metals meet the operating requirements of fossil-fired plants relying on high thermal stability and good corrosion resistance.

Not only must conventional characteristics be met, but increasingly stringent limits on air pollution have spawned a series of cleansing devices that operate in extremely hostile environments. Special grades of stainless steel and high-quality nickel-based alloys increasingly are used for these applications.

As in aeronautics and space technology, operating temperatures are increased in the hot sections of process plants to improve efficiency. Modern combustion processes, which often are combined with heat recovery systems, also stimulate the use of high-temperature, corrosion-resistant materials.

Transmission of energy—after copper had replaced aluminum as an overhead line material years ago—will surely be revolutionized in the decades to come. Superconductivity, with its positive energy balance and the rapid progress it has made recently, will in all probability change the role of the traditional metals. New conductor materials will be developed that can no longer be called traditional.

However, they will break new ground for the expanded use of traditional metals in applications such as cryogenics, where stainless steels have the unique capability of retaining full strength at temperatures approaching absolute zero. Again, the traditional metals meet the primary requirements of conductivity and strength. In communications, however, the future potential is limited due to the glass-fiber systems threatening to replace conventional copper.

Environmental technology is dominated by corrosion resistance and strength requirements of the metallic materials. New demand will be created for alloys of traditional metals in this field and high-quality materials will rank high for reasons of plant safety and reliability of operation. Oil and gas production, especially by offshore facilities, also requires corrosion-resistant materials.

METALS CAN OUTPERFORM NEW MATERIALS

(By Hansjurgen Hauck)

If one realizes that steel and nonferrous metal sales combined do not approach the sales of the world chemical producers, it becomes clear how formidable the financial power of the plastics industry is in its quest to substitute its materials for steel.

Expenditures for research and development usually are allocated on the basis of a percentage of sales. With a much higher sales base and a history of allocating a higher percentage to research and development that the metals industry, the chemical companies emerge as a Goliath in technological warfare.

We all have experienced the unbelievably successful encroachment by plastics in every facet of our life-styles—a credit to this dynamic industry. Although the volume trend of world plastics production has been impressive, the growth rates have declined noticeably over the past 10 years and saturation effects appear to be gaining ground. This may be an added incentive for chemical companies to become even more aggressive.

The steel industry is not without its defenses. After years of lethargy, it has begun to spend much more on research and development than in the past. Great strides have been made in hot-dip galvanizing and now electro-galvanizing to enhance the corrosion resistance of metallic parts. Moreover, high-strength steels have been developed to allow thinner parts of comparable strength to reduce costs. This also reduces weight, leading to fuel economy.

A more objective picture may be obtained by looking at the percentage change in demand for various automobile materials over an extended period. The use of plastics in automobiles has increased considerably, from 4.2-percent to 10.5 percent, but at the same time metals use has declined only 3 percent. Metallic materials have retained their dominant position and there is no indication plastics will make additional severe inroads for at least the next 10 years. To the contrary, the potential for the expanded use of nonferrous metals for engines and other vital components is far from fully exploited. Essentially, the automobile will remain metallic.

The other major substitution threat to metals is ceramics, and I will always be speaking of high-duty ceramic materials in these references.

There is no doubt that the market is growing rapidly. Growth rates from 1977 to 1986 ranged between 520 and 650 percent depending on the region, and a similar growth continuation is expected into 1995. World sales by then will have reached some $30 billion, or about 6 percent of world sales by the metals industry.

While this comparison places the ceramics thrust in its true perspective overall, the impact on select industries is quite different. At present, 90 percent of ceramics are utilized in the electronics field, and that will be their major market, according to current literature accounts. Ceramics do not appear for the moment to be a serious threat to the metals industry, but I must say I am impressed by the recent successes in producing high-quality ceramics.

To this point we have been discussing the influence of technology on future metals use. In reality, the major influence is cost-effectiveness, which combines a variety of factors. Even in this focus, technology plans an important role, but it is operational as opposed to product technology.

One factor is price, which is plainly visible, but a manufacturer's equipment and a user's experience also play a role. Mankind has a long history of experience with metals, and virtually all of us are aware of the behavior of metallic materials. Know-how in the industrial handling of metals is widespread throughout the world and extremely effective in the production of conventional products. Moreover, investment in industrial equipment and production plants is gigantic, with huge and nearly irreversible capital commitments that must yield a reasonable return to investors.

Such deep-rooted experience and capital investment represent very high barriers for substitute materials to overcome, particularly if they are non-metallics unable to utilize the existing infrastructure.

Nevertheless, numerous examples can be cited where these barriers can be overcome if the substitute is proven cost-effective. The inertia of in-place barriers may delay the advent of new materials, but the superiority of new and cost-effective materials will not be denied their rightful place. Therefore, the continued success of traditional metals in the marketplace will depend heavily on their price.

Since 1950 aluminum prices have risen by a factor of 5.7 as compensation rose by a factor of 7.4. Aluminum prices actually dropped from previous highs upon introduction of large-scale production shortly before World War I. Only since 1970 have prices risen to their present highs, clearly a result of the high cost of energy since the OPEC oil embargo. Aluminum production is highly energy sensitive but still represents a bargain.

However, the real perspective of traditional metals pricing cannot be fully appreciated until we compare these developments with the progression of personal income—i.e., purchasing power.

Despite the weakening of the dollar due to inflation, U.S. purchasing power has increased steadily from 1930 to 1980 in relation to the costs of industrial commodities. Only during the Great Depression era did purchasing power decline, ending after World War II. From 1930 to 1980 the "real" cost of metals declined 25 percent, reversing a negative trend from 1930 to 1945 for 13-percent gain, with another 12-percent gain thereafter.

In Europe, the "real" cost of metals for the same period fell an almost unbelievable degree to a fraction of their former cost. This turnaround was due to the low real income of those countries in 1950—owing, no doubt, to the war. At that point—in Germany, for example—real hourly compensation was one-third of that for Americans, whereas in 1980 it was 15 percent higher.

These low material costs are what have sustained the dominance of these metals in the technological field. As long as this relationship can be maintained, the barriers to substitution will remain virtually insurmountable.

Another significant savings is power conservation. A most interesting and often overlooked factor is the trend in automated scrap processing, which in some respects is only beginning to develop. To some extent, the concept of automated scrap processing can itself be looked upon as a new technology opening up additional possibilities for high-strength and wear-resistant metallic materials, creating a truly interesting loop.

There is no better example than stainless steel to illustrate the role of the cost-benefit ratio as a factor of success. Of the industrial metals, stainless currently enjoys the highest growth rate, having for the first time exceeded 11 million tons.

Although stainless steel has been used on a commercial scale for more than 50 years, its greatest success came with the introduction of new manufacturing methods. The results are noteworthy. A growth of about 6 percent since the middle of the 1960s is attributable to new cost reducing methods.

Three processes were milestones on the road to success: Sendzimir rolling, AOD converter smelting and continuous casting. The favorable cost-benefit ratio of stainless steel is continuously paving the way for new applications of old and new technologies.

Cost-reducing measures as steps toward safeguarding and expanding the use of traditional metals will be particularly effective if alloys are developed for specific applications to improve the cost-benefit ratio even further. This forces the metals industry to pursue research in new applications and processes simultaneously—a combination that makes the access barrier for new materials nearly insurmountable.

HOW THE AMERICAN DEBATE OVER ABORTION HAS IMPACTED WORLDWIDE POPULATION PROGRAMS

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, as McGeorge Bundy points out in the following article "Population: An Inescapable Problem," an unintended consequence of the so-called right-to-life movement has been to increase abortion worldwide.

By limiting the level of American support for other kinds of birth control, (the right-to-life movement) limited the overall supply of contraceptive services; they thus increased the number of pregnant women eager to avoid childbirth and so enlarged the number resorting to abortion.

Mr. Bundy's astute analysis leads one to conclude that the only reasonable and responsible action for Congress to take is to return to the policies prior to 1984—to repeal the Mexico City policy and refund the United Nations Population Fund. Currently at 5.2 billion, with world population increasing by 90 million each year, the time for action is now.

POPULATION: AN INESCAPABLE PROBLEM

(By McGeorge Bundy, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Population Council)

I deeply believe that the problem of population is one of the largest and most important in the world. I believe that it is inescapably a problem that requires attention from governments and citizens all around the globe. I believe that over the last 30 years there have been extraordinary advances in our understanding of the ways and means of designing and conducting population programmes. I was first educated in these matters almost 25 years ago at the Ford Foundation, which was early in the field, and I do not think that even Oscar Harkavy, Ford's leader in this field throughout my time there, could then have written as clear and comprehensive a summary of essential propositions as the one that appears in "Population in the Twenty-First Century". What we also know, of course, is that we are still learning, and it is in that spirit that I want to comment in particular on some current confusions in my own country.

As we all know, the worldwide effort to improve the family planning choices open to the people of developing countries has been constrained by many different forces—the pressure of other claims on limited resources, the existence of educational handicaps like illiteracy, the imperfections of even the most improved contraceptives, and the existence of deep-rooted convictions that are inconsistent with sensitive and effective programmes of family planning.

My own belief is that in our field such deeply held convictions often lead to policy choices that have consequences just the opposite of what their backers hope for. There have been consequences of this sort in many countries—we have seen that over-enthusiastic or insensitive pressure for reduction of birthrates can generate reactions that discredit a programme, and we have seen programmes whose inattention to the real concerns of users have made them unsuccessful. But it is usually best in these matters to find one's examples in one's own country, and so the case I want to discuss is that of the impact on worldwide population programmes of the American debate of the 1980s over abortion. I will begin with the good news—that impact has been limited—and go on to a rather more striking point: that in so far as American right-to-lifers have had any effect at all on the worldwide resort to abortion, that impact has been to increase both its frequency and its cost in maternal suffering and death.

Let us begin with a recognition that there can be no doubt of the deep sincerity of most of those who are in the forefront of the American right-to-life movement. They do believe passionately that abortion is an offense against God's word. Not all of their arguments are as sincere as this conviction; for example, they often deny that they are opposed to contraceptive devices, but what many of them really mean is "not at this stage of the debate". Not every politician who seeks their support is as deeply persuaded as they are; most politicians—and indeed most Americans—have convictions less categorical than those of the deeply embattled believers in the "right to life" or the sometimes equally embattled believers in wholly unlimited recourse to abortion all through pregnancy. The renewed American debate of 1989—produced by an apparent shift in our Supreme Court away from its broad assertion of constitutional protection for abortion in the case of Roe v. Wade of 1973—suggests that those in the middle, believers in modern contraceptives and skeptical of absolutist views on abortion, will turn out to hold the balance of power. I suspect that if Roe v. Wade is further modified, or even overturned, we shall find ourselves in the end with a varied pattern of state laws in which considerable discretion will be left to each woman and her professional counselor—which is where most middle-class Americans thought this hard question had been left before 1973.

In the early 1980s, partly because their desire to attack American abortions was at least temporarily constrained by the decision in Roe v. Wade, and partly because they had friends in the Reagan Administration, leaders in the right-to-life movement turned their attention to the American Government's support of family planning in developing countries. That programme was then the largest such governmental enterprise in the world, the product of a happy combination of professional understanding, presidential leadership, and public support. But in 1984, with ardent right-to-lifers in the van, the Reagan Administration moved against abortion abroad. Initially it sought to cut off all U.S. support for any population activities of governments supporting abortion with other funds, but in the end it seems to have recognized that such direct efforts to change the policies of other governments would only stiffen their insistence on making their own choices, and the new rules were restricted to other organizations, one of which turned out to be UNFPA. The right-to-lifers' parallel efforts to reduce appropriations for all international population work were blocked in Congress, but their pressure did contribute to a flattening of the level of the U.S Government's support for population activities in developing countries.

Since no U.S. funds went to the support of abortion abroad before the right-to-life attack on the programme, that attack had no direct impact on the level or quality of abortion services abroad. It did, however, have an indirect impact, and not at all of the sort the zealots intended. By limiting the level of American support for other kinds of birth control, they limited the overall supply of contraceptive services; they thus increased the number of pregnant women eager to avoid childbirth and so enlarged the number resorting to abortion. Since we do not know just how much the right-to-life pressure has reduced U.S. Government funding from what it would otherwise have been, and since worldwide statistics on legal and extra-legal abortion are fragmentary and imprecise, we cannot know how much worldwide family planning service was constrained, or how many legal or extra-legal abortions would have been avoided if the needs of women eager to avoid childbirth had been met in other ways. But what is not at all in doubt is that women with access to decent contraceptive services are less often driven to seek the abortionist in the alley, and what we also know is that extra-legal abortion is one of the most important of all the cases of maternal suffering and death. We cannot know how much activities of the American right-to-lifers have increased the numbers and human costs of abortion in the developing world, but there can be no doubt at all that their net effect has been on that side of the balance.

Obviously I am not suggesting that this result was intended, or even that it should be charged against right-to-life leaders as an immoral consequence that they should have taken into account. I recognize that from their standpoint it could not be attractive to give support to what they see as the evil of contraceptive services merely in order to moderate the greater evil of abortion. But for the rest of us, and especially for the very large majority of Americans for whom contraceptive devices are entirely acceptable and abortion much less desirable, I think this result deserves close attention. The practical consequence of ideological blinders in this case has been an increase in the very activity that the men and women wearing the blinders set out to discourage. Whose real intent is served by that result? What careful and responsible political leader, examining real consequences in the real world, would not wish to go back to the policies such leaders sensibly supported before 1984?

In selecting this particular episode for analysis I am not at all suggesting that it is unique, except perhaps in its degree of perversity. In the long history of our attempt to understand cause and effect in the field of population policy, there are many examples of error, and many of them share one characteristic of the example I chose: they oversimplify the problem. There are those who still oversimplify, in one way or another, the relation between population growth and economic development—there was over simplification of that kind in the Reagan Administration's demarche of 1984, and there have been oversimplifications at the other extreme too. Many of us were also slow to understand that contraceptive devices are unlikely to have much impact without appropriate contraceptive services, and we came more slowly than we should have to a recognition that a lively concern for the roles, the responsibilities, and the general health of woman is essential to any good arrangement for family planning. We have not found it easy to keep in mind what the great demographer Paul Demeny, of the Population Council, so steadily tells us: that the justification for our concerns with population does not rest merely on facile worldwide generalizations about the prospect of rapid growth; neither does it require a sentimental belief that wider choices always mean better choices, or confidence that public policy is always justified in the exercise of political influence for demographic change. We need not be ashamed that one or another of such overstatements may have helped to get all this started; this is the way of the world. But what we all know today, and many of you from a closer and more extended experience than I can claim, is that more careful statements on all these points can be persuasively argued; there can be great cost in unlimited explosions of the birthrate; there are both medical and cultural arguments for diversity of choice; and the establishment of a strong programme in any country does require political leadership. What we also know is that a really good family planning programme—anchored in the serious support of political leaders, conducted by women and men who do their work with knowledgeable care, and responsive to the real needs and hopes of the people who are served, is quite simply a human good whose real value is wholly apparent when you consider what present and future life would be like without it, all around the world.

Another way of saying all this is that we have engaged ourselves, without illusion, in a war with human misery. The reality in any world without family planning skills would not be the disciplined monogamous moderation of those who can meet the strictest standards of their own creed. The governing reality is that the sexual urge of our species is vastly stronger than the rules of religion. That is not a value judgment—it is a much more powerful proposition: a statement of fact supported by the experience of every generation in every continent. No one should deny the right of those who have a particular conviction to pursue it unconstrained by contraceptive devices. But it is another matter to leave them unanswered when they reach the astonishing conclusion that either preachment or law can make everyone else like them.

Finally, let me suggest that we have a growing asset of enormous value in something that I sometimes think we take for granted—the reality that there is now an international community of people who fully understand that this field of thought and action matters. This understanding, as I have already suggested, does not let us off from the hard work of demonstrating as strongly as we can that the field does have the importance we deeply believe it has. It does not let us off from the obligation—more affirmatively, the challenge—of being the first to apply any newly recognized truth by the appropriate change in the shape of our attack on the problem. It does not allow us to relax, or to pretend that because attention to the question of population is much stronger than it was, understanding much stronger, and worldwide funding at an all-time high, there is enough attention, or enough understanding, or enough money.

But we do have the United Nations Population Fund, known to the world by its earlier initials UNFPA. I like the new name just as I like the old initials. UNFPA is a genuinely worldwide enterprise, and it is right that the problems of population should have a UN agency all their own. The United Nations Population Fund has a short but proud history—and a progressively stronger record in its work on attention, understanding, and funding, all three.

A BANKER'S-EYE VIEW OF PERESTROIKA

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 10, 1990

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with you an unusual analysis of the Soviet economy and United States policy concerns. Mr. Martin Miler, Chairman of the Hibernia Corporation, has written an excellent essay on the Soviet Union's interest in obtaining untied loans with the United States. His concern is based on more than 31 years of banking experience.

While there have been many articles written concerning the "politics" of loans to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. Mr. Miler takes a different approach. Rather than analyze the request from a public policy orientation, he reflects as the "loan officer" upon how a background credit check might go if Gorbachev formally applied for a loan.

Before the United States borrows the money from our grandchildren and rushes to rescue the Soviet Union and bless the Gorbachev economic reforms with United States taxpayer dollars, I think it is important to understand the nature of the perspective borrower, his character and the economic merits of the loan.

I am confident you will find this paper fascinating.

[Special report from the Center for Intelligence Studies, March 1990]

HEY AMERIKANSKII, CAN YOU SPARE A BILLION?

MIKHAIL S. GORBACHEV,
PRESIDENT OF THE SOVIET UNION.

DEAR AMERICAN: I am beginning to think like you and to adopt your values. We Soviets are not truculent anymore. In order for me to make the world a better place, I need your help.

You see, we have a temporary problem in achieving a better world. If you will loan me some money, which I promise to repay, that better world is a sure thing.

I'll be in touch.

Your new friend,

M. GORBACHEV.

Although the above letter is fictional, it accurately reflects Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's approach to his efforts to obtain loans from the United States, other western governments and from private western banks. However, before such loans are made to Mr. Gorbachev, or, more accurately, to the government he represents, an intervening step should occur. That intervening step is nothing less than a careful evaluation of Mr. Gorbachev's loan application. This intermediary step is critically important not only to the lending institution, public or private, but also to you as a taxpayer and, possibly, as a shareholder. Here it is worth remembering the more than 1 trillion dollars of uncollectible loans already made to Third World governments abroad and the current savings and loan debacle at home. Because the taxpayer is the ultimate guarantor of both foreign loans and domestic financial institutions, you are going to be stuck with both tabs. Before you get stuck again, don't you think it would be wise to examine Mr. Gorbachev's loan application for yourself?

One way to do this is to imagine yourself as a loan officer, with Mr. Gorbachev seated next to your desk. What does his loan application look like? The question is not as simple as it might seem. The application is not his, after all, but that of the sovereign state he is representing. As a loan officer, you reason that the best way to assess the application is to treat the Soviet Union as if it were an ordinary business, and Mr. Gorbachev as if he were its Chief Executive Officer. That way, the Soviet application submitted by Mr. Gorbachev can be assessed by the same criteria that you would apply to any other business. Lending money is truly a business transaction.

What is the purpose of the loan? Mr. Gorbachev grins charmingly and says he wants to reform the way his "firm" is run. He needs the loan to implement a new business plan which he calls perestroika, or restructuring, which will make the Soviet Union more productive and profitable. Further, he tells you that it will make this troubled world a much happier place as it will inevitably result in the Soviet Union gravitating toward western values.

You say, "That's nice, Mr. Gorbachev, but what exactly is the purpose of the loan? He says that he wants the Soviet Union to be more like the West, to supply consumer goods to the Soviet public, to provide a better life for its citizens. To do so, he needs additional capital to build a viable economic infrastructure. As an additional incentive to make the loan, he claims that under his direction the Soviet Union has turned over a new lead. He points to glasnost as evidence. No more secretive, alienated behavior from his folks. It's butter and borscht these days, not bombs and bazookas.

Mr. Gorbachev graciously hands you his financial statements with the assurance that any loans granted will be scrupulously repaid. He parts with a hug and a handshake, and you start to analyze the credit request.

There are two basic considerations: economic and political. In bankers' parlance, you could characterize these as "capacity" and "character."

First consider the economic merits (capacity) of the loan request. The Soviet financial statements look grand—surpluses year after year. But wait! Revenues actually fall short of expenses, because the source of a large portion of their revenues is not identified. After puzzling over the figures, you finally determine that surpluses cannot be. "Is this a plug figure," you ask? According to Dr. Judy Shelton, author of the The Coming Soviet Crash, it is indeed. She has analyzed the Soviet budget scrupulously for several years and has reached that conclusion quite persuasively. These ledgers of legerdemain provide no real access to the true financial condition of the Soviet Union. Why, you wonder, the financial fiction of a balanced budget? You conclude that deficits would make Mr. Gorbachev's business, the Soviet Union, look bad, and its principal product, Marxist-Leninism, look even worse. But in attempting to disguise the Soviet deficit, Mr. Gorbachev has inadvertently revealed indications of two serious problems: misrepresentation, a character flaw; and an incapacity to repay the loan, a capacity flaw.

Additional checks with Dr. Shelton reveal several grave conditions which cast further authentic shadows of doubt on the Soviet Union's capacity to repay a loan:

1. The Soviet government has cut fixed capital investment to the marrow;

2. The Soviet populace is poor, living at a subsistence level;

3. Despite its urgent need to free domestic capital for revestments, the Soviet government is unwilling to cut military expenditures.

Further credit checking reveals additional troubling aspects about the Soviet Union's capacity to borrow with reasonable prospects of repaying its debts:

1. Productivity is falling in the Soviet economy. State enterprises, which are its foundation, are producing negative returns;

2. Revenues cannot fund current needs;

3. There is a critical lack of goods and even food;

4. There is a formidable black market which is symptomatic of rampant economic corruption and dysfunction;

5. Eighteen million bureaucrats run the economy through central planning.

But at least there is no inflation, because prices are fixed. Right?

Wrong! Inflation does exist, because there is a persistent increase in the supply of money (printed!) and rising credit in the face of limitations on the amount of goods and services available. But because prices are fixed, it is not manifested in rising costs. Rather, it takes the form of scarcities and black marketeering. This particularly vicious form of inflation is causing widespread economic dysfunction and conflict in a seething resentful population.

The USSR is taking the shape of a Third World nation, or worse a "Fourth World" nation, i.e., the Soviet Union pretends to be a "First World" nation with a "balanced" budget, when it actually operates as a Third World nation, ergo, $1 + 3 = 4$!

You cannot help but now wonder, "Is this aspirant borrower financially crippled?" And how sincere is its commitment, made on its behalf by Mr. Gorbachev, to borscht rather than bombs? And finally, is the extension of loans to the applicant really in the best interests of your firm?—your firm in this case to mean the United States.

These are good and important questions but, unfortunately, they are rarely asked.

The Soviets want money from our "firm," the United States. They want us to export our capital while we ourselves have a huge budget deficit and national debt. Won't this magnify our own problems and create an even bigger financial problem for ourselves? Assuredly yes, because our own prospective needs are critical and large.

Nonetheless, there is real enthusiasm in some quarters not only for direct loans to the Soviet Union but also for indirect loans in the form of cooperative business arrangements. Many American and western businessmen believe they will prosper from opening up the potentially huge Soviet market through sales and by participating in "juicy" joint ventures configured with appealing terms to the West. These sources see perestroika as the salvation of the West, which they conveniently confuse with their own firm's profitability. Yet even that is not at all assured, as their projections presuppose an adequate and acceptable international medium of exchange, a market with genuine purchasing power and a more-or-less lengthy period of time to conduct their business operations in order to recoup their investments. But none of these conditions now exists; nor are they likely to. As Dr. Shelton warns, perestroika is merely an inconvenient necessity and remedy resorted to by a police state in deep trouble. Dr. Shelton contends the entire scheme is designed to garner western capital to accomplish a fourfold purpose:

1. To increase Soviet government revenues;

2. To decentralize and cut government costs;

3. To invoke price reform to unburden heavy government subsidies;

4. And last but not least—in fact, most importantly—to maintain full military defensive (offensive) capabilities.

Now to the political, or "character," issues. What of the Soviet government's credit history? It is consistently poor. When the Bolshevik Party (later, Communist) seized power in 1917 and established the Soviet Union, the Communist regime repudiated the debts of the Russian Empire. Although a rare and audacious political act, this repudiation was an extreme violation of international law and custom and, as such, is not a persuasive recommendation of credit worthiness in terms of character. Worse, this is not an isolated incident, but rather part of a larger and long-standing pattern. The Soviet government has repudiated many other debts, including its own.

Also, there are rival camps of power internal to the Soviet Union: "softliners," hardline Stalinists and shades in-between. Should the internal power balance shift, how long will the Soviet government continue to pander to western values with the blandishments of human rights reforms, emigration and other forms of ingratiation? On the basis of their past behavior, only so long as it serves their purposes to build character in order to receive credit. The Soviet history is marred by a longstanding record of broken agreements, and, other than Mr. Gorbachev's promises, what is there to indicate that this pattern will change?

On the basis of the evidence, you must, as a prudent loan officer, conclude that Mr. Gorbachev has a Russian bear by the tail. He has little choice, given his circumstances, but to turn to external sources to fund his way out of his problem. His application for a loan is the equivalent of filing for bankruptcy under Chapter 11 in the United States. His system is bankrupt, and his ideal solution is to persuade others to finance him out of his travail, leaving his military as strong as ever and his agenda for world domination now disguised but unaltered. Time is bought through the artifice of ostensible reform.

Is the risk of repayment of loans to the Soviets a bad risk? As a prudent loan officer, you must conclude so. Is the Soviet financial condition unworthy? As a prudent loan officer, you must conclude so. Is the Soviet character not trustworthy? As a prudent loan officer, you must conclude so. This is a credit request to be declined despite some tempting potential short-term and illusory profit potentials.

But what of Washington and other capitals? Will government "loan officers"—actually, senior foreign policy officials—reach the same conclusions? The answer, which should be clear, is unclear.

Washington is uncertain and confused by the swift and dramatic turn of events. This is exacerbated by the western press which apparently has become cheerleader and character reference for Mr. Gorbachev. It faces cleverly crafted propaganda and promotion from the Soviet Union which claims to have transmogrified itself from blood red to rosy red. We now face the Soviet Union as an applicant to the World Bank and to the International Monetary Fund (IMF), where membership involves new eligibility for loans and access to U.S. credit markets while still in default on Soviet debts owed today from World Wars I and II. And all the while the Soviets are using the lure of potential profits to beguilingly drive a wedge between the United States and the European Economic Community, which is, not incidentally, virtually congruent with a potential wedge driven into NATO.

Washington faces a loan applicant seeking to maintain strong, global military prowess and aspiring to have capital for future economic strength in a land to be inhabited by happy consumers. The applicant is smooth and persuasive and says all the right things while providing the world with a collective sigh of relief against a long-abiding fear of Soviet aggressiveness. The bear is now performing a "benign" dance before an eager, yet still tense, world audience. The bear seeks to be fed with loans, but how does Washington craft a policy of leadership for the West in response to the dancing bear, embodied by President Gorbachev?

The answer to that question will have profound ramifications on global stability. Hopefully, a set of strategies will be forged by Washington to avoid feeding a potentially lethal bear and making bad loans which will strengthen that bear and sap the West. The difficulty of the task is magnified by the desire to avoid deterring the Soviets from their recent, more positive path. Yet to forget the innate irascibility of that bear is not the folly of the Finns who live in its shadow. Finland remembers the 1939 Soviet invasion, and, small as they are, they will not be beguiled into disarming in the face of perestroika and glasnost. We in the West should be that wise as well. It was said by Georges Clemenceau after World War I, "Peace is only war pursued by other means." That is a useful perspective for the West to maintain.

(About the author: Mr. Martin C. Miler is Chairman of the Hibernia Corporation, headquartered in New Orleans, LA. He has 31 years of banking experience. Mr. Miler is a graduate of the College of William and Mary, and the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania.)

SENATE—Friday, May 11, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., and was called to order by the Honorable CHARLES S. ROBB, a Senator from the State of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.—II Timothy 3:16, 17.

Eternal God who hast revealed Thyself in nature, in history and in Scripture, we thank Thee for the knowledge of Thyself Thou hast given us. Help us not to allow the busyness of life to preclude time to read and reflect upon the Bible. Give us to see the manifold blessings promised in Your Word, forgiveness and cleansing, refreshment and renewal, insights which illuminate the mundane and the mystical. Grant us to see the incalculable profit promised for our perfection and equipping for all good works. Imbue us with the power of righteousness promised through Your Word.

In His name who is the Word incarnate. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, May 11, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable CHARLES S. ROBB, a Senator from the State of Virginia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ROBB thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

SENATORIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 137, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 137) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for a voluntary system of spending limits and partial public financing of Senate general election campaigns, to limit contributions by multicandidate political committees, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with amendments as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets, and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italic.)

S. 137

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE V—SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC FINANCING FOR SENATE GENERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title—

"(1) unless otherwise provided in this title the definitions set forth in section 301 of this Act apply to this title;

"(2) the term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to any candidate for election to the office of United States Senator, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures on behalf of such candidate to further the election of such candidate;

"(3) the term 'candidate' means an individual who is seeking nomination for election, or election to the office of United States Senator and such individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, if such individual meets the requirements of subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 301(2);

"(4) the term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committee of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the last previous general election for such office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next election; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next election;

"(5) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible under section 502 to receive benefits under this title;

"(6) the term 'general election' means any election which will directly result in the election of a person to the office of United States Senator, but does not include an open primary election;

"(7) the term 'general election period' means the period beginning on the day after the date of the primary or runoff election, whichever is later, and ending on the date of such general election or the date on which the candidate withdraws from the campaign or otherwise ceases actively to seek election, whichever occurs first;

"(8) the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate, and the spouse of any such person, and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate's spouse and the spouse of any such person;

"(9) the term 'major party' has the meaning given such term in section 9002(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act, provided that a candidate in a general election held by a State to elect a Senator subsequent to an open primary in which all the candidates for the office participated and which resulted in the candidate and at least one other candidate qualifying for the ballot in the general election, shall be treated as a candidate of a major party for purposes of this title;

"(10) the term 'primary election' means any election which may result in the selection of a candidate for the ballot of the general election;

"(11) the term 'primary election period' means the period beginning on the day following the date of the last Senate election for the same Senate office and ending on the date of the first primary election for such office following such last Senate election for such office, or the date on which the candidate withdraws from the election or otherwise ceases actively to seek election, whichever occurs first;

"(12) the term 'runoff election' means the election held after a primary election, and prescribed by applicable State law as the means for deciding which candidate(s) should be certified as nominee(s) for the Federal office sought;

"(13) the term 'runoff election period' means the period beginning on the day following the date of the last primary election for such office and ending on the date of the runoff election for such office;

"(14) the term 'Senate Fund' means the Senate Election Campaign Fund maintained pursuant to section 506 by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Presidential Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(15) the term 'voting age population'

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

means the resident population, 18 years of age or older, as certified pursuant to section 315(e).

"ELIGIBILITY TO RECEIVE BENEFITS

"SEC. 502. (a) To be eligible to receive benefits under this title, in addition to the requirements of subsection (d), a candidate shall, within 7 days after qualifying for the general election ballot under the law of the State involved or, if such candidate is a candidate in a State which has a primary election to qualify for such ballot after September 1, within 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first—

"(1) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that during the period beginning on January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year of the general election involved, or in the case of a special election for the office of United States Senator, during the period beginning on the day on which the vacancy occurs in that office, and ending on the day of such certification, such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have received contributions in an amount at least equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of such State or $150,000, whichever is greater, up to an amount that does not exceed $650,000;

"(2) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that all contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals and that no contribution from such individual, when added to all contributions to or for the benefit of such candidate from such individual, was taken into account to the extent such amount exceeds $250;

"(3) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have not expended for the primary election, more than the amount equal to 67 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less;

"(4) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have not expended for any runoff election, more than an amount equal to 20 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b);

"(5) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that 75 per centum of the aggregate amount of contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals residing in such candidate's State;

"(6) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that at least one other candidate has qualified for the same general election ballot under the law of the State involved;

"(7) agree in writing that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate—

"(A) have not made and will not make expenditures which exceed the limitations established in section 503, except as otherwise provided in this title;

"(B) will not accept any contributions in violation of section 315;

"(C) will not accept any contribution for the general election involved except to the extent that such contribution is necessary to defray expenditures for such election that in the aggregate do not exceed the amount of the limitation on expenditures established in section 503(b), unless otherwise provided in this Act;

"(D) will deposit all payments received under this section in an account insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation [or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation] from which funds may be withdrawn by check or similar means of payment to third parties;

"(E) will furnish campaign records, evidence of contributions and other appropriate information to the Commission; and

"(F) will cooperate in the case of any audit and examination by the Commission under section 507; and

"(8) notify the Commission of their intention to make use of the benefits provided for in section 504.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a)(1) and paragraph (2)(B) of section 504(a), in determining the amount of contributions received by a candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(1) no contribution other than a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution shall be taken into account;

"(2) no contribution made through an intermediary or conduit referred to in section 315(a)(8) shall be taken into account;

"(3) no contribution received from any person other than an individual shall be taken into account, and no contribution received from an individual shall be taken into account to the extent such contribution exceeds $250 when added to the total amount of all other contributions made by such individual to or for the benefit of such candidate beginning on the applicable date specified in paragraph (4) of this subsection; and

"(4) no contribution received prior to January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year in which the general election involved or received after the date on which the general election involved is held shall be taken into account, and in the case of a special election, no contribution received prior to the date on which the vacancy occurs in that office or received after the date on which the general election involved is held shall be taken into account.

"(c) The threshold amounts in subsection (a)(1) shall be increased at the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index as determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of determining such increase, the term 'base period', as used in such section shall mean the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of [1987] 1989.

"(d) In addition to the requirements of subsection (a), to be eligible to receive benefits under this title a candidate shall, on the day such candidate files as a candidate for the primary election—

"(1) file with the Commission a declaration of whether or not—

"(1) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for the primary election, more than an amount equal to 67 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less;

"(2) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for any runoff election, more than an amount equal to 20 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b); and

"(3) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for the general election, more than an amount equal to the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b).

"LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 503. (a) No candidate who is entitled to a benefit in a general election under this title shall make expenditures from the personal funds of such candidate, or the funds of any member of the immediate family of such candidate, or incur personal loans in connection with such candidate's campaign for the Senate, aggregating in excess of $20,000, during the election cycle.

"(b)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, no candidate who is entitled to a benefit for use in a general election under this title shall make expenditures for such general election which in the aggregate exceed $400,000, plus—

"(A) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(B) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million, plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that the amount of the limitation under this subsection, in the case of any candidate, shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), in any State with no more than one transmitter for a commercial Very High Frequency (VHF) television station licensed to operate in that State, no candidate in such State who receives a benefit for use in a general election under this title shall make expenditures for such general election which in the aggregate exceed the higher of—

"(A) $950,000; or

"(B) $400,000 plus 45 cents multiplied by the voting age population of 4 million or less, plus 40 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million, up to an amount not exceeding $5,500,000.

"(c) The limitations on expenditures in subsections (b), (d), and (e) shall be subject to the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of section 504.

"(d) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits for a general election under this title may receive any such benefits if such candidate spends for the primary election, more than the amount equal to 67 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election as determined under subsection (b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less.

"(e) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits for a general election under this title may receive any such benefits if such candidate spends for a runoff election, if any, more than an amount which in the aggregate exceeds 20 percent of the maximum amount of the limitation applicable to such candidate as determined under subsection (b).

"(f)(1) For purposes of this section, the amounts set forth in subsections (b), (d), and (e) of this section shall be increased at the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index as determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of determining such increase, the term 'base period', as used in section 315(c), means the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1989.

"(2) The limitation set forth in subsection (b) shall not apply to expenditures by a candidate or a candidate's authorized committees from a compliance fund established to defray the costs of legal and accounting services provided solely to insure compliance with this Act; provided however that—

"(A) such fund contains only contributions (including contributions received in excess of any amount necessary to defray qualified campaign expenditures pursuant to section 313) received in accordance with the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act;

"(B) the aggregate total amount of contributions to, and expenditures from, such fund do not exceed 10 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election as determined under subsection (b); and

"(C) no transfers may be made from such fund to any other accounts of the candidate's authorized committees, except that the fund may receive transfers from such other accounts at any time.

In the event that, subsequent to any general election, a candidate determines that the costs of necessary and continuing legal and accounting services require contributions to and expenditures from the fund in excess of the limitations of this paragraph, the candidate may petition the Commission for a waiver of such limitations up to any additional amounts as the Commission may authorize in connection with such waiver. Any waiver, or denial of a waiver, by the Commission under this paragraph shall be subject to judicial review under section 508. Any money remaining in such fund when the candidate decides to terminate or dissolve such fund, shall be—

"(i) contributed to the United States Treasury to reduce the budget deficit, or

"(ii) transferred to a fund of a subsequent campaign of that candidate.

"(g) If, during the primary and runoff period portion of the two-year election cycle preceding the candidate's general election, independent expenditures by any person or persons aggregating an amount in excess of $10,000 are made, or are obligated to be made, in opposition to a candidate or for the opponent of such candidate, the limitations provided in subsections (d) and (e), as they apply to such candidate, shall be increased for that primary or runoff election in an amount equal to the amount of such expenditures made during the period covered by such election.

"ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO BENEFITS

"SEC. 504. (a) Except as otherwise provided in section 506(c)—

"(1) all eligible candidates shall be entitled to—

"(A) the broadcast media rates provided under section 315(b)(3) of the Communications Act of 1934;

"(B) mailing rates provided in section 3629 of title 39 of the United States Code; and

"(C) payments under section 506 equal to the aggregate total amount of independent expenditures made or obligated to be made, in the general election involved, by any person in opposition to, or on behalf of an opponent of such eligible candidate, as such expenditures are reported by such person or determined by the Commission under subsection (f) of section 304;

"(2) if any candidate in the same general election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such election—

"(A) an eligible candidate who is a major party candidate shall be entitled to receive a payment under section 506 in an amount equal to—

"(i) two-thirds of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) with regard to such candidate when a candidate in the same election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 100 percent of such limitation determined under section 503(b); and

"(ii) one-third of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) with regard to such candidate when a candidate in the same election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 133⅓ percent of such limitation determined under section 503(b); or

"(B) an eligible candidate who is not a major party candidate shall be entitled to matching payments under section 506, equal to the amount of each contribution received by such eligible candidate and the candidate's authorized committees, provided that in determining the amount of each such contribution—

"(i) the provisions of section 502(b) shall apply; and

"(ii) contributions required to be raised under section 502(a)(1) shall not be eligible to be matched; and the total amount of payments to which a candidate is entitled under this subparagraph shall not exceed 50 percent of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) applicable to such candidate.

"(b) A candidate who receives payments under paragraph (1)(C) or (2) of subsection (a) may spend such funds to defray expenditures in the general election without regard to the provisions of section 503(b).

"(c)(1) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may make expenditures for the general election without regard to the provisions of subparagraph (A) of section 502(a)(7) or subsection (a) or (b) of section 503 if and when any candidate in the same general election not eligible to receive payments under this section either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of 133⅓ percent of the expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) for such election.

"(2) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may receive contributions for the general election without regard to the provisions of subparagraph (C) of section 502(a)(7) if any major party candidate in the same general election is not eligible to receive benefits under this section, or if and when any other candidate in the same general election who is not eligible to receive benefits under this section raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 75 percent of the amount of the expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) for such election.

"(d) Benefits received by a candidate under this section shall be used to defray expenditures incurred with respect to the general election period for such candidate. Such benefits shall not be used (1) to make any payments, directly or indirectly, to such candidate or to any member of the immediate family of such candidate, (2) to make any expenditure other than expenditures to further the general election of such candidate, (3) to make any expenditures which constitute a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expenditure is made, or (4) to repay any loan to any person except to the extent the proceeds of such loan were used to further the general election of such candidate.

"CERTIFICATION BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) No later than 48 hours after an eligible candidate files a request with the Commission to receive benefits under section 506 the Commission shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, unless the provisions of section 506(c) apply. The request referred to in the preceding sentence shall contain—

"(1) such information and be made in accordance with such procedures, as the Commission may provide by regulation; and

"(2) a verification signed by the candidate and the treasurer of the principal campaign committee of such candidate stating that the information furnished in support of the request, to the best of their knowledge, is correct and fully satisfies the requirements of this title.

"(b) Certifications by the Commission under subsection (a) and all determinations made by the Commission under this title, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 508.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND; PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a)(1) The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund (hereafter referred to as the 'Fund') established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, in addition to any other accounts maintained under such section, a separate account to be known as the 'Senate Fund'. The Secretary shall deposit into the Senate Fund, for use by candidates eligible to receive payments under this title, the amounts available after the Secretary determines that the amounts in the Fund, plus the amounts of revenue the Secretary projects will accrue to the Fund during the remainder of the period ending on December 31 of the year of the next Presidential election, equal 110 percent of the amount the Secretary projects will be necessary for payments under subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 during such remainder of such period. The monies designated for the Senate Fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

"(2) On May 15 of each year following the year during which a regularly scheduled biennial Senate election has occurred, the Secretary shall determine the total amount in the Senate Fund, and evaluate if such amount, plus the amount of revenue it projects will accrue to the Senate Fund

(based on the computation made by the Secretary with respect to the Fund, as provided in paragraph (1)) during the period beginning on such date and ending on December 31 of the year of the next regularly scheduled biennial election, exceeds 110 percent of the total estimated expenditures of the Senate Fund during such period. If the Secretary determines that an excess amount exists, the Secretary shall transfer such excess to the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

"(b) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, the Secretary shall promptly pay to the candidate involved in the certification, out of the Senate Fund, the amount certified by the Commission.

"(c)(1) If at the time of a certification by the Commission under section 505 for payment to an eligible candidate, the Secretary determines that the monies in the Senate Fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlement of all such eligible candidates, the Secretary shall withhold from such payment such amount as he determines to be necessary to assure that an eligible candidate will receive a pro rata share of such candidate's full entitlement. Amounts so withheld shall be paid when the Secretary determines that there are sufficient monies in the Senate Fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient monies in the Senate Fund to satisfy the full entitlement of an eligible candidate, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that each eligible candidate receives his or her pro rata share of his or her full entitlement. The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of the reduction in the amount to which that candidate is entitled under section 505.

"(2) If the provisions of this subsection result in a reduction in the amount to which an eligible candidate is entitled under section 505 and payments have been made under this section in excess of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, such candidate is liable for repayment to the Fund of the excess under procedures the Commission shall prescribe by regulation.

"EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a)(1) After each general election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of 10 per centum of the eligible candidates of each major party and 10 per centum of all other eligible candidates, as designated by the Commission through the use of an appropriate statistical method of random selection to determine, among other things, whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements of this title.

"(2) After each special election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of each eligible candidate in such election to determine whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements under this title.

"(3) The Commission may conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of any eligible candidate in a general election if the Commission, by an affirmative vote of four members, determines that there exists reason to believe that such candidate has violated any provision of this title.

"(b) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under this title was in excess of the aggregate payments to which such candidate was entitled, the Commission shall so notify such candidate, and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the excess.

"(c) If the Commission determines that any amount of any benefit made to a candidate under this title was not used as provided for in this title, the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to 200 per centum of the amount of such benefit.

"(d) If the Commission determines that any candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by 5 per centum or less the limitation set forth in section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(e) If the Commission determines that any candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by more than 5 per centum the limitation set forth in section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay the Secretary an amount equal to three times the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(f) Any amount received by an eligible candidate under this title may be retained for a period not exceeding sixty days after the date of the general election for the liquidation of all obligations to pay general election campaign expenses incurred during this general election period. At the end of such sixty-day period any unexpended funds received under this title shall be promptly repaid to the Secretary.

"(g) No notification shall be made by the Commission under this section with respect to an election more than three years after the date of such election.

"(h) All payments received under this section shall be deposited in the Senate Fund.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 507A. (a) No candidate shall knowingly or willfully accept benefits under this title in excess of the aggregate benefits to which such candidate is entitled or knowingly or willfully use such benefits for any purpose not provided for in this title or knowingly or willfully make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in excess of the limitation provided in this title.

"(b) Any person who violates the provisions of subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer or member of any political committee who knowingly consents to any expenditure in violation of the provisions of subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c)(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any benefit under this title, or to whom any portion of any such benefit is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such benefit or such portion except as provided in section 504(d).

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information (including any certification, verification, notice, or report), to the Commission under this title, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Commission or an examination and audit by the Commission under this title, or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Commission any records, books, or information requested by it for purposes of this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(e)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any benefits received by any candidate, or the authorized committees of such candidate, who receives benefits under this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal benefit in connection with any benefits received by any candidate pursuant to the provisions of this title, or received by the authorized committees of such candidate, shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the Fund, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or benefit received.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 508. (a) Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this title shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought. It shall be the duty of the Court of Appeals, ahead of all matters not filed under this title, to advance on the docket and expeditiously take action on all petitions filed pursuant to this title.

"(b) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 509. (a) The Commission is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section and under section 508 either by attorneys employed in its office or by counsel whom it may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation it may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) The Commission is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined under section 507 to be payable to the Secretary.

"(c) The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for such injunctive relief as is appropriate in order to implement any provision of this title.

"(d) The Commission is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which it appears, pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS

"SEC. 510. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after each election, submit a full report to the Senate setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures (shown in such detail as the Commission determines appropriate) made by each eligible candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate;

"(2) the amounts certified by the Commission under section 505 for payment to each eligible candidate;

"(3) the amount of repayments, if any, required under section 507, and the reasons for each payment required; and

"(4) the balance in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, and the balance in the Senate Fund and any other account maintained in the Fund.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct such examinations and investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"(c) Thirty days before prescribing any rules or regulation under subsection (b), the Commission shall transmit to the Senate a statement setting forth the proposed rule or regulation and containing a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 511. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission for the purpose of carrying out functions under this title, such sums as may be necessary.".

SENATE FUND

SEC. 3. Section 6096(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) by striking out "$1" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "$2"; and

(2) by striking out "$2" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "$4".

BROADCAST RATES

SEC. 4. Section 315(b)(1) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(b)(1)) is amended by striking the semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided, That in the case of candidates for United States Senator in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, this provision shall apply only if such candidate has been certified by the Federal Election Commission as eligible to receive benefits under title V of such Act and such candidate is identified or identifiable during 50 percent of the time of any broadcast of a political announcement or advertisement by such candidate;".

REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d)(1) Not later than the day after the date on which a candidate for the United States Senate qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), or, if such candidate is a candidate in a State which has a primary election to qualify for such ballot after September 1, within 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first, each such candidate in such election shall file with the Commission a declaration of whether or not such candidate intends to make expenditures in excess of the amount of the limitation on expenditures for such election, as determined under section 503(b).

"(2) Any declaration filed pursuant to paragraph (1) may be amended or changed at any time within 7 days after the filing of such declaration. Such amended declaration may not be amended or changed further.

"(e)(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6)—

"(A) who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 502, and

"(B) who either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 75 percent of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such Senate election, shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such contributions have been raised or such expenditures have been made or obligated to be made, or within 24 hours after the date of qualification for the general election ballot, whichever is later, setting forth the candidate's total contributions and total expenditures for such election, and thereafter shall file additional reports with the Commission within 24 hours after each time additional contributions are raised or expenditures are made, or are obligated to be made which aggregate an additional 5 percent of such limit. Such reports shall continue to be filed pursuant to the provisions of this section until such candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures equal to 133⅓ percent of the limit provided for such State pursuant to section 503(b).

"(2) The Commission, within 24 hours after each such report has been filed, shall notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to the provisions of this title under section 504, about such report, and after an opposing candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures in excess of the limit provided for such State pursuant to section 503(b), the Commission shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such eligible candidate is entitled.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirement established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 504, has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such election. The Commission, within 24 hours after making such determination, shall notify each candidate in the general election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 about such determination, and shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(f)(1) All independent expenditures, if any, (including those described in subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii)) made by any person after the date of the last Federal election with regard to a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), and all obligations to make such expenditures incurred by any person during such period, if any, shall be reported by such person to the Commission as provided in paragraph (2), if such expenditure or obligation is described in such paragraph.

"(2) Independent expenditures by any person as referred to in paragraph (1) shall be reported within 24 hours after the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated first exceeds $10,000. Thereafter, independent expenditures referred to in such paragraph, made by the same person in the same election, shall be reported within 24 hours after each time the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated, not yet reported under this subparagraph, exceeds $5,000.

"(3) Each report under this subsection shall be filed with the Commission and the Secretary of State for the State of the election involved and shall contain (A) the information required by subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii) of this section, and (B) a statement filed under penalty of perjury by the person making the independent expenditures, or by the person incurring the obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, that identifies the candidate whom the independent expenditures are actually intended to help elect or defeat. The Commission shall, within 24 hours after such report is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to section 504(a)(1)(C) of this Act, about each such report, and shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(4)(A) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a person has made independent expenditures, or has incurred an obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, with regard to a general election, as defined in section 501(6), that in the aggregate total more than the applicable amount specified in paragraph (2).

"(B) The Commission shall, within 24 hours after such determination is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504(a)(1)(C) about each determination under subparagraph (A), and shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(g)(1) When two or more persons make an expenditure or expenditures in coordination, consultation, or concert (as described in paragraph (2) or otherwise) for the purpose of promoting the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, each such person shall report to the Commission, under subsection (f), the amount of such expenditure or expenditures made by such person in coordination, consultation, or concert with such other person or persons when the total amount of all expenditures made by such persons in coordination, consultation, or concert with each other exceeds the applicable amount provided in such subsection.

"(2) An expenditure by one person shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with another person where—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between such persons making the expenditures, including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person;

"(B) in the same two-year election cycle, one of the persons making the expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been, with respect to such expenditures—

"(i) authorized by such other person to raise or expend funds on behalf of such other person; or

"(ii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from such other person or an agent of such other person;

"(C) one of the persons making expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled such other person in connection with such expenditure; or

"(D) one of the persons making expenditures and such other person making expenditures each retain the professional services of the same individual or person in connection with such expenditures.

"(h)(1) Every political committee, as defined in section 301(4), active in non-Federal elections and maintaining separate accounts for this purpose shall file with the Commission reports of funds received into and disbursements made from such accounts for activities which may influence an election to any Federal office. For purposes of this section, activities which may influence an election to any Federal office include, but are not limited to—

"(A) voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives directed to the general public in connection with any election in which Federal candidates appear on the ballot;

"(B) general public political advertising which includes references, however incidental, to clearly identified Federal as well as non-Federal candidates for public office; or which does not clearly identify Federal candidates but urges support for or opposition to all the candidates of a political party or other candidates in a classification or context which includes Federal candidates; and

"(C) any other activities which require an allocation of costs between a political committee's Federal and non-Federal accounts reflecting the impact on Federal elections in accordance with regulations prescribed or Advisory Opinions rendered by the Commission.

"(2) Reports required to be filed by this subsection shall be filed for the same time-periods required for political committees under section 304(a), and shall include:

"(A) a separate statement, for each of the activities in connection with which a report is required under paragraph (1), of the aggregate total of disbursements from the non-Federal accounts; and

"(B) supporting schedules, providing an identification of each donor together with the amount and date of each donation with regard to those receipts of the non-Federal account which comprise disbursements reported under subparagraph (A), provided, however, that such schedules are required only for donations from any one source aggregating in excess of $200 in any calendar year.

"(3) Reports required to be filed by this subsection need not include donations made to or on behalf of non-Federal candidates or political organizations in accordance with the financing and reporting requirements of State laws, or other disbursements from the non-Federal accounts in support of exclusively non-Federal election activities, provided that such donations or disbursements are governed solely by such State laws and not subject to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(i) The certification required by this section shall be made by the Commission on the basis of reports filed with such Commission in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or on the basis of such Commission's own investigation or determination, notwithstanding the provisions of section 505(a).

"(j) Within 15 days after a candidate for the Senate qualifies for the primary ballot under applicable State law, such candidate shall file with the Commission, a declaration stating whether or not such candidate intends to expend from his personal funds, and the funds of his immediate family, and incur personal loans, in connection with his campaign for such office, in the aggregate of $250,000 or more, for the election cycle.

"(k)(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who expends from his personal funds and the funds of his immediate family, and incurs personal loans, in connection with his campaign for such office, in the aggregate of $250,000 or more, for the election cycle, shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such expenditures have been made or loans incurred. Thereafter the expenditures referred to in this paragraph shall be reported within 24 hours after each time the aggregate of such expenditures or loans exceeds $10,000.

"(2) The Commission within 24 hours after a report has been filed under paragraph (1) shall notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive payments pursuant to the provisions of this title under section 504 about each such report.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate for the United States Senate has made expenditures from the personal funds of such candidate or the funds of any member of the immediate family of such candidate or incurred personal loans in connection with his campaign aggregating in excess of $250,000, or thereafter in increments of $10,000 during the election cycle. The Commission within 24 hours after making such determination shall notify each candidate in the general election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 about each such determination.".

(b) Section 301(8)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(B)) is amended by—

(1) inserting "except for purposes of reporting and disclosing, pursuant to section 304, such amounts in excess of $200," at the beginning of [subparagraphs (v), (viii), (x), and (xii)] clauses (v) and (viii); and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(C) The exclusions provided in [subparagraphs (v), (viii), (x), and (xii) of paragraph (B)] clauses (v) and (viii) of subparagraph (B) shall not be exclusions from the definition of contributions for purposes of reporting contributions as required by section 304, and all such contributions shall be reported.".

(c) Section 301(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"For purposes of this section, the receipt of contributions or the making of, or obligating to make expenditures shall be determined by the Commission on the basis of facts and circumstances, in whatever combination, demonstrating a purpose of influencing any election for Federal office, including, but not limited to, the representations made by any person soliciting funds about their intended uses; the identification by name of individuals who are candidates for Federal office, as defined in paragraph (2) of this section, or of any political party, in general public political advertising; and the proximity to any primary, run-off, or general election of general public political advertising designed or reasonably calculated to influence voter choice in that election.".

(d) Section 301(9)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(9)(B)) is amended by—

(1) inserting "except for purposes of reporting and disclosing, pursuant to section 304, such amounts in excess of $200," at the beginning of [subparagraphs (iv), (vi), (viii), and (ix)] clauses (iv) and (vi); and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(C) The exclusions provided in [subparagraphs (iv), (vi), (viii), and (ix) of paragraph (B)] clauses (iv) and (vi) of subparagraph (B) shall not be exclusions from the definition of expenditures for purposes of reporting expenditures as required by this Act, and all such expenditures shall be reported.".

(e) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(20) The term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committees of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the last previous general election for such office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next election; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next election.".

(f) Section 304(b)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(2)) is amended by striking out "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting in lieu thereof "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(g)(1) Section 304(b)(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(4)) is amended by striking out "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting in lieu thereof "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(2) Section 304(b)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(3)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,";

(B) in subparagraph (F), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,"; and

(C) in subparagraph (G), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,".

(3) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,".

(4) Section 304(b)(6)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(6)(A)) is amended by striking out "calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "election cycle".

(h) Section 301(13) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(13)) is amended by striking out "mailing address" and inserting in lieu thereof "permanent residence address".

(i) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by adding before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", except that if a person to whom an expenditure is made is merely providing personal or consulting services and is in turn making expenditures to other persons who provide goods or services to the candidate or his authorized committees, the name and address of such other person, together with the date, amount and purpose of such expenditure shall also be disclosed".

LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY MULTICANDIDATE POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND SEPARATE SEGREGATED FUNDS

SEC. 6. (a) Section 315(a)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (B);

(2) striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) to any candidate for the office of Member of, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the House of Representatives and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which exceed $100,000 ($125,000 if at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in the general or special election involved and at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in a primary election relating to such general or special election), when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress which exceed $25,000 when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election;

"(E) to any candidate for the office of Senator and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for such office (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) exceeds an amount equal to 30 percent of the amount provided in section 315(i); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of United States Senator which exceeds, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election, an amount equal to 30 percent of the limitation on expenditures provided in section 315(j), for runoff elections; or

"(F) to any State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, which, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such State committee exceeds an amount equal to—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State of such State committee, or whichever is greater. The limitation of this subparagraph shall apply separately with respect to each two-year Federal election cycle, covering a period from the day following the date of the last Federal general election held in that State through the date of the next regularly scheduled Federal general election.".

"(ii) $25,000,

(b)(1) Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(i) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(i), such limitation shall be an amount equal to 67 percent of the aggregate of $400,000, plus—

"(1) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(2) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that such amount shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.

"(j) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(ii), such limitation shall be an amount equal to 20 percent of the aggregate of $400,000, plus—

"(1) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(2) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that such amount shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.".

(2) Section 315(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(c)) is amended by—

(A) striking out "subsection (b) and subsection (d)" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (b), (d), (i), and (j)"; and

(B) inserting "for subsections (b) and (d) and the term 'base period' means the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of [1987,] 1989, for subsections (i) and (j)" before the period at the end of paragraph (2)(B).

(c) Section 315(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking out "(2) and (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(2), (3), (4), and (5)";

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) No congressional campaign committee may accept, during any two-year election cycle, contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds which, in the aggregate, exceed 30 percent of the total expenditures which may be made during such election cycle by that campaign committee on behalf of candidates for Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3).

"(5) No national committee of a political party may accept contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, during any two-year election cycle, which, in the aggregate, equal an amount in excess of an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

"(6) The limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall apply to any expenditure through general public political advertising, whenever made, which clearly identifies by name an individual who is, or is seeking nomination to be, a candidate in the general election for Federal office of President, Senator or Representative; provided that this paragraph shall not apply to direct mail communications designed primarily for fundraising purposes which make only incidental reference to any one or more Federal candidates.".

INTERMEDIARY OR CONDUIT

SEC. 7. (a) Section 315(a)(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate;

"(B) contributions made by a person either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, through an intermediary or conduit, including all contributions delivered or arranged to be delivered by such intermediary or conduit, shall also be treated as contributions from the intermediary or conduit, if—

"(i) the contributions made through the intermediary or conduit are in the form of a check or other negotiable instrument made payable to the conduit or intermediary rather than the intended recipient; or

"(ii) the conduit or intermediary is a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, within the meaning of section 301(4), or an officer, employee or other agent of such a political committee, or an officer, employee or other agent of a connected organization, within the meaning of section 301(7), acting in its behalf; [and] or

"(iii) the conduit or intermediary is required to register as a lobbyist or lobby organization as defined under (2 U.S.C. 266), or an officer, employee or other agent of such an organization."

"(C) the limitations imposed by this paragraph shall not apply to—

"(i) bona fide joint fundraising efforts conducted solely for the purpose of sponsorship of a fundraising reception, dinner, or other event in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission by (I) two or more candidates, (II) two or more national, State, or local committees of a political party within the meaning of section 301(4) acting on their own behalf, or (III) a special committee formed by (a) two or more candidates or (b) one or more candidates and one or more national, State, or local committees of a political party acting on their own behalf;

"(ii) fundraising efforts for the benefit of a candidate which are conducted by another candidate within the meaning of section 301(2).

In all cases where contributions are made by a person either directly or indirectly to or on behalf of a particular candidate through an intermediary or conduit, the intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.".

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

SEC. 8. (a) Section 301(17) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "An expenditure shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with a candidate and shall not constitute an 'independent expenditure' where—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between the candidate or the candidate's agent and the person (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) making the expenditure;

"(B) in the same election cycle, the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been—

"(i) authorized to raise or expend funds on behalf of the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees,

"(ii) serving as an officer of the candidate's authorized committees, or

"(iii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from the candidate, the candidate's authorized committees, or the candidate's agent;

"(C) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled the candidate or the candidate's agents at any time on the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any advice relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(D) the person making the expenditure retains the professional services of any individual or other person also providing those services to the candidate in connection with the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any services relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(E) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated or consulted at any time during the same election cycle about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of election to Federal office, with: (i) any officer, director, employee or agent of a party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions, pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or (ii) any person whose professional services have been retained by a political party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or

"(F) the expenditure is based on information provided to the person making the expenditure directly or indirectly by the candidate or the candidate's agents about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs, provided that the candidate or the candidate's agent is aware that the other person has made or is planning to make expenditures expressly advocating the candidate's election.".

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURE BROADCAST DISCLOSURE

SEC. 9. Section 318(a)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)(3)) is amended by deleting the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", except that whenever any person makes an independent expenditure through (A) a broadcast communication on any television station, the broadcast communication shall include a statement clearly readable to the viewer that appears continuously during the entire length of such communication setting forth the name of such person and in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization, or (B) a newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing or other type of general public political advertising, the communication shall include, in addition to the other information required by this subsection, the following sentence: 'The cost of presenting this communication is not subject to any campaign contribution limits.', and a statement setting forth the name of the person who paid for the communication and, in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization and the name of the president or treasurer of such organization.".

PERSONAL LOANS

SEC. 10. Section 315(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)), as amended by section 7 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"(9) For purposes of the limitations imposed by this section, no contributions may be received by a candidate or the candidate's authorized committees for the purpose of repaying any loan by the candidate to the candidate or to the candidate's authorized committees.".

REFERRAL TO THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

SEC. 11. Section 309(a)(5)(C) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(5)(C)) is amended by striking out "may refer" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall refer".

EXTENSION OF CREDIT

SEC. 12. Section 301(8)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(A)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "or" at the end of clause (i);

(2) striking out the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(iii) with respect to a candidate for the office of United States Senator and his authorized political committees, any extension of credit for goods or services relating to advertising on broadcasting stations, in newspapers or magazines, by direct mail (including direct mail fund solicitations) or other similar types of general public political advertising, if such extension of credit is—

"(I) in an amount of more than $1,000; and

"(II) for a period of more than 60 days after the date on which such goods or services are furnished, which date in the case of advertising by direct mail (including a direct mail solicitation) shall be the date of the mailing.".

PREFERENTIAL RATES FOR MAIL

SEC. 13. (a) Subchapter II of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 3629. Reduced rates for certain Senate candidates

"The rates of postage for matter mailed with respect to a campaign by an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) shall be—provided that the total paid by such candidate for all mail matter at the rates provided by paragraphs (1) and (2) shall not exceed 5 percent of the amount which is applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.".

"(1) in the case of first-class mail matter, one-fourth of the rate currently in effect; and

"(2) in the case of third-class mail matter, 2 cents per piece less than mail matter mailed pursuant to paragraph (1),

(b) The table of sections for chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 3628 the following new item:

"3629. Reduced rates for certain Senate candidates.".

DISCLOSURE

SEC. 14. Section 318(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441d) is amended by—

(1) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) if paid for or authorized by a general election candidate for the Senate, or the authorized committee of such candidate who has not agreed to abide by the expenditure limits in section 503, such advertisement or announcement shall contain the following sentence: 'This candidate has not agreed to abide by the spending limits for this Senate election campaign set forth in the Federal Election Campaign Act.'.".

EXCESS CAMPAIGN FUNDS

SEC. 15. Section 313 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. [439A] 439a) is amended by striking out "political party;" through the end of the paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "political party.".

POLITICAL COMMITTEE POSTAL RATES

SEC. 16. Subsection (e) of section 3626 of title 39, United States Code, is hereby repealed.

CERTIFICATION BY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES ACCEPTING PUBLIC FUNDS CONCERNING COMPLIANCE WITH FUNDRAISING AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

SEC. 17. Section 9006 of title 26, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of that section the following subsection:

"(d) In order to be eligible to receive any payments under this section, a candidate described in sections (b) and (c) above shall certify to the Commission, under penalty of perjury, that during the Presidential primary and the general election period, the candidate, and his or her authorized committees and agents, has not and will not solicit, receive or spend, directly or indirectly, any funds in connection with a Federal, State or local election, including funds for get out the vote, voter registration and generic campaign activities unless such funds are subject to the provisions of this Act, including its limitations and prohibitions. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'agent' includes but is not limited to any person who is, or has been authorized to raise funds; who is, or has been, an officer of an authorized committee; who is, or has been, receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from the candidate or his authorized committees; who has, or has had, actual oral or written authority, either express, or implied, to make or authorize the making of expenditures on behalf of a candidate or to authorize the receipt of contributions on behalf of a candidate.".

SOFT MONEY

SEC. 18. (a) [Insert after section 441(a)(d)(2) of title 2, United States Code, the following new section] Section 315(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)), as amended by section 6(c), is further amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), (5), and (6) as paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7);

(2) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) A State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a political party, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 4 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State (as certified under subsection [(g)] (e) of this section)."[.]; and

(3) in paragraph (7), as redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection, by striking "(2) and (3)" and inserting "(2) and (4)".

(b) [Section 431 of title 2, United States Code,] Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended by repealing the following clauses: clause (x) and clause (xii) of subsection 431(8)(B) and clause (viii) and clause (ix) of subsection 431(9)(B).

(c) [At the appropriate place in the Act, insert the following new section:] Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) Any amount solicited, received or spent by a national, State or local committee of a political party, directly or indirectly, shall be subject to the provisions of this Act, if such amount is solicited, received or spent in connection with a Federal election. No part of such amount may be allocated to a non-Federal account or otherwise maintained in, or paid from, an account that is not subject to this Act. This section shall not apply to amounts described in section 431(b)(B)(viii) of title 2.

"For purposes of this section, the term 'in connection with a Federal election' includes any activity that may affect a Federal election including but not limited to the following:

"(1) voter registration and get out the vote activities;

"(2) generic activities, including but not limited to any broadcasting, newspaper, magazine, billboard, mail, or similar type of communication or public advertising;

"(3) campaign materials which identify a federal candidate, regardless of any other candidate who may also be identified.".

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION REFORM

SEC. 19. (a) Section 306(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. [437e(a)(1)] 437c(a)(1)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "6 members" and inserting in lieu thereof "7 members"; and

(2) amending the last sentence to read as follows: "No more than 4 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party, and such appointments shall be made in a manner to assure that the same political party shall not have 4 or more members affiliated with such party on such Commission for two succeeding years.".

(b) Section 306(a)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 7 years, except that of the members appointed after April 30, 1989—

"(i) one of the two members appointed for the term beginning May 1, 1991, shall be appointed for a term of 6 years;

"(ii) one of the two members appointed for the term beginning May 1, 1993, shall be appointed for a term of 6 years; and

"(iii) one of the two members appointed for the term beginning May 1, 1995, shall be appointed for a term of 6 years.

"(B) One additional member of the Commission shall be appointed for a term beginning May 1, 1989, and shall be appointed for a term of 5 years.".

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 20. If any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act, or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of any other such provision and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 21. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective for any election held in 1992 or thereafter.

(b) The amendments made by section 3, section 7, section 8, and section 9 shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the campaign reform bill which has been called up this morning. In a few moments I will send, for printing, an amendment in the nature of a substitute for S. 137, which is now pending before us.

This substitute will be offered by myself and 44 other Senators, including the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Maine; the President pro tempore of the Senate, Senator BYRD; and many others of our colleagues.

Mr. President, this debate comes at a very important time. The world has literally turned upside down over the last 12 months, and we grapple to try to find a way to adjust to all the changes in that world.

They call for a changed role by the United States. They call for us to put our economic house in order and rebuild the economic competitive strength of this country. They call for us to come together and work together in a bipartisan fashion to develop programs which will make sure that none of the human talent in this country is wasted, that every ounce of human talent is utilized, that our educational system is improved.

These changes in the world call for us to come together and find a bipartisan solution to the problems confronting us, with budgetary shortfalls and growing deficits. We are all too aware of the fact that we are now dangerously dependent upon a flow of foreign capital into this country to keep our country at full employment and to keep our economy vibrant and vital.

We also know that with interest rates increasing around the world, if we do not reduce our own Government borrowing and generate our own capital, we will have to have increased interest rates in order to continue to attract that capital from other nations. That could very well have a devastating effect upon our economy.

So for so many reasons, we need to find a way for our institution of Government, the Congress, to work at maximum efficiency. We need to find ways that will bring us all together as one people to solve these challenges which we face.

At this moment of challenge to our system, at this moment of redefinition for our Nation's role in the world, we are impeded in our ability to come together because of the way that we finance our campaigns. More and more of our time, because of the huge amounts of money that have to be raised to successfully compete in elections today, is taken up not with grappling with these problems which we face, these very serious challenges which our Nation faces, but in the raising of funds for the next election campaign.

It is sad to say, but all of us in this Chamber know that in many respects, because of the campaign system that we now have, we have become part-time Senators and full-time fundraisers. Even the schedule of the Senate itself is now arranged around the need to raise money for the next political campaign, rather than around the need to solve the Nation's problems and do the people's business.

More and more of the money that goes to finance campaigns is not coming from the people at the grassroots, from individual contributors in the home States and districts of the Members of Congress. Many States' economic conditions are such that if one is to raise the amount of money required to run for reelection, it becomes a necessity for that Congressman or Senator to go around to other States in the country to raise that money.

And it is not coincidental when we need these vast sums that have to be raised that more and more Members are having to raise more and more of their funds from outside of their home States, and more and more of the money is coming from political action committees, individual interest groups that rate Members of Congress not on the whole record of that Member of the House or Senate, but only on key issues of interest to that particular group.

One way of saying it is at the very moment we need to come together as a people, unite as a people, act as Americans, not as members of one political party or another, or one group or another, more and more the money to finance the campaigns comes from increasingly narrow special-interest groups which give their funds not based upon the total record of service to the country, but based upon alliance with that interest group on particular issues.

We have become more and more splintered, more and more fragmented, as we become more and more obligated to narrow special interests at the very moment when the challenges which we confront call on us to unite as Americans, rather than to be more and more fragmented.

In many ways, we view these changes in the world with great satisfaction. I do not think I have had a prouder moment than I had when I heard Lech Walesa when he spoke to the joint session of the Congress of the United States, when he wanted to express to us what it was that they had been fighting for, when he wanted to express to us the unique nature of their revolution through which they had brought about democratic change, a total change from a totalitarian state to a democratic state, as he said, without even so much as one windowpane having been broken, a remarkable achievement.

And when he tried to find the words to express to us the motivation for their courage, what led them to take such grave risks in the name of democracy, he started with three words, "We the people." He said:

> Those are American words. They are the basis of your political system. They are fundamental to your political ideals, We take your words, your American words, as our words. The whole world is appropriating your political democratic ideal, and we are making it our own.

Mr. President, how proud that must have made every single American who heard those words. What satisfaction it gives us to know that we have been a model for other nations, a beacon to those who have had their rights suppressed, for those who have had strongly held beliefs but lived in a society in which they were not allowed to express those beliefs, for those who have not had the right to control their own destiny, for them to say in the midst of all of that hardship:

> We are inspired to hand on, to persevere, to take risks, to march on with courage because of the example of the United States of America.

It is impossible to describe the emotion that we all felt as we watched the events on world television over a year ago in Tiananmen Square when 2 million people, literally at the risk of their lives—and tragically, some forfeited their lives for their courage—gathered there with the eyes of the world fixed upon them to demonstrate that they wanted a fundamental change in their society, they wanted the right to chart their own course. They wanted all of the rights that the Creator intended for human beings to have, and they were trying to find a way to express to the rest of the world what it was that they were seeking.

And what did they do? They erected a statue, the Goddess of Liberty, copied from our own Statue of Liberty. They seized and appropriated an American symbol to tell the rest of the world what it was that they were fighting for and risking their lives for.

I read the story of the young artist who worked with 10 other artists at the Art Institute in Beijing, through the night and day for 3 days, building the Goddess of Liberty. They worked from a small picture postcard of the Statue of Liberty sent back home to them by Chinese exchange students who came to the United States to study. That was their only experience of ever having seen the Statue of Liberty.

The young artist who crafted that statue later was able to escape from China after the collapse of the democratic movement. He made his way to the United States, and I read an interview with him written by the person who first took this young artist to see the Statue of Liberty in person in which he described his emotions, the overwhelming feelings he had and the tears he shed when he first saw that statue.

So, Mr. President, our political system is so precious. Sometimes, until we step out and view our system through the eyes of people who have been deprived of freedom in other nations in the world, sometimes until we step out and view it from afar, we take it for granted. We fail to understand how precious it is.

On my way over here this morning, after I parked my car in the garage and I was walking down the hallway, I visited with a member of our Capitol Police Force. Two weeks ago, we had the cast of a musical from South Africa called Sarafina that visited us here at the Capitol. The cast was composed of young people, young people suppressed in South Africa because of their race. The play is a musical drama about the struggle of children in South Africa for equal educational opportunities, for equal understanding, for the right to have their own cultural identity.

In that play, very often the police are presented as agents of repression because they are in a system in which the rule of law does not apply and in which people can be arrested—in fact, children as young as 8 years old have been confined months on end without trial and without charge—a system very different from our own, a system which, fortunately, through the work of two courageous people, Mr. Mandela and President De Klerk, is now hopefully in the process of being changed.

That Capitol Police officer, who several months before on television had seen the cast of Sarafina, had seen photographs of police officers beating young, defenseless children on television in South Africa. As he and his wife watched these young people and watched the cast on television, he decided that when they came to this country he hoped to have an opportunity to meet them and to tell them about police officers in this country and to tell them that police officers in this country do not beat children. Police officers in this country are here to help; they protect the defenseless and powerless, they enforce the law. They protect society against those that would harm individuals in it. He wanted them to know that there was a police officer in this country who cared about children, who upheld the law, and that the police in a society that is properly organized constitute a profession to be admired and not one to be feared.

And when those young people came here 2 weeks ago, that police officer appeared and presented them with a flag flown over the Capitol of the United States. It was quite a moment to see those young children, who had grown up with such fear of the police, all fighting with each other to see who could get closest to him to have a photograph taken with that man who was a police officer in uniform.

I happened to see him this morning. He said to me, "What a thrill it was to have a chance for me to meet those young people and tell them about our rule of law and the enforcement of the rule of law." He closed by saying, "Don't we have a wonderful system of government? We take it for granted."

All too often as we walk around even these Halls where we are charged as trustees of this institution, which is at the very heart and soul of the democratic process, we have become immune as to how special it is.

Mr. President, it is indeed special. And we are indeed its trustees. We are temporary occupants of offices, but we are charged primarily with the responsibility to guard and safeguard these political institutions and see to it that they serve the American people. And when we lose our sense of awe and wonder for these institutions and our reverence for them and our commitment to public service and our commitment to these institutions and the functioning of our constitutional process, when we cease to wonder at it, when we cease to feel that special sense of responsibility when we walk into this Hall and think about the people who came here and served here before we got here, then Mr. President, that is when we should pack up our bags and go home, because we have no business being here. Every one of us, when we come to this place, should come here with some reverence and some feeling. Every single one of us, whether it is the Presiding Officer or the Pages or those who are taking down the RECORD or the Parliamentarian and those who help us conduct the business of the day in this Hall, we should all feel a sense of it.

So I feel tremendous elation at what has happened in the world and tremendous satisfaction, tremendous pride as an American, that our system has been copied, but at the same time I feel tremendous alarm. The Germans recently held elections, the Nicaraguans recently held a free election. These have been people who have been deprived of free elections. How many of their eligible voters went to vote, Mr. President? Ninety-five percent in the case of one country, 90-plus in the case of virtually all the others that held free elections recently for the first time.

In our last congressional election cycle, 37 percent of the American people bothered to vote; in some recent primaries, I have seen statistics that indicate in some of those held most recently, fewer than 30 percent, down into the 20-percent range, bothered to go vote, to exercise the right that people have died for.

Mr. President, we cannot be complacent about what is happening. We cannot be complacent about the degree to which the American people are being turned off by the election process. We cannot be complacent about the degree to which the American people are becoming alienated from their own political system and their own political process.

I believe that a major part of the problem is the way that we finance campaigns. And, as trustees of this institution and as trustees of the safety and health of our political system, we cannot afford to wait any longer to do something about it.

Some people have asked me, are you encouraged or are you discouraged that there is more than one proposal before us for campaign reform this year? Mr. President, I am not discouraged. I am encouraged, because I sense that the vast majority of the Members of this body on both sides of the aisle, perhaps as high as 90 percent, understand that something is basically wrong with the current system and that the status quo is simply unacceptable. We need to have real reform.

As I say, this morning I will offer for printing, for it to be considered in the very near future, an amendment offered by myself and Senator MITCHELL as principal cosponsors along with the distinguished chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, Senator FORD; Senator KERRY, of Massachusetts, who has helped us craft this proposal; Senator BRADLEY; and, of course, the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, Senator ROBERT BYRD, who has been an integral part of this effort for a long, long time.

When Senator MITCHELL and I began to work together on this latest proposal, he said we must try to find a way to have a bipartisan solution to this problem. Mr. President, in beginning this discussion today, it is not my purpose, it is not my hope that we could line up all the votes on this side of the aisle and use the parliamentary process to push through a bill that has support from only one political party. The problem we face in this country is not a Democratic problem, it is not a Republican problem, it is an American problem. And we have to get together as Americans to solve it.

So I want to begin this debate this morning in the same vein in which Senator MITCHELL and I began our personal and private conversations about this legislation several months ago, by extending our hands to those on the other side of the aisle and by saying to them we are ready to work together, we are ready to talk, we are ready to negotiate, we are ready to try to craft a bill which solves the problems that exist in this political system without trying to seek partisan advantage for one party or the other. We do not want a bill that is a Democratic bill that gives us an advantage. We obviously do not want a bill that gives an advantage to the other side. We have Democratic majorities in both Houses of Congress. We have a Republican President in the White House. All of us will have to act upon that bill together. Our purpose is not to score political points. Our purpose is not to pass a bill through one House. Our purpose is to change the law with a bill passed by both Houses and signed into law by the President, to change the law to reform this system before it is too late.

We cannot afford to wait any longer, Mr. President. There are certain elements of reform that are absolutely essential. What are the tests of reform? In my opinion, and what it is that we are trying to do with the amendment which I will have printed today—which, as I say, will have 44 cosponsors in total with Senator-designate Akaka having indicated that he will officially join as a cosponsor when he comes to the Senate within the next few days, meaning that 45 of us will have joined together to offer this amendment, and I will say enough other Senators have conveyed their thoughts to me privately that I know that this substitute, when it is presented to the Senate, will already have a majority of the support of the Members of this body.

As we begin our discussions, I hope we can also begin discussions off the floor which will lead to the hammering out of a truly bipartisan reform package that will get the job done.

What is it we are trying to do, Mr. President? What are the tests of real reform? Obviously, to have real reform we must put an end to the race to have more and more funds to finance campaigns. The essence of reform itself is to get runaway campaign spending under control.

In just the few short years I have served in the Senate, we have gone from requiring a successful candidate for the U.S. Senate in an average size State—not a large State, an average size State—to spend $600,000 in order to get elected, to a situation in which the average last time was more than $4 million. That was in a State as small as mine, not New York, not California, not North Carolina, where we have had spending levels approaching $30 million, even now inching toward the $40 million level in order to run a successful campaign.

What does that mean, Mr. President? The distinguished President pro tempore, who has joined us on the floor, has often called it "the money chase." "The money chase" is the term that has been used by the Senator from West Virginia in many hours of debate on this floor, and he has pointed out how the money chase has corrupted the political process of this country. To raise that $4 million, which it took a candidate on the average to spend to win a Senate race, means every single week for 6 years without exception a Member of the Senate would have to figure out how to raise $15,000 in campaign contributions.

What does that mean? It means if he comes from a State like mine, with a depressed economy, he has to go to other parts of the country. He has to go wherever he can to raise the funds. He has to turn to interest groups, political action committees, whom he does not know, and cities he has never visited before.

What does that do, Mr. President? It puts such pressure on those running for office to raise that money, they cannot possibly know very much about all the sources they are getting it from. It is an open invitation to an image of corruption of the system, when Members have to go out across this country, getting money wherever they can get it, from people they do not know very much about.

Then, if some information comes forward that those people are not particularly wholesome, the image is given then that that Member of the Congress is somehow linked to that person and people lose a little more faith in the political system.

We are sent here to do the people's business. The heart and soul of our political process is competition on the basis of qualifications and ideas and issues and proposals to solve the problems of this country. We must not allow this political system to be corrupted into one in which money is the deciding factor; in which it is on the basis of who can raise the most money that we compete in politics.

We must restore our political system to its original purposes and its original functioning. We must restore the confidence of our people in the system by stopping the money chase and the spiraling campaign spending, which has so distressed the American people that we are able to turn out even barely a third of the percentage of the electorate as those newly emerging democracies around the world who are using us as their model.

How long as we going to wait, Mr. President? Are we going to wait until it takes $25,000 a week, every week, to make the average race for the U.S. Senate? Are we going to wait until we have to raise $100,000? We have already gone from $600,000 to $4.5 million in just 12 years.

At that rate a young person, 18 years old, graduated from high school—those groups we are going to be speaking to over the next few weeks in commencement exercises—at that rate they will have to raise over $15 million to run for the Senate in just a small State, if they decide to perform public service. So we must, if we are to have real reform, do something about runaway spending.

Mr. President, in this bill we have reached out to the other side. With the amendment we are having printed today, we have signaled our desire to work with those on the other side of the aisle, because we have put into our proposal a provision for what is called flexible spending limits. The proposal was made by a panel of experts appointed by both leaders from both parties in the Senate. The proposal is embraced by many of those on the other side of the aisle, who have been leaders in this effort, as a way around the previous disagreements and roadblocks to reform.

It allows that, in addition to an overall spending limit being set, a Member may raise additional contributions from individuals in his or her home State in small amounts. We could call it clean money, money from individuals in the home State, small contributions, participation in the political process in that fashion.

So, we extend our hand to the other side of the aisle. We signal, by putting that proposal in this legislation, that we, indeed, want to work together to find a way to stop the spiral of campaign spending and to do it in a fashion that will be bipartisan and acceptable on both sides of the aisle.

It is absolutely fundamental to reform, toward reordering our priorities, to doing the people's work instead of spending so much of our time raising money. It is fundamental that we become full-time fundraisers and only part-time Senators, as the current system is forcing us to be.

So we provide for real reform by providing for a limit on overall spending, but by also allowing some additional contributions to come in through the flexible spending limit from small contributions from in-State individuals.

The second item of reform is we must do something to strike a balance between the chance the challengers have and incumbents have to be elected. Ninety-eight percent of the Members of the Congress and House of Representatives last time were reelected. Why do challengers have such a difficult time? It again goes back to the question of money. We just have to look at the facts. The facts speak for themselves.

As in the last election cycle, incumbents are able to raise more money than challengers are able to raise. It does not matter whether a challenger is a Democrat or Republican. The PAC's and interest groups want to give to incumbents. These people are already here and on the key committee, and they want access to them. They want a sympathetic hearing from them. They make contributions to them.

Eighty percent of the political action committee money is going to incumbents. It does not matter whether they are Democrats or Republicans, it is going to incumbents. Overall, in the last election cycle, look at the facts: $2.05 was raised by every incumbent running for reelection for every $1 a challenger was able to raise.

We will never have a level playing field which allows new people—with new ideas and ideals, with a fresh approach to help us face these challenges we face—to get into Congress unless we have limits on overall spending that give challengers a chance. So it is vitally important.

Mr. BYRD. Will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. BOREN. I will be happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONRAD). The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. The present system does not even allow the incumbents with new ideas to get them into place, to implement them. We are too busy out engaging in the money chase. We cannot be here in the committees, we cannot be here on the floor doing our work. If we have new ideas, we do not have the opportunity to explain them and to work at putting them into legislation. We are kept busy with running around the country, holding out our hats and our tin cups.

So, it is not just that the challengers cannot get here with new ideas. Challengers do not have a monopoly on new ideas. Some of the people who have been here for years may also have some new ideas. But we are kept so busy out there knocking on doors all over the country, seeking money, asking for money, begging for money, getting on our hands and knees for money, we do not have time to give thought to new ideas and to putting them into creative legislation.

I congratulate the Senator on his leadership, on his amendment, and on his statement.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from West Virginia. As I indicated this morning before he came on the floor, no one has been stouter in this effort. He called for a record number of cloture votes in this body, trying to break a filibuster, trying to have us have real campaign reform, when he served this body as majority leader. He worked in this body for every single piece of campaign reform legislation since he has been here, and he has been a inspiration for me.

He has been the historian of the U.S. Senate. He has the perspective. He knows better than any other Senator the degree to which this institution is being corrupted and its priorities being twisted.

The schedule of the Senate is being set, not on the basis of solving people's problems, not to give us time to think our best thoughts and to share our thoughts with each other; the schedule is set on the basis of when we have to be in recess so people can go to fundraisers and raise money instead of working here to solve problems.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BOREN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. Not only do we not have time to think and to reflect and to come up with new creative ideas, but we are not masters of our own fates. Our new ideas may be fine, but will the special interests that contribute to us support them? Do Members vote their own minds, their own hearts, their own consciences? That is a rhetorical question. Everyone in here knows that Members do not vote their own minds on some of the issues that are so important to this country. Everyone knows that Members do not vote their own minds and their own consciences on many issues, realizing that the great body politic out there is not organized and represented, because we are so busy presenting the views of those who contribute to us in many instances, and voting against what we know in our hearts is best.

So "the fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves, that we are underlings," the underlings of the special interests that contribute to our campaigns.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I cannot add to what the Senator from West Virginia has just said. He has dramatically stated the situation as it frankly is. I hope that all of our colleagues, those hearing us and those who will read the words of the Senator in the RECORD will heed those words, and we will not allow another week, another month, another year to go by until we act on meaningful reform of this system.

I have talked about two major elements of reform: The need to stop the runaway spiral of spending; to get it under control, to stop the money chase. I have talked about the need to have a level playing field for challengers.

The Senator from West Virginia has just touched upon another very important element of true reform; that is, to reduce the participation, or the level of influence, to get some balance back into the system so that the special interest groups will not have an undue influence. Over half the Members elected to Congress last time received more than half their contributions, not from individual contributors, but from interest groups, from political action committees and others that rated Members solely on their range of issues rather than on total issues. So some balance needs to be put back in.

The President has indicated he supports, in essence, removing political action committees almost completely from the process in contributing to campaigns. Proposals made on the other side of the aisle have merit, proposals that many of us have made earlier, including the proposal I made many years ago with Senator Goldwater from Arizona, to move on that front. The bill introduced by the Senator from West Virginia and myself a few years ago tried to strike a balance and set an aggregate percentage on the amount that can come from special interest groups, as well as the amount of money that can come from the contributors back home. The bill introduced on the other side of the aisle bans political action committees from contributing to candidates in Federal elections.

Again, as a sign of our desire to reach out to the other side, to indicate that we are trying to have a meeting of the minds, our bill, the substitute amendment which will be printed today, also provides that no longer will candidates for Congress, for the Senate, be able to acccept contributions from political actions committees. So that is another test, reducing the influence of special interests.

What is another test of true reform? True reform cannot leave any loopholes unclosed; it cannot allow for money to simply pop up in another form; that if you close out money in one area, for example, from undue influence from special interests or the amount of money going to candidates themselves, you cannot simply then open up another loophole to allow the money to pour in through another source.

The media has reported widely recently about the soft money loophole, the millions of dollars being poured in in undisclosed contributions, primarily to State parties for what are essentially mixed activities; that is, activities like phone banks, generic advertising and mailing that are conducted on behalf of all candidates, both Federal and State, in the same election. And since they are mixed, they, therefore, do not fall strictly under a Federal election provision. An estimated $60 million is going through that source.

Even in the aftermath of Watergate when we thought we had stopped a situation where some individual, through immense wealth, can have undue influence on the process, where we thought we had individuals limited to $25,000 contributions to all political groups in a year's time, we have turned around and seen fundraisers being held, and we have to say by both political parties. We have seen $100,000 fundraisers. You can have a $500,000 fundraiser if you wanted to if it were all going in the form of soft money back to some State party or organization for the purpose of running campaigns there.

We have to stop this. We have to plug the soft money loophole, and that is exactly what we have done in the amendment which we will be proposing.

I have to say I think this is one of those areas where I hope those on the other side of the aisle will agree to our proposal because, unfortunately, theirs still leaves wide open the soft money loophole. They fall back to current law which has a theory that you can somehow divide the money coming into a State party for an election cycle where both Federal and State candidates are running and you can apportion it.

That is what the current laws says can be done. It has never been done effectively because no one has figured out how to do it. They have gotten around it. If there are 20 State candidates on the ballot and 1 for the Senate, therefore, if you give $100,000, one-twentieth of that is going to be viewed as contributions that fall under Federal limits. Unions can make direct contributions; corporations can make direct contributions—the sky is the limit.

If we were to leave that loophole open and put some sort of limits on other forms of spending, before we know it, instead of having $60 million of soft money, we would have $200 million of soft money. So that is why, Mr. President, we have closed that loophole. We have brought that kind of soft money under Federal limits, limits as to how much any individual can give to that purpose, full disclosure and limits on the 30 cents aggregate per voter that can be spent by State parties on that kind of activity. It allows State parties to function. They have a viable and rightful part in the process, but it puts a limit on how much in total can be spent so a political party cannot sit back, pick out four or five States, pump in millions and millions of dollars in those States through the soft money loophole and change the way that campaigns would turn out.

So, Mr. President, we have closed that loophole. We have said that you cannot have direct contributions from corporations and from unions. We have looked at the recent court decisions and felt the best we could make that limitation is to limit it to $10,000 in contributions by corporate or labor PAC's for this purpose. That is the one area in which we allow political action committees to still make contributions.

Why do we allow it? Not for the purpose of opening up more contributions, but for the purposes of limitations. The court cases seem to indicate if you close the right of corporations, labor unions, for example, to participate in the process altogether that the courts would probably rule that if you did not allow them to form these committees and make these contributions, then they could probably make those contributions directly. So we closed the soft money loophole in our proposal.

I want to mention one other item very briefly before yielding the floor to my colleagues who are here who have worked so hard on this legislation. That is, we have not only tried in this legislation to stop the money chase, to stop the spiral of spending, to close the soft money loophole, to give challengers a chance to reduce the influence of special interests in elections, but we have also tried to do something to change the nature of the process.

Why are the American people so turned off and so alienated from the election process? Part of it is the nature of it. Very often campaigns are dominated by 30-second spots which really amount to character assassination: Negative ads filling the airways, not meaningful discussion of the substance of the issues, not meaningful discussion about a vision of the future, but simply negative attacks on the other side.

The level of discussion during political campaigns has been so reduced that a recent study indicated that the average length of time of a sound bite as reported by the media in the last Presidential election, the average length of time that they gave in quotation, the words of the candidate for President of the United States in the nightly news was 9 seconds. Nine seconds was the average length of time of the average sound bite from a candidate for President of the United States in the evening news, 9 seconds to discuss the vision of the future and discuss the substance and the issues.

So, Mr. President, in this bill we will be proposing we provide vouchers for candidates who will be willing to use them to buy time slots of 1 to 5 minutes, time slots in which meaningful discussion of the issues can be presented. We also provide that television costs will be brought down to a more reasonable level by providing a nonpreemptible, lowest unit rate cost based on an average over the last several months of rates charged by broadcasters.

Finally, we require that candidates assume responsibilities for ads which they put on the air so that at the end of a 30-second spot, if that ad makes an attack, the candidate who authorized it has to be on the ad and assume responsibility for having authorized it.

We are indebted to our colleague on the other side of the aisle, Senator DANFORTH of Missouri, for suggesting several of these ideas. He has made a great contribution to the process by indicating we must focus also on raising the level of the content of political debate as we struggle to change the ways in which we finance the system.

So, Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask that it be printed, an amendment on behalf of myself, the distinguished majority leader, the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, Senator FORD, who is here today, the distinguished President pro tempore, Mr. BYRD, of West Virginia, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who has played a key role in crafting this substitute, and as I mentioned today 39 other cosponsors, a total of 44 with the indication that the Senator designate from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA], as soon as he takes his seat, will also be joining us as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, in closing, I want to again make the statement that I made at the beginning. In introducing this legislation, we do so with a strong sense of the urgency of our task, the need to serve as trustees of this institution and this political process which is in trouble, the need to excise this cancer from the heart of the body politic, a cancer which is eating away at the political strength and fiber and force of our political system. We offer it in the sincere hope that many proposals in it will be taken as signals from us that we extend our hand to the other side of the aisle, that we signal to them we are ready to negotiate on a bipartisan basis for real campaign reform, and that we are ready to join and work together in this Chamber as Americans, as we should work together, to solve an American problem. That is our hope as we present this legislation for consideration by the American people.

We say to the people, Mr. President, we have heard your expression of disgust with the current system. We have heard your demand that this political system should be cleaned up. We have introduced a piece of legislation today to clean up the system, to stop the money chase, to give a fair chance to challengers, to change the system, and now we ask for your help. We ask that you, the American people, be heard from to help us pass this legislation to clean up our political system and get campaign spending back under control.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Senators cannot yield the floor to other Senators.

Mr. BOREN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, my colleague from Kentucky was on the floor before me, and I want to acknowledge that. I know he is the leading proponent on the other side, and I want to respect his position. What I would simply like to ask him if I could just take a few minutes; I will not go through my entire comments if the Senator from Kentucky would let me do that.

Mr. MCCONNELL. How long does the Senator from Massachusetts wish?

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I would ask somewhere in the vicinity of 5, 10 minutes.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. I know he was here prior to me, and I thank the distinguished President pro tempore and chairman of the Rules Committee for their indulgence also.

Mr. President, I am both pleased and privileged to join in the original cosponsorship of this proposal. It is, indeed, the most far reaching and sweeping election reform, campaign finance reform proposal that we have yet debated on the floor of the Senate.

I congratulate the Senator from Oklahoma, Senator BOREN, and Senator MITCHELL, for an extraordinary amount of energy and effort that has been expended not just in these recent negotiations but ever since they have been in the Senate. Many of the proposals in this measure are proposals that either Senator MITCHELL or Senator BOREN have attempted to enact into law previously, and they have been dogged in their persistence to guarantee that we in the Senate have an opportunity to consider this.

Regrettably, a number of years ago, when this issue came to the floor, the minority chose to filibuster it in a way that prevented us from really even considering campaign finance reform.

I just cannot express deeply enough my feelings, individually as a Senator, as a person who runs for office, as a citizen, the dire importance of our correcting the distortions that exist in the current campaign financing process. There is a perception that is absolutely rampant across this country about the impact of money on the political process. We simply cannot ignore the reality of that perception. We do so not only at the peril of our own elections but we do it I think quite literally at the peril of further jeopardizing the institution of the Senate itself.

There just is not any question but that the American people experience greater and greater cynicism about this process, that they feel less and less able to affect it, that they feel further and further from the decisionmaking process because those with money are perceived as being the people who affect the outcome of what happens in Washington.

Indeed, if you look at the course of contributions to campaigns and you look at the proliferation of individualized, specialized advocacy groups and their contributions, it is hard not to believe that. To be candid, each of us has to acknowledge the fact that Senators have become dependent on the ability to be able to raise money to be able to run for office. We are widening the gulf of credibility between us and the American people; the people who have been chosen to govern are losing the consent of the governed because of this perception that nothing matters, nothing makes a difference, that they are somehow powerless, and that powerlessness is precisely what our Constitution and our system of government was set up to try to prevent.

Our elections should not be determined on the basis of our bank accounts; they should be determined on the basis of what we stand for, and what we have done while we are here to justify the electorate back home in either sending us back or saying, "No, you have not done enough" or "You have done things that are wrong." But it should not be on the basis of our ability to manipulate 30-second media messages and somehow rip and tear apart the reputations of those who run against us or those we run against. It simply is not what the American people want, and it does not do justice to the better notions of democracy, and the exchange and dialog that the American people deserve.

People are going to say, "Is what we are proposing really reform; are you guys just trying to construct a bill that allows you incumbency favoritism?"

I ask colleagues and others to think about that for a minute. As it stands today, a Senator can go out and raise unlimited sums of money from most any source—unlimited sums of money. Many races are never contested precisely because any challenger looking at the situation says, "My God, I can't raise that kind of money. I do not have a prayer of getting in the ballgame."

So we are giving up voluntarily in our proposal the advantage of being able to raise the unlimited sums of money. We are saying, no, here is the limit, we will live by the limit, and we will allow a process by which any challenger will be able to qualify to gain that exact same amount of money. It seems to me that is giving up an extraordinary amount.

In addition to that, almost any incumbent today knows under the current system that if you leave it open ended, the incumbent is going to probably be able to raise more than most people in the country with the exception of some individual millionaires who can spend whatever they want. But for most incumbents the current system is an insurance policy that they can go out and raise those unlimited sums of money. In our bill we are saying put an end to that; no more unlimited incumbent insurance programs. We all live by the same rules. We will know precisely how much we have to spend, and we all live in the same limit.

It seems to me that there are two principal things we are trying to achieve in reform. What is reform? Well, reform is doing away with this cynical perception that money affects everything that happens here. How do you do that? How do you achieve the best reform? The way I think you do it is to further remove each and every one of us from the money we are raising.

How do you further remove us from it? By requiring us to raise the least amount and smallest amounts of money. That is precisely what our piece of legislation seeks to do. It says this will be a voluntary—I underscore "voluntary"—voluntary, voluntary, tax checkoff system just like the Presidential system that countless Republicans have used to run for President—the same system. A citizen, instead of voluntarily deciding to write out a check to an individual and getting whatever the benefits of that is, voluntarily checks off on the tax return and says, "I would like to support democracy. I would like to support the reclaiming of our political process."

So you further remove us from the money raising.

Moreover, by setting a limit, you end the escalating arms race of fundraising that is destroying the system. That is the second goal of reform: Gain back for the Senate the time that it takes to legislate, gain back for Senators the time it takes to properly be thinking about and discerning the policies for our competitiveness in the world, for our deficit reduction, for health care revisions, for countless other major issues that we face that ought to be the first priority of the U.S. Senator, not a reelection campaign in the effort to go out and raise money.

So those are the two I think absolute essential ingredients of reform: Liberate the U.S. Congress from this infamous process of fundraising, and get us the furthest, greatest insulation possible from the potential accusation or impact that somehow a contribution has affected what happens here. To accomplish this goal, contribution limits are not enough. We must also have spending limits.

It seems to me that our bill reaches as far as possible in an effort to try to do that, and I think there are many other assets and advantages of the bill. It turns soft money into hard money. It requires full disclosure. It does about as much as I think you could do to neutralize the ground to try to create a level playing field, and to be fair.

I know folks on the other side of the aisle are going to try to say, "Look at those Democrats; they love to touch your tax book. They are trying to get you to fund our campaigns and their campaigns."

Mr. President, I hope the dialog does not get reduced to that. Not one of those people have come to the floor of the Senate to say that about the Presidential race. The minority leader, Senator DOLE, took the money from the Presidential campaign that came from that same voluntary tax checkoff. He never complained. Ronald Reagan took the money from that. He never complained. George Bush took the money from it. He never complained. Four Members of the minority voted for public finance previously, and they never complained.

The question is: Are we really going to deal with this issue on the merits, the way it deserves? Ours is a voluntary system that permits Americans to decide they want to liberate Congress and free the system from the perception of corruption. It was an idea proposed by a Republican President, Theodore Roosevelt. It was an idea fought for by my predecessor in this seat, Henry Cabot Lodge, another distinguished Republican. I think it is an idea whose time has come.

We can appropriately say to the American people, "If you do not want your Congressmen and Senators traveling all around the country raising money, if you do not want big donations, fat cats, all kinds of special interests, then are you willing to voluntarily put 3 bucks or 6 bucks per couple into the system in order to make it work?"

I would suggest that is an opportunity that Americans would grab if they knew it was going to liberate the Congress from the insidious current connection of money and politics.

Our bill meets all the tests of reform.

Our bill limits spending, limits special interest money, adopts a general election voluntary financing system modeled after the Presidential system, while still encouraging small in-State donors to participate in politics.

It will free the Congress from the broadly held and extremely negative perception that money controls and grossly distorts the political process.

It will liberate Senators from the onerous burden and time consumption of fundraising.

It will restrain the extraordinary costs of our arms race of fundraising which sees Senators having to raise an average of $14,000 per week during the 1990 cycle for their entire 6 years—and far, far more every week during their final 2 years in office.

It will help to break whatever aspects of legislative gridlock are caused by the current funding system.

This legislation recognizes that the sources and amounts of money are the problem that we must address. Our bill goes the greatest distance to reduce them.

It is an approach which goes a long way toward freeing up the Senate's time from fundraising and releasing candidates from raising money from sources which raise the questions about whether special interests can rent the Congress.

Consider it provision by provision:

First, spending caps. Without spending caps, there will always be a constant drive to find new ways to raise ever greater sums of money for campaigns. The drive to raise dollars has caused all kinds of damage to this institution—and is directly related to the loss of public trust in us. Without spending caps, we will remain forever engaged in an ever escalating campaign arms race. This legislation instead calls for parity, at low levels.

It is interesting that early this month, former President Richard Nixon, endorsed the concept of spending caps. President Nixon told Bryan Gumbel on NBC Today that: "the costs of campaigning have become completely out of sight * * * there should be spending caps."

Second, voluntary public funding for general elections, after candidates meet a 10 percent threshold of small contributions, half from in-State. Voluntary public funding means no more reliance on big money and PAC's to finance campaigns. Instead, campaigns will be funded for general elections through a voluntary tax checkoff like the Presidential elections. Citizens will choose to share in the cost of elections—rather than permit high-dollar donors and special interests to claim special access.

The combination of spending caps and public funding means more democracy. Today about half of all Senate races have not been real contests, because one party or the other has not been able to field a candidate who can raise enough money to be competitive.

This bill helps challengers by providing them with public funds so long as they reach reasonable, achievable thresholds of support from contributors. The bill in effect guarantees that both parties will have fully funded nominees in almost every race in the country. That means two candidates, with two messages, to give the voters a real choice in every race. This is democracy. This is real reform.

Third, a ban on PAC contributions to individual candidates. I have urged the Congress to do something about its dependence on PAC money since I began rejecting PAC money myself when I ran for Senate in 1984 and we made Massachusetts the first PAC-free Senate race in the country.

Citizens are right to be concerned when candidates are seen to be beholden to special interest organizations that have narrow economic agendas. Citizens have to wonder whether those organizations are gaining undue influence in return for their contributions. They have to wonder whether their participation in the electoral process even counts anymore.

Ending PAC contributions to individual candidates, combined with spending limits, is real reform.

Fourth, we deal with soft money by turning it into hard money. Everything is disclosed. Nothing is under the table. And everything becomes hard dollars, kept within hard dollar limits.

Fifth, we allow the people who live inside a State to contribute to their candidates all the way up to election day. That is the idea of the Bipartisan Commission, appointed by Senator DOLE and Senator MITCHELL, of flexible spending limits. This bill allows $100 contributions from in-State residents up to 25 percent of the total cap, to keep people participating in the process—without giving a special leg up to those who can afford to make $1,000 contributions.

Sixth, we eliminate bundling as a means of circumventing contribution limits.

Seventh, we take steps to prevent circumvention of spending and contributions caps by candidates through their relationships with outside groups, by terming any expenditures by such groups as cooperative expenditures which will be counted toward the cap of the candidates they support.

There is no area we have left out—no area of contributions or expenditures left outside the system. I believe this is real—total—reform, by comparison to which all other approaches fall fundamentally short.

Unfortunately, the bill offered by the minority is a phony—a wolf dressed in sheep's clothing—which if enacted would give the rich and powerful even more influence over the process than they have today. It would take us a giant step backward away from reform.

The minority bill throws out the $25,000 limitation in place today on contributions by rich people in an election cycle. Instead, it applies a formula that amounts to $340,000 a year or $680,000 for each individual per election cycle, or $1,360,000 per couple per election cycle.

Enact the minority bill, and you erase one of the most important reforms after Watergate—the reform that said we must control the influence of the super-rich over our election process through limiting how much money they can give. The minority bill would throw out those limits, once again giving the rich and the super-rich ever more influence over the Congress.

The minority bill is a phony too in saying that it will stop soft money. In fact, the minority bill actually permits corporations, individuals, labor unions, you name it, to give unlimited amounts of soft money to party committees to spend on a variety of activities that affect Federal elections.

The minority bill also lifts the 14-year-old limit of how much individuals can contribute to a candidate by quintupling individual contributions—from $1,000 to $5,000—when opponents spend more than $250,000 of their own money, again giving wealthy individuals more influence over the process.

Finally, the minority bill allows fat cats to make unlimited contributions of money to State party organizations to fund activities that affect Federal elections. This practice, which resulted in individuals buying their way to foreign ambassadorships after giving $100,000 to the State committees of their party, has been one of the grossest examples of how money and influence get traded in the system. It is preserved in the minority so-called reform bill.

Finally, the Senator from Kentucky has again added his antiunion measures to this legislation that were defeated by a vote of 63-35 when we considered the Hatch Act. These provisions do not belong here anymore than they belonged on the Hatch Act.

For real reform, we need to endorse the basic principal of a democracy—that a race should not be determined by how much money a candidate can raise and spend, but by the quality of his message and candidacy. We should create a system of campaign finance based on the principle that an elected official should represent the voters who put him in office and not those people with the largest checkbooks.

Our bill does that. It ensures fairness to incumbents and challengers alike, to Republicans and Democrats and minor parties alike. It operates like the Presidential system, under which voluntary earmarks by taxpayers are used to provide public funds to candidates who raise a threshold amount of funds from small contributions and agree to spending limits.

The minority has mischaracterized the public funding provisions of this legislation as some kind of tax on the electorate. The truth is it relies on a voluntary check-off system by citizens, just like the Presidential system. If citizens do not want to support election reform, they can choose not to check off the contribution. So the idea that this is a raid on the Treasury is simply not true. It is a distortion of this bill.

In the past, we gave a tax deduction or tax credit to people who contributed to political campaigns, at $50 per tax return, costing the Treasury as much as $260 million a year. That was in place for a decade, with bipartisan support, and eliminated only with the Tax Simplification Act.

So today we have a choice. We can enact false reform, that enhances the ability of the wealthy and of special interests to throw their money at a campaign and election process that has no limits, as the minority wishes us to do.

Or we can enact real reform, to finally free the Congress from the money chase, and to restore the public trust in this increasingly maligned public institution. The choice is ours.

So, Mr. President, I will have more to say about this bill as we proceed along. There is much more to be said, and there is a great deal of comparison between the proposal of the minority and our proposal. But like the Senator from Oklahoma, I hope that we can come together in this effort to fashion a real reform package that is going to change our lives and the ability of the American people to believe again in this system which is the single most important goal of our efforts.

Mr. McCONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I think we can persuasively argue that there will be no more important issue coming before the Senate in this session, or maybe any session, than the question of campaign finance reform. I say that because it seems to the Senator from Kentucky that campaign finance laws are the rules of the game in our democracy; how we select those who are going to serve in this democratic body.

I have had an interest in this subject for quite some time. I used to teach on a part-time basis, in the mid-1970's, at the University of Louisville.

One class was called the American Political Parties and Elections. It happened to be about the time that the current law under which we are operating was passed. I had a chance, along with my students, to work my way through the process that was going on in the Congress. I was looking at it from outside, as a person trying to teach the students, and teach them well, about what we were doing.

Since that time I have had, as well as an academic interest in the subject, obviously a practical interest in the subject as someone who has sought public office under this system. There is no question that how we craft the rules of elections has an enormous impact on competitiveness, on incumbency, on policy; it has an enormous impact on all of us. There is a tendency, I think, for each side to say, "My way is true reform," and to ignore the partisan considerations that may drive the bill that emerges on separate sides.

I think it is enlightening for us to understand, as we move into this debate, where everybody is coming from. I have listened with interest over the years to my colleagues on the other side talk about campaign reform and craft various bills. We have another one before us this morning which, in my view, probably represents the majority view of the Democratic Party about which way we ought to go.

But before I describe at least in general terms that bill, let us talk about what the National Democratic and the National Republican Parties are today.

In 1988 in Atlanta, at the Democratic National Convention, 55 percent of the delegates were public employees. They worked for some public entity somewhere in America. The lion's share of the remaining 45 percent were members of tax exempt organizations like labor unions, or other 501(c)'s, who were participating in the American political process. I think it is safer to say that the overwhelming majority of the delegates were people who either worked for the Government or wanted something more from the Government.

Meanwhile, over at the Republican Convention in New Orleans, only 5 percent were public employees, most elected officials, and virtually everybody else there was out in the private sector, running a little business, taking care of patients, running a small farm. Out there in our capitalist country making the wheels of this capitalist country grind, producing jobs and opportunity and prosperity for our country.

So if there were any cursory way to sum up the differences between the two major parties today in America at the Federal level, I think it is safe to say the following sums it up: The Democratic Party, by and large, is the party of the public sector; and the Republicans, by and large, are the party of the private sector.

Now, bearing that in mind, and applying that base support to the issue before us, campaign reform, it should not be surprising to anyone that the Democratic Party of government would like, to the maximum extent possible, squeeze the private sector out of the election process and maximize the advantages of the public sector.

They have every right to try to do that. But to try to convince everybody that that is necessarily reform, it seems to me that it falls short of the mark. The substitute bill that has been sent to the desk essentially attempts to squeeze the private sector out of the American electoral process and to substitute, therefore, tax dollars.

And the distinction is made that somehow, since it is a voluntary check-off, that is OK; but the fact of the matter is, when you voluntarily divert that dollar, it is taken away from Head Start, child nutrition, and from a reduction of the Federal deficit—something we are all concerned about. We are taking those dollars away from worthwhile Government programs so that we can fund our political campaigns, in the name of squeezing the private sector out of the American political process.

So I think it is safe to say that there is a fundamental difference here in terms of the views of our two parties about the American political process and who ought to have the right to participate.

Mr. President, the problem can be solved, it seems to me, in a bipartisan way. It is my understanding that the negotiations will begin next week.

I suggested to my colleague, Senator BOREN, on the way over to the floor today, that once we sit down—and the leader is in the process of selecting four people from our side to work on this—we ought to start in the areas of agreement. There are a lot of things that we could well agree on. Some things we agree on right now. And we can work our way to the middle. Start in the areas of agreement, and work our way toward the more contentious items, and see if we can pass a landmark piece of legislation, because we should.

The Senator from Kentucky is not here today to defend the status quo. I am not happy with the current system. There are a lot of things that ought to be done differently. But I think when we go at campaign finance reform, we ought to try to proceed in a way that reforms the system, rather than simply presents the opportunity for partisan advantage.

I think it is safe to say that virtually everybody on this side rejects, out of hand, taxpayer financing. Involuntary taxpayer financing of campaigns.

It has been said on the floor, what about the Presidential system? I do not think that is a good system, and I do not think there is anybody in America who studied it who thinks that it is. In an effort to micromanage Presidential politics, every major candidate has been cited for violations since the system began. One out of four dollars has been spent on lawyers and accountants. I bet you could not find a candidate for President who thinks it is anything other than a disaster.

Sometime during the course of the debate, we ought to consider repealing the Presidential system, which has been a disgrace and disaster. The fact that Presidential candidates have accepted public funding since 1976 does not mean that it has been a good system. I do not think any scholars who have studied it, or people who worked for it, or candidates who have run for President, think it is a good system.

We may look at that, and we may well do that before this debate is over, depending on how the debate goes. I do not think there will be a bill with public funding in it. My suspicion is that that was never a plan of the majority anyway, but rather an attempt to make the committee bill look a little better. Well, the committee bill does not look much better to this Senator.

If you reject taxpayer funding and say you are not going to take it from the taxpayers, where can you get money for a political campaign? It can come from four places: from people, from PAC's, from parties, or it can come from the sewer. The sewer, in my view, is the 501(c) money. The money that is unlimited and undisclosed, and that is being spent in untold amounts out across America. And nobody knows how much is being spent.

The Republican alternative eliminates PAC's, eliminates sewer money, and it says that the way campaigns ought to be funded in this country is by people and by parties. The Dole-Mitchell task force broke the subject down into what it called good money and bad money. It called parties good money, called individuals good money, and called PAC's bad money.

Mr. President, if we are serious about eliminating PAC's, we can do it. We ought to do it across the board, not just eliminate PAC contributions to Senate candidates and allow PAC's to continue to be given to the House candidates and to parties, as the amendment that has been sent to the desk does. It has a loophole so big you can drive a truck through it. Cut off one avenue for PAC's, but just send the PAC money in another direction.

That is not going to fool anybody, Mr. President, in terms of real reform. That is not a real reform. That is simply laundering the PAC money through the parties. That is not going to do anything to improve the system, in the view of this Senator.

It seems to this Senator that we ought to do the following—and the Republicans have put forward a 34-point program which we believe is the most comprehensive bill that has ever been introduced on this subject. To just cover some of the highlights: It bans PAC's altogether; completely bans on soft money, the 501(c) money that is corrupting the system.

It draws a distinction between in-State and out-of-State contributions by lowering the individual contributions for those who cannot vote for you. It closes the millionaires' loophole. One of my great concerns is that once we put a cap on spending, every millionaire in America is going to have a field day because there is no way you can constitutionally keep an individual from spending everything he has to run for public office, if he so chooses.

All you do with the measure that has been sent up by the opposition is make it more likely—not less likely—that we will have more people trying to buy public office. But there is a way to get at it, a way to discourage it. We discourage it in two different ways.

No. 1, we say, if a person is going to spend more than a quarter million—you can set the level anywhere you want to, for example, $250,000—if a person is going to spend more than $250,000 on his own race, he has to notify the Federal Election Commission that is going to happen, therefore triggering for his opponent an opportunity to get up to $5,000 per individual for the campaign. If that person is going to spend more than $1 million of his own money, then there ought not to be any limit on individual donations to his opponents; and, finally, he should not be able to pay himself back after the election. One of the most pernicious practices I observed around here is people putting up their own money and then buying an election, in effect, and then going around town after the election is over and paying themselves back. That I think we can stop constitutionally. So our bill makes a real effort to get at the millionaire problem.

In addition, we do not believe there should be any franked mass mailing in an election year. Just eliminate them in an election year altogether to help level the playing field.

Another very important area, and this is an area where I think we have a good chance for bipartisan agreement, is there ought to be a significant broadcast discount for political candidates. In the early seventies, we passed the current provision, which is supposed to provide some relief. It says, in effect, that 45 days before the primary and 60 days before the general election, political candidates are supposed to be sold time at the lowest unit rate available for any commercial customer. It sounds all right, except that they created something called preemptible time and the lowest unit is preemptible time. They do not like to sell preemptible time, so it is extremely difficult to get it. Since you have a difficult time buying preemptible time, even in the spring before the primary, when you move to fall, of course, it is an extremely difficult problem because you get bumped and you are out of business. What do I mean? We are in a unique sales undertaking; the sale has to be made on 1 day to succeed in a political campaign.

You cannot afford to buy preemptible time, so a practical matter, what typically happens is that all political candidates buy the premium time, the fixed time, the highest rate time, and it costs us more than commercial advertisers to get our message across.

Broadcast time has gone up dramatically. In 1975, when this current legislation was passed, we set the individual contribution at $1,000 and it is still there. That is worth less than $500 today, but broadcast time has gone up astronomically. In my State, it is twice what it was, twice what it was, 6 years ago. So we are raising a lot of money to send to the broadcasters.

I think a meaningful broadcast discount rate is important. Three-fourths of 1 percent of the overall broadcast advertising revenue comes from political campaigns. What we are saying to the broadcasters is, "We would like a real break in that portion of your revenue that represents only three-fourths of 1 percent."

I do not think that is inappropriate. They do not own those airways. We are asking for a tiny break in a small portion of this enormously profitable business out there using the public airwaves. If we can get a meaningful broadcast discount rate, we are going to take most of the steam out of this particular problem of having to raise a lot of money.

(Mr. LIEBERMAN assumed the chair.)

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I think it is awfully important, as we move through this debate both on the floor and in the discussions that will occur off the floor, to use facts correctly. The facts should be a fact. But I find it maddening some of the things that are frequently said that simply are not correct. I guess it is possible for people to look at the same set of facts and reach a different conclusion, but I have heard it said frequently, for example, that we are part-time Senators and full-time fundraisers. Mr. President, there are just no facts to back that up.

Let us look at the facts. Eighty-three percent of the total campaign receipts of incumbent Senators up for reelecton in 1988 was raised in the last 2 years. We just did a profile of the class of '88, and I suspect that in any other class the evidence would be the same. Eighty-three percent of the money raised by the class of '88 was raised in the last 2 years. Only 6 percent in the first 2 years, and about 11 percent in the second 2 years.

Now the class of '88 was certainly not out there raising money all day, every day, for 6 years. They raised 83 percent of what they raised in the last 2 years. How many times have we heard it said on the floor of the Senate and others places that Senators have to raise $15,000 a week, every week. Mr. President, only 6 Senators, 6, have raised an average of $15,000 or more a week since their last election, 6 out of 100. It is not true. It is not factual.

We have heard it said on the floor and in other places Mr. President, that soon we will be spending $40, $50, $60 million a year on campaigns. There is no evidence of that Mr. President. In fact, Senate campaign spending went down from 1986 to 1988. It went down, not up; down. So the trend line is down. Senators are raising money only in the last 2 years. Now there are fundraisers going on around here but they are going on for Senators who are up in the last 2 years.

But it is simply not correct to say, there is no factual basis, that all Senators are out raising $15,000 every week, for 6 years. There is nothing to back that up. So I think, Mr. President, as we move through the debate, we ought to use the facts. And the facts are simply that it is not occurring.

Another thing that has been said frequently—and how many times have we heard this? There can be no real campaign finance reform without spending limits. If we have heard that once, we have heard it a million times over the years.

Who made that decision? That is not the view of the academics. It is not the view of those who studied the issue. Mr. President, it is pretty hard to find a scholar left in America who believes that spending limits are a good idea because they know that spending limits are limits on participation. It is saying that there is a cap on on how many people can participate in your campaign, in limited, and fully disclosed amounts. Mr. President, in our view that is not progress. That is a step backward, a limit on who can participate.

It is also the view of Herbert Alexander, professor, University of Southern California;

It is also the view of Christopher Arterton, dean, Graduate School of Political Management, New York chair, campaign finance study group, John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University;

It is also the view of John Bibby, professor of political science, University of Wisconsin;

It is also the view of Joel Fleischman, vice chancellor, Duke University, and chair of their Department of Public Policy Studies;

It is also the view of Joel Gora, associate professor, Brooklyn Law School;

It is also the view of Gary Jacobson, associate professor, University of California, San Diego;

It is also the view of Xandra Kayden, research associate, John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University;

It is also the view of Susan King, Assistant to the Commissioner, Federal Election Commission chair, U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission under President Carter;

It is also the view of Michael Malbin, assistant director, House Republican Confernce Committee resident scholar, American Enterprise Institute;

It is also the view of Nicholas T. Mitropoulos, senior campaign staffer for George McGovern, Jimmy Carter, and CHARLES ROBB;

It is also the view of Jonathan Moore, director, Institute of Politics, Harvard University;

It is also the view of Richard Neustadt, Lucius N. Littauer professor, Harvard University;

It is also the view of Gary Orren, professor, Institute of Politics, Harvard University;

It is also the view of Norman Ornstein, American Enterprise Institute;

It is also the view of Nelson Polsby, professor, University of California, Berkeley;

It is also the view of Austin Rammey, professor, University of California, Berkeley;

It is also the view of Larry Sabato, associate professor of government, University of Virginia;

It is also the view of Richard Scammon, professor, American University;

It is also the view of Frank Sorauf, professor, University of Minnesota; and I suspect virtually everybody else, Mr. President, who studied the issue.

So where did we ever get the notion that spending limits—that is, a limit on the ability of large numbers of people in small amounts to participate—was a good idea for reform? No body that has studied the subject thinks it is reform. They think it is a bad idea.

There is the myth, Mr. President, that spending is turning voters off. Well, in fact, campagin spending turns voters on. There is substantial evidence to demonstate that the more money that is spent in a campaign, the higher the turnout is, and the less money that is spent in a campaign, the lower the turnout is.

Now, it stands to reason why that happens. Typically, the campaigns where there is very little spending are campaigns in which the incumbent has no serious challenge. When the incumbent has no serious challenge, there is very little advertising, very little interest, and a low turnout.

Now, is that good for America? I think not. I do not think it is a terrific idea for incumbents to have no challenger, for no money to be spent, and for there to be a low turnout. It is great for the incumbent. It is not very good for Americans and for the system. So there is no evidence whatsoever, Mr. President, none, that campaign spending turns the voters off.

We have heard it said on the floor as recently as this morning, that spending limits help challengers. My goodness, I do not know anybody that thinks that, certainly none of these scholars; none of them.

We looked at the spending limits in the bill that has been suggested. I checked with my media adviser, since I happen to be running this year. I said, assuming the general election spending limit in Kentucky of $1.2 million, and assume that we spend more than we would normally spend on television—the typical campaign spends between 50 and 60 percent—I said, let us assume we spent 70 percent on television, how much time could I buy? Response, "Senator, well, maybe 3 weeks."

Maybe 3 weeks, she said. Well, I can tell you, Mr. President, this is an incumbent protection bill. No unknown challenger could ever get in the game with that little exposure. If we want to protect ourselves, the way to do it is to have a low spending limit and send the bill to the taxpayers and let them pick up the tab for keeping us all here. I do not think that is reform, Mr. President, I think that is a step in the wrong direction.

I do not like the status quo, and I hope that we will pass a meangful campaign finance reform bill. But, one of the raps on the current system just does not apply to the Senate. It has been said that incumbents always win. Well, that is not the case in the Senate. The Senate has changed hands twice under this legislation. An increasing number of Senators have stiff competitive campaigns. They have to fight to keep these seats. That is good for America.

And, as we move toward reforming this system, Mr. President—and I hope we will reform the system—let us not guarantee that we get to stay here forever. We do not own these seats. We ought to have to go out and earn them every 6 years. We ought to have a broad base of support and we ought to have it from individuals, not from Treasury money. All the evidence is that virtually every Senator here raises very little money until the last 2 years.

Mr. President, the only ones that are doing that are the ones who may have a race. I think you could make an argument that all of us ought to have a race, and that we ought to have to do a little work to stay here, and that you need money in order to communicate with voters. The issue is, where does the money come from? It is the view of the Senator from Kentucky, and clearly the view of a majority of the Republicans, that the issue is not how much is spent, but where it comes from. Who does it come from? Mr. President, it ought to come from individuals in limited amounts and fully disclosed. It ought not come from special interest political action committees and it ought not to come from people hiding behind the tax codes, 501(c)'s who are currently spending unlimited and undisclosed amounts on campaigns. And we ought to strengthen parties.

That is good reform, Mr. President. That is the kind of reform under which both parties could thrive and the influence of special interest money could be greatly diminished, if not eliminated altogether.

I look forward to the discussions that are going to begin next week. I think we have a real chance here to improve the system. But we need to do the right things. We need to do what is really important.

I am, by the way, in favor of comprehensive reform; doing a lot of things. But if somebody said to me: You can only do one thing. What is the single most important thing you can do to improve the system that would not hurt either side? Bring the cost of radio and television down. We have a right to do it. We are not asking too much of the broadcasters. It represents only three-fourths of 1 percent of their total revenue. Bring the cost of radio and television advertising down. Campaign spending has already gone down, Mr. President. It will go down dramatically if we can cut the cost of advertising.

In these negotiations that begin next week I believe this is an area where we can fashion a bipartisan agreement. It will take a lot of the sting out of the process. It will make it easier for candidates of both parties to have access to the airwaves, which is the only way to run a modern campaign.

We cannot go back to just doing nothing but shaking hands on courthouse lawns. Most of these States are too big now. We just could not meet everybody if we spent our whole lives doing it. We have to be able to use modern means of communication. If the cost of television comes down, competitiveness will go up because challengers will be able to afford to get in the game.

Mr. President, this week, Republicans offered the most comprehensive bill which has ever been introduced on the subject of campaign finance reform. I am joined in this effort by 33 of my colleagues who were the initial cosponsors of this legislation.

Republicans are tired of being accused of obstructing reform of our campaign laws. It is an outrageous assertion. As the minority party in both the House and the Senate, we have a very strong interest in rewriting the rules which govern campaigns and elections. However, we believe that any new rules should be developed in a truly bipartisan manner and not through a process where the controlling party perpetuates its majority by trying to railroad a bill through the Congress.

We organized a filibuster against the original Byrd-Boren spending limits bill because it did not represent true reform. Instead, it was designed as a partisan measure which advanced Democratic objectives at the expense of the Republican Party. It was ludicrous for anyone to think that our party would stand by and let that happen to us shortly before the important 1992 elections.

For the last 3 years, Democrats in the Senate have been trying to sell the concept of spending limits as the only way to reform the campaign finance laws. Let me tell Senators why they are doing this—because it serves the partisan interests of the Democratic Party. And these partisans have been aided in their effort by one tax-exempt organization, Common Cause, whose members act more like they are an arm of the Democratic Party than bipartisan advocates for true reform.

As an incumbent Senator, I should vote for the Byrd-Boren spending limits bill. It is clearly going to ensure that I never have a competitive race again in the State of Kentucky. With a State-by-State spending limit, my opponent will have to run a shorter campaign and will never be able to overcome my name recognition and incumbency advantages. We will see more challengers lose close races and a lot of us will be free to stay in the Senate until we decide it is time for a comfortable retirement.

I do not support a concept which is in my own best interests as an incumbent because I think it is important for us as officeholders to encourage competition in politics. I think it is our responsibility to avoid enacting laws which create barriers to public office. Instead, we should be encouraging people to run for public office and supporting policies which stimulate political debate and the expression of ideas.

I am not asserting this proposition because I believe that—in every case—a challenger must spend more than an incumbent to win. Rather, the problem is that good challengers must be able to reach voters and convince them it is time for a change. And that is no small task in race of you are facing an incumbent who has built a statewide organization and has all of the perks of office at his disposal.

The Byrd-Boren spending limits bill will limit the ability of challengers to mount effective campaigns. If the State-by-State limits in that bill applied to the last three election cycles, 8 of the 13 successful challengers who won close races would not be here because they would have had to spend more than the limit assigned to their State. Look at what PAUL SIMON and TOM HARKIN spent in 1984. What TOM DASCHLE, BOB GRAHAM, and DICK SHELBY spent in 1986. And what DICK BRYAN, BOB KERREY, and JOE LIEBERMAN spent in 1988. All of these challengers had to exceed the Byrd-Boren limits to win. These races were very close and an arbitrary limit on the challenger's spending ability probably would have saved most, if not all, of the incumbents they were facing.

I think the time has come for us to stop trying to build on those advantages we enjoy as officeholders and try to approach this issue in a sensible and bipartisan manner. The real problem in campaign finance is the source of political money, not how much spending is necessary.

The advocates of the Byrd-Boren bill use the spending limits concept to address every problem in campaign finance. Yet the bill directly curtails Republican fundraising advantages while conveniently excluding from any disclosure or limitations many activities by special interest sources which benefit Democratic candidates.

If we really want to tackle the campaign finance issue, we should be looking at where political money is coming from and where it is being spent. We need to look at: the special interest influence of political action committees [PAC's]; the soft money activities of unions and other tax-exempt organizations; and the activities of large out-of-State contributors.

A second area we need to explore is why some Federal races are not competitive. I think this is primarily a problem in the House of Representatives, where the reelection rate is an astounding 98 percent. By contrast, the Senate has been a fairly competitive place. In the last decade, we have sworn in many new Senators and majority control has turned over twice.

Challengers in the House, unfortunately, do not stand a chance. Norman Ornstein has described the process as a 100-yard dash where the incumbent starts from the 50-yard line. The incumbent has a large staff, can mail numerous franked newsletters to everyone in his or her district throughout the election cycle, appears frequently on television, radio, and in the local newspapers to discuss issues of importance, and can raise a huge campaign war chest from special interest groups.

These practices have turned the House of Representatives into the House of Lords. We need to look at measures which will limit incumbent advantages and help challengers mount effective and competitive campaigns.

A third area we need to look at is the cost of campaigns. The reason we have to spend so much time fundraising is primarily because the cost of television advertising is escalating higher and higher.

Let us face it, a modern Senate campaign is a television event. It requires, on average, 50 percent of the budget of a competitive candidate and the cost is skyrocketing. In my race for reelection this year, our media consultant has estimated that my television costs will be double what I spent in 1984 for the same amount of advertising time. We need to deal effectively with this problem so we can reduce the fundraising pressures on everyone.

The Republican alternative is designed to deal with these three areas in campaign finance. The bill is a 30-point plan which combines a variety of legislative ideas, old and new. We even have incorporated almost all of the ideas presented by the bipartisan panel of experts commissioned by Senators MITCHELL and DOLE to offer suggestions for reform.

This bill has three titles. The first title is designed to curtail the influence of special interests on congressional elections. In this title, the bill sponsors propose:

The elimination of all political action committees, including leadership PAC's;

A ban on all soft money from being used by unions, corporations, tax-exempt organizations, and parties to influence a Federal election;

A substantial reduction in the amount—from $1,000 to $500—that an out-of-State individual can contribute to a Senate candidate;

Provisions which were recommended by the Mitchell-Dole panel report to strengthen the role of political parties;

The elimination of Keating-style bundling and fundraising activities; and

More regulation over independent expenditures.

The second title of the bill is designed to increase competition in all Federal elections. In this title, the sponsors propose:

The creation of a seed money mechanism to help qualified House and Senate challengers obtain more party money at an early stage in the campaign;

A provision which prohibits an incumbent from supplementing official office expense accounts with campaign funds;

Special protections for individuals who are facing "millionaire" candidates;

A prohibition on using the congressional frank for "mass mailings" during an election year;

Limitations on "gerrymandering" activities; and

New provisions to combat election fraud at all levels of government.

The third and fourth title of this bill deal with campaign costs and FEC enforcement. The most important provision in this title provides a meaningful discount for television and radio advertising 45 days before a primary and 60 days before a general election. In my opinion, this is the most important provision in the bill because it deals directly with the reason that Senate campaigns are so expensive: The cost of television.

Let me conclude my remarks with several additional observations. First, this bill is the most comprehensive piece of legislation which has ever been offered to solve the problems in campaign finance. We have assembled ideas which have been offered by many Senators, House Members, the administration, campaign finance scholars, and the recent report by the Mitchell-Dole panel of experts.

Second, the provisions of this bill, taken together, demonstrate that Congress can legislate true reform in this area without the need for spending limits. It was not even necessary to adopt the concept of flexible spending limits recommended by the Mitchell-Dole panel. Instead, we decided to limit more directly the two less favored sources of political money which would be capped by flexible spending limits: PAC's and out-of-State money. Rather than established a large limit on how much of a candidate's money can be derived from these two sources, we have abolished one source completely—PAC's—and have reduced by one-half the contribution limit for out-of-State donations.

Finally, this bill is an attempt at a bicameral solution to the campaign finance issue. I think everyone recognizes that we should not have two separate campaign finance systems in the Congress. We have tried to address certain issues which are unique to the House in addition to proposing a comprehensive plan for our own institution. I will not say we have drafted perfect solutions to every problem, but this bill can serve as a useful starting point for what I hope will be meaningful bipartisan negotiations in both Houses of Congress. It is time we reform the campaign finance laws and I call on my colleagues in both bodies to stop playing partisan politics with this issue and get on with enacting sensible reforms to our campaign finance laws.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD].

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, first I ask unanimous consent during the floor consideration and votes of S. 137, that Jack Sousa of the Rules Committee staff and Rob Mangas, of my personal staff, be granted full floor privileges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, before I make my remarks, let me clear up one thing. We would think, by the previous remarks, that this Democratic proposal was taking dollars from child care, welfare, projects for State and local communities, and this is just not true. This is the only hook the Republicans have for an opportunity to be against the proposal that this side of the aisle has submitted.

We are asking, and we think there will be a response from the citizens of this country that they are willing to pay an additional couple of dollars to see that the so-called sewer money, so-called PAC's, so-called dollar influence, will be eliminated from political campaigns for Federal elections. So we are not asking that moneys from the general fund be spent. We are asking that those who would like to volunteer, do so. I think enough of those citizens out there who are sick and tired of all the expenditure of funds as it relates to a campaign will be willing to see we do have an opportunity to clean up and improve the type of campaign and the length of campaign and the need for other items that we find so offensive; to see those will be corrected.

Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990, offered by Senator BOREN and I think 43 other Democratic Senators as a substitute to S. 137. We hear about comprehensive reform. Mr. President, it is a comprehensive solution to many of the campaign finance problems facing the Senate today. More important, Mr. President, it is a fair solution.

Campaign finance reform is an extremely complex and difficult issue, in large part because every Senator qualifies as an expert on the subject. Over the last few months, the Rules Committee, of which I am chairman, held several hearings on the issue and heard from many experts, both inside and outside of this body. We specifically considered 13 different legislative proposals, including S. 137, which was approved by the committee on March 8, by a 7-to-3 vote.

Since that time, Mr. President, several additional proposals have been made, including the suggestions of the independent panel of experts appointed by the majority and minority leaders. I believe that the proposal offered today incorporates many of the best suggestions made in recent months and provides a balanced framework for conducting future Senate elections.

The substitute amendment offered by Senator BOREN includes several proposals which will clean up the way we operate as candidates. First, and most important, Mr. President, it offers reasonable incentives for candidates to comply with spending limits. Despite the many complexities of several issues in this debate, one thing is quite clear: There can be no real reform without spending limits.

That may be the crux of the difference in these two pieces of legislation. But, to me and to many Americans, there can be no real reform without spending limits. The spiraling growth of spending on Senate campaigns in recent years is the root cause of most problems facing our system today. "The money chase," and it is a money chase, must be brought under control.

Americans are frustrated with the amount of money involved in campaigns, the time the Senators will spend in raising this money, and the influence of special interest groups. Do not tell me we do not spend time trying to raise sufficient funds for the next campaign. The danger of real and perceived conflicts of interest escalates each year with this flow of money. We must establish constitutional incentives to comply with spending limits in an effort to improve both the operation of Senate elections and the operation of this Senate.

This amendment, in my opinion, accomplishes that goal and it incorporates the concept of flexible spending limits which initially received wide bipartisan support.

In my opinion, Mr. President, this substitute encourages small givers. We mandate, under the flexible spending limits, small gifts. We spread wide open the opportunity and the encouragement for the small gifts. I think that is the proper route to go and this particular legislation encourages that. Because the proposal would allow an additional 25 percent above the cap to be spent if raised from small, in-State contributions, which is an objective with widespread support. Reasonable limits, with an added incentive for Senators to raise all their contributions from within their State, are essential elements of any true reform.

John Stennis, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, who is no longer in this body, made a proposal several years ago that every Senator must raise all the money for his campaign from his State.

It made sense then and it makes sense now.

Others have described in detail the incentives to comply with these spending limits, voluntary—and I underscore voluntary—public financing, reduced broadcast rates and lower mailing expense.

Mr. President, by providing broadcast vouchers for longer, more issue-oriented advertisements, the proposal also provides important incentives for improving the quality of campaigns. Taken together, these and other important reforms in the substitute amendment will go a long way toward cleaning up Senate campaigns.

Mr. President, there is a clear and compelling need for reform. Critics of campaign finance reform have made several arguments which simply do not hold up after taking a closer look. Let me address a few of them.

A few critics of reform have suggested that spending limits hurt challengers and help incumbents. It has been suggested that we need to look no further than the last two Senate elections where challengers have upset incumbents 11 times. In 7 of those 11 elections, we are told that challengers exceeded the proposed spending limits of this legislation. Therefore, the argument goes challengers would be hurt by limits and less likely to succeed. Let us look at it a little bit. This argument, in my opinion, fails to look at all the facts. We have heard statements this morning that the facts just do not substantiate. They do not look at all the facts. Let us look at all of them.

The impact of spending limits would be much more severe on incumbents in these races. That is a fact. In 10 of the 11 races, incumbents exceeded the proposed spending caps and, therefore, would have been forced to spend less money. This includes three races where challengers would not have been cut at all. Challengers would still have been able to spend all the money they raised, but the incumbents would have been cut. In 7 of the 10 races, where spending would be reduced by the proposed spending limits, the incumbents would be reduced by a greater amount.

We hear this bill hurts challengers. Let us look at all the facts, Mr. President. In fact, overall spending by incumbents in those 11 races would have been reduced by $15.5 million, or an average of 38 percent. That is what we would have reduced the incumbents' ability to spend by. Spending by challengers in those races would have been reduced by an average of 25 percent of the proposed limits. So, therefore, the incumbent is reduced some 13 percent more than challengers.

But these comparisons ignore an even more important fact: Spending limits create more competitive races. Equal resources means an equal opportunity to campaign. They say a challenger does not have an advantage. If we have equal amounts to spend, we are here trying to do our duty, the challenger is back home beating up on us everyday. Every time we make a vote here, it is challenged back home, and we are not there to defend ourselves. Do not tell me a challenger does not benefit by this.

It is very rare when a challenger can outspend an incumbent under current law. In the 1988 Senate races, 27 incumbents spent an average of $3.7 million to run for office. Ninety-four challengers spent an average of $593,000 or 16 percent of the incumbents' amount.

In fact, going back to the 1984 elections, there have been 83 Senate races involving incumbents. How many times was the incumbent outspent? Only four times. Let me repeat that. Since 1984, challengers have been able to outspend incumbents only 4 times in 83 Senate races. The trend during the past decade indicates that this gap is likely to widen. The money that the average Senate challenger was able to raise from the 1980 election to the 1988 election grew by only 40 percent, which is roughly at the rate of inflation during that period. However, the money raised by the average Senate incumbent increased by 269 percent during that period.

Mr. President, by contrast, in the 11 Senate races since 1986 where challengers won, they spent an average of 78 percent of the amount spent by incumbents. While three involved challengers who outspent the incumbent, no challenger was able to raise or spend more than 6 percent above the incumbents' spending level. However, seven of the challengers spent at least 80 percent of the amount spent by incumbents.

I understand the percentage and the amounts. It is probably not getting anyone out on the edge of the chair because it is so enlightening and my charisma is drawing them out. But I think it is important, if we are going to look at facts, that we look at facts and see really what happened. Then let us make a judgment based on the facts.

But what about the challengers who lost? Most challengers simply do not have the opportunities or ability to raise and spend the money that incumbents can. That is simple. It is a fact, however. Some are trying to make us hear that that is not true. In all Senate races involving incumbents during the last two elections, incumbents outspent challengers by $110 million. If the spending limits of this amendment would have been in effect, that gap would have been reduced to only $21 million. It would have been reduced by almost $80 million.

Mr. President, there can be no question about which situation is the fairer. It is clear that challengers have the best opportunity to compete in elections when they have access to roughly equal resources. I have heard my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] say that if you have $1 and I have $1 million, my freedom of speech is a million times more than yours. You jeopardize a man's or woman's ability of freedom of speech. Therefore, comparative levels of spending are a much more important factor in producing competitive elections than absolute levels of spending. The system which allows incumbents and challengers to spend roughly equal amounts is much fairer and is clearly beneficial to the challengers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table relating to the impact of spending limits on successful challengers be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IMPACT OF PROPOSED SPENDING LIMITS ON SUCCESSFUL CHALLENGERS

State	Amount spent	Challenger as percent of Inc.	Proposed limit	Reduction
				Amount	Percent
1988 RACES
Connecticut:
Incumbent	$2.560	100.4	$1.910	$0.650	25
Challenger	2.571			.661	26
Montana:
Incumbent	1.338	80.4	1.587	None
Challenger	1.076			None
Nebraska:
Incumbent	3.411	101.5	1.587	1.824	53
Challenger	3.461			1.874	54
Nevada:
Incumbent	3.008	98.3	1.587	1.421	47
Challenger	2.958			1.371	46
1986 RACES
Alabama
Incumbent	4.625	48.8	2.176	2.449	53
Challenger	2.259			.083	4
Florida:
Incumbent	6.723	91.8	5.093	1.630	24
Challenger	6.173			1.080	17
Georgia:
Incumbent	5.119	54.3	2.939	2.180	43
Challenger	2.779			None
North Carolina:
Incumbent	5.188	80.3	3.060	2.128	41
Challenger	4.168			1.108	27
North Dakota:
Incumbent	2.270	40.0	1.587	.683	30
Challenger	.970			None
South Dakota:
Incumbent	3.291	105.9	1.587	1.704	52
Challenger	3.485			1.898	54
Washington:
Incumbent	3.290	58.1	2.444	.846	26
Challenger	1.912			None

Note.—All amounts are in millions.

(Mr. SIMON assumed the chair.)

Mr. FORD. The second point I would like to make, Mr. President, is that critics of reform have suggested that campaign spending is going down. We have heard this morning that expenditures are actually going down. We heard we want to get into all the facts. We want to hear the facts. So let us get to them.

They point out that while overall spending for congressional races went up again in 1988, aggregate spending for Senate races declined from $211 million in 1986 to $201 million in 1988. This is a decline of 4.8 percent. But, Mr. President, this ignores the fact that the number of Senate candidates declined dramatically during that period. Do not forget one little fact. We take the percentage that they give us of a decline of 4.8 percent, but they fail to say that the number of candidates declined dramatically during this period from 262 candidates, Mr. President, to 210 candidates—a nearly 20 percent decline in the number of candidates. Now, that is a fact.

Spending per candidate continued to increase, if you take the facts, by more than 16 percent from the 1986 campaign to the 1988 campaign.

So let us get all the facts out on the table. Let us look at all of the facts. You can take the two amounts and put them together. But what caused the dollar amounts to decline? You had fewer people running, fewer people spending money. That is the reason the amount went down. But the actual cost per candidate went up by over 16 percent.

Mr. President, quite clearly the cost of running a Senate race is rising as fast as ever.

The third point I would like to make, Mr. President, is that critics of reform have suggested that there is really no money chase in the Senate—no money chase in the Senate. The fact is that to run a winning Senate campaign in 1988 a Senator must have raised an average of $12,000 per week every week during the 6-year period. Now, that is the fact. But then they try to say you raise that money in the last two years.

Critics of reform do not like this fact and consider it to be a distortion. They have pointed out, I believe, that 83 percent—I think we heard that this morning—of all contributions are raised in the last 2 years prior to an election. Therefore, the argument goes, Senators do not need to raise an average of $12,000 per week throughout their 6-year term.

I fail to understand how this leads to the conclusion that there is no money chase. If in fact we do raise 83 percent of campaign funds during the last 2 years, as suggested by critics of reform, then this means that the money chase is even worse than has been described. Based on 1988 figures alone, it means that Senators are out raising an average then of $29,000 per week during the 2 years prior to election or more than $4,000 per day 7 days a week. And in the other 4 years Senators must raise an average of only $3,000 a week for those years.

Think about it, Mr. President. At any given moment one-third of the Members of this body are running around raising $29,000 per week and the remaining Members are trying to raise an average of $3,000 a week. And the figures will get higher and higher and higher in the future unless reform is imposed and imposed soon. To me, this is a money chase. It can only be curtailed by aggregate limits. Mr. President, the amendment that has been sent to the desk this morning curtails the money chase.

The fourth item I would like to bring up, Mr. President, is that critics of reform suggest that the proposed amendment does not address the influence of wealthy individuals on Federal elections. Let us look at the facts a minute. To the contrary, Mr. President, one of the most far-reaching reforms in this proposal is the extent to which it cuts back on the ability of wealthy contributors to funnel soft money into Federal campaigns—the one that was referred to as "sewer money" a few moments ago.

Let me illustrate the point by contrasting this amendment with the proposal suggested by some on the other side of the aisle. Under current law, Mr. President, individuals are subject to an aggregate contribution limit of $25,000 per year. Of course, the millions of dollars in soft money fall outside this restriction. The proposed amendment converts virtually all types of soft money spending which influences Federal campaigns into hard money which is subject to the aggregate contribution limit. To offset this dramatic change, the aggregate contribution limit for individuals is raised to $30,000 per year. Some think $25,000 is too much, but in order to try to make this work and get the reform, we accepted that proposal.

Now let us look at the proposal coming from the other side of the aisle. It converts some soft money to hard money but would exempt any contribution—think about this now—exempt any contribution to national, State, or local party committees from the aggregate contribution limit. You are limited to $30,000 totally under our bill, but their amendment converts some soft money to hard money but would exempt—I want you to underscore "exempt"—any contribution to national, State, or local party committees from the aggregate contribution limit. So the sky is the limit.

Let us ask ourselves, what does this mean? What does this mean? Not even counting local parties, it means that a wealthy contributor or wealthy contributors can legally give $340,000 per year. Think about that. Let me repeat that.

Wealthy contributors could individually contribute $340,000 per year to influence Federal campaigns.

This includes $25,000 to individuals, $20,000 to each of the three national committees, $5,000 to each of 51 State party committees. Let us just think about that for a minute.

Our bill, a $30,000 limit, includes what is now soft money, versus $340,000 under their bill. Who has limited the expenditure of the wealthy?

Multiply that, Mr. President, by the number of members in an intermediate family. Mr. President, you could buy four or five ambassadorships with that.

Mr. President, with reform like that, who needs soft money? With reform like that, who needs soft money? Who needs PAC's? I think it is pretty clear which proposal will curb the influence of wealthy individuals on Federal elections.

Last, Mr. President, critics of this reform have suggested that this amendment does not go far enough with political action committee contributions. Again, let us look at the facts.

They say that special interest money will not be eliminated until PAC's are banned entirely. I have said this many times. I think everybody knows it. I am not a lawyer, but I have been told that there are some serious constitutional problems with an outright ban.

It has been recognized that corporations have some free speech rights under the Constitution. In a recent Supreme Court decision upholding the right of States to ban independent expenditures by corporations, it was extremely significant that corporations already had another constitutional outlet through PAC's. Any proposal to ban PAC's outright must take into consideration the need for some constitutional outlet. If it does not, it may lead us back to the days of direct Treasury corporate spending with virtually no limits and no disclosure.

Mr. President, this is no solution. The amendment before us today seeks to strike a balance between those competing priorities. It removes the ability of PAC's to contribute directly to campaigns. It keeps them at arm's length from candidates. And it removes much of the unwanted special-interest influence. PAC's will still have an opportunity to contribute to State parties under the proposed amendment, but with contribution limits that are less than the limits applied to individuals.

Mr. President, we know there are no perfect solutions because we are not perfect. But I believe there are fair solutions. The amendment before us today is a fair solution. I am sure there will be a debate ahead over the details of this proposal. I am hopeful that there remains much room for compromise.

But any true reform and any final solution must have some basic characteristics. It must put an end to the money chase. It must reduce the influence of special interests. It must restore, above all, public confidence in the election of U.S. Senators.

I urge my colleagues to take a close look at this proposal and to approach the debate on this issue with these principles in mind.

Mr. President, I was surprised to receive a letter dated April 30 and received in my office on the 9th of May.

We, the undersigned organizations, believe that the current congressional campaign financing system is in need of fundamental reform. As campaign costs have exploded, Members of Congress have become increasingly dependent on special interest political action committees (PACs) to fill their campaign warchests.

And on and on.

We are encouraged by the verbal commitments by the House and Senate leadership to bring forward a campaign finance reform proposal this year. We are concerned, however, that in the rush to pass legislation early in the session, Congress will fail to enact reforms that get to the heart of the campaign finance mess.

Therefore, we urge the 101st Congress to pass reform legislation which includes a voluntary cap on congressional campaign spending, provides public financing for those candidates agreeing to stay within those limits, dramatically reduces the role that PACs play in the electoral process, and bans the use of soft money in campaigns.

That is signed, Mr. President, by the president of the American Jewish Committee of Kentucky, the executive director of Common Cause of Kentucky, the cochairman of the Kentucky Central Council for Peace and Justice, the executive director of the Kentucky Association of School Administrators, the director of Kentuckians Against Assault Weapons, the chairman of the Kentucky Combined Committee on Aging, the Kentucky Conference of the NAACP, the State president of the Kentucky National Farmers Organization, the executive director of Kentucky Youth Advocates, the field coordinator for Public Citizens Congress Watch, the cochairs of the Kentucky Coalition for the Homeless, the director of the Kentucky Community Farm Alliance, the executive director of the Kentucky Council of Churches, the president of the Kentucky Public Health Association, and the vice president of public affairs of the National Council of Jewish Women of Kentucky, and Rabbi Joe Rooks Rapport, The Temple, Louisville, KY.

So there is some work going on out there. There is some interest out there in this.

I wonder, Mr. President. When we give them the voluntary opportunity to say, "I will give a couple of dollars to change the way we require our Members of Congress and the Senate to campaign," I have a feeling there will be some response.

In closing, Mr. President, I respected and revered this body before I came here. I have now added love of this institution. The respect, however, in my opinion, by the American people of this body is declining. We have good Senators. We have smart, intelligent Members of the U.S. Senate. But we lose a portion of the time and ability of good Senators, the smart Senators, the working Senators, that have a love and desire to do what is in the best interest of this country. We lose them because they are out there after that money. They are on the money chase.

Not only are we leaving this institution to chase money, but let us look at some of the other things. We have lost our time; we have lost our ability to make corrections. Not only are we leaving the Senate to raise money, but the President of the United States of America is asked to divert his attention from the necessary and important issues facing him, this country, and the world to attend functions to raise money for a political candidate for political campaigns. The highest elected reaches are being called upon to go all over this country to raise money for a political campaign.

Every major appointee of this administration is on the road chasing money. If you do not believe it, I can give you page after page of newspaper clips where Secretary this and Secretary that are out in the country raising dollars for the political campaign. Not only are we asking the President, but all of his appointees, to take time away from the jobs they have been appointed to, and we expect them to get money for the next political campaign.

It would behoove the citizens of this country to spend a couple of dollars to keep them in the office so they would not be out across this country chasing money for the next political campaign. They take the time away from their jobs that we pay them for, and the people think about this when they hit a community. They do not go to a community where there are no projects involved, no interests involved. They go to communities and see people who want projects in that Secretary's jurisdiction, and funding. They feel they must be there to see that Secretary with check in hand. "Mr. Secretary, here is my $1,000. Do not forget us when you get back to Washington. Do not forget us, because I gave you my check. A lot of us gave you our checks." They know and feel they must be there not to bow and kiss the ring, but stand erect and give a check. They make their impression upon that appointed individual.

So, Mr. President, we will have additional debates, but I come down no as an academic or a member of academia, or the most intelligent fellow in the city. I am probably low on the totem pole as far as that is concerned. I hear all of these academic making all these studies, telling us how great additional funding helps the political system.

I like to see what really happens. We have seven States that have public financing. It seems to work for them. In Arizona, Senator Goldwater, Congressman UDALL, and one other, I believe his name was Mahoney, testified before the Rules Committee, and they formed the Arizonans For Campaign Ethics in the spring of 1989. They showed that, as a result of the changes in their campaign finance law, PAC's declined 65 percent, and overall campaign expenditures by incumbents fell by over 20 percent. The markedly thinner margin between incumbent and challengers in 1988 in campaign expenditures clearly contributed to 25 seats out of a total of 90 in the State legislature to go to challengers; in the previous same period, only four.

So there is an actual experience on a State level, and actual results on a State level, basically doing the same thing that we are asking in our legislation. We can sit down and take all the figures and facts, Mr. President, but this is something that actually happened, and you can go put your hand on it. That is just like the figures I gave earlier which said the expenditures on campaigns had gone down 4.8 percent, when in theory and in fact, they had gone up over 18 percent per candidate. Here is fact. This is another fact I want to inject into this debate.

Mr. President, I am not sure who wants the floor, but I yield the floor at this time.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DECONCINI). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD] on his very illuminating, cogent, and persuasive statement in support of campaign financing reform. I also thank him, as one of his colleagues, for the many, many hours, days, and weeks of work he has put into this effort, not only this year, but also in previous years; and I thank him for the support that he has so consistently given to remedying one of the most sinister threats to our constitutional system of representative government.

Once again, the Senate is here to debate and, hopefully this time, to pass legislation to reform our Federal campaign laws. I am no stranger to this issue. In 1987, as majority leader, I tried to break a filibuster on the motion to proceed to a proposal much like the proposal that is offered by Democrats today on campaign financing reform. That reform bill was S. 2, cosponsored by 51 Senators.

Hundreds of editorials appeared in newspapers all across the country in support of campaign financing reform. Yet, on that occasion, the Republican side of the aisle would not let the Senate work its will on the legislation. The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, DAVID BOREN, and other Senators and I offered again and again to negotiate.

We made repeated statements on the Senate floor asking Senators to negotiate seriously with us because the need for reform was so critical and was so fundamentally important to our democratic system. Nothing happened. Robert Bruce, who became King of Scotland, tried seven times and won. ROBERT BYRD tried eight times and lost.

So eight cloture votes later, I was forced by the crush of other important business to abandon my attempts to force Senate consideration of reform.

That was nearly 3 years ago. Another election has come and gone since then another election that has demonstrated once again to the American people that their cynicism about American politics and American politicians is well founded. We have come through another election that has demonstrated that spending is wildly out of control, another election that sprouted a bumper crop of inane, negative television ads.

I hope that this Nation does not have to endure such an election again and again before we marshal the courage to do something to correct this situation. I hope that the Members of this body can put partisan concerns to one side and get on with the too-long-delayed business of reforming the most important process that we have in this land, the process by which we select our national leaders, the representatives of the people.

To put it simply, there is far too much money in politics today. The spending is obscene. In 1988, the average cost of a Senate race was $3.7 million, up from $3 million in 1986. That is a 23-percent increase in only 2 years. On average, that means that Senators had to raise $11,800, almost $12,000 per week in 1988, and are projected to have to raise $14,000 per week for the 1990 cycle. Think of that, $14,000 per week; $14,000 per week.

Every Member of this body knows what that onerous fundraising burden means in terms of his or her time, time spent in not being a Senator. Right now, because of the outrageous cost of running for a seat in this body, we are not full-time Senators; we are only part-time Senators. Every Member here has a full-time job as a fundraiser. If we do not do something about this encroachment upon our time, given the ever rising cost of running for office, we are eventually going to be down to 1 day a week in doing the Senate's business. The time that we ought to spend reading, better understanding important issues, reflecting, studying, talking with our constituents, thinking about the Nation's problems, and how to deal with the Nation's problems—much of that precious time is spent on fundraising, running around town, going to lunches, going to fundraising dinners, going to fundraising receptions, talking on the telephone about fundraising. Without reform, that figure will continue to soar. The congressional campaign system has become toxic, toxic with money, and nothing poisons the public trust faster than the taint of big money. That poison is beginning to rot this representative democracy from within.

The fundamental component of any true reform proposal is, therefore, spending limits. Congressional campaigns have become like bloated rogue elephants rampaging across the American landscape, fattening on the cash that they gulp down, destroying trust in elected officials, and generally offending the intelligence and the sensitivities of thinking Americans who would like to see the serious issues of this Nation discussed by candidates instead of slick 30 second distortions by overpriced consultants.

It is time that we put this overweight, fat, clumsy beast on a diet. His cash intake must be drastically reduced.

Let us remember that a diet is no good without a limit on calories. Likewise, campaign reform is not real without a limit on the cash.

I am strongly in support of eliminating political action committee money in campaigns. But that step is not enough without a limit on total spending as well.

To claim reform without spending limits is like telling that rampaging rogue elephant, "You can eat anything you want on this diet; you can have all you want to eat of anything at all, but you must cut out the broccoli." That diet will not work. The elephant will still stack on the pounds. Only reducing the overall calories will work.

Only spending limits will really get the money chase under control.

I believe that we must eliminate PAC contributions. They have become insidious. PAC contributions influence Members, and all Members here know that. I remember seeing a Barry Goldwater billboard years ago, "You know in your heart he is right." Well, every Senator in this body knows in his heart that PAC contributions influence Members in their votes.

A lot of people worry about their diets. I do not worry about mine, fortunately. My basic metabolism is such that I do not have to worry about it. But what about our political diets. People who worry about diets, about their health, in that respect, are told not to put on too much weight, keep off the weight, keep off that excess weight.

Well, we are on a political diet in which we are carrying too much weight. We are hobbled with a ball and chain, in many instances, when it comes to voting on legislation that comes before this body. We do not have that freedom of choice, not that full freedom of choice that should be ours and that the American people expect to be ours when it comes to casting our vote on legislative matters. We are hobbled by that ball and chain of debt that we owe to the special interests who fund our campaigns.

39-059 O-91-33 (Pt. 7)

Our consciences are hobbled with the political ball and chain. Every Member knows that.

I read recently that the President went to the hospital and had his eyes tested. There was some indication that he might have glaucoma. That is a very insidious eye disease. The victim is not aware of what is happening as the outer peripheries of his vision begin to narrow. He is not aware of it. He is gradually losing his eyesight and doesn't know it. He is not seeing what is on the outer perimeters. And gradually this insidious eye disease will make him blind if it is not arrested in time.

Well, it is the same with this situation we are discussing here. It is a situation in which those of us who are indebted to the special interests for money with which to grease our campaigns, become afflicted with political glaucoma.

When it comes to voting on matters that come before this body, more and more and more the American people and their interests are shut out of our field of vision. We cannot see them on the outside periphery. They are no longer within our vision because our vision is narrowed to the point that we can only see the direct line of interests of those who put the money in our campaigns as we make our trips around the country. Political glaucoma is blinding our vision.

It is a sinister threat to our constitutional system, a sinister threat that is undermining this institution. By this institution, I mean the legislative branch. No longer can men be men, because they are beholden to the special interests that grease our hands, the contributors. And in so many instances, those contributors are not our own constituents.

On any given day, Senators are out raising money. I have said this before. I will say it again. As the majority leader and as the minority leader, I saw constantly and I daily felt the impediments to the Senate's doing its work because of Senators who came to me and urged, and begged, and pleaded that we not have a vote on Monday until 6 o'clock, or perhaps not at all; not have any votes, they said, on Fridays. Please do not have any votes on Friday, this coming Friday. Do not have any after 11 o'clock on Fridays.

Why? Because they had to go to money raisers. In some instances, a half-dozen Senators were scheduled to go to money raising functions in California, or in Florida, or New York, or whatever State one may think of. They had to go.

It was irritating to me as a leader, and I am sure I voiced that irritation. But I also knew how important it was for those Senators to fulfill those engagements. I knew that their reelections depended upon it. In many instances, they were doing it, not for themselves but for their colleagues.

It all impinges upon this institution's ability to do its work. A majority leader cannot schedule the program. He cannot exercise his own best judgment as to when the Senate ought to do its work because he, too, is carrying a ball and chain of necessity. He has to bow to the necessity of his colleagues who must go, who must go, on those money raising trips. It is the money chase; the money chase.

It is not that we do not have work here to do. It was not that we did not have work to do every day when I was the leader. We had work that needed to be done.

But how can the Senate get its work done when a given Senator who chairs a committee, who chairs a subcommittee, or who is to manage a bill, or who is the ranking member on a bill, or who has important amendments that he wishes to call up, cannot be here. That is a ball and chain on the leadership. I have seen it both ways as majority leader and minority leader. It is ruining this institution.

Daniel Webster said "This is a Senate of equals, of men of individual honor and personal character, and of absolute independence."

I say, "Don't you believe it. Don't you believe it, Mr. Webster."

He said "we know no masters; we acknowledge no dictators."

I say, "Don't you believe it, Mr. Webster."

And Webster himself was not all that independent. He wrote to Mr. Biddle and reminded Mr. Biddle that his, Mr. Webster's, retainer had not been taken care of by Mr. Biddle. In so doing, Webster tainted forever his own image.

This is no longer a Senate in which men exercise absolute independence. We cannot truly say that we know no masters. We cannot truly say that we acknowledge no dictators. Everyone of us in his conscience knows that we cannot do that. The people in the galleries know it. People everywhere else know it. Milton wrote of the freedom of the will in his Paradise Lost. Freedom of the will.

Senators and Members of the House of Representatives do not have complete freedom of the will, because we have enslaved ourselves, we have enslaved our freedom, we have enslaved our consciences by having to run around the country and raise money. I do not like it. It is the most demeaning thing about this office, having to ask for money for our reelection campaigns.

I have had people say to me, "Well, Senator with all of your record over there in West Virginia, you have been serving the people over there all these many years."

"Yes."

"You have been a Senator here 32 years."

"Yes."

"Oh, you're doing a great job for West Virginia."

"Yes, yes."

"You have done all this for your State."

"Yes, yes."

"And you were in politics before you came here."

"Yes."

"Before you went to the House of Representatives."

"Yes."

"Served in both houses in the State legislature."

"Yes."

"Why, your name is a household word over there. Why do you have to raise money?"

Well, perhaps I do not. But I had better not take the chance if I want to continue to remain in public service. Perhaps I could take the chance and win again. But it is too late, when the polls close on election day, if you come in last.

We all believe in taking out insurance. I have insurance on two houses; I have insurance on my car. This is insurance on continuity in public service. We do not want to run the risk on being faced with negative ads on television that we cannot answer. Television costs and the costs of consultants are enormous and growing.

A lot of people in this chamber are shedding tears about challengers. There is not a Senator in here who wants a challenger; not one. I do not want any challenger. But let us go just a bit below the surface. I came here because I was a challenger. I challenged an incumbent. I challenged an incumbent in 1958 when my colleague and I, Senator Randolph, were running on the same ticket, the same year.

There were two Senate seats open in West Virginia that year. One had become vacant by virtue of the death of a Senator, and the other seat was going to be up for grabs by virtue of the end of the term of a Senator. So there were two West Virginia seats. And Jennings Randolph and I won the nominations and we won in the fall elections, and we won with a combined war chest of only $50,000 or less. We could not begin to think of doing that today.

And I say, yes, perhaps one could. I remember on one occasion I did not put one dollar into my campaign, other than my filing fee. On one occasion when I ran for reelection as United States Senator, all I paid was my filing fee in the primary. But one had better prepare, remembering the Boy Scout motto: "Be Prepared." So we prepare ourselves for a costly election just in the event that we are challenged.

This is said to be a Senate of equals. It will become a Senate of equals if we do not do something about this money chase and about putting limits on campaign spending. Senators will be equals in that they will all be multimillionaires. They will be the only people who can afford to run. I do not say that to cast reflection on multimillionaires. I wish I were one. But I came up as a poor boy.

I started to work in a gasoline station. They were not service stations in those days. They were gasoline stations. That was my first job. I was glad to get it, glad to get a job. People do not want to start at the bottom anymore. I started at the bottom by necessity—necessity, the mother of invention. Necessity was the mother of my having to start out in a gas station pumping gas.

Then later I was the produce boy. Some people do not like to be called boys. I was called boy—produce boy in a mining community store. My pay started out at $50 a month and then became $60. When I married I was making, I believe, $65 or $70 a month. Then I became a meat cutter. Then I became the head meat cutter. I was getting up in the world: The head meat cutter at the company store. Man, I could display a meat case: round steak, rump roasts, rib roasts, chuck roasts, ham salad, chicken salad—made it all myself. It came to be that I had helpers as time went on.

I would garnish that display—a little parsley here. Then it came about that we had artificial greenery to put in. The displays never looked quite as good as when decorated by the parsley or the radishes that were carved to look like roses.

Then I became a welder in a shipyard, working on piecework, a welder helping to build victory ships and liberty ships. Then my wife and I acquired a little grocery store of our own and we were going broke when I ran for the House of Representatives and won my race.

May I say to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, there will not be anyplace in the future in this body for gas station attendants. Produce boys need not look to the horizon and dream dreams of coming to the United States Senate.

Meat cutters will continue to wear the scars on their thumbs where the meat cleaver almost got the thumb. Butchers need not stretch their vision to the House of Representatives or the United States Senate. No more welders in this body. We worry about challenges. They will not dare challenge the wealthy incumbents.

Campaign financing has become a cesspool, a cesspool. Not just a quicksand, although it is that, too, because it sucks us in deeper and deeper and deeper; a cesspool.

Many a vote has been cast in this Chamber that was at least in some measure based on the need to please some political action committee, not because of the Member's constituent interest, not because of the national interest, but cast because of the influence of a PAC contribution.

Some say money talks. It certainly does get one's attention. No one is so crass as to say: I will give you X amount of money if you will vote a certain way. I never had it happen to me and I do not think it happens probably at this level, but it happens in some elections, as we read from time to time.

But money talks, it gets our attention. I accept PAC contributions. I do it because of the extraordinarily high cost of running for public office. I come from a State with economic problems. I do not feel right about asking my hard-pressed constituents to come up with several million dollars to finance a Senate campaign.

There are those who say, what is all the fuss about? PAC's are just citizens banding together to contribute to a favored candidate. On the surface it may look that way, but PAC contributions exert inordinate influence on congressional candidates. Most PAC's do not assess a candidate based upon a variety of his voting positions, such as the candidate's stand on defense, Social Security, the environment, education, and so on. Most PAC's look at the candidate from only two angles. Does that candidate support the PAC's specific legislative goals on a narrow range of issues? And, is that candidate likely to win?

PAC's most likely back the incumbent, regardless of his party, but often they will give to both candidates in a race just to cover their bets. The game is to contribute to the winner—influence him so he will see things the PAC's way. The need to raise so much money just to be able to be a credible candidate is part of the reason why PAC's are so potent. Under the current system of uncontrolled spending, PAC's are perfectly set up to buy the influence they want. And when PAC's with similar interests band together, then that influence can be mighty, indeed.

For example, more than one-third of all PAC's active in the 1987-88 election cycle were aligned around eight special interests; banking, labor, real estate and construction, agriculture, food, insurance, oil and gas, and savings and loan. Moreover, there are certain other very large and wealthy PAC's that can afford to influence nearly every Member of Congress with contributions, and they wield influence far out of proportion to their numbers in the total electorate. No wonder the individual voter worries that he has no say in the political process. No wonder the voters stay away from the polls. They are up against some real muscle—real muscle.

I am sure that PAC's themselves are getting weary of the present system as well. Because of the cost of elections, they must be literally besieged by demands for help from us, from the candidates. Eliminating candidate dependence on PAC's for money may well be a relief to many PAC organizations currently stretching scarce resources. As a matter of fact, I was told by a prominent lobbyist recently that the money demands has become unmanageable, and that he thought the system was out of control. And it is.

Eliminating PAC contributions would go a long way toward putting the role of special interests in its proper perspective. There is a legitimate role for special interests, and in many instances, their objectives, their interests, are the interests of the majority of the people. The special interests have a right to be heard and have their views considered, but they ought not dominate the process, as they do now. How do they do it? Through their campaign contributions.

As we close one window of influence for the special interests, let us not forget that there is yet another way in which special interests influence Members in the way Members cast votes. And this second avenue can also be insidious because it is a way for the special interests to put money directly into a Member's pocket. I believe that this avenue of influence must also be closed.

If we are to pass legislation that claims to be real reform, that claims to be chasing special interest money out of politics, that claims to refocus our attention on the interest of the many and frees us from too much influence by the few, that legislation also ought to contain provisions that ban the practice of taking honoraria. The House of Representatives has already taken that important step. This Senate did not show the backbone and the courage and the vision that were shown by the other body not very long ago when the Senate had the opportunity, as good an opportunity as it will ever have, to ban honoraria. But the House has taken that step.

We in the Senate cannot close the window on the special interests in campaigns while we leave the back door open once we are elected. To do so would be a hypocritical act.

I accept honoraria. I accept PAC contributions. I do it with respect to honoraria for the same reason that most other Members do: It is expensive to hold public office and especially so in Washington. My wife and I try to help our grandchildren get a college education. There are Members of this body who are considerably younger than I am who have yet to be concerned about their children's ability to get a college education. And so Members accept honoraria. The cost of living in Washington is not what it was back when I was a produce boy making $60 a month.

Many Members would find it extremely difficult without the back door subsidy of honoraria. It is legal. There is nothing illegal about it. There is a limitation on the amount, but it still creates the perception that we are beholden to the interests that pay us the honoraria. The time has also come to halt that practice. If we are going to reform the system, we need to begin with that particularly obvious avenue of influence, or else our efforts will ultimately be viewed cynically by the public, and growing cynicism is a problem that we are trying to address with this reform.

I am not saying it ought to be done on this particular bill. I do not know. Perhaps it should. If it is not done on this bill, it can be done on another bill. It can be done on any bill, as a matter of fact; virtually any bill. There might be points of order on appropriations bills, but there are plenty of vehicles to carry that. It is going to be difficult enough to get this bill through, as the amendment that we are supporting is presently written. But at some point, we also have to do something about honoraria, as well as facing up to the fact that Senators and House Members ought to have the courage to raise their own salaries and eliminate the honoraria, eliminate the back door income, eliminate the subsidy that comes in by the back door. Put it all out front like the House has done.

The time has come to do these things. Voter registration is declining. Voter participation is declining. The Markle Commission on the Media and the Electorate has recently issued a report which contained alarming conclusions about the indifference of the American voter to national elections. On May 8, a primary was held in my own State of West Virginia. Voter registration was down 7.6 percent from the number of voters who registered for the 1986 primary. In one county, the number of voters registered dropped by 16.7 percent.

Of course, West Virginia is losing population, but that is not the reason for all of the drop in voter registration, I am sure. Apathy and distrust of the American political process and of American politicians are at the root of these alarming developments. Scandals have exacerbated the voters' disgust.

Solid reform should parallel in many ways the Presidential campaign system. Senators in this body who have run for that office have certainly found the system used in Presidential campaigns to be meritorious. Presidents have found it to be meritorious. If that system is good enough for the Office of the President, it should be good enough to serve as a model for other Federal elections.

Any reform proposal must address the abuses caused by loopholes in the current law in the areas of soft money and the practice of bundling.

It should also contain provisions that give to the FEC more power to punish abuses and to serve as the watchdog that it was intended to be.

Mr. President, as I close, I note the presence of the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] and I shall not keep the floor but another couple of minutes.

On a statue in Atlanta, GA, there is an inscription. The statue is to Benjamin Hill, statesman and orator. The inscription reads as follows:

> Who saves his country saves all things, saves himself, and all things saved do bless him. Who lets his country die, lets all things die, dies himself ignobly, and all things dying curse him.

Mr. President, we must not let our country die. This representative democracy has been a dream of other people around the world that they have sought to emulate. It is something in which the American people have taken pride.

That system is a representative democracy—representative of whom, the people or the monied interests? In the legislative branch, this is supposed to be a Senate of men "who know no matters, who acknowledge no dictators." How far have we wandered from the thrust of that memorable statement by Webster?

Let us do something about this disgusting and destructive practice that threatens to engulf us all. It threatens to undermine this institution to which Gladstone, who was Prime Minister of Britain four times, the most outstanding politician during the reign of Queen Victoria, referred as "that remarkable body, the most remarkable of all the inventions of modern politics."

A remarkable body it has been. Let us take the opportunity now to restore it and to restore the American people's faith in the election process. At a time when other countries on the globe are following our example and struggling to adopt a form of government that is similar to our own, let us take steps to protect representative democracy from deteriorating from within. We can begin to restore public confidence by cleaning up our own act—now!

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I commend the President pro tempore, the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia, for his candor and for his leadership. As majority leader, he said we had to work on this, and he fought for reform. Unfortunately, we did not have the courage and the vision to act when he called on us to move, and I hope we have the courage this time.

I also commend our colleague, Senator WENDELL FORD, of Kentucky, for his remarks earlier. It was a sound analysis of our situation. If political science classes and others want to get a good analysis of why we have to have change and what this bill will do, get a tape of Senator WENDELL FORD's statement. Our colleague from Kentucky has his head screwed on right, and he said it as it is.

We face, as a nation, Mr. President, two massive fundamental problems. One is the deficit, that we tinker and toy with a little, but we have not had the courage to really confront. I hope maybe—I have to confess I am not optimistic—the summit meetings that are taking place will deal with that. The other is how we finance campaigns, and it just permeates this Government in terms of the decisionmaking process.

First of all, we are spending too much money. I happen to be up for reelection this time. My budget is $8 million, and do you know that on a per vote basis it is probably the lowest budget of any incumbent Senator running for reelection this time. It is just getting out of hand, and the public knows that.

There is a second factor, and that is the public cynicism, public cynicism that is sometimes unfair to us and sometimes fair, where they believe public office is bought and sold; sometimes unfairly, if I may use the example of the Presiding Officer right now, Senator DECONCINI. There is not a Member of this body on either side who does not have complete respect for the integrity of Senator DECONCINI, and any reporter who thinks this is just political talk, go and ask any Senator off the record, and that is the situation.

An employer in the State of Arizona employing 2,000 people roughly—I do not remember the exact figures—came to him and said, "I need help with my agency." And he said, "I will help you." what is wrong with that? Not a thing. What happens, however, is campaign contributions are there, and the public makes a judgment. They put 2 and 2 together and say, "This is why it was done."

So that public cynicism has, in this case, caused an unfairness, but in some cases that public cynicism is right, my friends.

I remember when our colleague, Senator Proxmire—and I see his successor, Senator KOHL, on the floor, who is a fine addition to this body—did not take any campaign contributions. He spent, I think, $150 on his last campaign.

I went to him, and I said, "Bill, do you think I could do that in Illinois?"

And he said, "Paul, if you tried that stateside in Illinois, you would be defeated." He said, "You cannot do it."

Unfortunately, he is right. But I remember 2 or 3 years ago when we could not get the votes to pass a minimum wage bill on this floor, I got up immediately after that vote and I said, if anyone wants to know what is wrong with our system of financing campaigns, this legislation is it. There are 5.3 million Americans trying to get by on $3.35 an hour, 506,000 heads of households trying to get by on $3.35 an hour, and we could not muster the votes to help them. But, I said, if the 100 wealthiest people in this Nation gave a $1,000 campaign contribution to every Member of the Senate and wanted some favor that was not too egregious, that would slip through the Senate like greased lightning.

So in that respect public cynicism is absolutely correct. Tonight, I am going to Philadelphia. I would love to tell this body I am going to Philadelphia because of the great respect I have for that city, and I do have, the birthplace of the Constitution in which this Nation is founded and where we had the Declaration of Independence. But I am up for reelection. I ought to be spending time in Illinois. I will be back in Illinois tomorrow morning. But I am going to Philadelphia for one reason, and one reason only. I have to raise some money. And I have a friend up there by the name of Ted Schwartz, who has agreed to help, and my wife has a relative up there, Tom McDermack, whose arm is twisted. So I am going to Philadelphia tonight to raise some money. I either ought to be in Illinois listening to people in Illinois or be working on some things, mail that I cannot read all, and the issues that are piling up. We have to do something.

We are either going to do something that is phony or something that is real. I thought WENDELL FORD, in his analysis, in pointing out that the bill that he is pushing, and I am pleased to cosponsor, limits the contribution that any person can make totally in campaigns in the year to $30,000. I, frankly, would go for a lesser figure. But that limits it. That is the limit. The bill that is being proposed on the other side by some of my colleagues on the other side, I hope not too many, puts a limit of $340,000. My friends, that is almost no limit at all. That is just plain.

This system is corrupting. There is no question about it. And it affects every one of us. I do not care who you are. I have never promised a thing to anyone for a campaign contribution. But let us say that when I get to that hotel tonight in Philadelphia—I am not going to list the name for fear I will get more phone calls—but let us say I get there tonight, there are 20 phone calls; 19 of them from names I do not recognize, but the 20th is someone who gave me a $1,000 campaign contribution.

When I get to the hotel tonight, I am not going to make 20 phone calls. I might make one. Which one do you think I am going to make? Well, we know which one I am going to make. It means that the financially articulate had inordinate access to policymakers, and we forget about people in the inner city who need a chance for a decent education. We forget about senior citizens who are struggling. We forget about that man in Peoria, IL, who wants a lung transplant but cannot get it under our system.

People who need help are not getting that help. Something is wrong. After serving 2 years in the Senate, I had some friends talk to me, including a couple of members of my staff. They said, "Why don't you switch one of your committees over to the Finance Committee?" The argument that was used was a very practical argument—I do not mean this disrespectfully to any member of the Finance Committee—not that I could serve the people of Illinois or the Nation better on the Finance Committee, but, "You would not have any trouble financing your next campaign if you are on the Finance Committee." That is the reality of where we are now. We are not helping people who should be helped.

Monday I fulfilled a commitment I made a long time ago—because primarily I am spending my time in Illinois when we are not in session—to visit the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota to hold a hearing there. Pine Ridge Indian Reservation has 73 percent unemployment. In the Depression it was 25 percent in this country. Twenty-six of the homes have no indoor toilets, 8 percent of the homes had no electricity, 65 percent of the homes have no telephones. Those are Third World statistics.

We ought to be doing something about it. But instead of responding to needs like that, we are responding to the whims and the wishes of the rich and the powerful because of this system of financing campaigns. The Chicago Sun Times had an editorial yesterday suggesting that it is inconsistent for me to say I want to outlaw PAC's and at the same time take money from PAC's. Well, maybe there is some partial validity to what they have to say. But the reality is I cannot play touch football while the other team is playing tackle. I have to play by the rules of the game. If I were to not play by the rules, I would not have a chance of winning.

But we are talking about something that is very, very important. I mentioned earlier going to Philadelphia where our Constitution was written. We like to say that our Government is built and based on that Constitution, and in many respects it is. But there is one thing that is even more important than the Constitution. That is public confidence, because the Soviet Union, even in the days of Stalin, had a Constitution that gave them all the basic liberties that we have but they were just null and void. It was just a piece of paper.

Public confidence is ultimately what our Government is based on. This present system is eroding public confidence. We have to do better for our country. I hope we have the good sense to do it.

Thank you, Mr. President,

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. I ask unanimous consent to speak as if in morning business for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALLER ID

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, yesterday's Washington Post had a front-page story that was of some interest to me—and I am sure to my colleagues as well. It described how the new Caller ID service had led to the arrest of a man suspected of making obscene phone calls. As my colleagues may know, Caller ID displays and records the number from which a call is made.

This arrest is obviously good news. The police and the phone companies are finally treating obscene calls as they should be handled—as real crimes that are terribly frightening to the victims. I applaud the Virginia authorities for going after this man, and I am glad the Post gave it such prominent coverage.

But I would like to amplify on the Post story. It referred to critics of Caller ID, making it seem like some people oppose the service—or oppose the way new technology can catch obscene phone callers. I am occasionally called a critic of Caller ID or, worse, an opponent of Caller ID. So, prompted by the Post story, I would like to take a minute to clarify what the debate is about.

Caller ID is a great new development. We so-called critics have no interest in stopping it. In fact, I have introduced a bill to make Caller ID legal under Federal law. At the same time, we believe that there are times when people have legitimate, bona fide, good reason for keeping their numbers confidential when they make a call. For this reason, any Telephone Privacy Act would give consumers the option of blocking the transmission of their numbers. It would protect personal privacy.

What does this have to do with obscene calls? Just that the blocking protection would not let individuals make harassing calls anonymously. The man arrested this week would still have been caught even if blocking had been available in Virginia.

Let me explain, C&P Telephone offers its customers another service in addition to Caller ID. This complementary service is known as Call Trace. With Call Trace, the victim of an obscene call can have the caller automatically traced even if the caller had blocked the display of his number. In other words, the victim does not need to know the caller's phone number to have him hunted down by the police. Call Trace works even where there is blocking.

It even gets better. Let us say the victim in Virginia wanted to give her phone assailant a piece of her mind. I am not recommending this, but victims sometimes do not want to go to the police. Even if there had been blocking, and even if the caller had kept his number to himself, this woman could have called him back to yell at him. Another service known as Call Return works even if the caller withholds his number. You punch a few digits on the phone and your phone automatically calls back whoever just called you.

In short, Mr. President, the same technology that brought us Caller ID provides us with blocking to protect privacy when it is necessary. And the same technology then allows us to catch people who abuse this protection for illegal purposes. So the debate is not over whether there should be Caller ID. The debate is really over whether there should be unrestricted Caller ID.

The news accounts would seem to suggest that the police are all behind unrestricted Caller ID. This is not the case. In fact, this arrest occurred in Alexandria, and the Northern Virginia Police Chiefs Association has endorsed my bill. The former policy chief of Alexandria, Gary Leonard, was at my side when I called for blocking last January.

Law enforcement groups are concerned that unrestricted Caller ID could endanger the safety of their undercover officers. And even if this problem could be solved, there is another one: The police often rely on anonymous tips from the public. This problem came up just recently in Ohio. Ohio Bell asked State regulators for permission to offer unrestricted Caller ID. On May 1, the phone company's request was opposed by the Ohio Association of Chiefs of Police, the Ohio State Patrol, and the U.S. Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

I will read one sentence from the law enforcement community's petition in this matter. "The general public," the motion says, "should have blocking available so that informants calling law enforcement services with tips about crimes are not deterred from doing so out of fear of losing anonymity."

This is an important point, Mr. President. In the eyes of the police unrestricted Caller ID jeopardizes effective law enforcement.

I conclude by calling the attention of my colleagues to another recent development in this area. When I introduced my bill, I suggested that rich and poor alike should have equal access to privacy. But now, Mr. President, just the opposite is happening. Last week, a few enterprising individuals opened up a business that allows people to protect the identity of their phone numbers by calling through a 900 number. It works like this: You place a call through this operation and have a fake number show up on the other end instead of your own. This privilege will run you $2 a minute.

Two dollars a minute is an extraordinary cost for privacy. The new 900 service shows there is indeed a privacy problem, but it offers a solution only to those who can afford to pay the steep fee. Here we have another reason why my legislation is needed. Wealthy Americans would get privacy protection that others cannot. So free blocking is now a matter of equity as well as privacy. Free blocking would level the playing field and make sure that everyone can have security and peace of mind.

Thank you, Mr. President.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, is the parliamentary situation that we are still on the Campaign Reform Act?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, we are on the bill.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, as I look at 1990, and what has happened legislatively, I must note that if one were to stand back and look at the United States of America from afar, one might come to the conclusion Americans and the Congress do all that we can to stifle a growing economy. The action that takes place in the Congress of the United States is counterproductive.

We have enjoyed since 1982 a very strong economic growth in this country. We have as an industrial nation enjoyed the cleanest environment of any other industrial nation in the world, yet as far as our accomplishments are concerned this year with respect to legislation, we have adopted some very restrictive measures to amend the 1977 Clean Air Act, the 1977 act itself has been working very well toward bringing this Nation to cleaner air.

If you read the papers you see that there is talk of a budget summit meeting to raise taxes in this country, which will further damage our economy, and it makes one wonder what the goal of the Congress is?

I know my colleagues are very serious and sincere in the efforts that they have put forward toward campaign reform, which I would say I only hope that we will not end up reducing citizen participation in the political process. I hope we will not end up reducing our citizens' ability to decide who is going to be elected to the Congress of the United States in both the House and Senate races, and that we will not just leave the people out. Restrictions on campaign finance give more and more power to the major organs of the news media in this country so that they can have more of the power to select who is going to serve in office. The people, although they will have elections, will have less interest in the process.

It is interesting to me that in those highly controversial races that are often talked about here on the floor, if you go back and look at the voter turnout it is oftentimes the States with the highest voter turnout had the most controversial races, where the most brickbats were thrown back and forth by both sides. I thought that always was part of the process.

We were trying to encourage more citizen participation in the election process, and oftentimes when public surveys are made to ask people why they do not vote they often say they cannot tell the difference between the candidates that are running. They look at what happens in Washington with our growing national debt every year, more Government encroachment into the private sector, more interference into the lives of the people who are trying to run businesses and produce goods and services for the American people, and here again we now are dedicating our time on the Senate floor to the subject that I know is very important to many Senators, campaign reform.

Yet at the same time I think what is crying out for us to do is to solve the Federal budget process, give the President a line-item veto, give the American people an opportunity to pass a constitutional amendment to balance the budget, meet the targets of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings with the President's pledge of no new taxes. That seems to me like it would be a much more important issue and much more important for us to focus on.

I thank the Senator from Nevada for his courtesy and the Presiding Officer, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID].

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I believe this is a time for celebration. Celebration I believe is something that should be on everyone's lips by virtue of the fact the Republicans have offered a campaign reform bill and the Democrats have offered a campaign reform bill. Both parties are talking about changing the process by which Senators are elected. I think that calls for a celebration.

The bills certainly are not the same, but I think they do pave the way, as my friend from Idaho just mentioned, for a great compromise, not the compromise he talked about, that is taking place between the President and the leaders of the Congress dealing with how the Government deficits should be taken care of, but I think really a celebration is in store for us. We now have something that we have been talking about here for years.

Finally, maybe both parties can get together and do something for the good of the body politics, because certainly everyone agrees now that the present system is not good.

If each of us would just stop and think how many times we have missed events that our children are involved in. Why? Because we have to go to a fundraiser. How many times have we missed working on important legislation that we should be studying? How many town hall meetings could we have held if we were not on the money chase? The average Senate race, as has been stated here on the Senate floor a number of times already today, is $4 million.

I think it is time that we all recognize that this money chase is not good for our country. We have to make it so that the minute you are elected to the Senate you do not start raising money for the next election. But when the average campaign costs $4 million, it is easy to calculate that is going to take a tremendous amount of time to raise that money. Remember, the laws are such that you cannot go to 5 or 10 individuals. You have to go to thousands and thousands of people to raise that money. Most of the time it requires individual contact. That takes away from the time we should be spending on the business of this country or spending some time with our families.

I have come to the Senate floor since I was elected and spoken 20 times on campaign reform. I have spoken that much because I think that we need to reform the laws by which we are elected. I cannot believe that the experiences I went through in 1986, unless something changes, are going to again take place in 1992. I did not believe when I made my first campaign reform speech it would be necessary that I come back 3 years later and say, why have we not done something?

I would have thought the 1988 cycle—there was enough bad happening in the 1986 cycle—that in the 1988 cycle there would have been a new set of laws to govern. But now we are approaching the 1990 cycle and the 1990 cycle is going to be just like the 1986 cycle. And we are going to be over that in just a few months. The 1992 cycle is upon us and unless we do something, we are going to be faced with the same problems in 1992. I think that is too bad. That is the reason I have spoken time after time after time about the need to reform the campaign spending laws.

I again say that I feel good. I feel like celebrating because at least we have two bills now and the two leaders, Senator MITCHELL and Senator DOLE, spoke last Friday about the need for compromise between these two pieces of legislation.

I am an original cosponsor of S. 137 and I continue to support the substitute offered by Senator BOREN. There are many proposals that have been circulated, mostly in the talking stage. I think they have all added to the place where we now are, that is, where the two leaders in the Senate, the Democratic leader and the Republican leader, are talking about merging the two bills, coming up with something that will make 1992 a fair election year; that is, a discussion of the merits; that people who are in that election cycle will go into it with an even playing field; that things like how much you know about legislation, your experience in Government, your business experience, these kinds of things will be more important than how much money you have been able to raise.

I have spoken many, many times about the toothless tiger that governs campaign spending in this country, the Federal Election Commission. They are a toothless tiger. But all you have to do is talk to the Commissioners. They acknowledge that. It is not their fault. It is our fault, because we have given them no manpower, no budget, and no statutory authority to do very much. So they are a toothless tiger because that is how we have set them up.

I am happy to say that the Democratic version of the legislation calls for a stonger Federal Election Commission. I am happy to say that the Republican legislation that is before this body calls for a stronger Federal Election Commission. They are both major steps foward in making the Federal Election Commission more than a toothless tiger. The Federal Election Commission would be something more than just the name, Federal Election Commission. The Federal Election Commission would actually be something that would regulate how campaigns are conducted.

Mr. President, in my election in 1986, there are seven complaints filed on my behalf and sadly only one of those has been resolved. The rest someday will be resolved, maybe. But after all this time, there are six of those complaints that have still never been resolved by the Federal Election Commission.

The people that filed the complaints deserve an answer. The people the complaints were filed against deserve to have some decision made regarding the charges made against them. But, no, the Federal Election Commission does not have the time, the manpower, or the money to do it. They have not even started to audit the Dukakis-Bush election. They have not even started that minimal procedure that you would think would take place in a Presidential election in this country.

I again say it is not the fault of the Federal Election Commission. It is our fault and the fault of the administration for not making the Federal Election Commission effective.

I have spoken, during the 20-odd times that I have spoken right at this place I am now standing, regarding campaign reform and about independent expenditures. Why have I spoken about independent expenditures? Because in Nevada, like a number of other States, I have had experience with independent expenditures, where an outside third party comes in and tries to buy an election in a small State like Nevada, 1.3 million people approximately in the State.

One group came in and spent a half million dollars in that State in the last few weeks of the election. We must have some control on independent expenditures. And the legislation that has been offered on this side does answer the problems with independent expenditures. We need to tighten the legislation and provide victims with some recourse. This legislation does that.

I have spoken many times on the same spot that I am now standing that we need to do something about bundling. Why? Because it is unfair, it creates an uneven playing field, and because I have had the experience of bundling being done against me. It is a practice that should be stopped. And this legislation would stop it.

It would limit the earmarking and bundling of all contributions made payable to a conduit. And that is the way it should be.

I have spoken many times from the very spot that I now stand about the high cost of campaigns. In the small State of Nevada when I ran in 1986, I spent the unbelievable sum of $2 million. My opponent spent one-half million dollars more or thereabouts. Everyone thought that was outlandish. And it was. And that it was excessive. And it was. But it was competitive.

Two years later, the two Senate candidates spent between them not $4 million or $4½ million but $6 million.

So I have talked about the high costs of campaign because it happens in Nevada, it happens in other places. But if you are spending in a small State of Nevada $6 million for two people running for the U.S. Senate, if those same costs were carried forward in States like Illinois or New York or Texas, the cost would be unbelievable. We have to stop the excessive amounts that are being spent on campaigns.

S. 137, the substitute, provides for spending limits. That is important. We have to have campaign ceilings. That way everyone goes into the ball game with the same size bat. That makes it fair.

Mr. President, I think it is also important to recognize that this legislation addresses public access to candidates. It addresses the television market, making available time for political candidates, not excessive time, not time in 10-second spots but enough time that people can develop a message, and the people that we represent can listen to what we have to say, not listen to a 30-second spot that does nothing more than attract attention.

It also addresses mail discounts so that incumbents and challengers can communicate by mail. And I am not talking about franked mail available only to incumbents. In this bill, that too will become restricted. It is interesting that mail has become so important in the ability to communicate with electronic media the way it is. But people still like to sit down and study something they receive in the mail. That is important.

The spirit of our debate, I hope, Mr. President, would be one on both sides of wanting to do what is fair, fair to Democrats and fair to Republicans, fair to incumbents and fair to challengers and most of all to the people that we are representing. If we are seeking a level playing field, then in fact that is what we should try to create. Let us make it so the sources are fair and equal to both sides.

I hope others feel as I do, that this is a time for celebration, a time by saying maybe we are going to be able to get our collective thoughts together and pass a bill for campaign reform. Then we can spend more time legislating, we can spend more time at town hall meetings, meeting with constituents, and meeting with people who work in this vast bureaucracy back here to try to answer questions. Then each of us can try to be a better legislator rather than being a better person at raising money.

I say this is a time we should feel joyous, literally, because we are now talking about changing our way of life. We are talking about changing our way of life so we will become full-time legislators, not part-time legislators and part-time moneyraisers.

I urge my colleagues to put away their political posturing. We do not need a repeat of S. 2, which holds the record for the most times this body has tried to invoke cloture against a filibuster. We do not need that. What we need is reasonable men and women sitting down at a table and trying to resolve an important issue: The excessive cost of campaign spending.

We need to do something about independent expenditures, about the high cost of campaigns, about bundling, about a number of other things that will be discussed here. If the public has a dim view of Congress now, Mr. President, just let us not pass campaign reform and see what that does to change our image. It will not improve it.

Mr. President, as I have indicated on several occasions here this afternoon, I spoke 20-odd times on campaign reform. Two years from now I do not want to come before this body and be talking for the 40th time about the need for campaign reform. I want to come here in a matter of a month or 6 weeks and say when I came to the floor in early May and said this was an occasion for celebration, that I really was talking about a good idea that became a reality. Because I hope a month or 6 weeks from now we will be celebrating because we passed campaign reform; and it will be a joyous time, not only for this body but for the American public.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990, which Senator BOREN has sent to the desk to be printed, and which he, the majority leader, and Senators BYRD, FORD, and KERRY will introduce—with 39 other cosponsors—as a substitute to S. 137. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation, which I believe best fulfill the promise of true campaign finance reform. I commend the majority leader, Senator BOREN, Senator FORD, Senator BYRD, and Senator KERRY for the leadership they have shown in bringing forward this important bill.

Placing limits on skyrocketing campaign spending is the key component in any true campaign finance reform. The arms race of campaign spending drives the extensive fundraising activities now undertaken by all candidates. In my view, limiting spending by itself would go a long way toward limiting the influence of PAC's and other special interest contributors. A spending limit will also provide some assurance that the special interest money we now seek to ban will not be rechanneled into candidate campaign treasuries by roundabout means. The Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990 is the only proposal that contains this essential ingredient of true reform.

The Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990 removes much special interest money by eliminating PAC contributions to Senate candidates. The Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990 also provides candidates with clean campaign resources—through partial funding of campaigns based on voluntary contributions. By putting together spending limits, banning PAC contributions and providing clean resources, the Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990 is a knockout combination against special interest money in Senate politics.

Mr. President, the Republican campaign finance proposal does not even approach real, fundamental reform. Runaway spending is the real problem with today's congressional campaigns, and the Republican proposal does not address this problem. The Republican proposal simply encourages chicanery. Without spending limits, there will be a strong incentive for special interests to circumvent contribution limits in any way possible. Indeed, the Republican proposal abets this process by raising the amount of political contributions that a wealthy individual can give to $340,000 per year, which is $1.36 million for a wealthy couple during a 2-year congressional election cycle. It is a good bet that this will allow well-funded special interests to continue to dominate our politics. Under the Republican proposal, the campaign arms races would most likely continue.

The Republican reform package, furthermore, leaves the system tied to big contributors and their special interest by failing to provide any clean resources for congressional campaigns. Clean resources is a key element of real campaign reform.

Mr. President, many of the changes that would be made by the bill I am cosponsoring are not in my political interest. As an incumbent, I could probably raise much money over the next 4 years, especially from PAC's. I would probably be able to go into the 1994 election with the ability to spend far more than the $1.9 million I would be alloted under the Senate Election Ethics Act of 1990.

But Mr. President, I believe it is more important to protect our system of government than to preserve the incumbent's advantages in fundraising. When the framers drafted our Constitution, they opened it with the words "We the people." Not "We the Contributors," but "We the people." As we consider reforming campaign financing, we have the opportunity to make the system respond fully to "the people" once again. But, as Common Cause and other good government advocates have recognized, real reform must include spending limits and clean campaign resources in addition to banning PAC's. Only by enacting real reform will we return to a government that is truly "of the people, by the people and for the people."

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for honoring business, with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUPPORTING DEMOCRACY IN THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, the assassination of an American soldier in the Philippines by Communist-led insurgents last weekend and demonstrations against negotiations over United States military facilities, which begin May 14, are indications of the lengths some will go to spoil our relations with this emerging democracy in Asia.

While coup attempts make headlines, the real story is that the Aquino government has prevailed against attempts of disgruntled rebels on the left and the right to destroy democracy.

It is no secret that there continue to be rumors of a coup in Manila. In fact coup rumors have almost become a cottage industry there, a vicarious search for excitement. But after six failed coup attempts, it is clear that Filipinos want to preserve what they gained in 1986's people power revolution.

Clearly, preserving a new democracy can be more difficult than creating one. President Aquino has done a remarkable job by all measures in restoring and safeguarding democracy in one of our closest allies. Since coming to power, she has worked to improve the Philippines human rights record. A new constitution, guaranteeing civil liberties, is in place. Free elections have been held at all levels. Her economic policies have helped turn the recession of the Marcos years into solid annual growth rates. The Philippines economic performance has been one of the best among the heavily indebted developing countries. Although the challenge of alleviating poverty remains great, the number of Filipinos living in poverty has declined since 1986. Continued economic growth is essential for the maintenance of democracy and stability.

Americans are delighted with democratic changes sweeping the world—in East Europe, Namibia, Central America, but we should not forget or abandon the country where the first peaceful "people power" revolution occurred: the Philippines. The multilateral assistance initiative [MAI] gives concrete expression to our support for Philippine democracy. We can be proud of our pivotal role in launching the MAI in 1989, together with Japan, the World Bank, and many other international donors. The MAI is a vital catalyst to sustained private sector led growth.

At the same time in the Philippines, as well as in other emerging democracies, there is no doubt that problems emerge in the difficult transition from dictatorship to democracy. Disgruntled members of the ancien regime, others who expect too much too fast from freedom, are some who may become frustrated with the pace of change.

President Aquino has faced these challenges from Communist-led insurgents and rightists in the military who have attempted to subvert democracy. While I have no information that there might be another coup attempt, I think it important to make it very clear to those in Manila who foment such rumors or who have aided previous attempts that the impact of a successful coup would severely cost the Philippines and would seriously damage our bilateral relationship. It would not be business as usual as some in the Philippines seem to think. The United States would not stand mute as it did in 1972 when President Marcos declared martial law.

I would like to introduce into the RECORD following my remarks a study prepared at my request by the Congressional Research Service that analyzes the economic recourses the United States would have in the event of a Philippine coup.

Under current law, $500 million in foreign assistance would be immediately suspended. An additional $740 million in trade preferences and quotas could also be cut off. I have no doubt that such sanctions would receive strong bipartisan support.

We are about to enter into a difficult period in our bilateral relations as talks begin on the future of our military facilities in the Philippines. I am confident that a satisfactory agreement serving the interests of both countries will emerge from the negotiations. We have a longstanding, close security relationship that serves the interests of both countries well and contributes signficantly to regional stability in an area of increasing importance to the United States. But that relationship, that alliance is based on the perception of common interests by two democracies.

We must persist in our support for Philippine democracy, not only to keep our faith with the Filipino people who stood behind us during times of war but also to keep the faith in ourselves.

There being no objection, the study was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Congressional Research Service]

U.S. BILATERAL FOREIGN ASSISTANCE, OTHER FINANCIAL AID PROGRAMS, AND CONTRIBUTIONS TO MULTILATERAL DEVELOPMENT BANKS [1]

INTRODUCTION

The United States has a number of programs that benefit to varying degrees the Philippine economy and assist the Philippine military. The total value of direct benefits can only be estimated, especially in the category of trade. U.S. foreign aid and spending in the Philippines by U.S. bases and U.S. military personnel stationed the Philippines currently amount to over $1 billion annually. Trade benefits under the General System of Preferences (GSP) total over $500 million annually in Philippine exports to the United States. The United States also has allotted the Philippines more liberal textile and apparel quotas than it grants to other East Asian textile producing countries. The financial benefit of this is more difficult to calculate, but it probably amounts to about $200 million annually. Philippine exports of sugar to the United States in 1989 were up to $40 million higher as a result of the transfer to the Philippines of the South African sugar quota. In short, direct financial benefits in 1990 approach $2 billion, and they probably would go over $2 billion by 1992.

With regard to legislation authorizing these programs, only foreign assistance legislation (currently Section 513 of the Foreign Operations Appropriations Act of FY 1990) requires a suspension of the programs funded under that Act if the Philippine Government were overthrown by a coup d'etat. Congress would have to pass new legislation, or in some cases the Executive could act administratively, to terminate or reduce in scope the other programs.

U.S. programs also contribute indirectly to financial benefits to the Philippines that appear to total at least in the hundreds of millions of dollars annually. Within the Philippines, this includes wages paid to tens of thousands of Filipinos by private sector firms that benefit from U.S. programs, taxes to the Philippine Government by these firms, and savings in defense expenditures as a result of the U.S. defense commitment.

U.S. assistance programs also have influenced other governments and international financial agencies to extend considerable assistance to the Philippines. In July 1989, the World Bank and donor governments pledged over $3 billion for the new Multilateral Assistance Program for the Philippines. The recent experiences of Burma and China suggest that a sizeable portion of this kind of aid would be affected by a U.S. cutoff of assistance programs in response to a coup d'etat.

The United States provides the Philippines with substantial amounts of financial assistance through a number of economic and military aid programs, through export and investment insurance programs, and through contributions to the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank. In 1987, for example, disbursements of bilateral American economic assistance to the Philippines represented 32% of total bilateral economic aid provided by the major western donors. Should an elected government of the Philippines be deposed by a military coup, most bilateral economic and military aid for FY 1990 would be terminated under the terms of Section 513 of the Foreign Operations Appropriations Act for FY 1990.[2] Moreover, a larger amount of financial support extended through other programs, including P.L. 480 food assistance, the Export-Import Bank and contributions to multilateral development banks (MDBs), as well as bilateral aid currently in the Philippines "pipeline," could also be suspended or terminated through additional legislative action or administrative steps undertaken by the President.

[1] Prepared by Larry Niksch, Foreign Affairs and National Defense Division.

U.S. PROGRAMS AFFECTED BY SECTION 513

Out of the foreign aid appropriations for FY 1990, the Philippines is expected to receive a total of $498.7 million from development aid, Economic Support Funds (ESF), Multilateral Assistance Initiative (MAI), the Peace Corps, housing guaranties, and military aid. In the event of a successful military coup, none of these funds would be available to the Philippines.[3] In addition, if AID chose to apply the Section 513 authority in a broad manner (see footnote 1), that portion of the approximately $427 million aid pipelines that came from appropriations since FY 1986 might also be terminated. The proposed foreign aid budget for FY 1991 requests $643.3 million for the Philippines, an amount that would also be blocked in the event of a coup. The table below sets out the specific amounts of U.S. aid to the Philippines in recent years.

U.S. BILATERAL ASSISTANCE TO THE PHILIPPINES [1]

[In millions of dollars]

	Fiscal year.—
	1989	1990 (est.)	1991 (request)
Development aid	46.7	46.8	55.0
Economic support fund	298.0	124.0	160.0
Mult asst initiative	0	159.3	200.0
Peace Corps	5.9	5.9	5.7
Housing guaranties	0	20.0	20.0
Foreign military financing	125.0	140.1	200.0
Int military education and training	2.6	2.6	2.6
Total	478.2	498.7	643.3

[1] Excludes food aid.

It is also likely that the Trade and Development Program (TDP) would terminate its activities in the Philippines under the Section 513 provision. The Philippines has been the third leading country funded with TDP appropriations since the program began in FY1981. Cumulatively, the TDP has funded 25 projects totaling $5.9 million and in FY1989, supported projects at a cost of $.943 million. It might be expected that the TDP would continue as a major presence in the Philippines in FY1990 and beyond, plans that would be jeopardized in the event of a military coup.

A final program that might also be affected by the Section 513 prohibition is the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC). Because OPIC does not receive any appropriated funds under the Foreign Operations Appropriations Act—instead the act specifies ceiling levels for direct loans—it is unclear whether Section 513 would apply. In FY1989, OPIC provided political risks insurance for $14.3 million worth of American investments in the Philippines, and similar levels of support might be expected in the future.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS NOT COVERED BY SECTION 513

A wide range of other U.S. programs as well as multilateral efforts to which the United States contributes, while not subject to the Section 513 requirements, could be suspended or terminated through legislative action or administrative steps taken by the President.

Food Aid (P.L. 480)

The Philippines is scheduled to receive a total of $30.9 million in U.S. food assistance in FY1990 ($18.4 million as low-interest loans and $12.5 million in grants) and $32.1 million for next year ($20 million loans; $12.1 million grants). Congress could prohibit food aid for the Philippines in several ways—the most likely would be through amendments to the Department of Agriculture Appropriations for FY1991 or to the Farm Bill, legislation that Congress is expected to take up this year that will contain a reauthorization of the P.L. 480 program. The grant portion of food assistance is generally regarded as humanitarian aid, and is frequently exempted from aid prohibitions related to political issues.

Economic and Military "Pipeline" Aid

As of the beginning of FY1990, the Philippines had a U.S. economic aid pipeline (fund obligated by unexpended) of about $427 million and maintained $51.2 million in uncommitted prior year miliary aid credits and grants. Congress could enact legislation to suspend the aid pipeline, or in a more permanent manner, could direct the President to de-obligate the funds. A decision to de-obligate Philippine aid funds, however, would involve additional costs to the U.S. Government since some of the money is already committed to private contractors who would require some compensation for contract termination.

American Schools/Hospitals Abroad (ASHA) Program

The ASHA program administered by AID, supports private, nonprofit institutions overseas known for their American character. Because ASHA deals with institutions rather than foreign governments, generally restrictions like Section 513 do not apply to the program's activities. Over the past five yeas, ASHA has funded eight Philippine schools with a total of $5.5 million. ASHA supported two institutions in FY1989 with $480,000. Through legislation, Congress could suspend future ASHA support for schools and hospitals in the Philippines.

Export-Import Bank

The Ex-Im Bank has maintained only limited activity in recent years regarding the Philippines. In FY1989, the Bank issued $960,000 in medium-term insurance involving one project. The Bank supported no loans or insurance in the previous three years. Nevertheless, Congress or the President could suspend Export-Import Bank activity in the Philippines, foreclosing future possibilities for U.S. backing of American exports to that country.

Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs)

The United States is a member of two MDBs—the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank—that provide the Philippines with substantial amounts of technical and financial assistance. Nearly 32 percent of gross disbursements of official financial aid (concessional and non-concessional) in 1987 for the Philippines came from the MDBs. The tables below show the amounts of lending by the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank in recent years for the Philippines as well as projects in the pipeline for future consideration.

WORLD BANK LENDING TO THE PHILIPPINES

[In millions of dollars]

	1986	1987	1988	1989	[1] 1990	Future pipeline
IBRD	151.0	342.0	505.0	495.6	630.0	1,278.6
IFC	1.4	12.5	[2] 67.6	[2] 92.5

[1] Loans approved as of March 1, 1990.
[2] Loans and equity.

ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK LENDING TO THE PHILIPPINES

[In millions of dollars]

	1986	1987	1988	1989	Future pipeline
Ordinary capital	266.8	43.5	204.0	421.4
Development fund	50.0	0	178.0	137.0
Total	316.8	43.5	382.0	558.4	635.6

Because the MDBs will not accept contributions from donors that attach conditions—such as prohibiting the use of funds for a particular country—the United States cannot directly block MDB lending to the Philippines. Other options, however, are available to the Congress and the executive branch that could affect MDB aid to Manila. Congress could legislatively direct the President to instruct American executive directors to the MDBs to vote against any proposed loans for the Philippines. That step alone, however, would not block Bank approval. Loans would be rejected only if members holding over 50 percent of Bank subscriptions voted no. The United States maintains about 19 percent and 15 percent shares in the World Bank and ADB, respectively, so that any U.S. effort to block approval of a loan for the Philippines would require the cooperation of other members. Another option would be for Congress to withhold a portion of contributions to the Banks—perhaps an amount approximately equal to proposed Philippine loans—and make it available only if the Banks refrained from lending to the Philippines. This option, which Congress used to withhold World Bank funds until January 1, 1990 pending Bank consideration of China loans,[4] would not necessarily block lending

[2] While a reading of Section 513 would appear to affect only funds appropriated during the year in which a military coup occurred, the Agency for International Development (AID) has applied the restriction more broadly in the case of the Sudan, a country that underwent a military coup in June 1989. The Agency has terminated the disbursement of all aid to Sudan stemming from appropriations since FY 1986 (the first year Congress approved Section 513) even though the coup took place in FY 1989. Consequently, in the event of a military coup in the Philippines, AID might decide, if the agency follows the Sudan precedent, to terminate FY 1990 appropriations as well as undisbursed "pipeline" funds appropriated since FY 1986.

[3] The Philippines is also scheduled to receive $30.9 million in food assistance in FY 1990. Because Congress funds the food aid program in the Department of Agriculture appropriation act, the restriction of Section 513 would not apply.

[4] Title I of the Foreign Operations and Export Financing Appropriations, 1990 (P.L. 101-167).

to the Philippines. Nevertheless, it would reduce Bank resources available for all loan activity.

FOREIGN TRADE [5]

As is the case with most U.S. trading partners, the Philippines and the United States accord to each other nondiscriminatory (most-favored-nation; MFN) treatment in their trade. Such treatment consists of a country extending to another country unconditionally and unlimitedly all concessions, privileges or benefits that have been extended, mostly through trade negotiations, to any other trading partner, provided the same treatment is received in return. The principal and broadest benefit that a country receives because of its MFN status is that the imports of its products by the MFN status-granting country are dutied at concessionary duty rates, that is, at rates substantially lower than those applicable to imports from non-MFN countries.

Nondiscriminatory treatment is a fundamental aspect of international trade, which the United States extends to its trading partners on the basis of its own legislation and, in most cases, also on the basis of international (bilateral or multilateral) agreements. Under its own law, first enacted in 1934 and at present contained in section 126(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 USC 2136(a)), the United States accords unconditional and unlimited MFN treatment on a reciprocal basis to virtually all trading partners. The current country applicability of the MFN treatment is spelled out in General Note 3 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (HTS) (not codified) (where the MFN treatment is denied to only 16 Communist countries listed in subnote 3(b)).

In the international context, Article I of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) requires all signatories of the Agreement, among them the United States and the Philippines, and countries to which it applies de facto or provisionally to accord nondiscriminatory treatment to trade with all other GATT participants.

The withdrawal of the MFN status—and thereby of the applicability of trade concessions granted to third countries—from the Philippines appears to be possible only under statutory authorization (19 USC 2136(a)). Such withdrawal would, however, constitute a violation of the U.S. obligations under Article I of the GATT and open the United States to the possibility of GATT-sanctioned retaliation on the part of the Philippines.

In addition to the benefits of concessions granted to third countries and applicable to the Philippines by virtue of their MFN status, the United States and the Philippines have in force a bilateral trade agreement containing reciprocal tariff concessions. The agreement (33 UST 4468; TIAS 10317) was concluded during the Tokyo Round of the Multilateral Trade Negotiations within the framework of the GATT, to which the Philippines acceded during that round, and entered into force on October 30, 1979. The concessions granted by both sides were incorporated in their respective consolidated GATT schedules and apply to all countries to which either country accords MFN status.

Since these concessions have been granted to the Philippines directly in a bilateral agreement rather than indirectly through the application of the MFN status, they would not be affected by the termination of the Philippines' MFN status by the United States and would have to be specifically withdrawn either by legislation or by Presidential action as authorized by section 125(b) of the Trade Act (19 USC 2135(b)).

The international legality of such a withdrawal would be affected by the provisions of Article IV of the U.S.-Philippines trade agreement that "[no] measure shall be adopted or modified by either Government adversely affecting the concessions granted in the Schedules which is inconsistent with the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade," and of its Artilce V, that "[a]ny problem affecting the implementation of the concessions in the Schedules shall be resolved through consultation and negotiations." Apart from having the apparent obligation to engage in consultations before the withdrawal is effected, the United States also would appear to violate, with this action, Article II of the GATT, under which each GATT member must accord to other GATT members treatment no less favorable than that provided in its GATT schedule of concessions.

Since the concessions granted bilaterally to the Philippines apply, through the GATT obligation of nondiscriminatory treatment of all participants, also to other GATT members, those GATT members that would be adversely affected by such withdrawal would possibly file with the GATT complaints of impairment of their benefits under the Agreement, with the eventual possibility of retaliatory action against the United States.

As a developing country, the Philippines also have been designated a "beneficiary developing country" of the U.S. generalized system of preferences (GSP), which permits a large array of products that are otherwise dutiable (for the Philippines, at MFN rates) to be imported from such designated countries into the United States entirely free of duty under specified conditions. The designation has been in effect since the inception of the program.

The legislation authorizing the GSP was enacted as Title V of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 USC 2461-2465) for a period of 10 years and implemented as of January 1, 1976, by Executive Order 11888 (40 F.R. 55276). Since then the GSP legislation has been amended several times, and extended through July 4, 1993 (19 USC 2465(a)) by section 505(a) of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 (P.L. 98-573). Statutory provisions of the GSP also appear in General Note 3(c)(ii) of the HTS. Regulations pertinent to the eligibility of articles and countries for the GSP are contained in Part 2007, Title 15, Code of Federal Regulations.

As a member of the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN), the Philippines benefit from a special eligibility provision of the GSP. While the GSP law requires that at least 35 percent of a product's value originate in the exporting developing country (including also up to 15 percent of U.S.-origin value) in order to qualify for the GSP preference, products of a country that is a member of a regional economic integration association (such as any of the other members of the association.

The President is authorized by section 504(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 USC 2464(a)) to withdraw the designation of a country as a GSP beneficiary, but is in this required to consider the purposes, circumstances, and conditions that the law sets forth for a country to be so designated. Withdrawal of the GSP beneficiary status can, of course, always be effected by appropriate legislation. Since the designation of a country as a GSP beneficiary is a unilateral action rather than an obligation on the part of the designating country, its withdrawal generally would not constitute a violation of an international obligation.

Trade benefits accorded by the United States to the Philippines as well as the historic political and economic ties between the two countries have resulted in the United States being the largest export market by far for the Philippines, accounting in 1988 for 35.7 percent of the Philippines' world exports. U.S. trade data for the same year show imports from the Philippines amounting to $2,662.7 million, of which $1,525.9 million (57.3 percent) were free of duty, $508.0 million (19.1 percent) under the GSP. With the termination of the GSP eligibility of Hong Kong, Singapore, South Korea, and Taiwan as of 1989, the Philippines are the fourth largest beneficiary of the U.S. GSP (behind Mexico, Brazil, and Thailand).

PHILIPPINES TEXTILE AGREEMENT [6]

The United States and the Philippines currently have a bilateral textile trade agreement covering the years from 1987 through 1991. It was negotiated under guidelines set out in the Multi-Fiber Arrangement (MFA), a multilateral agreement that allows quotas to be imposed on textile products exported from the developing ("low wage") countries to the developed countries. The future of the MFA system is not clear, as one of the goals of the current Uruguay Round of trade negotiations is to start phasing the MFA out. Most probably, though, the transition period will last ten years or so, meaning that MFA-like restrictions will continue in the near future.

As a trade-limiting program, it is debatable whether the MFA "benefits" the exporting countries. One could say, however, that the Philippines benefit relatively by having a bilateral agreement that is less restrictive than those the United States has with other countries. This is difficult to quantify, but the following considerations may give a rough idea of what is involved.

Nominally, the Philippines bilateral allows 6 percent per year growth of each "specific" quota, i.e. for each product category that is specifically limited. All product categories not specifically limited come under a "group" limit that is allowed to grow by 9 percent per year. These growth factors are roughly in line with bilaterals with the second-tier Asian suppliers such as Malaysia and Sri Lanka. On the other hand, they are more liberal than the 1 percent aggregate growth factor characteristics of the bilaterals with the five largest Asian suppliers.

In practice, growth is often faster than the nominally specified rates. This is possible because (a) flexibility provisions in the agreements allow borrowing of quota authority from one year to another; (b) unfilled quotas in earlier years mean that actual shipments can grow faster than the quotas are growing; and (c) a shift to higher quality products enables the dollar value of shipments to grow faster than the physical volume (which is the basis for quotas). Thus, textile and apparel exports from the Philippines to the United States actually doubled between 1986 and 1989. Comparing this performance with that of a peer group of Asian countries [7] of similar size (in terms of apparel exports), we find that Philippine textile and apparel exports were growing at an annual compound rate about nine percentage points faster.

[5] Prepared by Vladimir Pregelj, Economics Division.

[6] Prepared by Edward Rappaport, Economics Division.

Assuming that the growth of all of these countries decelerates a bit in the next couple of years (to 20 percent per year for the Philippines and 11 percent for the peer group), the Philippines' exports in 1991 (the last year of the current bilateral) would be about $1,300 million. By comparison, if Philippine exports grew at a rate reflective of the peer group, they would reach $890 million in 1991, a difference of $410 million. This difference may be attributed in part to a more liberal bilateral. Other factors, such as the vagaries of the marketplace, also play a role, but it would be difficult to definitively isolate the role of each factor.

Recent press reports have quoted the Philippines' trade secretary to the effect that their exports would be allowed to grow very substantially—by more than 150 percent—in 1990.[8] This would be an unprecedented increase for a major supplying country. To our knowledge, there has been no confirmation by the United States Government of such a plan.

U.S. SUGAR IMPORT QUOTAS AND THE PHILIPPINES [9]

In administering the sugar price support program, the United States grants a trade benefit to the Philippines in the form of a share of the U.S. sugar import quota. The Philippines' share of the base import quota currently is 15.8 percent. This is equal to 13.5 percent, the Philippines' share of U.S. sugar imports in the 1975–81 period, when access to the U.S. sugar market was competitive, plus the 2.3 percent share previously held by South Africa but reallocated to the Philippines as a result of 1986 anti-apartheid legislation (P.L. 99-440). That legislation bars the U.S. Trade Representative from reducing the Philippines' share. Thus, a reduction or termination would require new legislation.

The President imposed the sugar quota in 1982, exercising authority under the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (as found in Additional U.S. Notes 2 and 3 to Chapter 17 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedules of the United States), and delegated responsibility for its administration to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) and the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative. USDA annually announces a sugar import quota for all countries which reflects its determination of the amount of sugar that can be imported into the United States without undermining the no-cost objective established for the U.S. sugar price support program. The 1989/90 (January 1, 1989–September 30, 1990) global base import quota is currently set at 2,390,000 metric tons (MT). Of this, the Philippines' share is 382,729 MT. Philippine sugar imports are duty-free under GSP.

Because of the decline in U.S. sugar imports since 1981 as domestic sugar production has increased and domestic sugar consumption has declined, the amount of sugar that the Philippines has exported to the United States under its quota share declined from 1984 to 1987. With the increase in the U.S. sugar import quota in 1988 and 1989 to cover domestic sugar production shortfalls, the size of the quota allocated to the Philippines has increased in the last two years. Export earnings associated with Philippines' sugar exports to the United States under the quota system have also followed this same pattern since the early 1980s. According to USDA data, the value of U.S. imports of Philippines' sugar declined from $131 million in 1984 to $56 million in 1987 before increasing slightly to $57 million in 1988. For 1989, exports are estimated at around $97 million. These are still far below the annual average of $172 million earned by the Philippines from its sugar exports to the United States in the 1975–81 period.

ASSISTANCE FROM U.S. BASES AND U.S. DEFENSE COMMITMENTS [10]

U.S.-operated military bases pump hundreds of millions of dollars annually into the Philippine economy in addition to U.S. foreign aid that is linked to base rights. This money is generated through wages paid to about 68,000 Filipino workers at the bases, contracts for construction and other services issued to Filipino firms, payments for off-base housing and utilities for U.S. personnel, procurement of local materials and supplies, and spending by U.S. personnel and dependents. Authorization for this spending is provided by Department of Defense legislation. According to statistics supplied by the Department of State for FY1988, these kinds of expenditures totaled $531.5 million, up from $507 million in FY1987. State Department officials have told CRS that FY1989 expenditures probably showed another small increase. (See Appendix I for a detailed breakdown of the expenditures.)

A 1988 study by the National Defense College of the Philippines found that direct expenditures by the Bases, expenditures by U.S. military personnel stationed in the Philippines, and certain cost savings such as off-base employment of Filipinos contributed an annual average of 5.16 percent of Gross National Product during the 1980–1986 period.

Under the October 1988 U.S.-Philippines bases agreement, the United States promised to expand the procurement of goods and services in the Philippines and to waive Balance of Payments Program requirements in order to permit purchase of Philippine products by U.S. forces in the Philippines. The United States also stated that it would waive Balance of Payments Program requirements in order to permit purchase of Philippine products for the use of U.S. forces in the foreign areas of responsibility of the U.S. Pacific Command, and that it would seek a waiver of the provisions of the Berry Agreement, which restricts the purchase of foreign goods by U.S. overseas commands. Congress, however, did not grant such a waiver in 1989.

Authorization for spending by U.S. bases comes from general provisions of Department of Defense authorization and appropriations legislation. Any legislation to restrict this could cover procurement, contracts, and spending by U.S. personnel, and community relations projects. With regard to the operations of the military bases, it would be more difficult to restrict wages to Filipino workers, payments for utilities, and rents for off-base housing. Rents and some utilities could be reduced if U.S. dependents were withdrawn.

In accordance with the U.S.-Philippine Mutual Defense Treaty, the United States has assumed primary responsibility for the defense of air and sea areas adjacent to the Philippines. Philippine defense expenditures ($875 million in 1988) are concentrated on ground forces related to the communist insurgency inside the country. As a result, the Navy and Air Force are small and limited in their weaponry. The Navy, for example, only has three frigates and twelve patrol craft. The Air Force has 18 F-5 aircraft and seven transport aircraft.[11]

Filipino military and political leaders have begun to pay more attention to air and sea defenses as a result of disputes with Malaysia in the South China Sea and the more aggressive military posture shown by China in the Spratley Islands, where the Philippines claim and occupy several islands.

The Philippine Government saves a considerable amount of money by not having to spend heavily on air and naval forces. The National Defense College study estimated a savings of $123 million annually, but one U.S. Government official has estimated savings at $2-3 billion in initial costs which the Philippine Government would bear to purchase modern fighters and naval vessels.[12]

As one comparison, Malaysia and Singapore spend considerably more on air and sea forces than does the Philippines. Malaysia's 1988 defense budget was $1.61 billion, and Singapore's was $1.32 billion. These figures suggest that Philippine defense expenditures would have to rise by at least $500 to $700 million annually if the Philippines had to provide its own air and sea defenses.[13]

APPENDIX I

Financial impact of U.S. military facilities in the Philippines (1988)

[In millions of U.S. dollars]

Type of Spending	Amount
Contracts with local construction companies	36.9
Salaries of Filipino workers	110.9
Local material procurement	131.8
Local services contracts	29.6
Base utilities and off-base rents/utilities of U.S. personnel	57.0
Spending by permanently assigned U.S. personnel and dependents	63.3
Spending by personnel on leave	41.9
Allotment checks to retired U.S. personnel and dependents in the area	46.4
Civic action projects/community relations projects	9.9
Payments to concessionaires	3.8
Total	531.5

APPENDIX II

Public Law 101-167, Section 513

Military Coups

SEC. 513. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available pursuant to this Act shall be obligated or expanded to finance directly any assistance to any country whose duly elected Head of Government is deposed by military coup or decree: Provided, That assistance may be resumed to such country if the President determines and re-

[7] India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

[8] Williamson, John. Philippines Expects Jump in US Textile Quota for '90. Journal of Commerce, January 10, 1990. p. 4A.

[9] Prepared by Remigius Jurenas, Environment and Natural Resources Policy Division.

[10] Prepared by Larry Niksch, Foreign Affairs and National Defense Division.

[11] International Institute for Strategic Studies. The Military Balance, 1989-1990. p. 172-173.

[12] Jackson, Karl. The Philippine Bases and U.S. National Interests. Unpublished paper presesnted at a conference on U.S.-Philippine relations, Racine, Wisconsin, 1988.

[13] It should be noted that the U.S. Government has not committed the United States to support the Philippines militarily in its disputes with Malaysia and China.

ports to the Committees on Appropriations that subsequent to the termination of assistance a democratically elected government has taken office.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,882d day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

DO NOT RAISE TAXES

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it would be a mistake to raise taxes at this time, even in the name of balancing the Federal budget.

That is important to remember, especially since the White House and congressional leaders agreed earlier this week to emergency budget talks.

Now then, what is the administration saying?

According to one set of White House sources, all sides have agreed to go into the talks with no preconditions. Many observers take that as a signal that President Bush is willing to consider raising new taxes in order to lower the deficit.

Other White House sources say there is no way that taxes will be included as part of a budget compromise to lower the deficit.

I think the White House is trying to trick the American public. What do they want us to think? That the Democrats in Congress are the ones forcing the administration to raise taxes. Their plan is for the administration to get the money while Congress gets the blame.

Well, this is one Senator who is not tricked.

There are many ways to save money without raising taxes.

We can make our allies pay a bigger share of their military defense. It is ludicrous to subsidize the military security of our trading partners when they do not believe in fair trade. We are literally paying for foreign armies so that foreign countries and businesses can steal our jobs.

We can save money by killing the proposed nuke dump. The DOE should stop wasting millions of dollars on a project that is unsafe, a project that the people of Nevada have already rejected, a project that can only waste millions more if it continues.

We can save money by eliminating foreign aid giveaways.

We can even adopt a pay-as-you-go budget, so that we stop spending money we do not have in the first place.

No matter how you look at it, the message from the American public is crystal clear by now: Do not raise taxes.

Mr. President, that is why I favor a balanced budget amendment and pay-as-you-go spending. And it is why it would be a mistake to raise taxes at this time, even in the name of balancing the budget.

THE 1989 COLLIER TROPHY AWARD TO LOCKHEED FOR THE F-117

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, on February 28, the National Aeronautical Association announced that it would award its prestigious Collier Trophy to Mr. Ben Rich and the entire Lockheed/Air Force team for the production and deployment of the F-117A Stealth fighter aircraft. This remarkable achievement will be honored tonight with the actual presentation of the award.

The F-117 is one of those dazzling examples of American technical genius. In the middle of the 1970's a small group of innovative designers at Lockheed along with visionary thinkers in the Pentagon who were not afraid to think outside of the borders of conventional wisdom, came up with a daring thought: Could we revolutionize air warfare by developing and manufacturing an aircraft that could evade enemy radars?

They became convinced they could. Lockheed and the Air Force worked together in an effective partnership to develop and build this remarkable airplane. This program was started in utmost secrecy. Until several years ago, even its existence was classified. Over a year ago, the Department of Defense decided that the existence of the program could be acknowledged.

I am pleased that Secretary Cheney made additional details about the program public, and I ask unanimous consent that a letter from Secretary Cheney on this point be entered into the RECORD. I have long advocated that special access programs have a plan for declassification that both protects the essential security elements of the program but also permits the effective integration of the system into operational planning.

But there is a downside to special access programs, and that is we have difficulty integrating such radical new capability into our war plans because we limit the number of people who even know about the airplane. I am convinced, for example, that the Tactical Air Command and some of the combatant commanders still do not yet know how to employ the F-117 to its full potential because it has been kept highly classified for too long from the nuts and bolts planning process required for tactical operations.

I have been involved in the progress of this program for over 10 years, and I am convinced it is one of the most important aircraft in the Air Force's inventory. I hope that the Tactical Air Command will insure that its maximum potential is achieved.

The F-117 is only the most recent success story that has emerged from the Lockheed Corp. and especially the famous skunk works. Lockheed's skunk works produced the U-2, which is still flying as a tactical reconnaissance aircraft, and the extremely successful SR-71, the world's fastest and highest flying aircraft. Ben Rich and his team richly deserve the Collier Trophy for excellence in aeronautical achievement.

But it required more than Lockheed's genius to produce the F-117A. It required the full support of the Air Force and the Secretary of Defense under successive administrations, and it required the active partnership of the Congress. While the F-117 was a highly classified program, it was carefully scrutinized by the appropriate committees in the Congress each year. Despite its classification, the program received rigorous oversight. The program was a success in virtually every way: It was produced on cost, on schedule, and met its performance goals. It did all of this in roughly half the time a normal program is in development.

I congratulate Ben Rich and the Lockheed team for their technical achievements in building the F-117; those in the Air Force who stuck with this key effort; the four Secretaries of Defense who offered steadfast support for this program over the years; and my colleagues in the Congress who endorsed and supported this program. We all share in the pride the Air Force and Lockheed can take in winning this well-deserved recognition.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, March 3, 1990.

Hon. SAM NUNN,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is to inform you we are continuing the incremental disclosure of the Air Force's F-117A aircraft to the public. The ongoing F-117A security transition, that began in November 1988, has changed the classification of selected elements of the F-117A program from special access required (SAR) status. Certain aspects of the program, such as low observable technology, signature data, and capabilities and limitations will remain SAR indefinitely.

Recent events in Panama and general media interest in the aircraft make it an appropriate time to tell more of the F-117A story and correct existing misinformation. In two weeks you can expect to see an Air Force F-117A Fact Sheet with previously classified information on the generic mission of the aircraft, dimensions and weight, average unit flyaway cost, and additional program history and description. This information, along with additional photos and video tape, will be made available to the public.

A significant part of our next incremental disclosure will be the initial showing of the F-117A at a Tactical Air Command facility.

Subsequent events will include select static displays and flyovers. While the external view of the F-117A is unclassified, the Air Force will continue to protect the design details of the aircraft; personnel without program access will not be allowed to closely examine the aircraft.

Best Wishes,

DICK CHENEY.

KEEP THE PLEDGE

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, some Members of Congress have expressed frustration with the President's budget. They have favored a grand compromise of spending cuts coupled with tax increases. As one Senator, I am opposed to this because the proposal is not a grand compromise. I believe it will become a grand illusion, and ultimately to the taxpayers it will become a grand larceny.

What will happen, if history is any guide, and the Joint Economic Committee has documented this, for every dollar of taxes that are increased there will be an increase of $1.58 in Federal spending.

I call to my colleagues' attention that when the budget resolution comes out of the Budget Committee and is printed I have filed minority views to make the point that it is only illusionary for us to believe that we can raise taxes in this Congress and balance the budget. What really happens is we raise taxes to expand nondefense spending and the budget baseline then is never reduced.

If taxes are increased it will be for one sole purpose and that is to expand nondefense spending. Oftentimes people tell me in my State that they are already being harassed too much by Government. It is so difficult for small businesses to produce and to comply with all the bureaucracy that we are piling on these people. In some cases, I have had people say to me, "Steve, thank heavens we do not get all the Government we are paying for now, or we would all be put out of business."

Mr. President, there has been a lot of publicity this past week about the upcoming budget summit between the White House and Congressional leaders. Some Members of Congress are in favor of a summit meeting, to produce a grand compromise of spending cuts coupled with tax increases. I am opposed to this concept.

The problem with the budget deficit is not insufficient revenues to fund the programs of the Congress; the problem is with the programs of the Congress themselves.

The problem is straightforward: Federal revenues grow at the same general rate as nominal gross national product. That is another way of saying, the growth in revenues is the same as the average growth of everything else in our economy. But Federal Government programs grow at a faster rate than other things in our economy. Therefore, the baseline of the Federal budget is always on a steeper path than revenues. Deficits are a natural phenomenon—unless the Congress exercises self-control and good judgment. Congress has to make choices to set priorities; it is not sufficient just to propose a tax increase.

If I can make an analogy to every homeowner's backyard: The gross national product is like the grass in your backyard. It will grow at a certain rate, and if you water it, it will grow faster. But the weeds in the backyard, among the grass, will grow faster than the grass if you simply water them along with the grass. You have to take a hoe to the weeds, to keep them from sticking up above the grass.

Raising taxes to balance the budget is just like watering the weeds instead of using the hoe. Since Federal programs grow faster than the economy as a whole, they are like those weeds. And the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequester is like the hoe. I advocate using the hoe.

I am very much disappointed in the trend this year to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets by: First, slashing the Defense function; and second, increasing taxes. What is happening in the domestic discretionary and entitlements functions? I believe we could do much more in these. I am opposed to any increase in taxes, and I believe a large proportion of the proposed user fees represent, in fact, new taxes.

I believe the sequester mechanism is a powerful and useful bottom line discipline for the Congress. I want to see it preserved—and used if necessary. In particular, I was very pleased with the outcome of last year's budget cycle. The so-called "part year sequester" is a device I propose be used again this year.

I think the Congress should exert every effort to use wise judgment in budgeting. We should allocate our priorities rationally and deliberately, as the Constitution intended. But if we cannot fully achieve the deficit reduction, through spending cuts alone, as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets require for fiscal year 1991, then we should employ a part-year sequester in October.

I have recently come across a very impressive study conducted by the Hudson Institute that confirms what many of us in the Senate have known for quite some time. First, that raising taxes will not reduce the deficit; and second, that the budget sequester process does work when it comes to reducing overall governmental spending.

This excellent study is entitled, "America's Fiscal Future; Controlling the Federal Deficit in the 1990's," by Dr. Jeffrey A. Eisenach, a budget expert formerly in the office of James C. Miller III, Director of the Office of Management and Budget. It was published in January.

As I said a moment ago, Federal revenues grow at the same general rate as nominal gross national product. That is another way of saying, the growth in revenues is the same as the average growth of everything else in our economy. But Federal Government programs grow at a faster rate than other things in our economy. Therefore, the baseline of the Federal budget is always on a steeper path than revenues. Deficits are a natural phenomenon—unless the Congress exercises self-control and good judgment. Congress has to make choices to set priorities; it is not sufficient just to propose a tax increase.

The gross national product is like the grass in my back yard. But the weeds in my back yard grow faster than the grass.

With the recent announcement of slower economic growth in our economy, now is certainly not the time for talk of a tax increase. If a significant tax increase made it by this Senate and the President, and I will never support a tax increase, such an extraction of capital from our presently weakened economy would surely cause a deep recession.

In turn, a recession would cause greater unemployment and actually leave fewer income for the Federal Government to tax than were available before the tax increase. This is exactly what happened to Herbert Hoover, who increased taxes in 1931 and 1932 to balance the budget.

The Hudson Institute study is very interesting in its analysis of the long-run trends in Federal revenues and spending. With the sequester process, using Congressional Budget Office estimates for the Federal Government's growth in spending in fiscal 1991 and the Office of Management and Budget's estimates for revenue growth in 1991, the Hudson Institute concluded that the budget can be balanced without a significant tax increase if Congress retains and uses the provisions of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

The only reason there are baseline projections of deficits as far as the eye can see, according to CBO, is because we the Congress do not assert our rightful authority to set those levels. We enact programs and then we stop exercising any judgment about how large we will allow those programs to become.

The President under the authority of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act will do it for us. This is merely the bargain Congress bought into in 1974 when we adopted the Budget Act, in opposition to President Nixon's assertion of impoundment authority. Congress said, "No, we will do it." Well, we don't.

The GRH process is doing what it was meant to do—cause Government spending to decrease by forcing Congress into an either/or situation. GRH has effectively been the closest thing we have to a balanced budget amendment, and perhaps it has even been more effective than a constitutional amendment would be.

There have been voices in Congress saying we need to repeal GRH because it causes too much dislocation of Federal budget priorities. But would spending go down if GRH were repealed? The American public knows the answer to that question and it is "No."

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequester process is the only forcing mechanism that keeps us honest with ourselves and our constituents. By no means should it be repealed or weakened.

I regret that the Budget Committee itself has essentially failed in its responsibilities to lead this year, but facts are facts.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to talk about a letter that recently appeared in a newspaper in our State, and contains some very profound truths, from a young woman who is 12 years old. The young woman is Lindsay Weiler, of Minnetonka, MN. It is a short letter but one really quite eloquent. It graphically laid out the environmental changes faced today. She wrote the following:

AFTER THE RAIN

I don't know how other people feel, but I hate pollution. Take acid rain for one. It's destroying our lakes and rivers. I was walking outside one day after it had rained, and I saw a puddle with a million colors. I knew then that the rain hadn't been fresh. Even though I'm only 12, I would like to help. This is the world I live in, and I don't want it ruined for my children.

This is a very moving letter, a letter that I wanted to share with my colleagues. The environment is one of the most important issues with which we deal, and, while we may frequently get caught up with debating environmental legislation, I think it is important we do not lose sight of the goal that she points out, preserving the environment and preserving it for her and other 12-year-olds, who deserve the same clean environment in which to live their lives and raise children.

I understand that in parts of Europe the pollution is so bad today that the songbirds have left. Is not that a shame? But we passed a clean air bill here recently that I think will preserve the songbirds in our country and a farm bill that is now being considered that will preserve the swamplands and wetlands for ducks, geese, and/or birds that require them.

I was touched by Lindsay's simple plea, and I want to share it with my colleagues.

FLAWED INVESTIGATION OF THE MURDERS OF PRIESTS IN EL SALVADOR

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am deeply concerned by the reports emanating from El Salvador which indicate that Salvadoran authorities may be obstructing justice in the investigation of the murders of the six Jesuit priests and two housekeepers at the Central American University in November. According to press reports, the Salvadoran authorities are not conducting a serious investigation. The most startling report is that evidence crucial to the case against Colonel Benavides, the head of the military school and commander of the unit responsible for the murders, is missing. On the very heels of Congressman MOAKLEY's report, which concluded that the investigation has been stalled and that little attempt has been made to determine if members of the military high command were involved, we now read more disturbing news. Colonel Benavides' personal notebook, possibly containing notes on meetings held in the military school before and after the murders, and the logbook, recording who that night entered and left the military school, are mysteriously missing. Furthermore, it seems more than coincidental that four cadets on guard duty that night at the military school and who potentially could provide key information, have been transferred out of the country for training.

I have tried to maintain a positive attitude about El Salvador. I am convinced that President Cristiani, despite tremendous pressures from within his Government, wants to do the right thing. I am encouraged by the fact that serious efforts to end the civil war are being made under the auspices of the United Nations as evidenced by the formal talks between the Government and the FMLN scheduled for next week in Caracas. I am encouraged that, although serious differences remain with the Congress, the Bush administration, as reported in the Washington Post on May 2, may now be accepting the fact that conditionality related to various aspects of the human rights situation will be part of the military assistance package for El Salvador.

I believe that we could be on the verge of moving in a positive way to finally end the civil war in El Salvador, but the Salvadoran Government's performance thus far in the case against Colonel Benavides looms as a major obstacle to continued United States military aid to El Salvador. The stakes are high and President Cristiani knows it. In a communique issued Tuesday, the Salvadoran Government vowed to make available the absent witnesses and to help recover the missing evidence. This is needed and more. The Salvadoran Armed Forces must be made to understand that after all these years, patience in this country has worn very thin. A full investigation, without obstruction, must be conducted in order to get to the bottom of this case. Those who are guilty must be brought to justice. It is imperative that this obstacle to peace in El Salvador be removed.

Under the current circumstances, I cannot support continued military assistance to El Salvador.

POLISH-AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH: THE CELEBRATION OF A UNIQUE AND IMPORTANT RELATIONSHIP

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, recently, I became a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 289, which designates October 1990, as Polish-American Heritage Month. I believe it is an appropriate moment for us to salute Poland and Polish-Americans.

Americans of Polish descent have had a decisive impact on the development of American culture, and Senate Joint Resolution 289 properly calls attention to important milestones in United States history that have involved Polish-Americans. Yet events that have occurred during the past year truly epitomize the strength of the bonds between the United States and Poland. For this reason, the longstanding tradition of commemorating Polish-American Heritage Month takes on added depth and new meaning.

Earlier this week, Lesek Balcerowicz, the Polish Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister, met with the Committee on Foreign Relations. When Mr. Balcerowicz, the architect of Poland's economic reform program, last visited the committee, Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki had just assumed office, and the world was beginning to recognize the import of what was occurring in Poland. Indeed, Poland had become the leader of Eastern Europe's revolution of 1989.

Now, Poland is undergoing what many call its second revolution, and its greatest challenge will be to address its heavy debt burden and reform its troubled economy. Western observers recognized all along that this crucial task would not be easy, and as Mr. Balcerowicz told the Foreign Relations Committee, Poland will continue to need our support as it progresses along the path of reform.

During the past year, Polish-Americans have responded to events in Poland with remarkable vigor. I have received countless letters in my office from Polish-Americans in Rhode Island and elsewhere. Some of these letters support assistance to Poland, some inquire about how to set up business ventures in Poland, and some ask how we can best support the process of implementing a free market economy in Poland. But nearly all of the letters I've received express a positive message that underscores the pride of those with a Polish heritage.

The Polish people recognize and appreciate the value of our financial assistance and our political support. As the Two-Plus-Four talks proceed on the matter of German unification, many are reminded of the deep concerns expressed by the President and by Members of this body about the issue of Germany's borders. In fact, I introduced a resolution with other Senators on this very subject that expressed unwavering support for the inviolability of Poland's existing borders. I recently received a letter of thanks from Janusz A. Ziolkowski, who is my counterpart in his capacity as the chairman of the Polish Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Senator Ziolkowski, speaking for his colleagues in the Polish Senate, expressed his gratitude for the support of United States Senators on this matter. I ask unanimous consent that Senator Ziolkowski's letter, as well as the full text of Senate Joint Resolution 289, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Clearly, Mr. President, Polish-Americans take great pride in their heritage and in the watershed events occurring in Poland. I believe that Senate Joint Resolution 289 affords us the opportunity to demonstrate to the Polish-American community that we stand behind their efforts to support Poland's struggle to move toward a free market economy. Accordingly, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this measure, and I urge the support of my colleagues.

HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES AND ANTI-DEMOCRATIC ACTIVITIES BY THE GOVERNMENT OF BURMA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, during the past 6 months a peaceful democratic revolution has swept Eastern Europe. Military regimes in Chile and Nicaragua have yielded power to civilian rule through free and fair elections. Yet even as the world moves toward greater democratic freedoms, Burma's military dictatorship continues to pursue a path of violence and corruption, ruthlessly repressing its civilian population, denying free and fair elections, and ignoring, and perhaps even profiting from the country's vast drug trade.

The United States should take a more active role in supporting the return of democratic freedoms in Burma. The first step, already taken by the Senate, is to impose economic sanctions against Burma's military dictatorship.

The Burmese people have a proud tradition of democracy, stemming from Burma's independence from Great Britain in 1948. Following independence, Burma adopted a parliamentary-style government. Under the leadership of Prime Minister U Nu the country remained pro-Western and received aid from the United States.

In 1962, however, a military coup led by Gen. U Ne Win, overthrew the democratically elected government and established the current military dictatorship. Since then, Burma has declined dramatically from one of the most democratic countries in Southeast Asia to a country deviod of democratic freedoms, with one of the worst human righs records in the world.

In light of our history and good will with the Burmese people, the United States must do all it can to support the return of democratic freedoms in Burma and to prevent further bloodshed.

In 1988, courageous citizens throughout Burma joined together in peaceful demonstrations to call for the government's recognition of basic human rights and the return of democracy—particularly free and fair elections—in Burma. The Burmese military responded with brute force, shooting thousands of unarmed demonstrators. In response, the United States cut off economic aid to Burma.

Since then, the military regime has continued to massacre students, Buddhist monks, Christians, minority ethnic groups, and other innocent citizens seeking democratic freedoms. Most of the people killed are unarmed, young, and nonviolent. Their only crime is that they cherish freedom enough to risk their lives for democracy.

The massacres have precipitated the exodus of more than 50,000 refugees into neighboring Thailand, overwhelming both the resources and the hospitality of that country. Burmese troops have repeatedly attacked student camps on the Thai-Burmese border, violating Thai sovereignty and forcing students to flee deeper into Thailand.

The government's past promise of free and fair elections to be held on May 27 has evaporated. All major opposition figures have been killed, imprisoned, or banned from the election. During the past 2 months, more than 25 candidates for the election have disappeared or been detained without charge under martial law. Some opposition candidates have been tortured and killed while in detention.

In the past month, the Burmese regime has relocated as many as one-half of a million people out of Rangoon and other cities in an effort to disrupt opposition political parties. The government has also refused to issue visas to foreign observers and correspondents for the election.

No free or fair election can take place under such repression. For the upcoming election to be respected by the people of Burma and the international community, the government must end its campaign of intimidation and permit the people to speak, act, and campaign freely.

The issue of opium production in Burma is also of great concern to the United States. Roughly half of the heroin imported into the United States comes from Burma. Moreover, on March 1, 1990, for the second year in a row, the President decertified Burma for its failure to cooperate with the United States in antinarcotics programs.

Previous United States assistance to Burma to fight the drug trade was used primarily in campaigns against ethnic minorities, rather than against opium traffickers. Moreover, widespread narcotics corruption reportedly exists within the Burmese military. A 1989 GAO report on the opium eradication program in Burma concluded that after spending $80 million in the past 14 years, United States efforts had been ineffective in diminishing the opium crop.

The Burmese Government's complicity with drug traffickers is ongoing. With the annual drug caravan season about to begin, drug warlords are fighting for control of a key opium trail near the Thai border. A short distance away, the Burmese Army has launched a major offensive to wipe out the Karen minority—because they have sought a less restrictive federal constitution for Burma.

The government shows no intention of attacking the drug armies or thwarting the narcotics trade. This year's record opium harvest, processed into heroin, will soon be on its way to American cities.

In this moment of crisis for Burma, there should be no doubt where America stands. We support the struggle by the people of Burma for a democratic system that guarantees fundamental rights of freedom and democracy, not the current military regime of repression and intolerance.

American influence inside Burma is limited. The influence we have, however, should be used to support the courageous efforts of the Burmese people. The Bush administration should waste no time in conveying this message to those who oppose the restoration of democracy in Burma.

I urge the administration to support economic sanctions against Burma's military dictatorship, and to take concrete steps to support the efforts of international and private voluntary organizations seeking to aid Burmese refugees.

In addition, the administration should mobilize other governments in the region. Thailand, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, India, South Korea, and Japan should all be encouraged to join in a common course of action, using our diplomatic, economic, and political influence to support democracy in Burma. I also urge Gen. U Ne Win to recognize the wisdom of holding free and fair elections in Burma.

Mr. President, the struggle for democracy in Burma is no less important than that in Latin America, Eastern Europe, and China. We must not stand silent while a ruthless dictatorship denies freedom and democracy to the people of Burma. The military regime may try to silence the voices of opposition, and imprison or kill those who seek freedom, but it cannot extinguish the desire for democracy and human rights in the hearts of the people.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(The nomination received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE RECEIVED DURING RECESS

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1989, the Secretary of the Senate, on May 11, 1990, during the recess of the Senate, received a message from the House of Representatives announcing that the House has passed the following joint resolution, without amendment:

S.J. Res. 275. Joint resolution designating May 13, 1990, as the "National Day in Support of Freedom and Human Rights in China and Tibet."

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled joint resolution:

S.J. Res. 275. Joint resolution designating May 13, 1990, as the "National Day in Support of Freedom and Human Rights in China and Tibet."

The enrolled joint resolution was subsequently signed during the session of the Senate on May 11, 1990 by the Acting President pro tempore [Mr. ROBB].

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:27 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills, without amendment:

S. 1846. An act to make miscellaneous amendments to Indian laws, and for other purposes; and

S. 2300. An act to provide financial assistance to the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, California, for the education programs of the Museum of Tolerance.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

H.R. 922. An act to designate the building located at 1515 Sam Houston Street in Liberty, Texas, as the "M.P. Daniel and Thomas F. Calhon, Senior, Post Office Building";

H.R. 2890. An act to designate the Federal Building and United States Courthouse located at 750 Missouri Avenue in East St. Louis, Illinois, as the "Melvin Price Federal Building and United States Courthouse"; and

H.J. Res. 453. Joint resolution designating May 1990 as "National Digestive Disease Awareness Month."

The enrolled bills and joint resolution were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, May 11, 1990, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill:

S.J. Res. 275. Joint resolution designating May 13, 1990, as the "National Day in Support of Freedom and Human Rights in China and Tibet."

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents which were referred as indicated:

EC-2952. A communication from the Under Secretary of Agriculture (International Affairs and Commodity Program), transmitting, pursuant to law, a commodity and country allocation table showing current programming plans for commodity assistance under Titles I and III of Public Law 480 for fiscal year 1990; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EC-2953. A communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on foreign investment in United States agricultural land for calendar year 1989; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EC-2954. A communication from the Secretary of Defense, transmitting pursuant to law, the report of the Defense Advisory Panel on Government-Industry Relations; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2955. A communication from the Under Secretary of Defense, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the review of a baseline deviation concerning the T45TS Defense Enterprise Program; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2956. A communication from the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Board for calendar year 1989; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-2957. A communication from the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of the extension of time for rendering a decision in Finance Docket No. 31424, Acquisition by Tampa Bay and Western Trans., Inc., of a CSX Transp., Inc. Line Between Sulphur Springs and Broco, Florida; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-2958. A communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to assess fees at fair market value to special beneficiaries of National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration date and information, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-2959. A communication from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursement, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the refund of excess offshore lease revenues; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-2960. A communication from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursement, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the refund of excess offshore lease revenues; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-2961. A communication from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursement, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the refund of excess offshore lease revenues; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-2962. A communication from the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Accounting for Fiscal Year 1988 Reimburseable Expenditures of Environmental Protection Agency Superfund Money", U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Report No. 90-58; to the Committee on Environmental and Public Works.

EC-2963. A communication from the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Accounting for Fiscal Year 1988 Reimbursable Expenditures of Environmental Protection Agency Superfund Money", Bureau of Reclamation Report No. 90-57; to the Committee on Environmental and Public Works.

EC-2964. A communication from the Chairman of the Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Board under the Inspector General Act Amendments of 1988; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-2965. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the modified Resource Allocation Methodology used to determine the levels of health resource deficiencies for each tribe or operating unit; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

EC-2966. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on the Indian Health Service Health Facilities Construction Priority System; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

EC-2967. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on the status of organ donation and coordination services and effectiveness of the procurement system for fiscal year 1988; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-2968. A communication from the Chairman of the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Commission for fiscal year 1989; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-2969. A communication from the Secretary of Education, transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of final funding priorities—Secondary Schools Basic Skills Demonstration Assistance Program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-2970. A communication from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend to the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act to extend the Job Training for the Homeless Demonstration Program and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-2971. A communication from the Assistant General Counsel of the Department of Defense (Legal Counsel), transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on Department of Defense and Defense Related Employment for fiscal year 1989; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2972. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Installations, Logistics, and Environment), transmitting, pursuant to law, notification of the recent discovery of six suspected chemical filled bomblets on Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, on April 26, 1990; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2973. A communication from the Director of Human Resources, U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report on the U.S. Army Nonappropriated Fund Employee Retirement Plan for the plan year ended September 30, 1988; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2974. A communication from the Secretary of Energy, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Comprehensive Program and Plan for Federal Energy Education, Extension and Information Activities"; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-2975. A communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on activities under the Youth Conservation Corps Act for the 1989 program year; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-2976. A communication from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursement, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the refund of excess offshore oil and gas royalty payments; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-2977. A communication from the Chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Board under the Inspector General Act Amendments of 1988; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-2978. A communication from the Chairman of the National Credit Union Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Administration under the Inspector General Act Amendments of 1988; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-2979. A communication from the Acting Administrator of General Services, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the General Services Administration under the Freedom of Information Act for calendar year 1989; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-2980. A communication from the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Executive Office of the President, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Office under the Freedom of Information Act for calendar year 1989; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. BURDICK, from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, with amendments:

S. 1076. A bill to increase public understanding of the natural environment and to advance and develop environmental education and training (Rept. No. 101-284).

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. COATS, Mr. DODD, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. GORTON, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. LOTT):

S. 2611. A bill to authorize assistance to the Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BOND, Mr. BOSCHWITZ Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. DIXON, Mr. FORD, Mr. GORE, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. SASSER):

S. 2612. A bill to establish a Commission to determine the feasibility of designating the Mississippi River as a National Heritage Corridor; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. FORD:

S. 2613. A bill to establish a hydrogen-fueled aircraft research and development program; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mr. GLENN):

S. 2614. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish and coordinate research programs for osteoporosis and related bone disorders and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 2615. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to clarify that the prohibition on the payment of attorneys' fees in connection with Department of Veterans Affairs benefits proceedings applies only where the individual is applying only where the individual is applying for benefits; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself Mr. BURDICK, Mr. CONRAD, and Mr. JOHNSTON):

S. 2616. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide coverage under such title for certain chiropractic services authorized to be performed under State law, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. ROBB:

S.J. Res. 312. Joint resolution designating the week of November 12, 1990, through November 18, 1990, as "National Critical Care Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE):

S. Res. 283. Resolution to designate the center table of the Senators' Dining Room in the United States Capitol as the "Spark M. Matsunaga Table"; considered and agreed to.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. COATS, Mr. DODD, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. GORTON, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. LOTT):

S. 2611. A bill to authorize assistance to the Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

THE WASHINGTON CENTER FOR INTERNSHIPS AND ACADEMIC SEMINARS

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, for 15 years, the Washington Center has operated as the only independent, nonprofit educational organization in Washington, DC, to offer internships and academic seminars for academic credit to college students from all disciplines. Through a cost-effective partnership, the center has enabled more than 700 colleges and universities nationwide to extend their campuses to the Nation's Capital. These institutions realize the important role of experimental education in the development of well-rounded curricula, and they have joined together in an informal consortium to create an internship program that can provide placement, counseling, evaluation, and housing services to students.

More than 15,000 students representing every State in the Union have benefited from participation in this exceptional program which emphasizes leadership development, civic awarness, public service, and increasing minority representation in business and government. The center has placed interns in House and Senate offices, Federal agencies, law firms, private industry, and nonprofit organizations.

The Washington Center's current residential facility is less than adequate to meet the high level of academic quality demanded by the hundreds of colleges and universities that rely on the center's educational resources. There is a concern for student safety at Washington Center apartments on upper 16th Street in Northwest Washington. Students must frequently commute 30 to 50 minutes to their internship assignments.

To remedy this situation, the center is planning to build a new housing and classroom facility to be located just off Massachusetts Avenue, NW., a few blocks west of Union Station. This facility will house 730 students a semester and will include class/conference rooms and a 600-seat auditorium. Students from every college and university in the United States will be able to take advantage of this centrally located housing facility, including students participating in internship programs other than the center's. The total cost of the facility will be approximately $24 million.

Ownership of this facility will allow the Washington Center to avoid steep increases in housing fees that would have to be passed along to affiliated institutions and then to students, thereby excluding students from lower economic levels from participating in the center's programs. The center has a special commitment to making its programs available to all college students regardless of economic, geographic, or ethnic background. The center seeks to maintain at least 20 percent minority representation in its programs and has established the Minority Scholarship Program and the Minoity Leaders Fellowship Program to enable more outstanding minority students to participate in its programs.

The legislation authorizes $12 million to defray construction and related costs of the Washington Center's planned student housing and educational facility. The Federal funds will be expended over a 3-year period and must be matched by private sector donations.

Cosponsoring this legislation are Senators COCHRAN, GRASSLEY, ADAMS, COATS, DODD, PRESSLER, MOYNIHAN, SPECTER, LEVIN, FOWLER, DURENBERGER, BIDEN, GORTON, LIEBERMAN, JOHN KERRY, INOUYE, and LOTT. Similar legislation has been introduced in the House by Congressman FORD of Michigan.●

By Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BOND, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. DIXON, Mr. FORD, Mr. GORE, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. SASSER):

S. 2612. A bill to establish a Commission to determine the feasibility of designating the Mississippi River as a national heritage corridor; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER CORRIDOR STUDY COMMISSION ACT

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that will establish a Commission to study the feasibility of creating a Mississippi River national heritage corridor. I am pleased to announce that this bill titled the "Mississippi River Corridor Study Commission Act of 1990" is cosponsored by Senator DURENBERGER, Senator BOND, Senator BOSCHWITZ, Senator BUMPERS, Senator COCHRAN, Senator DANFORTH, Senator DIXON, Senator FORD, Senator GORE, Senator GRASSLEY, Senator HARKIN, Senator JOHNSTON, Senator KASTEN, Senator KOHL, Senator LOTT, Senator MCCONNELL, Senator PRYOR, Senator SASSER, and Senator SIMON.

Mr. President, Congress has designated three major national heritage corridors in the United States: The Blackstone River corridor in Rhode Island and Massachusetts, the Illinois and Michigan Canal corridor in central Illinois, and the Delaware Lehigh Canal corridor. Corridor designation provides national awareness of the resources of a region without the imposition of Federal controls or land acquisitions. The Mississippi River region contains many significant historical, scenic, recreational, economic, and natural resources and corridor designation would both enhance and protect these resources.

The bill I am introducing today differs from a bill that was introduced in the 100th Congress titled "The Mississippi River National Heritage Corridor Act of 1987." That bill would have designated the Mississippi River as a national heritage corridor. The bill I am introducing today does not designate the corridor, rather, it sets up a temporary commission to determine the feasibility of designating the Mississippi River as a national heritage corridor.

The Mississippi River Corridor Study Commission would be composed of 15 members. The members would be: The Director of the National Park Service, the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of Commerce, the Director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife, the Chief of Engineers of the Army Corps of Engineers, one member from each State's Mississippi River Parkway Commission to be appointed by the Governor of each State.

The Commission is to prepare a report that recommends whether a national heritage corridor should be designated and if so, what the boundaries of such a corridor should be. This report would also include an inventory and assessment of historic, recreational, scenic, cultural, and scientific resources of the corridor; and lay out a 10-year plan to promote historic preservation, tourism, environmental protection, and economic development. The final report by the Commission would be due 3 years after its first meeting. The Commission will be terminated 90 days after the submission of its final report. I believe this Commission and its report will be of invaluable assistance in planning for the future of the Mississippi River region.

Mr. President, I would like to point out to my colleagues that this bill is identical to legislation introduced in the House by Congressman ESPY and which has been reported out of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The Mississippi River is a national treasure which is subject to multiple and sometimes competing uses. A recent Newsweek article which I am attaching to this statement details some of those uses and their impacts. The article points out serious environmental problems occurring along the river. One of the important functions of the Commission will be to identify ways to protect the environment of the Mississippi River. This is just one example of the important role the Commission will play in planning for the future of the Mississippi River region. With this legislation we can help find ways to protect the environmental, historical, and cultural integrity of this important river region for future generations. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the Newsweek article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Newsweek, Apr. 16, 1990]

TROUBLED WATERS

Lo, the mighty Mississippi! Most sibilant of river names, from the Algonquin "Father of Waters" (unless it was the Ojibwa "Great Water" or the Chippewa "Big River"). The aorta of North America, stretching 2,344 (U.S. Army Corps of Engineers) or 2,552 (State-park sign at the headwaters) miles from the cold heart of Minnesota to the fingers of the Delta. Like blood, a drop of the 100 trillion gallons that flow down it annually reveals our most secret vices and ailments: the ravages of erosion, telltale ribbons of sewage, alien chemicals bristling with polysyllabic menace. Somewhere along its shores, virtually every environmental problem known to civilization can be seen, except for the destruction of the whales, and if the Mississippi had whales, they'd be in trouble there, too. But the river still lives, even, in some ways, healthier now than the first Earth Day dawned on its rippling face 20 years ago. The Mississippi! Where else would you go to take the pulse of America?

For the most celebrated river in the nation, the Mississippi can be maddeningly elusive. Around New Orleans, you can drive for miles within a few hundred feet of the river and never catch a glimpse of it behind its levees—just as well, because you'd have to look up to see it. On the locked-and-dammed stretch of the upper Mississippi, the water is in plain sight but the river is lost, hidden under the slack lakes and sloughs that have formed in its place. And always, the mud—or, if you please, sediment—356,000 tons a day, giving rise to the canard of "too thick to drink or too thin to plow." That is a slander; the Missouri is 10 times muddier than the Mississippi.

Its vast volume conceals many sins, some of which are also crimes. The most comprehensive survey of Mississippi River pollution was by Greenpeace USA, which in 1988 found that industries and municipalities along the river discharge "billions of pounds of heavy metals and toxic chemicals into the river every year." That sounds like a lot, and Greenpeace tries to make it sound like even more by including essentially nontoxic substances such as iron, which actually makes up the great bulk of the discharge from some sources. Diluted in the Mississippi's titanic wash, a lethal chemical like dioxin dribbles off into the low parts per trillion. But a trillionth here, a trillionth there—it adds up, when you consider all the pesticides, herbicides, solvents and trace metals going into the river from the factories, farms and sewers of 31 states. Bob Meade, part of a team of U.S. Geological Survey scientists who have been testing the lower Mississippi since 1987, believes the water is in some ways actually growing cleaner. The big cities on the river now treat their sewage, and lead levels began to decline after most cars switched to unleaded gasoline. But, he says flatly, "we don't eat fish out of the river."

Nor is pollution confined to places downstream of factories and waste-treatment plants. Acid rain does not forbear to fall on the pristine forests of northern Minnesota, where the Mississippi rises from tiny, gin-clear Lake Itasca. "I wouldn't drink this water," says Jack Nelson, assistant manager of Itasca State Park. Of course, he adds, "I'd rather drink it here than in Baton Rouge."

We have, from time to time, made the river over in our own image. In the 1930s, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers subdued it with concrete, building most of the series of locks and dams that enable barges to climb the 420 feet from Granite City, Ill., to Minneapolis. On the lower Mississippi, which begins at Cairo, Ill., where the Ohio in one swoop doubles its volume, the river is too great to be dammed, but too dangerous to run free. Here, the corps has hemmed it in with great walls of earth, rocks and concrete, behind which the people of New Orleans go about their business, as much as 15 feet below sea level. We have gained a lot from the corps's efforts: rich cropland, shelter from devastating floods, valuable industrial sites and energy-efficient transportation. We are still measuring, though, what we have lost: clean water, irreplaceable wetlands and the possibility of nature in our very midst. What was once seen as a noble struggle to subdue a wild continent is now viewed by many as a colossal exercise in human arrogance and destruction. It was less than two months ago that Lt. Gen. H. J. Hatch, commander of the Corps of Engineers, advised his troops that "the environmental aspects of all we do must have equal standing among other aspects." That is a big change for the corps, which long had the reputation among environmentalists as the part of the Army that makes war on nature. Welcome to the other side, General; with your help, we'll make it, one duck pond at a time.

RED WING, MN

Everywhere man is crowding the river.

The St. Croix, which forms part of the border between Wisconsin and Minnesota, joins the Mississippi at Prescott, Wis., 20 miles southeast of St. Paul. The two rivers have very different personalities. Downstream from the Twin Cities, the Mississippi has always been a working river, left pretty much to the doleful company of the big barge tows, while the St. Croix for all living memory has been lined with cabins and speckled with the bright hulls of boats. Once every two years, Dan McGuiness of the Minnesota-Wisconsin Boundary Area Commission will photograph the river from the air and count the boats. He has found more than 2,000 boats along his 52-mile route. River patrols enforce a "no wake" rule when congestion exceeds one boat per 10 acres. McGuiness has seen boats crowded one to every two acres. The artificial islands, with their beaches of clean dredged sand, are packed gunwale to gunwale. Latecomers bob in the current, waiting for a spot to open, like cars circling a crowded parking lot.

Increasingly, those boats are venturing out onto the Mississippi. Once, no one who ever flushed a toilet in Minneapolis would have dreamed of boating downstream, but as the Mississippi has grown cleaner, people have begun to use it without getting a gamma globulin shot first. At nearby Lock 3, recreational boats (packed 60 at a time in the 110-foot-by-600-foot chamber) outnumber commercial traffic. Nearly 20,000 pleasure boats were locked through last year, a 70 percent increase in just three years.

Environmentalists, naturally, regard this with alarm. The boats' propellers are said to stir up sediments, cutting off sunlight to aquatic vegetation, which then rots on the bottom, depleting the water of oxygen. The boats' wakes are accused of battering the fragile ecology of the shoreline, upsetting wildlife, causing erosion. But probably the real issue, as framed in an editorial in the Red Wing Republican Eagle, is that "each new boat on the river represents a tiny diminishment of Red Wing's quality of life." To accommodate the pleasure-boat fleet, developers want to build some 2,600 new marina slips on the river between St. Paul and Red Wing, in addition to the 3,000 already there. Nature lovers fear for the river's dignity as boats named Margie II and Sea What You Done To Me go rollicking from shore to shore in a tinkle of ice cubes.

All the counties on the Wisconsin side of the river have put a moratorium on new marina development, while officials study the applications, but it is likely that at least some of them will be built. It is ironic that this workaday stretch of Midwestern scenery should be caught in the same trap as Yosemite, hung by its beauty. Last year Congress designated the stretch from Hastings north to Dayton as a "National River and Recreation Area." The sponsor, Rep. Bruce Vento (Democrat of Minnesota), said he would like to see some of the barge terminals and junkyards moved away from the river's edge, to make the water more attractive—for boaters.

GENOA, WI

For all the vast volumes of water that it carries, the Mississippi is relatively insignificant as a source of hydroelectric power because its terrain is so flat; from Minneapolis to New Orleans it drops only 800 feet in 1,707 miles. It is, however, a vital link in the nation's energy economy. Millions of tons of coal and millions of barrels of oil traverse it in barges. Numerous power plants borrow from the river to cool their condensers, conscientiously repaying it with the same water, 10 degrees hotter than when it was drawn out.

One such plant is the 350-megawatt generating station in Genoa, Wis., 20 miles south of La Crosse, which in a typical year will burn 800,000 tons—533 bargeloads—of Illinois, Montana and Wyoming coal. Eighty people work in this plant, producing one third of the power consumed by 180,000 families in the four surrounding states. Alongside it on the riverbank is a cluster of smaller buildings surrounded by a chain-link fence, topped by barbed wire. Twenty-two people work at this plant, the La Crosse Boiling Water Reactor, but they produce no electricity at all. The 50-megawatt nuclear plant has been deactivated since April 30, 1987, after its owner, Dairyland Power Cooperative, concluded that it was cheaper to burn coal. In one of the buildings, at the bottom of a pool of filtered and demineralized well water, are 33,300 narrow cylinders, in bundles of 100, containing the spent uranium that once powered the plant. They have become the raison d'être for the plant. If there were any place else in the world to put them, the reactor could be dismantled—after waiting a few years for its radioactivity to subside—and then everyone here could go home.

The cylinders—8½ feet long and as big around as a fountain pen—contain thousands of eraser-size pellets of uranium, plus trace quantities of its fission byproducts: krypton 85, cesium, cobalt, manganese and plutonium. The uranium was purified from the ore, "enriched" to increase the proportion of U-235 (from a naturally occurring .7 percent to 3.7 percent), and sealed in these cylinders, where it continues to fission and generate heat. The process of creating nuclear fuel doesn't work in reverse. You can't disperse the uranium back into the ore and buy it back in Utah. It is possible to process the fuel for reuse, but what you have left is a high concentration of plutonium. Since the shortcut for anyone seeking to build an atom bomb is to get his hands on plutonium, the government has discouraged commercial users from reprocessing their waste. Back when the Genoa plant was built, it was assumed that the government would dig a hole someplace where no one would care too much. drop in drums of waste and cover them up with dirt—just like any other toxic chemical. It hasn't of course, worked that way. So potent is the fear of nuclear material that the government has been unable for more than 20 years to find a state to accept it. "NIMBY," says MIT nuclear engineer Kent Hansen, "has become NOPE—Not On Planet Earth."

The latest projection from the Department of Energy is that there may be a working nuclear-storage site in Nevada by the year 2010, but few experts believe it. Even if the dump were to be ready by then, the projected backlog of nuclear waste means that it would probably take at least another 10 years before the last of the uranium leaves Genoa. Meanwhile people have to maintain the pumps that carry away the waste heat, watch the gauges and patrol the fences, 24 hours a day. For how long? For 10,000 years, give or take, or until the government finds a site for a nuclear-waste dump, whichever comes first.

CEDAR GLEN, IL

About two miles below Keokuk, Iowa, where the Des Moines River comes in from the west, the Mississippi runs past steep, wooded bluffs and keeps Missouri and Illinois apart by barely a quarter mile. This is a historic spot in the domestication of the Mississippi, a few miles below Lock and Dam 19, the oldest of the lock complexes and the only one that includes a sizable hydroelectric generating station. Before the discipline of locks and dams, this was an anarchic stretch known as the Des Moines Rapids. Now the river, running deep and smooth through its narrow channel, conceals its own turbulent history of rocks and ledges and steam-boat wrecks, but the countryside is still as wild as any in the well-trodden and picked-over landscape of the Midwest. Three small wooded islands stand just off the Illinois bank, and it is there, in the high branches of the cottonwoods and maples, that the very symbol of American wilderness is making its stand against the depredations of the 20th century: the bald eagle.

It is an odd concatenation of natural and artificial circumstances that has led the eagles to gather here in the Cedar Glen Wintering Site, one of the largest of the dozen or so official winter sanctuaries in the United States, home to anywhere from 250 to 350 birds in an average season. (The rest of the year, the birds nest in the upper Midwest and Canada.) Less than a mile from the eastern bank is a small, steep-side bowl whose trees barely reach above its rim, enabling eagles to satisfy their preference for a high perch without having to sit out in the cold wind all night. When the river ran free, the rapids were one of the few places this far north sure to have open water—and therefore, food—all winter. Now as the water churns through the hydroelectric gates, it picks up just enough turbulence to keep from freezing for several miles downstream. And the dam also serves as a fish-processing plant for the eagles, who have a taste, not shared by most humans, for the gizzard shad, a rough, bony fish a little bigger than a big sardine. The eagle prefers shad which are already dead and floating, because those are the easiest to catch. As the fish come down the river past the power plant quite a few of them are separated from their heads—an ecological success story that Union Electric Co. of St. Louis has oddly neglected to claim credit for.

Of course, the real credit for the eagles' survival, as well as perhaps our own, is due to Rachel Carson, whose "Silent Spring" was the seminal text of the modern environmental movement. Carson, writing in 1962, found evidence that the ubiquitous pesticide DDT was decimating eagle populations by interfering with their ability to reproduce. It took 10 years for the government to ban the substance, and at the time it was expected to take 20 years for DDT's impact on the environment to dwindle. The bald-eagle population in the Lower 48 states bottomed out in 1974 to around 3,000, including only 791 identified nesting pairs. "This was a disastrous phenomenon in the wildlife kingdom," says zoologist Thomas Dunstan of Western Illinois University, who helped establish the Cedar Glen Refuge. "A few people kept these birds alive by a thread." Now the nesting pairs have more than tripled and researchers estimate there are 8,000 to 12,000 birds—a comeback so impressive that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has proposed the bald eagle for one of the highest accolades the government can bestow on an animal, a promotion from "endangered" species to "threatened."

Twelve thousand eagles—imagine that! One eagle for every 20,000 Americans, roughly speaking. No one knows how many eagles the land once supported, but biologists believe it was at least 100,000, which implies that the Indians outnumbered them by less than 20 to 1. Besides pesticides, civilization brought birdshot, which, even when it missed, filled lakes and rivers—and the eagles' prey—with the insidious poison of lead. Biologists say that eagle hunting is now relatively rare—and severely punished—and many states have outlawed lead shot in favor of steel. But banish all these hazards at a stroke, says Gary Duke, an avian physiologist at the University of Minnesota, and eagles would still face the ravening human desire for habitat. "Eagles like to live on lakeshores and riverfronts, and so does everyone else," says Duke. As the eagles have recovered, they've filled up most of their niche. As one solution, Duke has proposed releasing eagles in the spread-out communities around Lake Minnetonka, near Minneapolis. The apotheosis of America: people, crowded out of the cities, and birds, pushed from the wilderness, meeting in the suburbs.

SAUGET, IL

The southern Illinois river town of Sauget first came to the attention of the state EPA in the late 1970s, when officials heard rumors about a dog that ran into a dry creek bed near the town and emerged in flames. This may or may not have occurred, but the aptly named Dead Creek turned out to contain enough phosphorus to make the soil smolder under the wheels of children's bicycles. The highly combustible phosphorus apparently outweighed the fire-retardant effects of the PCBs also found there, and in half a dozen other spots around Sauget. "You name it, it's there," says Terry Ayers of the Illinois EPA. "These are some of the most grossly contaminated sites in the state."

Based on molecules per capita, Sauget—population, around 200—might be the single most polluted place along the Mississippi. In 1988 the federal government sued the town over discharges from its American Bottoms sewage-treatment plant—more than 16 million gallons of bright yellow-green effluent that goes directly into the Mississippi. "The water was the most toxic we've ever tested," says Dale Bryson, water division director of EPA Region V. This reflects, of course, what goes into the sewers. More than half a dozen big chemical and pharmaceutical plants in Sauget and nearby East St. Louis (across the river form St. Louis) discharge their wastes through American Bottoms. The plants are supposed to "pretreat" their effluent, but the government charges that the town has been lax in enforcing this requirement.

It is not surprising that the values of, say, Madison, Wis., are absent in Sauget. The workers at just one Monsanto plant outnumber the townspeople 3 to 1. Sauget in fact was Monsanto, Ill., until 1967, when the chemical company requested a name change to end the confusion over headlines like Monsanto Man Dies in Fire. The name honors the town's founder and the father of the current mayor, Paul Sauget, who sums up the First Family's credo thusly: "Goddam, they gotta let somebody make a living."

"Just because the government tells you something, it don't mean it's true," Sauget says of the EPA lawsuit. "They try to say we're the dirtiest place on the river. That's just somebody trying to make a name for himself." He fears that the EPA's constantly changing demands have already hurt the town's business. "You don't see smoke anymore, that's what worries me. It just looks like things are slowed up around here."

Here is how pollution happens, and how it can be stopped. Monsanto's plant makes, among some 12 other products, millions of pounds of paradichlorobenzene, the active ingredient in toilet-bowl fresheners and mothballs. The raw materials are benzene, a refinery product that is shipped to the plant by barge, and chlorine, which arrives as a liquid in 90-ton railroad tank cars. They are combined catalytically, and the resulting mixture purified in several steps, of which one of the last is to separate the para from its liquid coproduct by crystallization. For years the company used a "wet process." This required curing the cakes of para in a room cooled by thousands of gallons of water, which turned into contaminated waste to be pumped to the sewage plant. Emissions from the para as it cured added the heady odor of mothballs to the variety of interesting smells for which Sauget was and is known. In 1989 Monsanto substituted a "dry process," in which water never comes into contact with the para solution, and the finished product is piped directly to railroad tankers. The company claims this has cut air emissions 99 percent, and water emissions from 40,000 pounds a year to zero. This gives the plant a head start on meeting Monsanto chairman Richard Mahoney's self-imposed target of cutting all air emissions 90 percent by 1992 and all land and water discharges by 70 percent by 1995.

Could the same thing be done at plants that make 1-chloro-2-nitrobenzene, 1,1,1-trichloroethane and all their alarmingly hyphenated ilk? And then what of the finished products themselves—the solvents and pesticides and plastics whose most salient characteristic is that they last for a long time? Pat Costner, the Greenpeace chemist who co-wrote the survey of Mississippi River toxins, doesn't think the answer lies in dry versus wet processes, but in a decision by society that it can no longer afford to produce certain chemicals at all—in particular, chlorinated hydrocarbons. There are about 14,000 of these compounds in such familiar products as PVC plastics and, yes, paradichlorobenzene.

It was relatively easy to decide to ban DDT to save the bald eagle. What would you give up to save the moths?

CLARKSDALE, MS

The eastern shore of the Mississippi, from about the Tennessee-Kentucky border south to Vicksburg, contains some of the richest land and poorest farmers in the United States. This is alluvial land, the distillation of the topsoil of half a continent concentrated on the 50-mile-wide flood plain between the river and the Bluff Hills to the east. When it was growing corn back in Iowa, this soil made farmers rich, but spread over Tunica County, Miss., it has led to a 52.9 percent poverty rate, among the highest in the nation. Scattered through it are patches of the dense, heavy clay known as buckshot, because it cracks when dry, like a shot-out window; if you're buried in this land, the locals say, when Gabriel sounds his trumpet you'll be just plain out of luck. Water stands on it, making it suitable for rice farming or catfish ponds. The rest is a light, crumbly loam that "melts like sugar and flows like water." Once, it supported some of the wildest and richest wilderness in the continental United States—a bottomland forest of oak, elm and ash and a major wintering ground for waterfowl. Now that it has almost all been cleared, its blessing and its curse is that it is perfectly suited for that heartbreaking, backbreaking, bank-breaking staple of the Delta, cotton.

Cotton is a compilation of bad horticultural traits. It has a raving nitrogen dependency and is prone to rot. The boll weevil is just one of the half-dozen pests it attracts. "Cotton uses just about every pesticide known to man," says Arkansas agronomist Lyle Thompson. That is especially true here, amid the vibrant insect and microbial life of the Delta, where pesticides have long been considered the staff of life for man and plant alike. Malaria and yellow fever have killed a lot more Mississippians than chlorinated hydrocarbons. There are plenty of old farmers who remember washing the walls of their homes with a solution of DDT. "You ban all chemicals tomorrow," says Fred Cooke, an agricultural economist at the Mississippi State University agricultural station in Stoneville, "and in 20 years there'd be no farming and there'd be no towns."

If people ate cotton, they might not be so cavalier about what they put on it, but there are no federal standards for pesticide residue in the crop, and no one (yet) has started charging double in department stores for organically grown T shirts. The tragedy is what the chemicals have done to the land and the people. Frank Mitchener, one of the largest cotton farmers in Mississippi, facing a bollworm invasion, sprayed his fields with the banned pesticide toxaphene last summer. Nobody might have known, but for a four-inch rainfall that washed most of the pesticide into Cassidy Bayou, killing fish up to six miles downstream. Experts say it may take years for the wildlife to recover. The violation cost Mitchener a $55,000 fine. "For the common Joe Farmer out there, it's been like a kick in the gut," says Stoneville agronomist M. Wayne Ebelhar. "They understand why he used the stuff. It's a good, solid chemical that does the job."

And for all that, most farmers aren't even getting rich off their crops. Pesticides are expensive, and with cotton prices not much over 50 cents a pound—down about a third from the peak 20 years ago—the profit margin on an acre of cotton can be thinner than a banker's smile. In a few places along the river, farmers are trying to break out of the cycle of poisoning everything else to grow cotton. A coalition of black farmers around Clarksdale, Miss., has set out to grow organic vegetables, but found that in order to escape the countryside's pervasive pesticides, they actually had to locate their plots in vacant lots in town. W.C. Spencer tried to switch his land from cotton to soybeans, the other main Delta crop, but his beans withered and died from the residual herbicides in the soil.

Near Vicksburg, part of a 20,000-acre tract owned by Tara Wildlife Mangement has been allowed to revert to its native forest cover, which is harvested for high-value hardwoods and rented out for hunting. This is a tiny start on restoring the 20 million or so acres of wetlands that were cleared and drained by man. "The lower Mississippi Valley was to the Temperate Zone of North America what the Amazon is to the Tropical Zone of South America," observes Charles Baxter of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. "It was an incredibly rich ecological system of forested wetlands, rivers, bayous, swamps and lakes." Only God can make country like this, and even he needs to get a bill through Congress first. Baxter is hopeful that the 1990 farm bill will establish a fund for taking marginal land out of production and restoring it to wetland status, which may actually be cheaper than providing federal crop and flood insurance. "We can't make rivers flood again," Baxter says, "but we can unmake drainage ditches." A man with a backhoe can do that in a day, and within the year, wetland plants can be growing in place of soybeans. Someone can drive by with a soybean planter filled with acorns, and in 30 to 50 years, a bottomland forest is re-established. "For so many years, all we could do was watch the destruction. Now we have the opportunity to turn the clock back a little bit."

In Dumas, Ark., just across the river, a farmer named Clarence Hopmann tried to cut down on the use of agricultural chemicals when he developed an allergy to the spray that would drift over from the neighboring cotton fields. But in order to even qualify for loans, bankers demanded that he use large doses of chemicals on his crops. He complied—only to lose his land to the government when soybean prices crashed in the 1980s. He is now trying to reclaim it, full of plans to use the latest organic techniques for rice and winter wheat.

There's only one problem.

The government now says that the land he farmed for decades may be actually wetland. He may not be allowed to farm there at all.

OLD RIVER CONTROL

Some 50 miles upriver from Baton Rouge, about where the Red River approaches it from the west, the Mississippi begins the slow bend that will take it past New Orleans and, in its unfathomable geologic wisdom, on east to the gulf along virtually the longest path imaginable. It is here that the Army Corps of Engineers has dared to challenge the full-grown Mississippi, and here that the stakes are highest: virtually the entire economy and topography of southeastern Louisiana. If the river wins here, New Orleans is the loser.

A glance at the map shows why. A much more direct route to the sea is followed by the Atchafalaya River, which runs almost due south from that point to empty into the gulf at Morgan City. In 1831, after the famous steamboat Capt. Henry M. Shreve cut a channel to eliminate a loop in the Mississippi here, the river seemed to wake up to this possibility. More and more water began flowing down the Atchafalaya. The more that went down it, the deeper its channel became, and the more water it could draw off. It was easy to predict the outcome if this continued. The Atchafalaya would capture the Mississippi. The former distributary would become the main channel of the river, and the river from north of Baton Rouge to the gulf would become a slack, saltwater estuary.

New Orleans would survive—at least, the real estate would still be there—but without fresh water, and no longer on the main shipping channel, the only industry left would be the one that runs on bourbon. This clearly was a case for Congress. In 1954 it passed a law forbidding the Atchafalaya to take more than 30 percent of the combined flow of the Red and the Mississippi. King Canute should have been so lucky; Congress had the Army Corps of Engineers to enforce its will.

The results is the complex of dams, gates and channels known as Old River Control, which went into operation in 1963. A major addition was completed in 1986, and the latest improvement—a privately operated hydroelectric station—will begin generating power this summer. The power plant was originally conceived to provide cheap electricity to the town of Vidalia, LA (population: 6,000), but the corps doesn't think small—it insisted it had to be 192 megawatts. Millions of people rely on the gates of Old River Control. Farmers, fishermen, industry and the municipalities along both rivers all need water, but in differing amounts at different times, and they are not shy about making their demands known. When the river is low, the crawfish boats in the Atchafalaya Basin worry about being stranded, and ask for more water. But two years ago a drought reduced the flow past New Orleans to the point that salt water began infiltrating up the channel, threatening the city's drinking supply. The corps had to tighten the valve on the Atchafalaya to increase the current going down the Mississippi. During the 1983 high water, the state worried that it might have to evacuate the maximum-security Angola state prison, so it asked that more water be diverted at Old River to take the pressure off the Mississippi. That didn't make the soybean farmers along the Atchafalaya happy. Having swallowed the Missouri, the Ohio and the Arkansas, the lower Mississippi is too powerful to be dammed—but not, it seems, to be domesticated and turned into another government benefits program.

And still the waters lap against the levees and thunder against the concrete reinforcements at Old River. As land is paved; rivers run higher on the same amount of rain; every parking lot between Ohio and the Rockies is a trough to the lower Mississippi. Mark Twain and Raphael Kazmann, professor of civil engineering emeritus at Louisiana State University, are in agreement on this point. Man, wrote Twain, "cannot tame that lawless stream, cannot curb it or confine it . . . [or] bar its path with an obstruction which it will not tear down, dance over, and laugh at." Kazmann has made it his crusade to warn Louisiana that a catastrophic failure at Old River is inevitable. Morgan City, he predicts, could be wiped out within two days, despite its 20-foot-high levees. The Corps of Engineers disagrees. "We respect opinions," says Bob Fairless, who is a supervisor at Old River, "but the position of the corps is that Old River will operate safety for the foreseeable future."

THE 'CHEMICAL CORRIDOR'

When the sun sets on the Mississippi at La Place, La., a scarlet ribbon of smog lights the sky in the west. Between New Orleans and Baton Rouge, great streams of hydrocarbons spew from a hundred plants' smokestacks. Louisiana, which ranks 20th in population, falls third in an Environmental Protection Agency ranking of states by toxic air emissions. Twenty-five percent of the nation's chemical industry is in Louisiana. Most of it was built along this 150-mile stretch of the Mississippi, which has easy access to the offshore oilfields, plenty of fresh water—and, until recently, a state government that didn't look too closely into what Gov. Buddy Roemer calls "a deal with the Devil."

The urgent question of the day is whether the Devil's price was just the familiar irritations of smog and ozone, or something more sinister. The Greenpeace report called the area by its local nickname, the "cancer corridor." Compared to the rest of the Mississippi corridor, the 10 Louisiana parishes where the chemical industry is concentrated "consistently suffered some of the highest rates of mortality from all diseases, [and of] cancer deaths and infant deaths," according to Greenpeace. But the study admits that it cannot prove that these deaths were the result of breathing the air and drinking the water. Many other things could be responsible, such as poverty, high smoking rates and lifestyle factors. The culture of southeast Louisiana, to put it delicately, does not emphasize the virtues of postponing pleasure. "Greenpeace committed scientific malpractice," says Dan Borne, president of the Louisiana Chemical Association. Borne also asserts that the chemical industry actually returns water to the river "in better shape than when they got it out, in terms of pollution," so he may not be the most open-minded observer. But a disinterested authority, Dr. Joel L. Nitzkin of the Louisiana Office of Public Health, says that "air contamination just doesn't seem to be the answer. If there is a cancer problem related to industry, we believe it is relatively small."

Yes, but what do the people who live there believe? It's not always easy to tell, because the chemical industry keeps buying up the houses around them. The people suspect this is because that's the quickest and cheapest way to settle complaints. But the companies claim this is a responsible tactic to create buffer zones around potentially dangerous chemicals. Georgia Gulf bought out all 40 families who lived in Reveilletown, Iberville Parish, and settled a class-action lawsuit over alleged pollution. Dow Chemical is trying to buy the community of Morrisonville, near Baton Rouge. In 1982, after accidential emissions and 78 fires at the now defunct Good Hope Refinery, and numerous evacuations of the next-door elementary school, the oil company bought the school.

Among those who remain, suspicion is rampant. In 1987, Kay Gaudet, a pharmacist, reported to the state an unusually high rate of miscarriages in St. Gabriel. But a study by Luann White, associate dean of public health at Tulane, found that miscarriage rates in the parish were about the same as elsewhere in Louisiana. Oddly enough, this reassuring news was not well received in the community. "They were not really happy to hear this, because they were sure there had been an increase [in miscarriages] due to environmental problems," White says. "When you're dealing with the environment, there are emotional concerns, political concerns. Sometimes the concern taken least into account is science."

TERREBONNE PARISH

Past New Orleans, the Mississippi rushes on for another 115 miles to its triple outlet on the gulf. Between here and the mouth of the Atchafalaya, 110 miles to the west, lie the Cajun swamp parishes of Lafourche and Terrebonne. Here the land doesn't so much meet the sea as gradually shred into it. Cypress stand in clumps of real estate surrounded by water, brushing the ripples with their trails of Spanish moss. Inexorably the real estate is shrinking. Louisiana wetlands are disappearing at the rate of 50 square miles a year. An aerial photograph of Terrebonne Parish from, say, 30 years ago, would show a solid green carpet of marsh. Today, says Oliver Houck, professor of environmental law at Tulane University, "you see something that looks like a torn rag."

This is yet another environmental catastrophe perpetrated, in innocent pursuit of its congressionally mandated goals, by the Army Corps of Engineers. In its natural state, Terrebonne Parish was a shelf of silt just above sea level, continually compacting and sinking, but eternally renewed by the sediment in the floods that washed over it every year. Now, as the river runs to the gulf between its formidable levees, the sinking goes on but there is nothing to rebuild with. "The Mississippi over the course of history wriggled across Louisiana like a hose, spraying all this life-giving stuff," says Houck. "When we decided to dedicate the river to navigation, we altered the balance. We have taken the hose and turned it off"—or, more precisely, directed it straight down a sewer, in the interest of efficiency.

Of course, the levees are not wholly to blame; how could there be an environmental catastrophe in Louisiana without the oil industry? To clear a route for drilling rigs, oil companies and the corps cut more than 10,000 miles of channels through the Louisiana marshes and swamps. These typically are built 100 feet or wider, but the destruction doesn't stop there; after the interlocking root systems of the marsh are severed, the canal banks may erode to three times their original width. This makes for a unique kind of wetland loss. Elsewhere on the North American coast, the shore is being washed back; here, the marsh is falling apart from within.

Ironically, the loss of swampland is accelerating just as its most characteristic inhabitant, the American alligator, is making a comeback. Hunting, banned for years, was reinstated in the early 1980s. Actually, most alligators are trapped on baited hooks left in the water overnight; that way they can be taken without damaging the skin, which has been recently been bringing up to $58 a foot. "Alligator Anne" Miller, a tour-boat operator in Houma, now goes out just before hunting season with a boatload of chicken parts for her favorite animals—the ones who will come to the surface and entertain the tourists when called. Then they won't feel like feeding until the hunters have their limit of one alligator per 150 acres.

Louisiana, a poor, rural and conservative state, was slow to awaken to the ecological imperative. It is still very tough to take on the oil industry in the state legislature, but by referendum last year the people voted (by a 75-25 margin) to set aside a portion of oil and gas severance taxes to wetlands restoration. In line with President George Bush's declared national policy of "no net loss" of wetlands, Roemer has set the same goal for the state to achieve by 1992, although the oil-tax revenue, a maximum of $25 million a year, seems way inadequate to the job. All over the country people are uniting to save wetlands, one shopping center at a time, but 80 percent of America's wetland loss is occurring wholesale right here, home to nearly a third of the nation's seafood harvest. "If this were happening on Chesapeake Bay, it would be getting daily attention," says Bob Jones, the Terrebonne Parish engineer. "If we were losing 40 to 50 square miles a year to the Cubans, you know what kind of money we'd be spending on it."

THE GULF

With momentum gathered over 2,000 miles, the Mississippi falls the Delta into the gulf, and the currents push it east to west, making a green-brown swirl in the blue waters. A continent's worth of nutrients drop into the sea and commence to make their way up the food chain in the direction of blackened redfish. Fishermen, shrimpers and oystermen all gather here for the wriggling bounty of the sea.

But sometimes what the river brings is death. Along the fishing villages of Mobile Bay, 130 miles from the Delta, there is a rare phenomenon the locals call "jubilee." It happens in the late summer months when the air is heavy and still and the gulf waters are as warm as blood. Then swarms of shrimp, crab and deep-sea fish may suddenly appear in the shallow water just off the beaches, swimming suicidally toward the shore—and the waiting nets, not to speak of the pots, of the lucky townspeople.

To biologists, these are not fish that are seeking to get eaten, but fish desperately searching for oxygen. The Mississippi, in its ceaseless fertilization of the continental shelf, can contribute to a condition known as hypoxia. Nitrogen from the river produces a bumper crop of algae, which sink to the ocean floor and decay, using up oxygen. When conditions are right, the fresh river water can settle like a blanket over the heavier salt water, trapping the fish in their asphyxiating bath. Farther from shore, scientists have found "extensive, severe and long-lasting" hypoxic zones almost every year since 1985, covering areas up to 4,000 square miles, according to researcher Nancy Rabalais. Environmentalists, with their natural bent for drama, call this a "dead zone."

This may well be an entirely natural phenomenon. Or it may not; some evidence suggests that the area affected by dead zones is growing by as much as 19 percent a year. The "pregnant question," according to Donald Boesch, director of the Louisiana Universities Marine Consortium, "is whether man is doing something to intensify it." The nitrogen load of the river has been increasing more or less steadily since the 1950s. Nitrogen compounds are a ubiquitous industrial pollutant. Fertilizer runoff and sewage outflow are major sources. Burning fuel in cars and power plants creates nitrogen oxides, which precipitate out as one form of acid rain. A similar suffocation-by-algae has afflicted lakes, sometimes killing virtually everything in them. But this is the sea, swept by currents that dwarf even the mighty Mississippi. Could the same thing happen to the entire Gulf of Mexico? Are we seeing "a major change in our natural history," as R. Eugene Turner, chairman of marine sciences at Louisiana State University, put it? Or is Texas A&M oceanographer Robert Presley right when he says, "I simply do not believe these horror stories that the Gulf of Mexico is being destroyed by man. It's just plain physically impossible."

The fishermen, for their part, go out with their nets and do their jobs; and if the catch is good, they thank God and the Mississippi, and if it's not, well, they'll have better luck another day. Here the river lies beyond the reach of the Corps of Engineers and the Minnesota-Wisconsin Boundary Area Commission and the yellow torrents of sewage. The rest of us have only the river we have made—a river that flows on command and runs where we tell it, whose water comes to us processed through the gates of 29 dams, every drop of it tainted and corrupted by civilization before being allowed to seek its solace in the sea. It carries with it the sorrows of a continent..

(This story was written by Jerry Adler with reports from Todd Barrett, Ginny Carroll, John McCormick and Michael Reese on the river, and Mary Hager in Washington.)●

By Mr. FORD:

S. 2613. A bill to establish a hydrogen-fueled aircraft research and development program; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SPARK M. MATSUNAGA HYDROGEN-FUELED AIRCRAFT RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am introducing title II of Senator Matsunaga's comprehensive hydrogen research and development bill, S. 639, as separate legislation. S. 639 was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. We have held a hearing on the bill and are ready to act on it.

My purpose in introducing title II of S. 639 as separate legislation is to expedite the consideration of my friend's hydrogen research proposals. Senator Matsunaga will have many memorials, not the least of which is the affection he inspired among his colleagues. I hope to add his hydrogen bill to the legacy he has left for his country.

The subject matter of title II of S. 639 is hydrogen-fueled aircraft. The legislation establishes a research, development, and demonstration program for hydrogen-fueled aircraft in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. These provisions are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation. I serve on that committee, and I hope to have these provisions considered promptly by the committee. In this way the Senate can be ready to act on both titles of Senator Matsunaga's legislation at an early date.

Recently, the House passed H.R. 4521, the companion bill to S. 639. The administration has indicated a willingness to work with us on the legislation. So the elements of a public law are falling into place. I hope the Senate committees will do their part to move this legislation along. I intend to do my best to see that we get this legislation through the Senate and to the President.●

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mr. GLENN):

S. 2614. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish and coordinate research programs for osteoporosis and related bone disorders, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

OSTEOPOROSIS AND RELATED BONE DISORDERS RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND HEALTH SERVICES ACT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am introducing today with Senator GLENN a bill which, if it becomes law, should improve the Federal Government's research effort on osteoporosis. Representative OLYMPIA SNOWE will introduce the bill in the House of Representatives. I made a statement on the bill last Friday, May 4, and that statement can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day.

Today, I will just take a moment to reemphasize a few key points:

First, osteoporosis is a condition, which develops in an individual over many years, characterized by weakening of bones which made those individuals susceptibile to fractures of the hip, spine, and wrist.

Second, it is clear that osteoporosis is one of the major debilitating diseases of old age, affecting especially, but not only, older women.

Over an estimated 27 million Americans have this disease or related bone disorders. It is estimated that this condition is responsible for as many as 1,300,000 bone fractures annually. It is not unusual for those who fracture hips in old age to end up incapacitated and even in nursing homes. Those who fully recover mobility after hip fractures are very fortunate.

The direct medical costs of osteoporosis reached an estimated $10 billion in 1988. This disease is an enormous burden for our older population and an enormous burden on the Nation.

Finally, we are introducing this bill in order to foster more research on this disease within the Federal Government, on the assumption that scientific research offers the more promising route to eventual elimination of this disease as a public health problem.

Currently, the funding for research on this disease at the National Institutes of Health is only a tiny fraction of its direct medical costs. The bill will therefore authorize additional funds for research on osteoporosis for the lead agency on the disease, the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases, and for the National Institute on Aging, which also conducts research on the disease. The bill will also have several other provisions designed to help eventually eliminate this disease as a public health problem. I summarized the bill in my statement of May 4, and will not repeat myself here. I would ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, there are many working in the field of osteoporosis who believe that we have it within our power to eliminate this disease as a public health problem. It does seem to me that efforts to increase the research on osteoporosis and related disorders will help to reduce the burden created by this disease, and I hope that this bill will contribute to that end.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2614

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Osteoporosis and Related Bone Disorders Research, Education, and Health Services Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) osteoporosis, or porous bone, is a condition characterized by an excessive loss of bone tissue and an increased susceptibility to fractures of the hip, spine, and wrist;

(2) an estimated 24 million Americans have osteoporosis, with many cases undiagnosed because the condition develops without symptoms until a strain, bump, or fall causes a fracture;

(3) between 3 and 4 million Americans have Paget's disease, Osteogenesis Imperfecta, and other related metabolic bone disorders;

(4) osteoporosis is responsible for 1,300,000 bone fractures annually, including more than 250,000 hip fractures, 500,000 vertebral fractures, 200,000 fractures of the wrist, and 200,000 fractures at other limb sites;

(5) osteoporosis affects one-third to one-half of all postmenopausal women and nearly half of all people over age 75;

(6) direct medical costs of osteoporosis reached an estimated $10,000,000,000 in 1988 for the United States, not including the costs of family care and lost work for caregivers;

(7) direct medical costs of osteoporosis are expected to increase precipitously because the proportion of the population comprised of older persons is expanding and each generation of older persons tends to have a higher incidence of osteoporosis than preceding generations;

(8) technology now exists, and new technology is developing, that will permit early diagnosis and prevention of osteoporosis as well as management of the condition once it has developed;

(9) funding for research on osteoporosis and related bone disorders is severely constrained at key research institutes, including the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases and the National Institute on Aging;

(10) further research is needed to improve medical knowledge concerning—

(A) cellular mechanisms related to the processes of bone resorption and bone formation, and the effect of different agents on bone remodeling;

(B) risk factors for osteoporosis, including newly discovered risk factors, risk factors related to groups not ordinarily studied, such as men and minorities, and the relationship of aging processes to the development of osteoporosis;

(C) bone mass measurement technology, including techniques for making faster and more precise measurements and for interpreting measurements;

(D) calcium, including bioavailability, intake requirements, and the role of calcium in building heavier and denser skeletons;

(E) prevention and treatment, including the efficacy of current therapies, alternative drug therapies for prevention and treatment, and the role of exercise; and

(F) rehabilitation; and

(11) further educational efforts are needed to increase public and professional knowledge of the causes of, methods for avoiding, and treatment of osteoporosis.

SEC. 3. OSTEOPOROSIS RESEARCH.

Subpart 4 of part C of Title IV of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 285d et seq.) is amended—

(1) by inserting after the subpart heading the following new chapter heading:

"CHAPTER 1—ARTHRITIS";

and

(2) by adding at the end the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 2—OSTEOPOROSIS

"SEC. 442A. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this chapter:

"(1) ADVISORY PANEL.—The term 'Advisory Panel' means the Advisory Panel on Osteoporosis and Related Disorders, established in section 442D.

"(2) COUNCIL.—The term 'Council' means the Interagency Council on Osteoporosis and Related Disorders, established in section 442C.

"(3) DEPARTMENT.—The term 'Department' means the Department of Health and Human Services.

"(4) RELATED DISORDERS.—The term 'related bone disorders' includes—

"(A) Paget's disease, a bone disease characterized by enlargement and loss of density with bowing and deformity of the bones;

"(B) Osteogenesis Imperfecta, a familial disease marked by extreme brittleness of the long bones;

"(C) hyperparathyroidism, a condition characterized by the presence of excess parathormone in the body resulting in disturbance of calcium metabolism with loss of calcium from bone and renal damage;

"(D) hypoparathyroidism, a condition characterized by the absence of parathormone resulting in disturbances of calcium metabolism;

"(E) renal bone disease, a disease characterized by metabolic disturbances from dialysis, renal transplants, or other renal disturbances;

"(F) primary or postmenopausal osteoporosis and secondary osteoporosis, such as that induced by corticosteroids; and

"(G) other general disorders of bone and mineral metabolism including abnormalities of vitamin D.

"(5) RESOURCE CENTER.—The term 'Resource Center' means the Resource Center on Osteoporosis and Related Disorders, established in section 442F.

"SEC. 442B. EXPANSION OF RESEARCH ON OSTEOPOROSIS AND RELATED BONE DISORDERS.

"(a) RESEARCH.—The Director of the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases and the Director of the National Institute on Aging shall expand and intensify research on osteoporosis and related bone disorders. The research shall be in addition to research that is authorized under any other provision of law.

"(b) RESEARCH CENTERS.—The Director of the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases shall increase the number of Specialized Centers of Research devoted to research on osteoporosis and related bone disorders. The Director of the National Institute on Aging shall increase the number of program project grants devoted to creating centers of excellence in osteoporosis and related bone disorders.

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $24,000,000 for the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases and $12,000,000 for the National Institute on Aging for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993, and such sums as may be necessary for subsequent fiscal years. These funds are in addition to amounts authorized to be appropriated for biomedical research relating to osteoporosis and related bone disorders under any other provision of law.

"SEC. 442C. INTERAGENCY COUNCIL ON OSTEOPOROSIS AND RELATED BONE DISORDERS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Department an Interagency Council on Osteoporosis and Related Disorders. The Council shall be composed of—

"(1) the Assistant Secretary for Health;

"(2) the Surgeon General of the United States;

"(3) the Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation of the Department;

"(4) the Director of the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases;

"(5) the Director of the National Institute of Mental Health;

"(6) the Director of the National Institute on Aging;

"(7) the Director of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development;

"(8) the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration;

"(9) the Director of the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research;

"(10) the Director of the Bureau of Child and Maternal Health;

"(11) the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration;

"(12) the Director of the National Institute of Dental Research;

"(13) the Director of the National Institute of Diabetes, Digestive, and Kidney Diseases;

"(14) the Commissioner on Aging;

"(15) the Director of the Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion; and

"(16) such additional members as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Council shall—

"(1) coordinate research conducted by or through the Department on osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(2) establish a mechanism for sharing information on osteoporosis and related bone disorders among all officers and employees of the Department involved in carrying out programs serving older persons, midlife women, and young persons, in order to provide for full communication and exchange of information;

"(3) review and coordinate the most promising areas of research concerning osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(4) assist the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases, the National Institute on Aging, the National Institute of Diabetes, Digestive and Kidney Disease, the National Institute on Dental Research, and other institutes in developing and coordinating plans for research on osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(5) assist the Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion and the Administration on Aging and other offices in developing and coordinating plans for education and health promotion on osteoporosis and related bone disorders; and

"(6) establish mechanisms to use the results of research concerning osteoporosis and related bone disorders in the development of policies, programs, and other measures to improve the quality of life for older Americans.

"(c) CHAIRPERSON.—The Secretary shall select a Chairperson or co-Chairpersons for the Council from among its members.

"(d) QUORUM.—A majority of the members of the Council shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may hold hearings.

"(e) MEETINGS.—The Council shall meet periodically at the call of the Chairperson, but not less often than twice each year.

"(f) EXECUTIVE SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall appoint an Executive Secretary for the Council.

"(g) ADMINISTRATIVE STAFF AND SUPPORT.—The Secretary shall provide the Council with such additional administrative staff and support as may be necessary to enable the Council to carry out its functions.

"(h) REPORTS.—

"(1) INITIAL REPORT.—

"(A) PREPARATION.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this chapter, the Executive Secretary of the Council shall prepare a report detailing the research plans referred to in paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (b). The report shall describe the activities to be carried out under the research plans during each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993.

"(B) OTHER FEDERAL PROGRAMS.—To the maximum extent feasible, the report shall ensure that activities carried out under the research plans are coordinated with, and use the resources of, other Federal programs concerning osteoporosis and related bone disorders, including—

"(i) centers supported by the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases, the National Institute on Aging, and the National Institute of Diabetes, Digestive and Kidney Disease;

"(ii) other centers supported by Federal funds involved in research on osteoporosis and related bone disorders; and

"(iii) other programs concerning osteoporosis and related bone disorders that are planned or conducted by Federal agencies such as the Administration on Aging and the Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion, Federal agencies outside the Department, State or local agencies, community organizations, or private foundations.

"(C) DISTRIBUTION.—The Executive Secretary of the Council shall—

"(i) transmit the report to Congress; and

"(ii) make the report available to the public and to the Advisory Panel.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT REPORTS.—Not later than 12 months after the date on which the report required by paragraph (1) is transmitted to Congress, and annually thereafter, the Executive Secretary of the Council shall—

"(A) prepare a report that—

"(i) describes research and educational initiatives sponsored by the Federal Government on osteoporosis and related bone disorders; and

"(ii) makes recommendations for new research and educational initiatives on osteoporosis and related bone disorders; and

"(B) transmit the report to Congress and make the report available to the public.

"SEC. 442D. ADVISORY PANEL ON OSTEOPOROSIS AND RELATED DISORDERS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Department an Advisory Panel on Osteoporosis and Related Disorders. The Advisory Panel shall be composed of the following 15 voting members and additional nonvoting, ex officio members:

"(1) VOTING MEMBERS.—The Director of the Office of Technology Assessment shall appoint to the Advisory Panel—

"(A) 5 members who are biomedical research scientists with demonstrated achievement in biomedical research on osteoporosis and related bone disorders, including at least 1 researcher at a specialized center for research in osteoporosis;

"(B) 2 members with demonstrated achievements in research on community-based and family services covering osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(C) 1 member who is knowledgeable in health promotion and disease prevention programs concerning osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(D) 2 members who are associated with specialized bone programs affiliated with academic health centers;

"(E) 2 members who are experts in private health care insurance and long-term care financing; and

"(F) 3 members who are representatives of national voluntary organizations that are concerned with the problems of individuals with osteoporosis and related bone disorders and their families.

"(2) NONVOTING, EX OFFICIO MEMBERS.—The Advisory Panel shall include as nonvoting, ex officio members—

"(A) the Chairperson of the Council;

"(B) the Director of National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases;

"(C) the Director of the National Institute on Aging; and

"(D) such other members as the Secretary may appoint.

"(3) APPOINTMENT.—The Director of the Office of Technology Assessment and the Secretary shall appoint members to the Advisory Panel within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act. The Director shall not appoint to the Advisory Panel individuals who are officers or employees of the Federal Government.

"(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Advisory Panel shall advise the Secretary and Council with respect to the identification of—

"(1) research priorities for projects on osteoporosis, related bone disorders, and the care of individuals with osteoporosis or related bone disorders;

"(2) emerging issues in and promising areas of biomedical, clinical, and behavioral research on osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(3) emerging issues in research on health services for individuals, and the families of individuals, with osteoporosis or related bone disorders;

"(4) emerging issues in home-based and community-based services and systems of services for individuals, and the families of individuals, with osteoporosis or related bone disorders;

"(5) emerging issues in financing health care services and social services for individuals, and the families of individuals, with osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(6) emerging issues in health promotion programs concerning osteoporosis; and

"(7) emerging issues in professional and individual education concerning osteoporosis.

"(c) CHAIRPERSON.—The Secretary shall appoint a Chairperson of the Advisory Panel from among the members appointed.

"(d) TERM OF OFFICE.—The term of a member of the Advisory Panel shall be for the life of the Advisory Panel. A vacancy on the Advisory Panel shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment was made. A vacancy on the Advisory Panel shall not affect its powers.

"(e) QUORUM.—A majority of the members of the Advisory Panel appointed shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may hold hearings. The Advisory Panel may establish such subcommittees as the Advisory Panel considers appropriate.

"(f) MEETINGS.—The Advisory Panel shall meet at the call of the Chairperson, but not less often than twice per year.

"(g) EXECUTIVE SECRETARY.—The Executive Secretary of the Council shall serve as Executive Secretary of the Advisory Panel.

"(h) STAFF AND SUPPORT.—The Secretary shall provide the Advisory Panel with such additional administrative staff and support as may be necessary to enable the Advisory Panel to carry out its functions.

"(i) COMPENSATION AND TRAVEL EXPENSES.—

"(1) COMPENSATION.—Subject to paragraph (2), no member of the Advisory Panel shall receive compensation for service on the Advisory Panel.

"(2) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—Each member of the Advisory Panel shall receive reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of duties of the Advisory Panel.

"(j) REPORT.—The Advisory Panel shall—

"(1) prepare an annual report, which shall contain recommendations for administrative and legislative actions to—

"(A) improve services, education, and information for individuals, and families of individuals, with osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(B) improve professional education; and

"(C) provide for promising biomedical research related to osteoporosis and related bone disorders; and

"(2) transmit the annual report to the Congress, the Secretary, and the Council and make it available to the public.

"(k) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $200,000 for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1993.

"SEC. 442E. AWARDS FOR HEALTH PROMOTION AND DISEASE PREVENTION PROGRAMS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall make up to three grants to public and private nonprofit entities to establish model health promotion projects for community-based education on osteoporosis.

"(b) PROJECTS.—

"(1) TARGET POPULATIONS.—Each project funded under this section shall target one of the following populations:

"(A) Young and teenage girls.

"(B) Midlife women.

"(C) Older men and women.

"(2) SUBJECTS.—Projects funded under this section shall—

"(A) develop educational tools based on scientific information about the prevention and management of osteoporosis;

"(B) provide a model for dissemination of information to the target group, with an emphasis on currently existing systems of information; and

"(C) contain a means of evaluating the effectiveness of the model for the target group.

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $375,000 for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1993.

"SEC. 442F. RESOURCE CENTER ON OSTEOPOROSIS AND RELATED DISORDERS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director of the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases shall make grants or enter into contracts with eligible organizations to establish a Resource Center on Osteoporosis and Related Disorders.

"(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the Resource Center shall be to facilitate and enhance knowledge and understanding of osteoporosis and related bone disorders by disseminating information about research results, services and educational materials to health professionals, patients, and the public.

"(c) FUNCTIONS.—An organization receiving a grant or contract under this section shall—

"(1) compile, archive, and disseminate information concerning research, demonstration, evaluation, and training programs and projects concerning osteoporosis and related bone disorders;

"(2) annually publish a summary of the information compiled under paragraph (1) during the preceding 12-month period, and make the information available on request to appropriate individuals and entities, including educational institutions, research entities, and Federal and public agencies;

"(3) provide information and assistance in accessing community services to patients and the public;

"(4) coordinate leadership training for the development of health professional resource network on osteoporosis and related bone disorders; and

"(5) maintain a resource library on osteoporosis and related bone disorders.

"(d) INFORMATION SYSTEM AND TELEPHONE LINE.—

"(1) INFORMATION SYSTEM.—An organization receiving a grant or contract under this section shall establish a central computerized information system to—

"(A) compile and disseminate information concerning initiatives by State and local governments and private entities to provide programs and services for individuals with osteoporosis; and

"(B) translate scientific and technical information concerning the initiatives into information readily understandable by the general public, and make the information available on request.

"(2) TELEPHONE LINE.—An organization receiving a grant or contract under this section shall establish a national toll-free telephone line to make available the information described in paragraph (1) and information concerning Federal programs, services, and benefits for individuals with osteoporosis and their families.

"(e) FEES.—In accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, the organization receiving a grant or contract under this section shall charge appropriate fees for providing information through the Research Center as specified in subsections (c) or (d). The organization may make exceptions to the fees for individuals and organizations who are not financially able to pay the fees. The organization shall transfer the sums obtained from payment of the fees to the Secretary, who shall use the sums to carry out this section.

"(f) APPLICATION OR PROPOSAL.—In order to receive a grant or enter into a contract under this section, an organization shall submit an application or proposal to the Director of the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases. The application or proposal shall contain—

"(1) information demonstrating that the organization has a network of contacts that will enable the organization to receive information necessary to operate the central computerized information system described in subsection (d)(1); and

"(2) such other information as the Director may prescribe.

"(g) ELIGIBLE ORGANIZATIONS.—Organizations eligible to receive grants under this section shall include public and private nonprofit organizations that are knowledgeable about osteoporosis and related bone disorders. The Secretary shall establish additional eligibility criteria for organizations to receive grants or enter into contracts under this section.

"(h) RESEARCH SUMMARIES.—The Director of the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases, the National Institute on Aging, the National Institute of Diabetes, Digestive, and Kidney Diseases, the National Institute on Dental Research, and other agencies specified by the Secretary shall provide to the Resource Center summaries of the findings of research conducted on osteoporosis, related bone disorders, or relevant treatments for osteoporosis or related bone disorders.

"(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $500,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1992 and 1993.".

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 2615. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to clarify that the prohibition on the payment of attorney's fees in connection with Department of Veterans Affairs benefits proceedings applies only where the individual is applying for benefits; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

PAYMENT OF DEFENSE ATTORNEY'S FEES

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am today introducing with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia and fellow committee member [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] S. 2615, legislation which would remedy the Department of Veterans Affairs' [VA] application of a prohibition against the payment of attorney's fees by a veteran or other person who is confronted with an administrative debt-collection proceeding brought by VA. This legislation would make clear that in situations where a veteran faces a VA-initiated debt collection proceeding related to VA benefits, and in other situations in which no claim for benefits is involved—such as constitutional challenges to VA regulations, Freedom of Information Act cases, and VA actions to withhold payments because of asserted overpayments or other alleged debts to the VA—an attorney may be hired by the veteran at any point in the proceeding.

BACKGROUND

Under current law, VA treats, and under the predecessor provisions since 1986 VA has treated, a person facing a debt collection the same as a person initiating a benefits claim proceeding with respect to the attorneys' hiring limitations in sections 3404 and 3405 of title 38. These limitations, which were revised by provisions of Public Law 100-687, the Veterans Judicial Review Act, provide that in a proceeding before VA with respect to VA benefits a fee may not be paid to an attorney for services rendered before the first final decision of the Board of Veterans Appeals [BVA], the final adjudicatory body in VA's claims adjudication system. Criminal sanctions are provided for attorneys who solicit or receive fees in violation of the prohibition. These limitations are construed by VA to prohibit a person in any administrative proceeding before the agency from retaining an attorney until after the first, final decision of the BVA. VA's position was first set forth in a general counsel opinion issued May 5, 1986, and was upheld in a November 14, 1989, decision by the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia in the case of Bahnmiller v. Derwinski, 724 F. Supp. 1208.

This decision was the culmination of a lawsuit originally filed in June 1988 challenging VA's interpretation of the attorney-fee statutes. The suit argued that VA's interpretation violated the plain meaning and legislative intent of the law. At the time the lawsuit was filed, the attorney-fee provisions of sections 3404 and 3405 barred a veteran from paying more than $10 to an attorney for representation in any claim for an entitlement under a benefit program administered by VA. This longstanding fee limitation was originally enacted in 1862 in an effort to protect Civil War veterans from lawyers gaining large percentages of benefits awards. The suit challenged VA's application of it to situations in which the agency sought to recover a debt administratively.

Public Law 100-687 amended the fee statutes by permitting a veteran to pay reasonable fees for legal representation in a claim for benefits after a "first, final" decision by the BVA—that is, in proceedings, after a BVA denial of the claim, involving reconsideration of the denial or a reopening based on the submission of new and material evidence. Both the old and new versions of the fee-limiting statutes are currently in effect, depending on the date of an initiation of an appeal of a BVA decision. If the appeal of the BVA decision was filed prior to the November 18, 1988, enactment of the Veterans Judicial Review Act, the $10 limitation is still in effect. If the appeal was filed after that date, then the new fee provisions are operative.

As noted earlier, the Court, in Bahnmiller, upheld VA's position regarding its application of both the old and new attorney-fee provisions of sections 3404 and 3405 in holding that both the old and new fee statutes apply to debt collection proceedings up to the point at which the BVA denies an appeal. Following the release of the Court opinion, VA's general counsel on December 12, 1989, issued a clarifying memorandum which reconfirmed its policy of limiting access to counsel in debt collection proceedings under both the old and new law. Our bill would overrule both of these interpretations by the general counsel.

DISCUSSION

The legislation we are introducing today would, as to the new law, expressly authorize, prior to the "first, final" decision of the BVA, the payment of a fee to an attorney for services in situations in which VA, as the moving party, seeks to recover a debt related to VA benefits. It would also clarify that reasonable fees may be paid in cases in which no claim for benefits is involved, such as constitutional challenges to regulations and Freedom of Information Act cases. The bill would make the same policy clarification regarding the $10-fee limitation in the old law, which still applies to cases in which a notice of disagreement was filed before the November 18, 1988, enactment date of the Judicial Review Act.

According to information provided by VA, as of March 31, 1990, the number of pending debt collection cases was 746,674, and the dollar amount associated with these cases was $3,347,503,000. In fiscal year 1989, a total of 241,526 debt collection actions with an associated dollar value of $1,009,863,000 were initiated by VA. In fiscal year 1988, 205,341 cases were initiated to recover alleged debts totaling $770,108,000. These figures reflect the vast number of individuals who are presently involved in debt collection proceedings under the attorney-fee restrictions in both current and prior law.

Our goal is to make clear that a distinction must be drawn between situations in which a veteran, as the initiating party, seeks VA benefits and situations in which VA initiates an administrative action to recover an alleged bebt to VA. It is significant that for several years, from 1974 to 1986, VA itself made such a distinction under the old law. Through its Adjudication Procedures Manual, VA specifically exempted debt collection and benefits forfeiture proceedings from the attorney-fee restrictions—a position VA abandoned on May 5, 1986, when, as I noted earlier, a general counsel opinion concluded that all VA administrative proceedings would be subject to the fee statutes. Also, as I noted earlier, this position was reaffirmed in the December 12, 1989, general counsel opinion, which cited the Bahnmiller decision and the lack of express guidance in the legislative history of the Veterans' Judicial Review Act.

VA and Congress have historically attempted to keep the VA claims process as nonadversarial as possible. When a veteran makes a claim for benefits, VA personnel are obligated to provide assistance in the preparation and prosecution of the claim, and the Department is obligated to give the veteran the benefit of the doubt in deciding the claim. The historical justifications for the attorney-fee limitations have been both to retain the nonadversarial nature of the claims process and to protect veterans from being preyed upon by attorneys.

The changes in the attorney-fee provisions made by Public Law 100-687 in 1988 were premised on the recognition that veterans, as a class, were not so unable to protect themselves from unscrupulous attorneys that a permanent barrier needed to be maintained in law between them and attorneys, and also on the recognition that the nonadversarial nature of the claims process would be best served by limiting attorney involvement at the early stages of the claims process. I was extremely pleased that these remedial provisions were enacted into law as part of that comprehensive legislation to ensure basic fairness to veterans, and I believe that the provisions of the Veterans Judicial Review Act were well-crafted and serve to promote the interests both of veteran claimants and the maintenance of the nonadversarial adjudication process for benefit claims.

However, in cases in which VA is the plaintiff and seeks to recover an alleged debt from a veteran or other person, the very nature of the proceeding is different from those in which a person affirmatively seeks a benefit from VA, and because in initiating a debt collection proceeding VA and the alleged debtor are placed from the outset in adversarial roles, the interest in maintaining the nonadversarial nature of the system is not at issue.

Evidence of the fundamentally different nature of debt collection proceedings can be found in the fact that the Department in such proceedings commits itself by regulation to take "aggressive action" in collecting the outstanding debt (38 CFR section 1.910). The standard practice in such cases is for VA to issue demand letters to the alleged debtor, citing the possible adverse consequences—including reporting the existence of the debt to a consumer reporting agency which would affect the person's ability to obtain credit, and, if necessary, referring the debt to the Internal Revenue Service for collection—if the debt is not settled. In such cases, with the financial security and well-being of the alleged debtor and his or her family at stake, I believe it is both necessary and entirely appropriate to afford persons the unencumbered opportunity to retain legal representation in order to ensure that their interests are adequately protected.

Indeed, the original Senate-passed bill, which was ultimately incorporated in the legislation which was enacted as Public Law 100-687, would have done just that. As noted on pages 121-22 of the committee's report accompanying S. 2011 (S. Rept. 100-439), section 516 of that bill, which was derived from section 411 of S. 11, would have amended then-current section 3404(c) of title 38—> * * * so as to clarify that the limitation on attorney fees * * * are only applicable to cases involving claims for VA benefits and that where no claim for benefits is involved (for example, on constitutional challenges to regulations, Freedom of Information Act cases, on VA actions to collect or withhold payments because of asserted overpayments or other alleged debts to the VA, and on other nonclaim cases), the individual and the attorney would not be restricted by the [fee-limitation] provisions in section 3404.

Although this provision was not contained in the final compromise agreement, subsequent actions, including VA's reaffirmation of its position—which, as I noted earlier, had been changed after 12 years of its asserting the opposite position—that the attorney-fee limitations were applicable in debt collection cases and the Bahnmiller decision, have convinced me that this aspect of the law needs to be addressed with more specificity in order to clarify the scope of the provision's limitations and applicability.

In this regard, I note that at a House Committee on Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Housing and Memorial Affairs hearing on April 26, 1990, VA's new Chief Benefits Director, D'Wayne Gray, in response to a question as to whether a debt collection activity was an adversarial process, expressed his view that debt collection activities generally put the parties in an adversarial relationship. I could not agree with Mr. Gray more and, although he expressed his hope that the VA process is not adversarial, it is my belief that the process is inherently so, unfortunate as that may be. Thus, I believe that the provision we are introducing today is necessary to ensure that, in situations where the full force of the Government is brought to bear upon an alleged debtor, the person have the opportunity to hire legal counsel at the outset.

Mr. President, the American Bar Association's section of administrative law and regulatory practice approved at its August 1989 annual meeting a resolution which recommended that VA "administer its debt collection and forfeiture proceedings in a manner that allows veterans to hire attorneys without regard to the attorney fee limitations set forth in 38 U.S.C. sections 3404 and 3405 that are applicable to benefit claims actions." This resolution contains a brief, well-written report which outlines the historical and legislative background of the past and current attorney-fee provisions in title 38 and the adverse effects of the application of the current provisions in debt collection cases.

Mr. President, actions under the Freedom of Information Act and constitutional challenges to VA regulations or actions would, of course, continue to be exempt from the restriction on attorney fees. On its face, current law does not restrict the hiring of attorneys in these actions because they are not proceedings before VA with respect to benefits.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, this legislation is necessary to fulfill the great promise that Congress, in enacting the Veterans' Judicial Review Act, made to veterans and other persons who deal with VA that they will be afforded basic fairness in their dealings with, and meaningful review of administrative actions of, the Department. This provision would in no way alter the full force of the limitations and sanctions that exist under current law with regard to the hiring and paying of legal counsel in cases where a person affirmatively seeks a benefit from the Department. The complexity of debt proceedings and the potentially very serious impact to debt collection cases require that a veteran or other person alleged to owe a debt to VA have full opportunity to retain competent legal representation. I urge all of my colleagues to provide their strong support for this measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill we are introducing today and the ABA resolution and report which I discussed earlier appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2615

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (1) Section 3404(c) of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by inserting "(A)" after "(c)(1)";

(B) by redesignating paragraph (2) as subparagraph (B);

(C) in subparagraph (B) (as redesignated by clause (B)), by striking out "paragraph (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraph (A)"; and

(D) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) The provisions of this subsection shall apply only to cases involving a claim for benefits submitted by any person applying for benefits under the laws administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs, and such provisions shall not apply in cases in which the Government is proceeding against a person to collect an indebtedness or in which other attorneys' fees statutes apply.".

(2) Section 3404(c) of title 38, United States Code, as in effect on November 17,

1988, shall apply only to cases involving a claim for benefits submitted by any person applying for benefits under the laws administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs, and shall not apply with respect to cases in which the Government is proceeding against a person to collect an indebtedness or in which other attorneys' fees statutes apply.

RESOLUTION OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

RECOMMENDATION

Be it resolved, That the American Bar Association urges the United States Department of Veterans' Affairs (hereafter "DVA") to administer its debt collection and forefeiture proceedings in a manner that allows veterans to hire attorneys without regard to the attorney fee limitations set forth in 38 U.S.C. §§ 3404 and 3405 that are applicable to benefit claims cases. In furtherance of this resolution, the American Bar Association:

(1) Urges the DVA to issue a public statement to the effect (1) that the attorneys' fee provisions of 38 U.S.C. §§ 3404 and 3405 do not apply in administrative proceddings respecting debt collection or forfeiture, and (2) that previous pronouncements to the contrary are superseded.

(2) Urges the DVA to provide notice to all who become subject to debt collections or forefeiture proceedings that they are entitled to hire an attorney or nonlawyer representative of their own choosing to represent them before the agency, and that the attorneys' fee limitations of 38 U.S.C. §§ 3404 and 3405 do not apply in such proceedings. Such notice shall be provided immediately upon commencement of such proceedings against the veteran; and

(3) Urges Congress to enact legislation clarifying that the attorneys' fee limitations set forth in 38 U.S.C. §§ 3404, 3405 do not apply in administrative debt collection or forfeiture proceedings initiated against veterans by the DVA.

REPORT

The U.S. Department of Veterans' Affairs ("DVA") operates the largest public assistance program in the United States, dispensing benefits to veterans and their families in the form of disability compensation, educational benefits, home loan guarantees, health care and other services. Periodically, the DVA determines that a veteran has been "overpaid," or has otherwise incurred indebtedness to the U.S. Government in connection with receipt of benefits. When the DVA determines that a debt is allegedly owed to it by a veteran, it initiates collection action through administrative, and if necessary, through judicial proceedings.[1]

Veterans charged with owing money to the DVA are entitled to dispute the existence of the debt before the DVA. They are also entitled to contend that in any event collection would be against equity and good conscience, and that repayment should be waived. 38 C.F.R. §§ 1.911a, 1.955, 1.962, 1.963, 1.964 (1987). The veteran's contention are initially adjudicated before a DVA Regional Office Committee on Waivers and Compromises. If the veterans' arguments are rejected at the DVA Regional Office level, they are entitled to appeal the matter to the Board of Veterans Appeals ("BVA").

Once the DVA determines that a debt is allegedly owed to it, and before the veteran has exhausted his or her appellate rights before the agency, a full range of administrative sanctions may be used against the veteran. These activities include reporting the alleged debt to consumer reporting agencies, referral to the Internal Revenue Service for diversion of the veteran's income tax refund, garnishing the veteran's wages if he or she is a federal employee, offsetting existing benefits the veteran may be receiving, or referring the case to the U.S. Department of Justice for prosecution in the name of the United States.

As of September 1988, there were over 470,000 outstanding debt collection proceedings pending against veterans throughout the United States. The issues involved in these proceedings initiated by the DVA are often complex, and frequently involve matters of state law.[2] However, due to the DVA's erroneous interpretation of a civil war-era statute, veterans are denied the assistance of counsel in such proceedings, and counsel may be sanctioned with criminal penalties for accepting fees in such cases.

In 1862, Congress passed a law limiting to $5 the amount a veteran could pay an attorney to assist in applying for a pension.[3] The law was designed to prevent attorneys and "pension agents" from taking advantage of unwary veterans by charging excessive fees for relatively simple services, i.e., the filling out of simple claims forms. In the following years, Congress amended the original fee limit many times, and in 1936, enacted the "$10 limit" which remained on the books until 1988. Codified at 38 U.S.C. § 3404, the limit provided, in relevant part, the attorneys' fees in "allowed claims for monetary benefits . . . shall not exceed $10 with respect to any one claim." (italic added.) The attorneys' fee limit was accompanied by another statute establishing criminal sanctions in the form of fines and imprisonment for violation of the fee limitation. 38 U.S.C. § 3405.

For at least 12 years, from 1974 to 1986, the DVA properly recognized the obvious difference between a "claim" for benefits in the first instance, and an administrative debt collection proceeding initiated by the DVA. In its Adjudication Procedures Manual M21-1, which sets adjudication policy for all DVA offices nationwide, the DVA stated clearly that: "The fee limitation is not applicable in a case in which an attorney is representing a claimant in defending charges of forfeiture of rights or proceedings regarding waiver of recovery of overpayment. The amount of such fee is not determined by the VA and payment is to be made by the claimant."[4]

This policy was consistent with the plain meaning of the fee statutes, as well as the extensive legislative history. It was also consistent with "unofficial" DVA General Counsel advisory opinions previously rendered with respect to individual claims cases.

Abruptly, on May 5, 1986, the DVA General Counsel issued a formal, binding precedent opinion in the form of a memorandum, stating that henceforth, the fee statutes would apply to all DVA administrative proceedings, including proceedings involving debt collection and forfeiture.[5] In the memo, the General Counsel reasoned that "consistent application" of the fee statues was appropriate, given that "both waiver and forfeiture proceedings are adjudicatory in nature, and are conducted in the same informal setting as other BVA benefits adjudications."

The DVA's reversal of policy is erroneous for several reasons. First, the plain language of the fee limiting statutes repeatedly referred to affirmative "claims" for benefits, not debt collection proceedings initiated by the DVA.[6] Second, the extensive legislative history of these statutes confirms the result reached under the "plain langauge" test.[7]

Third, 38 U.S.C. § 3405 establishes criminal sanctions for violation of the fee limits. It is well established that any ambiguity in a criminal statute must be construed against the governmental entity. United States v. Enmons, 410 U.S. 396, 93 S. Ct. 1007, 1015 (1973). Thus, even if the fee statutes were ambiguous on this issue, absent a specific statutory reference to interpretation must be rejected.

Finally, the DVA's interpretation of the fee statutes is prima facie unreasonable. To suggest, as the DVA does, that debt collection proceedings are essentially similar to affirmative claims proceedings due to the fact that both involve the use of "informal" procedures is to ignore the obvious. Debt collection proceedings, by their very nature, are extremely adversarial. It is one thing to apply for education benefits, or a DVA guaranteed mortgage, and be denied. It is quite another to be subject to aggressive debt collection by the federal government, where one's credit may be ruined, reputation injured, wages garnished, etc.[8]

---

[1] Similarly, if the DVA determines that a veteran has engaged in the perpetration of a fraud against the DVA for the purposes of receiving DVA benefits, it will commence "forfeiture" of benefits proceedings against the veteran pursuant to 38 U.S.C. § 3503, 38 C.F.R. § 3.900 et seq. In such cases, the veteran is notified of the DVA's findings, and is given an opportunity to present a defense, including the right to submit evidence and to have a hearing.

[2] For example, a substantial number of debt collection proceedings initiated by the DVA involve home loan foreclosures, where state laws respecting notice and other foreclosure procedures are applicable.

[3] 12 Stat. 566, 568 (1862).

[4] VA Manual M21-1, § 3.12 (formally removed February 8, 1988) (italic added).

[5] Veterans' Administration Memorandum from General Counsel to Chief Benefits Director re: "Scope of Statutory Limitation on Attorneys' Fees in Claims Involving Benefits Administered by the Veterans' Administration, 38 U.S.C. §§ 3404(c), 3405" (May 5, 1986).

[6] As amended by the Veterans' Judicial Review Act, 38 U.S.C. § 3404(c) now imposes fee restrictions "in connection with a proceeding before the Veterans' Administration with respect to benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration . . ." P.L. 100-687, Section 1094. While the language of the fee statute as amended is arguably broader than the former version of the statute, which consistently referenced "claims for benefits," there is no indication in the legislative history of P.L. 100-687 that Congress affirmatively decided to broaden the coverage of the fee restrictions to include either debt collection proceedings or forfeiture proceedings.

[7] On June 30, 1987, the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs published a legislative history of the fee limitation prepared at the Committee's request by the non-partisan American Law Division of the Library of Congress. This exhaustive history analyzes approximately thirty statutes either amending or affecting the fee limitation, and quotes numerous passages of Congressional floor and committee debate. Nowhere in this impartial survey is there anything supporting the DVA's application of the fee limits to debt collection and forfeiture proceedings. See House Committee Print No. 8, 100th Cong., 1st Sess. (June 30, 1987).

[8] The validity of the DVA's statutory interpretation as reflected in the May 5, 1986 General Counsel opinion is currently under federal court challenge (Eastern District of Virginia, Alexandria Division) in the matter of Bahnmiller et al. v. Turnage, Civil Action No. 88-732 A.

Recently, the $10 fee limitation was amended by the Veterans' Judicial Review Act, P.L. 100-687.[9] As amended, veterans are prohibited from paying any fees to an attorney until the BVA has rendered a "first, final decision." Only after that "first, final decision" has been rendered may a veteran pay an attorney "reasonable" fees for services rendererd.[10] Thus, if the DVA persists in its current view that the fee limitations apply to debt collection and forfeiture proceedings, the practical effect is that before a veteran may hire an attorney in a debt collection or forfeiture proceeding, he or she must: (1) dispute the existence of the debt, or request a waiver before the DVA's Regional Office Committee; (2) lose the case before the Regional Office Committee; (3) appeal the case to the BVA; and (4) lose the appeal to the BVA. Only then is the veteran entitled to retain a lawyer in an attempt to reopen the case. Meanwhile, the veteran is exposed to the full range of administrative sanctions, and must attempt to negotiate often complex legal issues without the assistance of counsel.[11]

United States Veterans have sacrificed greatly to preserve the fundamental rights of all Americans to due process. If Congress had intended to deprive these veterans of the fundamental right to counsel when accused of owing money to the federal government, it would have said so. It did not. Finally, the fee statutes were enacted to protect veterans, not harm them. The DVA's current interpretation, however, is extremely harmful to veterans. Accordingly, we urge the adoption of the proposed resolution.

Respectfully submitted,

SALLY KATZEN,
Chair, Section of Administrative Law, and Regulatory Practice.

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. CONRAD, and Mr. JOHNSTON):

S. 2616. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide coverage under such title for certain chiropractic services authorized to be performed under State law, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF CERTAIN CHIROPRACTIC SERVICES

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to extend the range of services for which chiropractors can be reimbursed under the Medicare Program. I introduced this bill to achieve two primary goals. First, I want to expand health care options for patients and thereby stimulate competition in this critical industry to help control escalating health care costs. Second, I hope to correct an inequity in current law that discriminates against the chiropractic profession.

Current Medicare law strictly limits reimbursement for chiropractors to "treatment by means of manual manipulation of the spine (to correct a subluxation demonstrated by x-ray to exist) * * *." However, despite this explicit demand for x ray diagnostics, chiropractors themselves cannot be reimbursed for those x rays the law requires. My bill corrects this inconsistent Medicare policy, and enables chiropractors to be reimbursed for those services they already routinely provide: diagnostic x rays, appropriate physical examinations, and adjustments of the spine. Medicare patients currently either do not receive these chiropractic services, or else pay for them out of pocket or through Medigap premiums.

The current highly restrictive laws regulating chiropractic payment under Medicare were established in 1972. Since that time, chiropractors have been recognized and licensed as primary health care practitioners in every State, every territory, and the District of Columbia, and it is now time to amend the Medicare laws to recognize the chiropractic profession's autonomy and the value of the services chiropractors provide.

I grew up in a community in which chiropractors perform a valuable service by providing an alternative to allopathic medicine. The nearly 200 chiropractors in South Dakota continue to serve the State well, and their profession is acknowledged to play a significant role in the State's health care delivery system.

I am convinced that competition between health care providers is essential if we are ever going to get control of our spiraling health care costs. And yet this competition is virtually impossible when Federal reimbursement policies are written in such a way that entire groups of licensed professionals are denied payment for the services they provide. This short-sighted policy limits freedom of choice for health care consumers, and may force them to seek out more expensive care than is actually required.

At a time when soaring health care costs are threatening both the quality and the economic stability of our national health care delivery system, the cost savings potential of conservative, nonhospital-based chiropractic care ought to be fully explored. One of the most pressing issues facing our society today is how to provide access to quality health care at a reasonable cost. The bill I am introducing today will advance that objective. I hope it will foster vigorous discussion of alternative health care delivery models, and I urge my colleagues in the Senate to support this measure to ensure that Medicare patients have access to the benefits of chiropractic care.●

By Mr. ROBB:

S.J. Res. 312. Joint resolution designating the week of November 12, 1990, through November 18, 1990, as "National Critical Care Awareness Week;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CRITICAL CARE AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today a commemorative resolution which proclaims the week of November 12, 1990, as "National Critical Care Awareness Week," I am inserting a copy of the resolution into the RECORD following the conclusion of my prepared statement.

Critical care encompasses all life-threatening medical emergencies, from the paramedics at the scene of an accident, to the doctors in an emergency room, to the highly specialized round-the-clock medical teams in intensive care units. ICU, the most commonly recognized form of critical care, encompasses between 15 and 20 percent of hospital costs in the Nation today, and 1 percent of our gross national product.

Since roughly 80 percent of all Americans will experience critical care either as a patient, or as a family member of a patient, during their lifetimes, it's important to educate the public on this increasingly technical and complex aspect of health care. During "National Critical Care Awareness Week," activities are planned to heighten public awareness on what, for example, may happen when faced with a critical injury or illness, and how best to respond.

In September 1988, my former press secretary, George Stoddart, lost a courageous battle against a cancerous brain tumor. To provide a teaching mechanism for doctors and nurses seeking to understand the important human component of medicine and to enable future patients and their families to prepare for similar ordeals, George and his wife, Sandy, agreed to have his surgery chronicled in a film on critical care. I was honored to provide the introduction.

George's commitment to turning his own difficult experience into a constructive legacy to others, heightened my own awareness of critical care, an awareness I believe all Americans should share.

Mr. President, "National Critical Care Awareness Week" is one positive step in educating our citizens. I hope my colleagues will join me in approving the passage of this important resolution.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 435

At the request of Mr. REID, the name of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] was added as a cosponsor of S. 435, a bill to amend section

---

[9] P.L. 100-687 was formally enacted on November 18, 1988.

[10] We note that in 1977, the ABA adopted a resolution recommending that Congress repeal the $10 fee limit set forth at 38 U.S.C. § 3404(c). This resolution is fully consistent with the ABA's prior resolution.

[11] Of course, if the case is referred to the Justice Department for prosecution, and suit is filed against the veteran in the name of the United States, the fee restrictions do not apply. However, the vast majority of debt collection cases initiated by the DVA are in the administrative, rather than the judicial arena.

118 of the Internal Revenue Code to provide for certain exceptions from certain rules determining contributions in aid of construction.

S. 501

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] was withdrawn as a cosponsor of S. 501, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, to make permanent, and to increase the amount of, the exclusion for amounts received under qualified group legal services plans.

S. 513

At the request of Ms. MIKULSKI the name of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] was added as a cosponsor of S. 513, a bill to amend chapters 83 and 84 of title 5 United States Code, to extend certain retirement provisions of such chapters which are applicable to law enforcement officers to inspectors of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, inspectors and canine enforcement officers of the U.S. Customs Service, and revenue officers of the Internal Revenue Service.

S. 994

At the request of Mr. METZENBAUM, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 994, a bill to amend the Clayton Act regarding interlocking directorates and officers.

S. 995

At the request of Mr. METZENBAUM, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 995, a bill to amend the Clayton and Sherman Acts regarding antitrust procedures.

S. 996

At the request of Mr. METZENBAUM, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] was added as a consponsor of S. 996, a bill to amend the Clayton Act regarding damages for the United States.

S. 1273

At the request of Mr. BOREN, the names of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. COATS] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] were added as cosponsors of S. 1273, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, with respect to treatment by cooperatives of gains or losses from sale of certain assets.

S. 1557

At the request of Mr. ROTH, the name of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1557, a bill to amend title 17 United States Code, to permit the unlicensed viewing of videos under certain conditions.

S. 1577

At the request of Mr. BOREN, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1577, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, to provide that charitable contributions of appreciated property will not be treated as an item of tax preference.

S. 1696

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1696, a bill to amend title 28 of the United States Code to prohibit racially discriminatory capital sentencing.

S. 2159

At the request of Mr. BOSCHWITZ, the name of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2159, a bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to eliminate the earnings test for individuals who have attained retirement age.

S. 2241

At the request of Mr. GRAHAM, the name of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2241, a bill to provide scholarships to law enforcement personnel who seek further education.

S. 2266

At the request of Mr. GRASSLEY, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2266, a bill to promote the development of new and expanded markets for the export of U.S. agricultural commodities and products, and for other purposes.

S. 2342

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the name of the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2342, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize additional grants for home health care demonstration projects, to require that applications be submitted to the chief executive officer of the State concerned in connection with such grants, and for other purposes.

S. 2356

At the request of Mr. SYMMS, the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2356, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, to allow tax-exempt organizations to establish cash and deferred pension arrangements for their employees.

S. 2384

At the request of Mr. BOREN, the names of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] were added as cosponsors of S. 2384, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, with respect to the treatment of certain real estate activities under the limitations on losses from passive activities.

S. 2408

At the request of Mr. GLENN, the name of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2408, a bill to establish a system for labeling of plastic resin products, and to promote recycling of plastics and use of degradable plastics.

S. 2605

At the request of Mr. PRYOR, the name of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2605, a bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to provide mechanisms to control Medicaid drug prices while assuring that beneficiaries receive quality medical care, physicians' prerogative to prescribe is protected, and the role of pharmacists is enhanced.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 263

At the request of Mr. HELMS, the name of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 263, a joint resolution to designate October 11, 1990, as "National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution Centennial Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 290

At the request of Mr. ARMSTRONG, the names of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. BYRAN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 290, a joint resolution to designate the week of July 22, 1990, through July 28, 1990, as the "National Week of Recognition and Remembrance for Those Who Served in the Korean War."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 292

At the request of Mr. PELL, the names of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 292, a joint resolution to designate the year 1991 as the "Year of the Lifetime Reader."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 301

At the request of Mr. PELL, the names of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 301, a joint resolution designating October 1990 as "National Breast Cancer Awareness Month."

SENATE RESOLUTION 283—DESIGNATION OF SPARK M. MATSUNAGA TABLE

Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 283

Whereas Senator Spark M. Matsunaga served in the Senate with honor and distinction for more than thirteen years;

Whereas Senator Matsunaga served as Chief Deputy Democratic Whip during the 95th, 96th, 97th, 98th, 99th, and 100th Congresses;

Whereas his service to the Senate was characterized by exemplary diligence, legendary warmth, compassion, and courage, and firm devotion to American ideals;

Whereas Senator Matsunaga, during his service in the Senate, extended special attention to the needs of all citizens of his State of Hawaii, and escorted his constituents on personal tours of the Capitol, inviting them to dine with him at the center table in the Senator's Dining Room;

Whereas by virtue of his extraordinary efforts and uncommon kindness and generosity, it is appropriate that he be long remembered: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the center table in the Senators' Dining Room of the United States Capitol is hereby designated as, and shall hereafter be known as, the "Spark M. Matsunaga Table".

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM ACT

BOREN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1613

Mr. BOREN (for himself, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. FORD, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BYRD, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. SIMON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DODD, Mr. NUNN, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. REID, Mr. GLENN, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. ROBB, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. INOUYE, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. PELL, Mr. SASSER, Mr. KOHL, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. GORE, Mr. EXON, Mr. KERREY, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 137) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for a voluntary system of spending limits and partial public financing of Senate general election campaigns, to limit contributions by multicandidate political committees, and for other purposes, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF CAMPAIGN ACT; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990".

(b) AMENDMENT OF FECA.—When used in this Act, the term "FECA" means the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—

Sec. 1. Short title; amendment of Campaign Act; table of contents.
TITLE I—SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGN SPENDING LIMITS AND BENEFITS
Sec. 101. Senate spending limits and public benefits.
Sec. 102. Ban on contributions to Senate candidates by political action committees.
Sec. 103. Broadcast rates.
Sec. 104. Preferential rates for mail.
Sec. 105. Disclosure by noneligible candidates.
Sec. 106. Reporting requirements.
Sec. 107. Other definitions.
TITLE II—EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS
Subtitle A—Independent Expenditures
Sec. 201. Cooperative expenditures not treated as independent expenditures.
Sec. 202. Equal broadcast time.
Sec. 203. Attribution of communications.
Subtitle B—Expenditures
PART I—PERSONAL LOANS; CREDIT
Sec. 211. Personal contributions and loans.
Sec. 212. Extensions of credit.
PART II—PROVISIONS RELATING TO SOFT MONEY OF POLITICAL PARTIES
Sec. 215. Limitations on contributions to State political party committees.
Sec. 216. Provisions relating to national, State, and local party committees.
Sec. 217. Restrictions on fundraising by candidates and officeholders.
Sec. 218. Reporting requirements.
Subtitle C—Contributions
Sec. 221. Limits on contributions by certain political committees to political parties.
Sec. 222. Contributions through intermediaries and conduits.
Sec. 223. Excess campaign funds.
Sec. 224. Contributions by dependents not of voting age.
Subtitle D—Reporting Requirements
Sec. 231. Reporting requirements.
TITLE III—FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION
Sec. 301. Use of candidates' names.
Sec. 302. Reporting requirements.
Sec. 303. Provisions relating to the general counsel of the commission.
Sec. 304. Retention of fees by the commission.
Sec. 305. Enforcement.
Sec. 306. Penalties.
Sec. 307. Random audits.
Sec. 308. Attribution of communications.
Sec. 309. Fraudulent solicitation of contributions.
TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS
Sec. 401. Restriction of control of certain types of political committees by incumbents in or candidates for Federal office.
Sec. 402. Polling data contributed to a senatorial candidate.
Sec. 403. Mass mailings.

TITLE I—SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGN SPENDING LIMITS AND BENEFITS

SEC. 101. SENATE SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—FECA is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE V—SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title—

"(1) except as otherwise provided in this title, the definitions under section 301 shall apply for purposes of this title insofar as such definitions relate to elections to the office of United States Senator;

"(2) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible under section 502 to receive benefits under this title;

"(3) the terms 'Senate Election Campaign Fund' and 'Fund' mean the Senate Election Campaign Fund established under section 506;

"(4) the term 'general election' means any election which will directly result in the election of a person to the office of United States Senator, but does not include an open primary election;

"(5) the term 'general election period' means, with respect to any candidate, the period beginning on the day after the date of the primary or runoff election for the specific office the candidate is seeking, whichever is later, and ending on the earlier of—

"(A) the date of such general election; or

"(B) the date on which the candidate withdraws from the campaign or otherwise ceases actively to seek election;

"(6) the term 'immediate family' means—

"(A) a candidate's spouse;

"(B) a child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate or the candidate's spouse; and

"(C) the spouse of any person described in subparagraph (B);

"(7) the term 'major party' has the meaning given such term in section 9002(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, except that if a candidate qualified under State law for the ballot in a general election in an open primary in which all the candidates for the office participated and which resulted in the candidate and at least one other candidate qualifying for the ballot in the general election, such candidate shall be treated as a candidate of a major party for purposes of this title;

"(8) the term 'primary election' means an election which may result in the selection of a candidate for the ballot in a general election for the office of United States Senator;

"(9) the term 'primary election period' means, with respect to any candidate, the period beginning on the day following the date of the last election for the specific office the candidate is seeking and ending on the earlier of—

"(A) the date of the first primary election for that office following the last general election for that office; or

"(B) the date on which the candidate withdraws from the election or otherwise ceases actively to seek election;

"(10) the term 'runoff election' means an election held after a primary election which is prescribed by applicable State law as the means for deciding which candidate will be on the ballot in the general election for the office of United States Senator;

"(11) the term 'runoff election period' means, with respect to any candidate, the period beginning on the day following the date of the last primary election for the specific office such candidate is seeking and ending on the date of the runoff election for such office;

"(12) the term 'voting age population' means the resident population, 18 years of age or older, as certified pursuant to section 315(e); and

"(13) the term 'expenditure' has the meaning given such term by section 301(9), except that in determining any expenditures made by, or on behalf of, a candidate or candidate's authorized committees, section 301(9)(B) shall be applied without regard to clause (ii) or (vi) thereof.

"CANDIDATES ELIGIBLE TO RECEIVE BENEFITS

"SEC. 502. (a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, a candidate is an eligible candidate if the candidate—

"(1) meets the primary and general election filing requirements of subsections (b) and (c);

"(2) meets the primary and runoff election expenditure limits of subsection (d); and

"(3) meets the threshold contribution requirements of subsection (e).

"(b) PRIMARY FILING REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if the candidate files with the Commission a declaration as to whether—

"(A) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(i) will meet the primary and runoff election expenditure limits of subsection (d); and

"(ii) will only accept contributions for the primary and runoff elections which do not exceed such limits;

"(B) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees will meet the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b); and

"(C) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees will meet the limitation on expenditures from personal funds under section 503(a).

"(2) The declaration under paragraph (1) shall be filed on the date the candidate files as a candidate for the primary election.

"(c) GENERAL ELECTION FILING REQUIREMENT.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if the candidate files a certification with the Commission under penalty of perjury that—

"(A) the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(i) met the primary and runoff election expenditure limits under subsection (d); and

"(ii) did not accept contributions for the primary or runoff election in excess of the primary or runoff expenditure limit under subsection (d), whichever is applicable;

"(B) the candidate met the threshold contribution requirement under subsection (e), and that only allowable contributions were taken into account in meeting such requirement;

"(C) at least one other candidate has qualified for the same general election ballot under the law of the State involved;

"(D) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate—

"(i) except as otherwise provided by this title, will not make expenditures which exceed the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b);

"(ii) will not accept any contributions in violation of section 315;

"(iii) except as otherwise provided by this title, will not accept any contribution for the general election involved to the extent that such contribution would cause the aggregate amount of such contributions to exceed the sum of—

"(I) the amount of the threshold contribution requirement under subsection (e); plus

"(II) the amount of contributions from State residents which may be taken into account under section 503(b)(4) in increasing the general election expenditure limit; plus

"(III) the amount which may be maintained in a compliance and official expense fund under section 503(c);

"(iv) will deposit all payments received under this title in an account insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation from which funds may be withdrawn by check or similar means of payment to third parties;

"(v) will furnish campaign records, evidence of contributions, and other appropriate information to the Commission; and

"(vi) will cooperate in the case of any audit and examination by the Commission under section 507; and

"(E) the candidate intends to make use of the benefits provided under section 504.

"(2) The declaration under paragraph (1) shall be filed not later than 7 days after the earlier of—

"(A) the date the candidate qualifies for the general election ballot under State law; or

"(B) if, under State law, a primary or runoff election to qualify for the general election ballot occurs after September 1, the date the candidate wins the primary or runoff election.

"(d) PRIMARY AND RUNOFF EXPENDITURE LIMITS.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if:

"(A) The candidate or the candidate's authorized committees did not make expenditures for the primary election in excess of the lesser of—

"(i) 67 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b); or

"(ii) $2,750,000.

"(B) The candidate and the candidate's authorized committees did not make expenditures for any runoff election in excess of 20 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) The limitations under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) with respect to any candidate shall be increased by the aggregate amount of independent expenditures in opposition to, or on behalf of any opponent of, such candidate during the primary or runoff election period, whichever is applicable, which are required to be reported to the Commission with respect to such period under section 304A(b) (relating to independent expenditures in excess of $10,000).

"(3)(A) If the contributions received by the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees for the primary election or runoff election exceed the expenditures for either such election, such excess contributions shall be treated as contributions for the general election and expenditures for the general election may be made from such excess contributions.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to the extent that such treatment of excess contributions—

"(i) would result in the violation of any limitation under section 315; or

"(ii) would cause the aggregate contributions received for the general election to exceed the limits under subsection (c)(1)(D)(iii).

"(e) THRESHOLD CONTRIBUTION REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The requirements of this subsection are met if the candidate and the candidate's authorized committees have received allowable contributions during the applicable period in an amount at least equal to 10 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) For purposes of this section and section 504(b)—

"(A) The term 'allowable contributions' means contributions which are made as gifts of money by an individual pursuant to a written instrument identifying such individual as the contributor.

"(B) The term 'allowable contributions' shall not include—

"(i) contributions made directly or indirectly through an intermediary or conduit which are treated as made by such intermediary or conduit under section 315(a)(8)(B);

"(ii) contributions from any individual during the applicable period to the extent such contributions exceed $250; or

"(iii) contributions from individuals residing outside the candidate's State to the extent such contributions exceed 50 percent of the aggregate allowable contributions (without regard to this clause) received by the candidate during the applicable period. Clauses (ii) and (iii) shall not apply for purposes of section 504(b).

"(3) For purposes of this subsection and section 504(b), the term 'applicable period' means—

"(A) the period beginning on January 1 of the calendar year preceding the calendar year of the general election involved and ending on—

"(i) the date on which the certification under subsection (c) is filed by the candidate; or

"(ii) for purposes of section 504(b), the date of such general election; or

"(B) in the case of a special election for the office of United States Senator, the period beginning on the date the vacancy in such office occurs and ending on the date of the general election involved.

"(f) INDEXING.—The $2,750,000 amount under subsection (d)(1) shall be increased as of the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of subsection (d), the base period shall be the calendar year in which the first general election after the date of the enactment of this title occurs.

"LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 503. (a) LIMITATION ON USE OF PERSONAL FUNDS.—The aggregate amount of expenditures which may be made during an election cycle by an eligible candidate or such candidate's authorized committees from the following sources shall not exceed $250,000:

"(1) The personal funds of the candidate and members of the candidate's immediate family.

"(2) Personal debt incurred by the candidate and members of the candidate's immediate family.

"(b) GENERAL ELECTION EXPENDITURE LIMIT.—(1) Except as otherwise provided in this title, the aggregate amount of expenditures for a general election by an eligible candidate and the candidate's authorized committees shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) $5,500,000; or

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) $950,000; or

"(ii) $400,000; plus

"(I) 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population not in excess of 4,000,000; and

"(II) 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population in excess of 4,000,000.

"(2) In the case of an eligible candidate in a State which has no more than 1 transmitter for a commercial Very High Frequency (VHF) television station licensed to operate in that State, paragraph (1)(B)(ii) shall be applied by substituting—

"(A) '80 cents' for '30 cents' in subclause (I); and

"(B) '70 cents' for '25 cents' in subclause (II).

"(3) The amount otherwise determined under paragraph (1) for any calendar year shall be increased by the same percentage as the percentage increase for such calendar year under section 502(f) (relating to indexing).

"(4)(A) The limitation under this subsection (without regard to this paragraph) shall be increased by the lesser of—

"(i) 25 percent of such limitation; or

"(ii) the amount of contributions described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) Contributions are described in this subsection if such contributions—

"(i) are made after the time contributions have been received in an amount at least equal to the threshold contribution requirement under section 502(e);

"(ii) are in amounts of $100 or less; and

"(iii) are made by an individual who was, at the time the contributions were made, a resident of the State in which the general election is held;

except that the total amount of contributions taken into account under subparagraph (A) with respect to any individual shall not exceed $100.

"(C) Except as otherwise expressly provided, any reference in any provision of law to the general election expenditure limit under this subsection shall be treated as a reference to such limit computed without regard to this paragraph.

"(c) COMPLIANCE AND OFFICIAL EXPENSE FUND.—(1) The limitation under subsection (b) shall not apply to qualified legal and accounting expenditures or qualified official expenditures made by a candidate or the candidate's authorized committees or a Federal officeholder from a compliance and official expense fund meeting the requirements of paragraph (2).

"(2) A compliance and official expense fund meets the requirements of this paragraph if—

"(A) the only amounts transferred to the fund are amounts received in accordance with the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act;

"(B) the aggregate amount transferred to, and expenditures made from, the fund do not exceed the sum of—

"(i) the lesser of—

"(I) 15 percent of the general election expenditure limit under subsection (b) for the general election for which the fund was established; or

"(II) $300,000; plus

"(ii) the amount determined under paragraph (4); and

"(C) no funds received by the candidate pursuant to section 504(a)(3) may be transferred to the fund.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) The term 'qualified legal and accounting expenditures' means the following:

"(i) Any expenditures for costs of legal and accounting services provided in connection with—

"(I) any administrative or court proceeding initiated pursuant to this Act during the election cycle for such general election; or

"(II) the preparation of any documents or reports required by this Act or the Commission.

"(ii) Any expenditures for legal and accounting services provided after the general election for which the compliance and official expense fund was established to ensure compliance with this Act with respect to the election cycle for such general election.

"(iii) Expenditures for the extraordinary costs of legal and accounting services provided in connection with the candidate's activities as a holder of Federal office other than costs for the purpose of influencing the election of such candidate to Federal office.

"(B) The term 'qualified official expenditures' mean expenditures described in section 313(b).

"(4)(A) If, after a general election, a candidate determines that the qualified legal and accounting expenditures exceed the limitation under paragraph (2)(B), the candidate may petition the Commission for an increase in such limitation. The Commission shall authorize an increase in such limitation in the amount (if any) by which the Commission determines the qualified legal and accounting expenditures exceed such limitation, reduced by the amount of qualified official expenditures. Such determination shall be subject to judicial review under section 509.

"(B) Except as provided in section 315, any contribution received or expenditure made pursuant to this paragraph shall not be taken into account for any contribution or expenditure limit applicable to the candidate under this title.

"(5)(A) A candidate shall terminate a compliance and official expense fund as of the earlier of—

"(i) the date of the first primary election for the office following the general election for such office for which such fund was established; or

"(ii) the date specified by the candidate.

"(B) Any amounts remaining in a compliance and official expense fund as of the date determined under subparagraph (A) shall be transferred—

"(i) to a compliance and official expense fund for the election cycle for the next general election;

"(ii) to an authorized committee of the candidate as contributions allocable to the election cycle for the next general election; or

"(iii) to the Senate Election Campaign Fund.

"(d) PAYMENT OF TAXES.—The limitation under subsection (b) shall not apply to any expenditure by the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees for Federal, State, or local taxes on earnings allocable to contributions received by such candidates or committees.

"BENEFITS ELIGIBLE CANDIDATE ENTITLED TO RECEIVE

"SEC. 504. (a) IN GENERAL.—An eligible candidate shall be entitled to—

"(1) the broadcast media rates provided under section 315(b)(3) of the Communications Act of 1934;

"(2) the mailing rates provided in section 3629 of title 39, United States Code;

"(3) payments from the Senate Election Campaign Fund in the amounts determined under subsection (b); and

"(4) voter communication vouchers in the amount determined under subsection (c).

"(b) AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS.—(1) For purposes of subsection (a)(3), except as provided in section 506(d), the amounts determined under this subsection are—

"(A) the public financing amount;

"(B) the independent expenditure amount; and

"(C) in the case of an eligible candidate who has an opponent in the general election who receives contributions, or makes (or obligates to make) expenditures, for such election in excess of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), the excess expenditure amount.

"(2)(A) For purposes of paragraph (1), the public financing amount is an amount equal to the general election expenditure limit under subsection (b), reduced by—

"(i) the threshold contribution requirement under section 502(e); and

"(ii) the amount of voter communication vouchers issued to the eligible candidate.

"(B) In the case of an eligible candidate who is not a major party candidate, the public financing amount is the lesser of—

"(i) the allowable contributions of the eligible candidate during the applicable period in excess of the threshold contribution requirement under section 502(e); or

"(ii) 50 percent of the amount determined under subparagraph (A) with respect to a candidate of a major party.

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (1), the independent expenditure amount is the total amount of independent expenditures made, or obligated to be made, during the general election period by 1 or more persons in opposition to, or on behalf of an opponent of, an eligible candidate which are required to be reported by such persons under section 304A(b) with respect to the general election period and are certified by the Commission under section 304A(e).

"(4) For purposes of paragraph (1), the excess expenditure amount is the amount determined as follows:

"(A) In the case of a major party candidate, an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) if the excess described in paragraph (1)(B) is not greater than 133⅓ percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), an amount equal to two-thirds of such limit applicable to the eligible candidate for the election; plus

"(ii) if the excess described in paragraph (1)(B) equals or exceeds 133⅓ percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), an amount equal to one-third of such limit applicable to the eligible candidate for the election.

"(B) In the case of an eligible candidate who is not a major party candidate, an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(i) the allowable contributions of the eligible candidate during the applicable period in excess of the sum of the threshold contribution requirement under section 502(e) and the allowable contributions taken into account under paragraph (2)(B); or

"(ii) 50 percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to the eligible candidate under section 503(b).

"(c) VOTER COMMUNICATION VOUCHERS.—(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall issue nontransferable voter communication vouchers to eligible candidates as provided under section 506(b).

"(2) The aggregate amount of voter communication vouchers issued to an eligible candidate under paragraph (1) shall be equal to 20 percent of the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b) (10 percent of such limit if such candidate is not a major party candidate).

"(3) Voter communication vouchers shall be used by an eligible candidate to purchase broadcast time during the general election period subject to the same conditions and rates under section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 as apply to other broadcast time a candidate may purchase, except that—

"(A) each such broadcast shall be at least 1 but not more than 5 minutes in length; and

"(B) each such broadcast shall be aired during the 5-week period preceding the general election.

"(d) WAIVER OF EXPENDITURE AND CONTRIBUTION LIMITS.—(1) An eligible candidate who receives payments under subsection (a)(3) which are allocable to the independent expenditure or excess expenditure amounts described in paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (b) may make expenditures from such payments to defray expenditures for the general election without regard to the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) An eligible candidate who receives benefits under this section may make expenditures for the general election without regard to clause (i) of section 502(c)(1)(D) or subsection (a) or (b) of section 503 if any one of the eligible candidate's opponents who is not an eligible candidate either raises aggregate contributions, or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures, for the general election that exceed 133⅓ percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to the eligible candidate under section 503(b).

"(3) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may receive contributions for the general election without regard to clause (iii) of section 502(c)(1)(D) if—

"(A) a major party candidate in the same general election is not an eligible candidate; or

"(B) any other candidate in the same general election who is not an eligible candidate raises aggregate contributions, or makes or becomes obligated to make aggregate expenditures, for the general election that exceed 75 percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to such other candidate under section 503(b).

"(e) USE OF PAYMENTS FROM FUND.—Payments received by a candidate under subsection (a)(3) shall be used to defray expenditures incurred with respect to the general election period for the candidate. Such payments shall not be used—

"(1) except as provided in paragraph (4), to make any payments, directly or indirectly, to such candidate or to any member of the immediate family of such candidate;

"(2) to make any expenditure other than expenditures to further the general election of such candidate;

"(3) to make any expenditures which constitute a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expenditure is made; or

"(4) subject to the provisions of section 315(j), to repay any loan to any person except to the extent the proceeds of such loan were used to further the general election of such candidate.

"CERTIFICATION BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Commission shall certify to any candidate meeting the requirements of section 502 that such candidate is an eligible candidate entitled to benefits under this title. The Commission shall revoke such certification if it determines a candidate fails to continue to meet such requirements.

"(2) No later than 48 hours after an eligible candidate files a request with the Commission to receive benefits under section 506, the Commission shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury whether such candidate is eligible for payments under this title from the Senate Election Campaign Fund or to receive voter communication vouchers and the amount of such payments or vouchers to which such candidate is entitled. The request referred to in the preceding sentence shall contain—

"(A) such information and be made in accordance with such procedures as the Commission may provide by regulation; and

"(B) a verification signed by the candidate and the treasurer of the principal campaign committee of such candidate stating that the information furnished in support of the request, to the best of their knowledge, is correct and fully satisfies the requirements of this title.

"(b) DETERMINATIONS BY COMMISSION.—All determinations (including certifications under subsection (a)) made by the Commission under this title shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 509.

"PAYMENTS RELATING TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CAMPAIGN FUND.—(1) There is hereby established on the books of the Treasury of the United States a special fund to be known as the 'Senate Election Campaign Fund'.

"(2)(A) There are appropriated to the Fund for each fiscal year, out of amounts in the general fund of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts equal to—

"(i) any contributions by persons which are specifically designated as being made to the Fund;

"(ii) amounts collected under sections 507(g) and 508(d)(3); and

"(iii) any other amounts which may be deposited into the Fund under this title.

"(B) The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, transfer to the Fund an amount not in excess of the amounts described in subparagraph (A).

"(C) Amounts in the Fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

"(3) Amounts in the Fund shall be available only for the purposes of—

"(A) making payments required under this title; and

"(B) making expenditures in connection with the administration of the Fund.

"(4) The Secretary shall maintain such accounts in the Fund as may be required by the title or which the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(b) PAYMENTS UPON CERTIFICATION.—Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, except as provided in subsection (d), the Secretary shall promptly pay the amount certified by the Commission to the candidate out of the Senate Election Campaign Fund.

"(c) VOUCHERS.—(1) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, except as provided in subsection (d), the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue to an eligible candidate the amount of voter communication vouchers specified in such certification.

"(2) Upon receipt of a voter communication voucher from a licensee providing broadcast time to an eligible candidate, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to such licensee from the Senate Election Campaign Fund the face value of such voucher.

"(d) REDUCTIONS IN PAYMENTS IF FUNDS INSUFFICIENT.—(1) If, at the time of a certification by the Commission under section 505 for payment, or issuance or a voucher, to an eligible candidate, the Secretary determines that the monies in the Senate Election Campaign Fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlement of all eligible candidates, the Secretary shall withhold from the amount of such payment or voucher such amount as the Secretary determines to be necessary to assure that each eligible candidate will receive the same pro rata share of such candidate's full entitlement.

"(2) Amounts and vouchers withheld under subparagraph (A) shall be paid when the Secretary determines that there are sufficient monies in the Fund to pay all, or a portion thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, except that if only a portion is to be paid, it shall be paid in such manner that each eligible candidate receives an equal pro rata share of such portion.

"(3)(A) Not later than December 31 of any calendar year preceding a calendar year in which there is a regularly scheduled general election, the Secretary, after consultation with the Commission, shall make an estimate of—

"(i) the amount of monies in the fund which will be available to make payments required by this title in the succeeding calendar year; and

"(ii) the amount of payments which will be required under this title in such calendar year.

"(B) If the Secretary determines that there will be insufficient monies in the fund to make the payments required by this title for any calendar year, the Secretary shall notify each candidate on January 1 of such calendar year (or, if later, the date on which an individual becomes a candidate) of the amount which the Secretary estimates will be the pro rata reduction in each eligible candidate's payments (including vouchers) under this subsection. Such notice shall be by registered mail.

"(C) The amount of the eligible candidate's contribution limit under section 502(c)(1)(D)(iii) shall be increased by the amount of the estimated pro rata reduction.

"(4) The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of any actual reduction in the amount of any payment by reason of this subsection. If the amount of the reduction exceeds the amount estimated under paragraph (3), the candidate's contribution limit under section 502(c)(1)(D)(iii) shall be increased by the amount of such excess.

"EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a) EXAMINATION AND AUDITS.—(1) After each general election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of 10 percent of all candidates for the office of United States Senator to determine, among other things, whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and conditions of eligibility of this title, and other requirements of this Act. Such candidates shall be designated by the Commission through the use of an appropriate statistical method of random selection.

"(2) The Commission may conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of any candidate in a general election for the office of United States Senator if the Commission determines that there exists reason to believe that such candidate may have violated any provision of this title.

"(b) EXCESS PAYMENTS; REVOCATION OF STATUS.—(1) If the Commission determines that payments or vouchers were made to an eligible candidate under this title in excess of the aggregate amounts to which such candidate was entitled, the Commission shall so notify such candidate, and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the excess.

"(2) If the Commission revokes the certification of a candidate as an eligible candidate under section 505(a)(1), the Commission shall notify the candidate, and the candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the payments and vouchers received under this title.

"(c) MISUSE OF BENEFITS.—If the Commission determines that any amount of any benefit made available to an eligible candidate under this title was not used as provided for in this title, the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to 200 percent of the amount of such benefit.

"(d) EXCESS EXPENDITURES.—(1) If the Commission determines that any eligible candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by 5 percent or less—

"(A) the primary or runoff expenditure limit under section 502(d); or

"(B) the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b),

the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the amount of the excess expenditures.

"(2) If the Commission determines that any eligible candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by more than 5 percent—

"(A) the primary or runoff expenditure limit under section 502(d); or

"(B) the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b),

the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to three times the amount of the excess expenditures.

"(e) UNEXPENDED FUNDS.—Any amount received by an eligible candidate under this title may be retained for a period not exceeding 120 days after the date of the general election for the liquidation of all obligations to pay expenditures for the general election incurred during the general election period. At the end of such 120-day period, any unexpended funds received under this title shall be promptly repaid to the Secretary.

"(f) LIMIT ON PERIOD FOR NOTIFICATION.—No notification shall be made by the Commission under this section with respect to an election more than three years after the date of such election.

"(g) DEPOSITS.—The Secretary shall deposit all payments received under this section into the Senate Election Campaign Fund.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 508. (a) VIOLATIONS.—(1) No person shall knowingly and willfully—

"(A) accept benefits under this title in excess of the aggregate benefits to which the candidate on whose behalf such benefits are accepted is entitled;

"(B) use such benefits for any purpose not provided for in this title; or

"(C) make expenditures in excess of—

"(i) the primary and runoff expenditure limits under section 502(d); or

"(ii) the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b).

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer, employee, or agent of any political committee who knowingly consents to any expenditure in violation of the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(b) USE OF BENEFITS.—(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any benefit under this title, or to whom any portion of any such benefit is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or to authorize the use of, such benefit or such portion other than in the manner provided in this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) FALSE INFORMATION.—(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information (including any certification, verification, notice, or report) to the Commission under this title, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Commission or an examination and audit by the Commission under this title; or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Commission any records, books, or information requested by it for purposes of this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d) KICKBACKS AND ILLEGAL PAYMENTS.—(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or to accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any benefits received under this title by any eligible candidate or the authorized committees of such candidate.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal benefit in connection with any benefits received by any candidate pursuant to the provisions of this title, or received by the authorized committees of such candidate, shall pay to the Secretary, for deposit into the Senate Election Campaign Fund, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or benefit received.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 509. (a) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this title shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought. It shall be the duty of the Court of Appeals, ahead of all matters not filed under this title, to advance on the docket and expeditiously take action on all petitions filed pursuant to this title.

"(b) APPLICATION OF TITLE 5.—The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to judicial review of any agency action by the Commission.

"(c) AGENCY ACTION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'agency action' has the meaning given such term by section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 510. (a) APPEARANCES.—The Commission is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section and under section 509 either by attorneys employed in its office or by counsel whom it may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation it may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) INSTITUTION OF ACTIONS.—The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined under this title to be payable to the Secretary.

"(c) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for such injunctive relief as is appropriate in order to implement any provision of this title.

"(d) APPEALS.—The Commission is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which it appears pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS

"SEC. 511. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after each election, submit a full report to the Senate setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures (shown in such detail as the Commission determines appropriate) made by each eligible candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate;

"(2) the amounts certified by the Commission under section 505 as benefits available to each eligible candidate;

"(3) the amount of repayments, if any, required under section 507 or 506(d)(2), and the reasons for each repayment required; and

"(4) the balance in the Senate Election Campaign Fund, and the balance in any account maintained in the Fund.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) RULES AND REGULATIONS.—The Commission is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct such examinations and investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"(c) STATEMENT TO SENATE.—Thirty days before prescribing any rules or regulation under subsection (b), the Commission shall transmit to the Senate a statement setting forth the proposed rule or regulation and containing a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 512. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this title."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) Except as provided in this subsection, the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to elections occurring after December 31, 1991.

(2) For purposes of any expenditure or contribution limit imposed by the amendment made by subsection (a)—

(A) no expenditure made before January 1, 1991, shall be taken into account, except that there shall be taken into account any such expenditure for goods or services to be provided after such date; and

(B) all cash, cash items, and Government securities on hand as of January 1, 1991, shall be taken into account in determining whether the contribution limit is met, except that there shall not be taken into account amounts used during the 60-day period beginning on January 1, 1991, to pay for expenditures which were incurred (but unpaid) before such date.

SEC. 102. BAN ON CONTRIBUTIONS TO SENATE CANDIDATES BY POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) No contributions may be made to a candidate for the office of United States Senator or such candidate's authorized committees other than contributions made by—

"(1) individuals; or

"(2) a political committee of the political party with which such candidate is affiliated.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to elections (and the election cycles relating thereto) occurring after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In applying the amendments made by this section, there shall not be taken into account—

(A) contributions made or received on or before the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(B) contributions made to, or received by, a candidate after such date, to the extent such contributions are not greater than the excess (if any) of—

(i) such contributions received by any opponent of the candidate on or before such date, over

(ii) such contributions received by the candidate on or before such date.

SEC. 103. BROADCAST RATES.

(a) PROVISIONS RELATING TO LOWEST UNIT COST.—Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2)(A) In the case of a candidate for Federal office (as defined in section 301(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971)—

"(i) paragraph (1)(A) shall be applied without regard to the phrase 'class and';

"(ii) if the broadcast time exceeds 30 seconds, the lowest unit cost for such time shall be based on the rates for broadcasts of 30 seconds; and

"(iii) such candidate shall include at the end of any broadcast paid for by the candidate, the candidate's authorized committee, or any other person authorized by the candidate (without regard to whether the rates under this subsection apply to such broadcast)—

"(I) in the case of a radio broadcast, an audio statement by the candidate; or

"(II) in the case of a television broadcast, a personal appearance by the candidate, which states the information described in section 318(a)(1)(B) of such Act.

"(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), in determining the lowest unit cost under paragraph (1)(A), a broadcasting station may disregard any special or nontypical rates (as determined by the Commission).

"(3)(A) In the case of candidates for United States Senator in a general election (as defined in section 501(4) of such Act), this subsection (other than paragraph (2)(A)(iii)) shall apply to a broadcast of such candidate only if such candidate is an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2) of such Act).

"(B) In the case of any eligible candidate for United States Senator, the rates under paragraph (1)(A) shall apply to any broadcast during the general election period (as defined in section 501(5) of such Act) rather than the 60-day period referred to in such paragraph.".

(b) PREEMPTION RULES; VOUCHERS.—Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (e) and (f) and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c)(1) In the case of a legally qualified candidate for Federal office (as defined in section 301(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971), a licensee shall not preempt the use, during any period the rates under subsection (b)(1)(A) are in effect, of a broadcasting station by such candidate who has purchased such use pursuant to subsection (b).

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply if the program during which the candidate's broadcast was to air is unavoidably preempted.

"(d) A licensee shall—

"(1) accept voter communications vouchers provided to an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act) under section 504(a) of such Act; and

"(2) shall, upon presentation of such vouchers, provide broadcast time to such candidate subject to the same conditions and rates as apply to other broadcast time such candidate may purchase, except that—

"(A) no time shall be required to be provided without at least 7 days advance notice; and

"(B) in the case of broadcast time in the licensee's prime time, the licensee shall be required to provide—

"(i) not more than 5 minutes of such time during each of the weeks in the 5-week period ending on the date of the general election; and

"(ii) only one broadcast per day per candidate in such time.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" before "The charges"; and

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively.

SEC. 104. PREFERENTIAL RATES FOR MAIL.

(a) REDUCED RATES.—Subchapter II of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 3629. Reduced rates for certain Senate candidates

"(a) The rates of postage for matter mailed with respect to a campaign by an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971) shall be—

"(1) in the case of first-class mail matter, one-fourth of the rate currently in effect; and

"(2) in the case of third-class mail matter, 2 cents per piece less than mail matter mailed pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(b) Subsection (a) shall cease to apply to any candidate for any campaign when the total amount paid by such candidate for all mail matter at the rates provided by paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) exceeds 5 percent of the amount of the general election expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—Section 2401(c) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking "and 3626(a)-(h)" and inserting "3626(a)-(h), and 3629".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 3628 the following new item:

"3629. Reduced rates for certain Senate candidates.".

SEC. 105. DISCLOSURE BY NONELIGIBLE CANDIDATES.

Subparagraph (B) of section 318(a)(1) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)(1)), as amended by section 308, is amended by—

(1) striking "and" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) striking out the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(iv) if paid for or authorized by a candidate in the general election for the office of United States Senator who is not an eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2)), or the authorized committee of such candidate, such communication shall contain the following sentence: 'This candidate has not agreed to abide by the spending limits for this Senate election campaign set forth in the Federal Election Campaign Act.'.".

SEC. 106. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

Title III of FECA is amended by adding after section 304 the following new section:

"REPORTING REQUIREMENTS FOR SENATE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 304A. (a) CANDIDATE OTHER THAN ELIGIBLE CANDIDATE.—(1) Each candidate for the office of United States Senator who does not file a certification with the Commission under section 502(c) shall file with the Commission a declaration as to whether such candidate intends to make expenditures for the general election in excess of the general election expenditure limit applicable to an eligible candidate under section 503(b). Such declaration shall be filed at the time provided in section 502(c)(2).

"(2) Any candidate for the United States Senate who qualifies for the ballot for a general election—

"(A) who is not an eligible candidate under section 502; and

"(B) who either raises aggregate contributions, or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures, for the general election which exceed 70 percent of the general election expenditure limit applicable to an eligible candidate under section 503(b), shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such contributions have been raised or such expenditures have been made or obligated to be made (or, if later, within 24 hours after the date of qualification for the general election ballot), setting forth the candidate's total contributions and total expenditures for such election as of such date. Thereafter, such candidate shall file additional reports (until such contributions or expenditures exceed 133⅓ percent of such limit) with the Commission within 24 hours after each time additional contributions are raised, or expenditures are made or are obligated to be made, which in the aggregate exceed an amount equal to 10 percent of such limit and after the total contributions or expenditures exceed 133⅓ percent of such limit.

"(3) The Commission—

"(A) shall, within 24 hours of receipt of a declaration or report under paragraph (1) or (2), notify each eligible candidate in the election involved about such declaration or report; and

"(B) if an opposing candidate has raised aggregate contributions, or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures, in excess of the applicable general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such eligible candidate is entitled under section 504(a).

"(4) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements under this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate in a general election who is not an eligible candidate has raised aggregate contributions, or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures, in the amounts which would require a report under paragraph (2). The Commission shall, within 24 hours after making each such determination, notify each eligible candidate in the general election involved about such determination, and shall, when such contributions or expenditures exceed the general election expenditure limit under section 503(b), certify (pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e)) to the Secretary of the Treasury such candidate's eligibility for payment of any amount under section 504(a).

"(b) INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES.—(1)(A) Any person who makes, or obligates to make, independent expenditures during any general, primary, or runoff election period for the office of United States Senator in excess of $10,000 shall report to the Commission as provided in this subsection.

"(B) If 2 or more persons, in cooperation, consultation, or concert with each other, make, or obligate to make, independent expenditures during any general, primary, or runoff election period for the office of United States Senator in excess of $10,000, each such person shall report to the Commission as provided in this subsection with respect to the independent expenditures so made by all such persons.

"(2) Any person referred to in paragraph (1) shall report the amount of the independent expenditures made or obligated to be made not later than 24 hours after the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated first exceeds $10,000. Thereafter, such person shall report independent expenditures not later than 24 hours after each time the additional aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated (and not yet reported under this paragraph) exceeds $10,000.

"(3) Each report under this subsection shall be filed with the Commission and the Secretary of State for the State of the election involved and shall contain—

"(A) the information required by subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii) of section 304; and

"(B) a statement under penalty of perjury by the person making the independent expenditures, or by the person incurring the obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, that identifies the candidate whom the independent expenditures are actually intended to help elect or defeat.

"(4)(A) A person may file a complaint with the Commission if such person believes the statement under paragraph (3)(B) is false or incorrect.

"(B) The Commission, not later than 3 days after the filing of a complaint under subparagraph (A), shall make a determination with respect to such complaint.

"(5) The Commission shall, within 24 hours of receipt of a report under this subsection, notify each eligible candidate (as defined in section 501(2)) in the election involved about such report.

"(6) The Commission may make its own determination that a person has made, or has incurred obligations to make, independent expenditures with respect to any election for the United States Senate which in the aggregate exceed the applicable amounts under paragraph (2). The Commission shall notify each eligible candidate in such election of such determination within 24 hours of making it.

"(7) At the same time as a candidate is notified under paragraph (5) or (6) with respect to expenditures during a general election period, the Commission shall, pursuant to subsection (e), certify to the Secretary of the Treasury eligibility to receive benefits under section 504(a).

"(c) REPORTS ON PERSONAL FUNDS.—(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who during the election cycle expends more than $250,000 during the election cycle from his personal funds, the funds of his immediate family, and personal loans incurred by the candidate and the candidate's immediate family shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such expenditures have been made or loans incurred.

"(2) The Commission within 24 hours after a report has been filed under paragraph (1) shall notify each eligible candidate in the election involved about each such report.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements under this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate for the United States Senate has made expenditures in excess of the amount under paragraph (1). The Commission within 24 hours after making such determination shall notify each eligible candidate in the general election involved about each such determination.

"(d) CANDIDATES FOR OTHER OFFICES.—(1) Each individual—

"(A) who becomes a candidate for the office of United States Senator;

"(B) who, during the election cycle for such office, held any other Federal, State, or local office or was a candidate for such other office; and

"(C) who expended any amount during such election cycle before becoming a candidate for the office of United States Senator which would have been treated as an expenditure if such individual had been such a candidate, including amounts for activities to promote the image or name recognition of such individual, shall, within 7 days of becoming a candidate for the office of United States Senator, report to the Commission the amount and nature of such expenditures.

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any expenditures in connection with a Federal, State, or local election which has been held before the individual becomes a candidate the office of United States Senator.

"(3) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable, make a determination as to whether the amounts included in the report under paragraph (1) were made for purposes of influencing the election of the individual to the office of United States Senator.

"(e) CERTIFICATIONS.—Notwithstanding section 505(a), the certification required by this section shall be made by the Commission on the basis of reports filed with such Commission in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or on the basis of such Commission's own investigation or determination.

"(f) COPIES OF REPORTS.—The Commission shall transmit a copy of any report received under this section to the Secretary of the Senate within 2 working days of receipt of such report.

"(g) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, any term used in this section which is used in title V shall have the same meaning as when used in title V."

SEC. 107. OTHER DEFINITIONS.

(a) ELECTION CYCLE DEFINED.—Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(20) The term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committees of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the most recent general election for the specific office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next general election for such office or seat; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next general election."

(b) IDENTIFICATION.—Section 301(13) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(13)) is amended by striking out "mailing address" and inserting in lieu thereof "permanent residence address".

TITLE II—EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS

Subtitle A—Independent Expenditures

SEC. 201. COOPERATIVE EXPENDITURES NOT TREATED AS INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES.

(a) TREATMENT OF COOPERATIVE EXPENDITURES.—(1) Paragraph (17) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'independent expenditure' shall not include any cooperative expenditure."

(2) Paragraph (9) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(9)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) A cooperative expenditure shall be treated as an expenditure made by the candidate on whose behalf, or for whose benefit, the expenditure was made."

(3) Paragraph (8) of section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) A cooperative expenditure shall be treated as a contribution from the person making the expenditure to the candidate on whose behalf, or for whose benefit, the expenditure was made."

(b) COOPERATIVE EXPENDITURE DEFINED.—Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 107(a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(21)(A) The term 'cooperative expenditure' means any expenditure which is made—

"(i) with the cooperation of, or in consultation with, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate; or

"(ii) in concert with, or at the request or suggestion of, any candidate or any authorized committee or agent of such candidate.

"(B) The term 'cooperative expenditure' includes an expenditure if—

"(i) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between the candidate or the candidate's agent and the person making the expenditure;

"(ii) in the same election cycle, the person making the expenditure is or has been—

"(I) authorized to raise or expend funds on behalf of the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees; or

"(II) serving as a member, employee, or agent of the candidate's authorized committees in an executive or policy-making position; or

"(iii) the person making the expenditure has advised or counseled the candidate or the candidate's agents at any time on the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any advice relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(iv) the person making the expenditure retains the professional services of any individual or other person also providing those services in the same election cycle to the candidate in connection with the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, including any services relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(v) the person making the expenditure has consulted at any time during the same election cycle about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, with—

"(I) any officer, director, employee or agent of a party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions, pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or

"(II) any person whose professional services have been retained by a political party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or

"(vi) the expenditure is based on information provided to the person making the expenditure directly or indirectly by the candidate or the candidate's agents about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs, provided that the candidate or the candidate's agent is aware that the other person has made or is planning to make expenditures expressly advocating the candidate's election.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the person making the expenditure shall include any officer, director, employee, or agent of such person.

"(C) The term 'cooperative expenditure' includes an expenditure if such expenditure—

"(i) is made on behalf of, or for the benefit of, a candidate or authorized committee by a political committee that is established, administered, controlled, or financially supported, directly or indirectly, by a connected organization that is required to register, or pays for the services of a person who is required to register, under section 308 of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 267) or the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 et seq.); or

"(ii) is made on behalf of, or for the benefit of, a candidate or authorized committee by a political committee that has made a contribution to the candidate or authorized committee."

SEC. 202. EQUAL BROADCAST TIME.

Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) If a licensee permits any person who is a legally qualified candidate for public office to use a broadcasting station other than any use required to be provided under paragraph (2), the licensee shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of the broadcasting station.

"(2)(A) A person who reserves broadcast time the payment for which would constitute an independent expenditure within the meaning of section 301(17) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) shall—

"(i) inform the licensee that payment for the broadcast time will constitute an independent expenditure;

"(ii) inform the licensee of the names of all candidates for the office to which the proposed broadcast relates; and

"(iii) provide the licensee a copy of the statement described in section 304A(b)(3)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(d)(3)(B)).

"(B) A licensee who is informed as described in subparagraph (A) shall—

"(i) if any of the candidates described in subparagraph (A)(ii) has provided the licensee the name and address of a person to whom notification under this subparagraph is to be given—

"(I) notify such person of the proposed making of the independent expenditure; and

"(II) allow any such candidate (other than a candidate for whose benefit the independent expenditure is made) to purchase the same amount of broadcast time immediately after the broadcast time paid for by the independent expenditure; and

"(ii) in the case of an opponent of a candidate for whose benefit the independent expenditure is made who certifies to the licensee that the opponent is eligible to have the cost of response broadcast time paid out of the Federal Election Campaign Fund pursuant to section 504(a)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, afford the opponent such broadcast time without requiring payment in advance and at the cost specified in subsection (b).

"(3) A licensee shall have no power of censorship over the material broadcast under this section.

"(4) Except as provided in paragraph (2), no obligation is imposed under this subsection upon any licensee to allow the use of its station by any candidate.

"(5)(A) Appearance by a legally qualified candidate on a—

"(i) bona fide newscast;

"(ii) bona fide news interview;

"(iii) bona fide news documentary (if the appearance of the candidate is incidental to the presentation of the subject or subjects covered by the news documentary); or

"(iv) on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events (including political conventions and activities incidental thereto), shall not be deemed to be use of a broadcasting station within the meaning of this subsection.

"(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall be construed as relieving broadcasters, in connection with the presentation of newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries, and on-the-spot coverage of news events, from their obligation under this Act to operate in the public interest and to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

"(6)(A) A licensee that endorses a candidate for Federal office in an editorial shall, within the time stated in subparagraph (B), provide to all other candidates for election to the same office—

"(i) notice of the date and time of broadcast of the editorial;

"(ii) a taped or printed copy of the editorial; and

"(iii) a reasonable opportunity to broadcast a response using the licensee's facilities.

"(B) In the case of an editorial described in subparagraph (A) that—

"(i) is first broadcast 72 hours or more prior to the date of a primary, runoff, or general election, the notice and copy described in subparagraph (A) (i) and (ii) shall be provided not later than 24 hours after the time of the first broadcast of the editorial, and

"(ii) is first broadcast less than 72 hours before the date of an election, the notice and copy shall be provided at a time prior to the first broadcast that will be sufficient to enable candidates a reasonable opportunity to prepare and broadcast a response.".

SEC. 203. ATTRIBUTION OF COMMUNICATIONS.

Section 318(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)), as amended by section 308, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) A communication described in paragraph (1) that is paid for through an independent expenditure—

"(A) in the case of a television broadcast, shall include during the entire length of the communication a clearly readable video statement covering at least 25 percent of the viewing area of a television screen stating the information required in paragraph (1)(B) and, if the independent expenditure is made by a political committee, stating the name of its connected organization (if any) and the city and State in which such organization is located;

"(B) in the case of any audio broadcast (including a television broadcast), shall include an audio statement at the conclusion of the broadcast stating the information described in paragraph (1)(B) and, if the independent expenditure is made by a political committee, stating the name of its connected organization (if any) and the city and State in which such organization is located; and

"(C) in the case of a newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, mass mailing, or other type of general public political advertising, shall include a statement of—

"(i) the information required in paragraph (1)(B);

"(ii) the following sentence: "The cost of presenting this communication is not subject to any campaign contribution limits."; and

"(iii) the name of the person who paid for the communication including, in the case of a political committee, the names of its president and its treasurer, and the name of its connected organization (if any) and the city and State in which located.".

Subtitle B—Expenditures

PART I—PERSONAL LOANS; CREDIT

SEC. 211. PERSONAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 102, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) LIMITATIONS ON PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES.—(1) If a candidate or a member of the candidate's immediate family made any loans to the candidate or to the candidate's authorized committees during any election cycle no contributions after the date of the general election for such election cycle may be used to repay such loans.

"(2) No contribution by a candidate or member of the candidate's immediate family (as defined in section 501(6)) may be returned to the candidate or member other than as part of a pro rata distribution of excess contributions to all contributors.".

SEC. 212. EXTENSIONS OF CREDIT.

Section 301(8)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (i);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting "; or"; and

(3) by inserting at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iii) with respect to a candidate for the office of United States Senator and the candidate's authorized committees, any extension of credit for goods or services relating to advertising on broadcasting stations, in newspapers or magazines, or by mass mailings mail (including mass mail fund solicitations) or relating to other similar types of general public political advertising, if such extension of credit is—

"(I) in an amount of more than $1,000; and

"(II) for a period greater than the period (not in excess of 60 days) for which credit is generally extended in the normal course of business after the date on which such goods or services are furnished (the date of the mailing in the case of advertising by a mass mailing).".

PART II—PROVISIONS RELATING TO SOFT MONEY OF POLITICAL PARTIES

SEC. 215. LIMITATIONS ON CONTRIBUTIONS TO STATE POLITICAL PARTY COMMITTEES.

(a) INDIVIDUAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO STATE PARTY.—Paragraph (1) of section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(1)) is amended by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (B), by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D), and by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) to the political committee designated by a State committee of a political party in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $20,000; or".

(b) MULTICANDIDATE COMMITTEE CONTRIBUTIONS TO STATE PARTY.—Paragraph (2) of section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)) is amended by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (B), by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D), and by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) to the political committee designated by a State committee of a political party in any calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $15,000; or".

(c) INCREASE IN OVERALL LIMIT.—Paragraph (3) of section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(3)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The limitation under this paragraph shall be increased (but not by more than $5,000) by the amount of contributions made by an individual during a calendar year to political committees designated by State committees of a political party for purposes of paragraphs (1)(C) and (2)(C).".

SEC. 216. PROVISIONS RELATING TO NATIONAL, STATE, AND LOCAL PARTY COMMITTEES.

(a) EXPENDITURES BY STATE COMMITTEES IN CONNECTION WITH PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGNS.—Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) A State committee of a political party, including subordinate committees of that State committee, shall not make expenditures for activities described in section 324(b) (1) and (2) with respect to the general election campaign of a candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which, in the aggregate, exceed an amount equal to 4 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State, as certified under subsection (e).".

(b) CONTRIBUTION AND EXPENDITURE EXCEPTIONS.—(1) Section 301(8)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(B)) is amended—

(A) in clause (v) by striking the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting "or with respect to a mass mailing of such a listing;";

(B) in clause (xi)—

(i) by striking "direct mail" and inserting "mass mailing"; and

(ii) by striking the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting "and are not made from contributions designated to be spent on behalf of a particular candidate or particular candidates;"; and

(C) by repealing clauses (x) and (xii).

(2) Section 301(9)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(9)(B)) is amended—

(A) in clause (iv) by striking the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting "or with respect to a mass mailing of such a listing;"; and

(B) by repealing clauses (viii) and (ix).

(c) SOFT MONEY OF COMMITTEES OF POLITICAL PARTIES.—(1) Title III of FECA is amended by inserting after section 323 the following new section:

"POLITICAL PARTY COMMITTEES

"SEC. 324. (a) Any amount solicited, received, or expended directly or indirectly by a national, State, district, or local committee of a political party (including any subordinate committee) with respect to an activity which, in whole or in part, is in connection with an election to Federal office shall be subject in its entirety to the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) Any activity which is solely for the purpose of influencing an election for Federal office is in connection with an election for Federal office.

"(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), any of the following activities during a Federal election period shall be treated as in connection with an election for Federal office:

"(A) Voter registration and get-out-the-vote activities.

"(B) Campaign activities, including broadcasting, newspaper, magazine, billboard, mass mail, and newsletter communications, and similar kinds of communications or public advertising that—

"(i) are generic campaign activities; or

"(ii) identify a Federal candidate regardless of whether a State or local candidate is also identified.

"(C) The preparation and dissemination of campaign materials that are part of a generic campaign activity or that identify a Federal candidate, regardless of whether a State or local candidate is also identified.

"(D) Maintenance of voter files.

"(E) Any other activity affecting (in whole or in part) an election for Federal office.

"(3) The following shall not be treated as in connection with a Federal election:

"(A) Any amount described in section 301(8)(B)(viii).

"(B) Any amount contributed to a candidate for other than Federal office.

"(C) Any amount received or expended in connection with a State or local political convention.

"(D) Campaign activities, including broadcasting, newspaper, magazine, billboard, mass mail, and newsletter communications, and similar kinds of communications or public advertising that are exclusively on behalf of State or local candidates and are not activities described in paragraph (2)(A).

"(E) Administrative expenses of a State or local committee of a political party, including expenses for—

"(i) overhead;

"(ii) staff (other than individuals devoting a substantial portion of their activities to elections for Federal office);

"(iii) meetings; and

"(iv) conducting party elections or caucuses.

"(F) Research pertaining solely to State and local candidates and issues.

"(G) Maintenance of voter files other than during a Federal election period.

"(H) Activities described in paragraph (2)(A) which are conducted other than during a Federal election period.

"(I) Any other activity which is solely for the purpose of influencing, and which solely affects, an election for non-Federal office.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'Federal election period' means the period—

"(A) beginning on the date which is 60 days before the primary election for any regularly scheduled general election for Federal office; and

"(B) ending on the date of the general election.

"(c) TRANSFERS BETWEEN COMMITTEES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the limitations on contributions contained in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 315(a) shall apply to transfers between and among political committees described in subsection (a).

"(2)(A) A national committee may not solicit or accept contributions not subject to the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) and paragraph (1) shall not apply to contributions that—

"(i) are to be transferred to a State committee for use directly for activities described in subsection (b)(3); or

"(ii) are to be used by the committee primarily to support such activities."

(2) Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) The national committee of a political party, the congressional campaign committees of a political party, and a State or local committee of a political party, including a subordinate committee of any of the preceding committees, shall not make expenditures during any calendar year for activities described in section 324(b) (1) and (2) with respect to such State which, in the aggregate, exceed an amount equal to 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State (as certified under subsection (e)). This paragraph shall not authorize a committee to make expenditures to which paragraph (3) or (4) applies in excess of the limit applicable to such expenditures under paragraph (3) or (4). No adjustment to the limitation under this paragraph shall be made under subsection (c) before 1992 and the base period for purposes of any such adjustment shall be 1990.".

(3) Paragraph (4) of section 315(a) (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(4)) is amended by striking the first sentence thereof.

(d) GENERIC ACTIVITIES.—Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 201(b), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(22) The term 'generic campaign activity' means a campaign activity the preponderant purpose or effect of which is to promote a political party rather than any particular Federal or non-Federal candidate.".

SEC. 217. RESTRICTIONS ON FUNDRAISING BY CANDIDATES AND OFFICEHOLDERS.

(a) STATE FUNDRAISING ACTIVITIES.—Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 211, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) LIMITATIONS ON FUNDRAISING ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL CANDIDATES AND OFFICEHOLDERS.—(1) For purposes of this Act, a candidate for Federal office (or an individual holding Federal office) may not solicit funds to, or receive funds on behalf of, any Federal or non-Federal candidate or political committee—

"(A) which are to be expended in connection with any election for Federal office unless such funds are subject to the limitations, prohibitions, and requirements of this Act; or

"(B) which are to be expended in connection with any election for other than Federal office unless such funds are not in excess of amounts permitted with respect to Federal candidates and political committees under this Act, or are not from sources prohibited by this Act with respect to elections to Federal office.

"(2) The appearance or participation by a candidate or individual in any activity (including fundraising) conducted by a committee of a political party or a candidate for other than Federal office shall not be treated as a solicitation for purposes of paragraph (1) if—

"(A) such appearance or participation is otherwise permitted by law; and

"(B) such candidate or individual does not solicit or receive, or make expenditures from, any funds resulting from such activity.

"(3) Paragraph (1) shall not apply to the solicitation or receipt of funds, or disbursements, by an individual who is a candidate for other than Federal office if such activity is permitted under State law."

(b) TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l) TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), if an individual—

"(A) established, maintains, or controls any organization described in section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(B) is a candidate for, or holds, Federal office at any time during any calendar year, such individual may not solicit contributions to, or accept contributions on behalf of, such organization from any person during such calendar year which, in the aggregate, exceed $5,000.

"(2) If during any period an individual is a candidate for, or holds, Federal office, such individual may not during such period solicit contributions to, or on behalf of, any organization which is described in section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 if a significant portion of the activities of such organization include voter registration or get-out-the-vote campaigns.".

SEC. 218. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) POLITICAL COMMITTEES.—(1) The national committee of a political party and any congressional campaign committee, and any subordinate committee of either, shall report all receipts and disbursements during the reporting period, whether or not in connection with an election for Federal office.

"(2) A political committee (not described in paragraph (1)) to which section 324 applies shall report all receipts and disbursements in connection with a Federal election (as determined under section 324).

"(3) Any political committee to which section 324 applies shall include in its report under paragraph (1) or (2) the amount of any transfer described in section 324(c) and the reason for the transfer.

"(4) Any political committee to which paragraph (1) or (2) does not apply shall report any receipts or disbursements which are used in connection with a Federal election (as determined by the Commission).

"(5) If any receipt or disbursement to which this subsection applies exceeds $200, the political committee shall include identification of the person from whom, or to whom, such receipt or disbursement was made.

"(6) Reports required to be filed by this subsection shall be filed for the same time periods required for political committees under subsection (a).".

(b) REPORT OF EXEMPT CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 301(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(8)), as amended by section 201, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(D) The exclusions provided in subparagraphs (v) and (viii) of subparagraph (B) shall not apply for purposes of any requirement to report contributions under this Act, and all such contributions in excess of $200 shall be reported.".

(c) REPORTING OF EXEMPT EXPENDITURES.—Section 301(9) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(9)), as amended by section 201, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(D) The exclusions provided in subparagraph (iv) of subparagraph (B) shall not apply for purposes of any requirement to report expenditures under this Act, and all such expenditures in excess of $200 shall be reported.".

(d) CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES.—Section 301(4) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(4)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"For purposes of this paragraph, the receipt of contributions or the making of, or obligating to make, expenditures shall be determined by the Commission on the basis of facts and circumstances, in whatever combination, demonstrating a purpose of influencing any election for Federal office, including, but not limited to, the representations made by any person soliciting funds about their intended uses; the identification by name of individuals who are candidates for Federal office or of any political party, in general public political advertising; and the proximity to any primary, runoff, or general election of general public political advertising designed or reasonably calculated to influence voter choice in that election.".

(e) REPORTS BY STATE COMMITTEES.—Section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) FILING OF STATE REPORTS.—In lieu of any report required to be filed by this Act, the Commission may allow a State committee of a political party to file with the Commission a report required to be filed under State law if the Commission determines such reports contain substantially the same information.".

(f) REPORTS BY LARGE CONTRIBUTORS.—Section 304 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434), as amended by subsection (e), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) REPORTS BY LARGE CONTRIBUTORS.—(1) Any individual who makes contributions subject to the limitations of section 315(a)—

"(A) shall report to the Commission within 7 days after such contributor makes contributions aggregating $10,000 or more during any calendar year; and

"(B) thereafter, shall report to the Commission within 7 days after each time such contributor makes contributions (not yet reported) aggregating $5,000 or more.

Any report shall include identification of the contributor, the name of the candidate or committee to whom the contributions were made, and the amount of the contributions.

"(2) Any candidate for Federal office, any authorized committee of a candidate, or any political committee soliciting contributions subject to the limitations of section 315(a) shall include with such solicitation notice of—

"(A) the requirement to report under paragraph (1); and

"(B) the aggregate limitation on such contributions under section 315(a)(3).".

Subtitle C—Contributions

SEC. 221. LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY CERTAIN POLITICAL COMMITTEES TO POLITICAL PARTIES.

(a) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF CONTRIBUTIONS THAT MAY BE ACCEPTED.—Section 315(d) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)), as amended by section 216, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking "(2) and (3)" and inserting "(2), (3), (6), and (7)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) A congressional campaign committee of a political party (including any subordinate committee thereof) shall not accept, during an election cycle, contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds which, in the aggregate, exceed 30 percent of the total expenditures which such committee may make pursuant to section 315(d)(3) during that election cycle.

"(7) A national committee of a political party (including any subordinate committee thereof) shall not accept, during an election cycle, contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds which, in the aggregate, exceed an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States, as certified under subsection (e).

"(8)(A)(i) Any expenditure made by a national or State committee of a political party, a congressional campaign committee, or any subordinate committee of the preceding committees, for general public political advertising which clearly identifies a candidate for Federal office by name shall be subject to the limitations of paragraphs (1) and (2).

"(ii) Clause (i) shall not apply to expenditures for mass mailings designed primarily for fundraising purposes which make only incidental reference to any one or more Federal candidates.

"(B) For purposes of paragraph (3), any expenditure by a committee described in subparagraph (A) for any solicitation of contributions which clearly identifies any candidate on whose behalf such contributions are being solicited shall be treated for purposes of this paragraph as an expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of such candidate, except that if more than 1 candidate is identified, such expenditure shall be allocated on a pro rata basis among such candidates.".

(b) CONGRESSIONAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.—Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 216(d), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(23) The term 'congressional campaign committee' means the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the National Republican Senatorial Committee, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, and the National Republican Congressional Committee.".

SEC. 222. CONTRIBUTIONS THROUGH INTERMEDIARIES AND CONDUITS.

Section 315(a)(8) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) For the purposes of this subsection—

"(A) Contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions that are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to a candidate, shall be treated as contributions from the person to the candidate.

"(B) Contributions made directly or indirectly by a person to or on behalf of a particular candidate through an intermediary or conduit, including contributions made or arranged to be made by an intermediary or conduit, shall be treated as contributions from the intermediary or conduit to the candidate if—

"(i) the contributions made through the intermediary or conduit are in the form of a check or other negotiable instrument made payable to the conduit or intermediary rather than the intended recipient; or

"(ii) the conduit or intermediary is—

"(I) a political committee other than an authorized committee;

"(II) an officer, employee, or agent of such a political committee; or

"(III) a person required to register under section 308 of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 267) or the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (22 U.S.C. 611 et seq.); or

"(IV) an organization prohibited from making contributions under section 316, or an officer, employee, or agent of such an organization acting on the organization's behalf.

"(C) For purposes of this section—

"(i) the term 'contributions made or arranged to be made' includes—

"(I) contributions delivered to a particular candidate or the candidate's authorized committee or agent; and

"(II) contributions directly or indirectly arranged to be made to a particular candidate or the candidate's authorized committee or agent, including contributions arranged to be made in a manner that identifies directly or indirectly to the candidate or authorized committee or agent the person who arranged the making of the contributions or the person on whose behalf such person was acting; and

"(ii) the term 'acting on the organization's behalf' includes the following activities by an officer, employee or agent of a person described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(IV):

"(I) Soliciting or directly or indirectly arranging the making of a contribution to a particular candidate in the name of, or by using the name of, such a person.

"(II) Soliciting or directly or indirectly arranging the making of a contribution to a particular candidate using other than incidental resources of such a person.

"(III) Soliciting contributions for a particular candidate by substantially directing the solicitations to other officers, employees, or agents of such a person.

"(D) Nothing in this paragraph shall prohibit—

"(i) bona fide joint fundraising efforts conducted solely for the purpose of sponsorship of a fundraising reception, dinner, or other similar event, in accordance with rules prescribed by the Commission, by—

"(I) 2 or more candidates;

"(II) 2 or more national, State, or local committees of a political party within the meaning of section 301(4) acting on their own behalf; or

"(III) a special committee formed by 2 or more candidates, or a candidate and a national, State, or local committee of a political party acting on their own behalf; or

"(ii) fundraising efforts for the benefit of a candidate that are conducted by another candidate.

When a contribution is made to a candidate through an intermediary or conduit, the intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of the contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.".

SEC. 223. EXCESS CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 313 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 439a) is amended by inserting "(a)" before "Amounts", and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a), amounts described in subsection (a) that otherwise may be used to defray the costs of any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred in connection with an individual's duties as a holder of the office of United States Senator shall not be used to defray such costs which are expenditures with respect to such individual.

"(2) For purposes of subsection (a), ordinary and necessary expenses for the travel of the spouse or children of an individual holding the office of United States Senator between Washington, D.C. and the State from which such individual holds such office shall be treated as in connection with such individual's duties as a holder of Federal office unless such expenditures are expenditures with respect to such individual.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'expenditure' has the meaning given such term by section 501(13).".

(b) CONTRIBUTIONS TO OFFICIAL OFFICE ACCOUNTS.—Section 315(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) No expenditure may be made, or amount transferred for the purpose of defraying expenses incurred by a Federal office holder in connection with his official duties by a political committee other than by the principal campaign committee of such holder.".

SEC. 224. CONTRIBUTIONS BY DEPENDENTS NOT OF VOTING AGE.

Section 315 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441a), as amended by section 217, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m) For purposes of this section, any contribution by an individual who—

"(1) is a dependent of another individual; and

"(2) has not, as of the time of such contribution, attained the legal age for voting for elections to Federal office in the State in which such individual resides, shall be treated as having been made by such other individual. If such individual is the dependent of another individual and such other individual's spouse, the contribution shall be allocated among such individuals in the manner determined by them.".

Subtitle D—Reporting Requirements

SEC. 231. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) PERIODS FOR REPORTING.—(1) Section 304(b)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(2)) is amended by striking "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(2) Section 304(b)(4) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(4)) is amended by striking out "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting in lieu thereof "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(3) Section 304(b)(3) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(3)) is amended by inserting "(within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees)" after "calendar year" in subparagraphs (A), (F), and (G) thereof.

(4) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by inserting after "(within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees)" after "calendar year".

(5) Section 304(b)(6)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(6)(A)) is amended by striking out "calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "election cycle".

(b) PERSONAL AND CONSULTING SERVICES.—Section 304(b)(5)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by adding before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", except that if a person to whom an expenditure is made is merely providing personal or consulting services and is in turn making expenditures to other persons (not including employees) who provide goods or services to the candidate or his authorized committees, the name and address of such other person, together with the date, amount and purpose of such expenditure shall also be disclosed".

TITLE III—FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

SEC. 301. USE OF CANDIDATES' NAMES.

Section 302(e)(4) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432(e)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4)(A) The name of each authorized committee shall include the name of the candidate who authorized the committee under paragraph (1).

"(B) A political committee that is not an authorized committee shall not include the name of any candidate in its name in such a context as to suggest that the committee is an authorized committee of the candidate or that the use of the candidate's name has been authorized by the candidate.".

SEC. 302. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) OPTION TO FILE MONTHLY REPORTS—Section 304(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A) by striking "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in subparagraph (B) by striking the period at the end thereof and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by inserting the following new subparagraph at the end thereof:

"(C) in lieu of the reports required by subparagraphs (A) and (B), the treasurer may file monthly reports in all calendar years, which shall be filed no later than the 15th day after the last day of the month and shall be complete as of the last day of the month, except that, in lieu of filing the reports otherwise due in November and December of any year in which a regularly scheduled general election is held, a pre-general election report shall be filed in accordance with subparagraph (A)(i), a post-general election report shall be filed in accordance with subparagraph (A)(ii), and a year end report shall be filed no later than January 31 of the following calendar year.".

(b) FILING DATE.—Section 304(a)(4)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 434(a)(4)(B)) is amended by striking "20th" and inserting "15th".

SEC. 303. PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE GENERAL COUNSEL OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) ACTION BY THE COMMISSION THROUGH ITS GENERAL COUNSEL.—(1) Section 306(c) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), all decisions of the Commission with respect to the exercise of its duties and powers under this Act or under chapter 95 or 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be made by the affirmative vote of 4 members of the Commission.

"(2) On questions relating to—

"(A) the exercise of the Commission's authority under sections 307(a) (3) and (4);

"(B) a determination under section 309(a)(2) concerning whether there is reason to believe that a person may have committed or may be about to commit a violation of law; and

"(C) a determination to initiate or proceed with an investigation, the general counsel of the Commission shall make a recommendation for action by the Commission, and such action shall be taken upon the affirmative vote of 3 members of the Commission.

"(3) A member of the Commission may not delegate to any person the member's power to vote or any other decisionmaking authority or duty vested in the Commission.".

(2) Section 309(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(2)) is amended by striking ", by an affirmative vote of 4 of its members,".

(b) VACANCY IN THE OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL.—Section 306(f) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) In the event of a vacancy in the office of general counsel, the next highest ranking enforcement official in the general counsel's office shall serve as acting general counsel with full powers of the general counsel until a successor is appointed.".

(c) PAY OF THE GENERAL COUNSEL.—Section 306(f)(1) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c(f)(1)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "and the general counsel" after "staff director" in the second sentence thereof; and

(2) by striking the third sentence thereof.

SEC. 304. RETENTION OF FEES BY THE COMMISSION.

Section 306 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437c) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) Fees collected by the Commission for copying and certification of records and provision of other materials to the public shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, but shall be kept in a separate account and shall be available to the Commission, without necessity of an appropriation, for use in carrying out this Act.".

SEC. 305. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) BASIS FOR ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDING.—Section 309(a)(2) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(2)) is amended by striking "it has reason to believe that a person has committed, or is about to commit" and inserting "facts have been alleged or ascertained that, if true, give reason to believe that a person may have committed, or may be about to commit".

(b) AUTHORITY TO SEEK INJUNCTION.—(1) Section 309(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13)(A) If, at any time in a proceeding described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4), the Commission believes that—

"(i) there is a substantial likelihood that a violation of this Act or of chapter 95 or chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is occurring or is about to occur;

"(ii) the failure to act expeditiously will result in irreparable harm to a party affected by the potential violation;

"(iii) expeditious action will not cause undue harm or prejudice to the interests of others; and

"(iv) the public interest would be best served by the issuance of an injunction, the Commission may initiate a civil action for a temporary restraining order or a temporary injunction pending the outcome of the proceedings described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4).

"(B) An action under subparagraph (A) shall be brought in the United States district court for the district in which the defendant resides, transacts business, or may be found.".

(2) Section 309(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (7) by striking "(5) or (6)" and inserting "(5), (6), or (13)"; and

(B) in paragraph (11) by striking "(6)" and inserting "(6) or (13)".

SEC. 306. PENALTIES.

(a) PENALTIES PRESCRIBED IN CONCILIATION AGREEMENTS.—(1) Section 309(a)(5)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(5)(A)) is amended by striking "which does not exceed the greater of $5,000 or an amount equal to any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation" and inserting "which is—

"(i) not less than 50 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation (or such lesser amount as the Commission provides if necessary to ensure that the penalty is not unjustly disproportionate to the violation); and

"(ii) not greater than all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation".

(2) Section 309(a)(5)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(5)(B)) is amended by striking "which does not exceed the greater of $10,000 or an amount equal to 200 percent of any contribution or expenditure involved in such violation" and inserting "which is—

"(i) not less than all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not greater than 150 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation".

(b) PENALTIES WHEN VIOLATIONS ARE ADJUDICATED IN COURT.—(1) Section 309(a)(6)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(6)(A)) is amended by striking all that follows "appropriate order" and inserting ", including an order for a civil penalty in the amount determined under subparagraph (A) or (B) in the district court of the United States for the district in which the defendant resides, transacts business, or may be found.".

(2) Section 309(a)(6)(B) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(6)(B)) is amended by striking all that follows "other order" and inserting ", including an order for a civil penalty which is—

"(i) not less than all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not greater than 200 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation, upon a proper showing that the person involved has committed, or is about to commit (if the relief sought is a permanent or temporary injunction or a restraining order), a violation of this Act or chapter 95 of chapter 96 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.".

(3) Section 309(a)(6)(C) of FECA (29 U.S.C. 437g(6)(C)) is amended by striking "a civil penalty" and all that follows and inserting "a civil penalty which is—

"(i) not less than 200 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation; and

"(ii) not greater than 250 percent of all contributions and expenditures involved in the violation.".

(c) TIME PERIODS FOR CONCILIATION.—Section 309(a)(4)(A) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 437g(a)(4)(A)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i) by striking "30 days" and inserting "15 days";

(2) in clause (i) by striking "90 days" and inserting "60 days"; and

(3) in clause (ii) by striking "at least 15 days" and inserting "no more than 30 days".

SEC. 307. RANDOM AUDITS.

Section 311(b) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 438(b)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" before "The Commission"; and

(2) by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), and subject to the provisions of section 507, the Commission may from time to time conduct random audits and investigations to ensure voluntary compliance with this Act. The subjects of such audits and investigations shall be selected on the basis of criteria established by vote of at least 4 members of the Commission to ensure impartiality in the selection process.".

SEC. 308. ATTRIBUTION OF COMMUNICATIONS.

Section 318(a) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1)(A) Except as permitted under paragraph (2), if—

"(i) any person makes an expenditure or independent expenditure for the purpose of financing a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, or solicits a contribution by a communication through a broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, mass mailing, or other type of general public political advertising; or

"(ii) an authorized committee registered under section 303 makes a communication of any kind, the requirements of subparagraph (B) shall be met with respect to such communication.

"(B) Subject to section 315(b)(2)(A)(iii) of the Communications Act of 1934, for the purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) if the communication is paid for and authorized by a candidate, an authorized committee of a candidate, or its agents, the communication shall clearly state that the communication has been paid for by such candidate or authorized committee;

"(ii) if the communication is paid for by other persons but authorized by a candidate, an authorized committee of a candidate, or its agents, the communication shall clearly state that the communication is paid for by such other persons and authorized by such candidate or authorized committee; and

"(iii) if the communication is paid for by an independent expenditure, the communication shall clearly state the name of the person who paid for the communication and state that the communication is not authorized by any candidate or candidate's authorized committee.

"(2) The Commission may waive the requirements of paragraph (1) in circumstances in which the inclusion of the required information in a communication would be impracticable.".

SEC. 309. FRAUDULENT SOLICITATION OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

Section 322 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 441h) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "No"; and

(2) by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) No person shall—

"(1) make a fraudulent misrepresentation that the person is authorized to solicit or accept a contribution to a candidate or political committee; or

"(2) solicit or accept a contribution to a candidate or political committee unless the person—

"(A) intends to, and does, pay over to the candidate or political committee any contribution received; and

"(B) inform the candidate or political committee of the name of the contributor.".

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 401. RESTRICTION OF CONTROL OF CERTAIN TYPES OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES BY INCUMBENTS IN OR CANDIDATES FOR FEDERAL OFFICE.

Section 302 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 432) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) An incumbent in or candidate for Federal office may not establish, maintain, or control a political committee, other than an authorized committee of the candidate or a committee of a political party.".

SEC. 402. POLLING DATA CONTRIBUTED TO A SENATORIAL CANDIDATE.

Section 301(8) of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431(8)), as amended by section 218, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) A contribution of polling data to a candidate for the office of United States Senator shall be valued at the fair market value of the data on the date the poll was completed, depreciated at a rate not more than 1 percent per day from such date to the date on which the contribution was made.

SEC. 403. MASS MAILINGS.

Section 301 of FECA (2 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 221(b), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(24) The term 'mass mailing' means newsletters and similar mailings of more than 100 pieces in which the content of the matter mailed is substantially identical, excluding—

"(A) mailings made in direct response to communications from persons to whom the matter is mailed;

"(B) mailings to Federal, State, or local government officials; and

"(C) news releases to the communications media."

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the section-by-section analysis of the amendment submitted by Senator BOREN, which is the substitute for S. 137, be printed in the RECORD following the submission of that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGN ETHICS ACT OF 1990, S. 137—SUBSTITUTE—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1(a).—This Act may be cited as the Senate Election Campaign Ethics Act of 1990.

Section 1(b).—When used in this Act, "FECA" means the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

Section 1(c).—Table of Contents.

TITLE I—SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGN SPENDING LIMITS AND BENEFITS

Senate spending limits and public benefits

Sec. 101(a) amends FECA to add the following new title:

"TITLE V—SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR SENATE ELECTION CAMPAIGN"

"Definitions

"Section 501" defines the terms "eligible candidate", "Senate Election Campaign Fund", "Fund", "general election", "general election period", "immediate family", "major party", "primary election", "primary election period", "runoff election", "runoff election period", "voting age population", and "expenditure" and to the extent not inconsistent incorporates by reference all other definitions in Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act (2 U.S.C. 431).

"Candidates eligible to receive benefits

"Section 502(a)" provides that a candidate will be eligible for benefits if the candidate meets the primary and general election filing requirements, the primary and runoff expenditure limits, and the minimum contribution requirements.

"Section 502(b)" requires that a candidate file a statement with the FEC, on the date of filing as a candidate, that he or she will meet the limitations on spending in the primary, runoff, and general elections, and from personal funds, and will not accept contributions for the primary and runoff elections that exceed those limits.

"Section 502(c)" requires that a candidate certify under penalty of perjury to the FEC, within 7 days of the earlier of either qualifying for the general election ballot or winning a primary or runoff held after September 1, that the primary and runoff limits were met, that the candidate did not accept contributions in excess of those limits, that the minimum contribution threshold has been met (with only allowable contributions), that at least one other candidate has qualified for the general election ballot, that the limits on spending in the general election will be met, and that no contributions will be raised for the general election that exceed the aggregate of the threshold contributions, in-state resident contributions which may exceed the general election spending limit, and the compliance and official expenses fund.

The candidate must also notify the Commission of his or her intention to deposit all payments received under this Act in an account insured by the FDIC, to make all such expenditures therefrom by check or similar means of payment, to furnish records, evidence of contributions, and other appropriate information to the FEC, and to cooperate with any Commission audit or examination.

"Section 502(d)" establishes a primary election spending limit of the lesser of $2,750,000 or 67% of the applicable general election spending limit and a runoff election limit of 20% of the general election limit. These limits will be increased by the aggregate amount of independent expenditures made during that election, if in excess of $10,000 by any person, in opposition to a candidate or in support of his or her opponent, as certified to the FEC. Primary and runoff contributions in excess of those limits may be used in the general election, unless they exceed the total contributions that may be raised for the general election plus the compliance and official expense fund, provided such carryover will not result in a violation of the contribution limits of the Act.

"Section 502(e)" establishes a minimum qualifying contribution threshold requirement of 10% of the general election spending limit. A contribution may not be counted toward establishing eligibility, unless (1) it is a gift of money made through a written instrument that identifies the contributor, (2) it is not made directly or indirectly through an intermediary or conduit which is treated as such under this Act, (3) it is made by an individual and does not exceed an aggregate of $250, (4) no more than 50% of said contributions were received from individuals who reside outside such candidate's state, and (5) it was received after January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year of the election and by the date certification is filed for the general election or, for non-major party candidates, the general election itself (or in a special election, between the date the vacancy occurs and the date of the general election).

"Section 502(f)" provides for indexing of the $2,750,000 used in determining the primary spending limit and sets a base year of the calendar year of the first general election after enactment of the bill.

"Limitations on expenditures

"Section 503(a)" limits to $250,000 the amount an eligible candidate may spend or loan, or borrow to spend or loan, the campaign from his or her own money, or that of the candidate's immediate family, during the election cycle.

"Section 503(b)" sets a limitation on general election expenditures by candidates for the Senate entitled to benefits hereunder. Candidates shall not spend more than the lesser of (A) $5.5 million or (B) the greater of (i) $950,000 or (ii) $400,000 plus in a State having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents times the voting age population, plus in a State having a voting age population in excess of 4 million, 25 cents times the voting age population by which it exceeds 4 million. (In states with only one commercial VHF television station, the limit would be raised to the lesser of (A) $5.5 million or (B) the greater of (i) $950,000 or (ii) $400,000 plus 80 cents times the voting age population up to 4 million, plus 70 cents times the voting age population over 4 million). It provides that these limits shall be subject to an annual increase of the same percentage used to increase the base primary spending limit.

It also permits eligible candidates who have raised contributions equal to the spending limit to exceed the limit by up to 25% through contributions raised after the date the threshold limit was reached from individuals residing in that state in amounts of $100 or less. This exemption shall not be factored into any other provision of this Act regarding the general election expenditure limit.

"Section 503(c)" would permit participating candidates to establish with private contribution, subject to all limitations, prohibitions and reporting requirements of the Act, a compliance and official expense fund of up to the lesser of 15 percent of the general election spending limit or $300,000, plus any amount specifically approved upon petition to the FEC if a candidate has such compliance expenses in excess of the limit (no public subsidies may be transferred into this fund). The fund, upon termination—not later than the date of the first primary following the general election or a date specified by the candidate—would be donated to the Senate Election Campaign Fund, or transferred to a subsequent compliance and official expense fund or authorized committee of the candidate.

"Section 503(d)" provides that the general election spending limit would not apply to the payment of any taxes on earnings from contributions raised.

"Benefits eligible candidates entitled to receive

"Section 504(a)" provides that eligible candidates are entitled to receive: special broadcast rates under Sec. 315(b)(3) of the Communications Act of 1934; lower mailing rates under 39 U.S.C. 3629; payments from the Senate Election Campaign Fund as specified in Sec. 504(b); and voter communication vouchers as specified in Sec. 504(c).

"Section 504(b)" provides for three forms of payment to eligible candidates: the public financing amount; the amount to compensate for independent expenditures; and the amount to compensate an eligible candidate whose opponent receives contributions or makes expenditures in excess of the general election spending limit.

The public financing amount—for major party candidates—is equal to the general election spending limit, minus the threshold amount and the amount of voter communication vouchers, hence a total of 70% of the general election limit. For other candidates, the public financing amount is the lesser of: the allowable contributions to the eligible candidate in excess of the threshold requirement, or 50% of the major party candidate payment.

The independent expenditure payment to an eligible candidate is equal to the total amount made—after such amount exceeds $10,000—by one or more persons against the candidate or for his or her opponent.

The third payment is to an eligible candidate whose opponent raises or spends in excess of the general election limit. The eligible candidate—if major party—is entitled to a payment under the Act equal to two-thirds of the applicable limit, once the opponent exceeds it by less than one-third, and an additional payment equal to one-third of the limit, once the opponent exceeds the limit by one-third or more. A non-major party eligible candidate would be entitled to receive payments equal to the amount actually raised in excess of the sum of the threshold and other allowable contributions raised, up to half the major party candidate's general election spending limit.

"Section 504(c)" requires the Secretary of the Treasury to issue nontransferable voter communication vouchers to eligible candidates in aggregate amounts of up to 20% of the general election spending limit, or—if a non-major party candidate—10% of the limit. Vouchers are to be used for purchasing broadcast time subject to generally applicable conditions and rates under Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934, except that each broadcast must be between 1 and 5 minutes in length and be aired during the 5 weeks prior to the general election.

"Section 504(d)" permits an eligible candidate who receives payments of public funds to compensate for independent expenditures or excessive spending by opponents to spend such funds without regard to the spending limit. It removes the limits on personal funds and overall spending entirely for an eligible candidate when an opponent is not eligible and raises or spends more than 133⅓% of the spending limit. An eligible candidate may receive contributions in excess of the spending limit if either (a) any major party opponent is not eligible or (b) any other candidate who is not eligible spends more than 75% of the spending limit.

"Section 504(e)" requires that such benefits be used to defray expenditures incurred with respect to the general election and that they not be used to repay any loan except to the extent that the proceeds of such loan were used to further the general election of the candidate, to make any payments to the candidate or a member of the candidate's immediate family, to make any expenditure other than to further the general election of such candidate, or to make an expenditure in violation of any law.

Certification by Commission

"Section 505" requires the Commission to certify a candidate's eligibility for payment of funds or voter communication vouchers within 48 hours of filing the candidate's request. Determinations made by the Commission regarding certifications are final and conclusive, except to the extent they are subject to examination and audit, and judicial review.

"Payments Relating to Eligible Candidates

"Section 506(a)" establishes the Senate Election Campaign Fund, specifies the uses of the Fund, and establishes procedures for transfer of monies to the Fund.

"Section 506(b)" authorizes payment of funds by the Secretary of the Treasury from the Senate Election Campaign Fund upon certification by the Commission.

"Section 506(c)" authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue voter communication vouchers upon certification by the Commission and to pay broadcasters who submit such vouchers their face value.

"Section 506(d)" authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to reduce amounts available for payment by a percentage formula should insufficient funds be available for full payment and requires that the Secretary notify the Commission and the candidates of the need to prorate payments.

"Examination and Audits; Repayments

"Section 507(a)" requires the Commission to audit after each general election on a random basis 10% of all Senate candidates and authorizes audits of any candidate for cause.

"Sections 507 (b) through (d)" provide that if a candidate received more payments, vouchers, or reduced mailing rates than he or she was entitled to or if the Commission revokes his or her eligibility certification, he or she must repay the amount of the excess; if funds were not used in accordance with the title, he or she must repay an amount equal to 200% of the amount of such funds; and if the candidate exceeded the spending limit by 5 percent or less, he or she must repay the amount by which the limit was exceeded, and if by more than 5 percent of the limit, he or she must repay an amount of three times the excess expenditure.

"Section 507(e)" allows a candidate to retain such funds for 120 days after an election for payment of general election expenses and requires repayment of unexpended amounts remaining at the end of the 120 day period.

"Section 507(f)" imposes a three year limit on Commission notifications of repayments under this title.

"Section 507(g)" provides that repayments be deposited in the Senate Election Campaign Fund.

"Criminal penalties

"Section 508" would provide for criminal penalties in the case of: the knowing and willful acceptance of excess benefits, use of benefits for purposes not provided in the Act, and making expenditures in excess of the limits (fine up to $25,000 or up to 5 years imprisonment, or both); misuse of such funds (fine up to $10,000 or up to 5 years imprisonment, or both); provision of false, fictitious or fraudulent information to the Commission, or failing to furnish requested records (fine up to $10,000 or up to 5 years imprisonment, or both); or acceptance of a kickback or illegal payment (fine up to $10,000 or up to 5 years imprisonment, or both, and payment to the Fund of 125% of amount of kickback or benefit).

"Judicial proceedings

"Sections 509 and 510" give the Commission power to initiate civil proceedings to seek recovery of amounts owed by candidates and tracks existing judicial review provisions of 26 U.S.C. 9041 and 9042. An expedited review of Commission determinations under the Act is provided.

"Reports to Congress; Regulations

"Section 511" requires the Commission to submit reports after each election to Congress containing expenditures of candidates, the amount of public funds paid each candidate, the amounts repaid, and the balance in the Senate Election Campaign Fund. Such reports are to be printed as Senate documents. The Commission is also authorized to prescribe rules and regulations (after submitting its proposals to the Senate for 30 days), to conduct examinations and investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of records and information it deems necessary to carry out its duties.

"Authorization of appropriations

"Section 512" authorizes the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to the Commission to carry out its functions under this title.

Effective dates

Section 101(b) provides that the provisions in Section 101 shall apply to elections held after December 31, 1991. No expenditure made before January 1, 1991 shall count toward expenditure limits, except for expenditures for goods and services to be provided after that date. All cash, cash items, and government securities on hand on January 1, 1991 shall count toward the contribution limits, except for amounts used during the first 60 days after that date for expenditures incurred but not paid before then.

Ban on contributions to Senate candidates by Political Action Committees

Section 102(a) amends 2 U.S.C. 441a to permit Senate candidates to accept contributions only from individuals and political party committees. This provision applies to elections held after enactment of this Act, but does not include PAC contributions made or received before enactment, or PAC contributions made after enactment which are less than the total PAC contributions received by any opponent before that date minus any PAC contributions received by the candidate before that date.

Broadcast rates

Section 103(a) amends Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 to state that Federal candidates may receive the "lowest unit rate" (i.e., the lowest unit rate for preemptible time for purchase of nonpreemptible time) for broadcasts without regard to the class of time, provided that broadcasts paid for by the candidate or authorized agents include the candidate's voice in a radio ad or personal appearance in a TV ad stating that it was paid for by the candidate or his or her authorized committee. For broadcasts exceeding 30 seconds, the lowest unit cost will be based on the rates for 30 second broadcasts. In the case of Senate candidates, only those eligible for benefits may take advantage of these provisions (although all must comply with the candidate identification provision), which will apply during the entire general election period, not just the last 60 days as applies to other Federal candidates. Broadcasters may disregard special or nontypical rates in determining lowest unit cost for Federal candidates.

Section 103(b) prohibits licensees from preempting broadcasts by Federal candidates at the lowest unit rate, unless such preemption is unavoidable. Broadcasters are required to accept voter communication vouchers from eligible candidates and to provide time at the same rates and conditions as otherwise would apply to that candidate, except that at least 7 days advance notice must be provided and that the broadcaster need not provide more than 5 minutes of prime time during each of the 5 weeks preceding the general election nor more than one broadcast per day during that period.

Section 103(c) makes a conforming amendment in Section 315(b) of the Communications Act of 1934.

Preferential rates for mail

Section 104 adds to 39 U.S.C., Section 3629, providing postal rates to eligible Senate candidates for first-class matter of one-fourth the first-class rate, and for third-class matter, of two cents less than the reduced first-class rate. The total amount allowed to be spent at these reduced rates is 5% of the general election spending limit.

Disclosure by noneligible candidates

Section 105 amends Section 441d of 2 U.S.C. to require a disclaimer on all advertisements by Senate candidates not eligible for benefits, stating that such candidate has not agreed to abide by the spending limits under the Act.

Reporting requirements

Section 105 adds Section 304A to Title III of FECA: "Reporting Requirements for Senate Candidates"

"Section 304A(a)" requires candidates who do not file eligibility certifications for the general election to declare to the Commission whether they intend to exceed the general election spending limit. It requires reports to be filed by Senate candidates who are not eligible for benefits and who raise or spend or obligate to spend more than 70% of the spending limit for the general election. The first such report shall be filed within 24 hours after raising or spending such amounts (or, if later, within 24 hours after qualifying for the general election ballot), stating total contributions and expenditures. An additional report is required within 24 hours of each time such candidate raises or spends or obligates to spend an additional 10% of the limit, until 133⅓% of the limit is reached. The Commission is required to notify the eligible candidate within 24 hours of the filing of such reports by an opponent and shall certify eligibility for payments once the opponent has exceeded the spending limit. The Commission is authorized to make its own findings regarding the contributions or expenditures of candidates who are not eligible and give eligible candidates notice when such limits are exceeded.

"Section 304A(b)" requires persons, whether alone or in cooperation with others, to report all independent expenditures for Senate elections in excess of $10,000 to the Commission within 24 hours, and to file additional reports within 24 hours of each time the additional aggregate in such expenditures exceeds $10,000. Reports filed with the Commission and the appropriate Secretary of State shall be accompanied by an identification, under penalty of perjury, of the candidates intended to be helped elected or defeated. Anyone may file a complaint with the Commission if he or she believes information in such reports is false, in which case the Commission must make a determination with respect to the complaint within 3 days.

It also requires the Commission to notify eligible candidates of independent expenditures in excess of $10,000 made against them or for their opponent, within 24 hours of receiving a report of such spending, and to certify eligibility for payments under the Act. The Commission is authorized to make its own findings regarding independent expenditures and to give the affected candidate notice of its findings.

"Section 304A(c)" requires candidates to file a report with the Commission within 24 hours if they spend or loan more than $250,000 of personal or immediate family funds to their campaign. The Commission must notify eligible candidates of these reports and is authorized to make its own findings regarding such expenditures and to give affected candidates notice of its findings.

"Section 304A(d)" requires Senate candidates who, during that election cycle, held or were candidates for any other elective office to report to the Commission within 7 days of becoming Senate candidates a statement of the amount and nature of any expenditures made before becoming Senate candidates which would have been treated as Senate campaign expenditures, such as to promote their public image or name recognition. This would not apply to any elections held before the individual becomes a Senate candidate. The Commission must determine, as soon as practicable, whether to consider these expenditures to have been made in connection with a Senate election, and therefore subject to the applicable spending limit.

"Section 304A(e-g)" requires the Commission to make certifications on the basis of reports filed with it or on its own investigations, and to transmit copies of reports received under this section to the Secretary of the Senate within 2 working days of receipt.

Other definitions

Section 107(a) amends 2 U.S.C. 431 to define election cycle for candidates or authorized committees as beginning the day after the most recent general election for that office and ending on the date of the next general election for that office. For other persons, the election cycle shall begin the day after the last general election and end on the next general election day.

Section 107(b) would change the definition of identification of an individual to include his or her permanent residence address instead of mailing address.

TITLE II—EXPENDITURES AND CONTRIBUTIONS

Subtitle A—Independent Expenditures

Cooperative expenditures not treated as independent expenditures

Section 201 adds the term "cooperative expenditure" to 2 U.S.C. 431(8), and states that an independent expenditure cannot include a cooperative expenditure, the latter being treated as a contribution from the person making the expenditure to the candidate on whose behalf it was made and as an expenditure by the candidate for whose benefit it was made. It defines cooperative expenditure to specify certain relationships and activities between candidates and committees or other persons that constitute coordination, consultation or concerted activity between the parties and which do not constitute a relationship of sufficient independence to permit unlimited spending for or against a candidate. It also provides that once any such relationship or activity is established or undertaken, even if before a person becomes a candidate, subsequent spending will continue to be considered cooperative expenditures. Any expenditure made to benefit a candidate by political committees affiliated with a lobbying organization shall be considered a cooperative expenditure, as shall any expenditure to benefit a candidate by a political committee that has made a contribution to that candidate.

Equal broadcast time

Section 202 amends Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 to require persons making independent expenditures to inform the broadcaster of the nature of the advertisement and the names of candidates to which the broadcast relates. Broadcasters are then required to notify all affected candidates of the broadcast and to allow the candidates opposed by the independent expenditure to purchase the same amount of time immediately following the independent expenditure. For opponents of candidates supported by independent expenditures who certify that the opponent is eligible for compensating payments, the licensee must provide the opponent time without requiring payment in advance and at the lowest unit rate time provided in the Act.

Broadcasters are also required to provide equal opportunities for all candidates if any candidate is permitted access, but no obligation is required by this section for any broadcaster to allow the use of its station by any candidate. Appearance of a candidate on a bona fide news show shall not be considered a use of the station.

A licensee that endorses a federal candidate must provide all other candidates a copy of the editorial and a reasonable chance to reply, within 24 hours if the editorial is aired at least 72 hours before the election and on an expedited basis if the editorial is first aired within 72 hours of the election.

Attribution of communications

Section 203 amends 2 U.S.C. 44d(a) to require that any televised political advertisement sponsored by independent expenditures contain throughout its duration a clearly readable statement covering at least 25% of the viewing area identifying the person paying for the advertisement and, if a committee, the name of any affiliated organization. Independent expenditures in any audio broadcast shall state such information at the conclusion of the broadcast. Similar information is required for printed and other forms of advertisements together with a statement that the cost of such statement was not subject to any campaign contribution limits.

Subtitle B—Expenditures

Part I—Personal Loans; Credit

Personal contributions and loans

Section 211 amends 2 U.S.C. 441a to prohibit contributions received after the general election from being used to repay loans from a candidate or immediate family member. No contribution may be returned to a candidate or immediate family member except as part of a pro rata distribution of excess funds to all contributors.

Extensions of credit

Section 212 defines contribution to include an extension of credit to a Senate candidate and his authorized committees in an amount of more than $1,000 for such purposes as advertising and mass mailings, for a period that is greater than the lesser of the period that is in the usual course of business or 60 days.

Part II—Provisions Relating to Soft Money of Political Parties

Limitations on Contributions to State Political Party Committees

Section 215(a) amends 2 U.S.C. 441a(A)(1) to allow individuals to contribute up to $20,000 to a State political party in a calendar year, instead of the current limit of $5,000.

Section 215(b) amends 2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2) to allow multicandidate committees to contribute up to $15,000 to a State political party in a calendar year, instead of the current limit of $5,000.

Section 215(c) amends 2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(3) to allow an individual to exceed the annual aggregate limit on all Federal contributions ($25,000) by the amount of contributions up to $5,000 to a State party committee.

Provisions relating to National, State, and local party committees

Section 216(a) amends 2 U.S.C. 441a(d) to limit all spending by a state party committee and its subordinates on behalf of its Presidential general election candidate—including any activity defined elsewhere in this Act as influencing a federal election—to 4 cents times the voting age population of the state.

Section 216(b) amends Section 431 of 2 U.S.C. by repealing clauses (8)(B) (x and xii) and (9)(B) (viii-ix), which exempt from the definition of contribution and expenditure payments by state or local party committees on certain grassroots activities and materials, and get-out-the-vote and registration drives which benefit their parties' nominees for President and Vice President.

It also specifies that mass mailings by candidates of campaign materials in connection with volunteer activities are not exempt from the current law's definition of contribution and that mass mailings by state and local party committees of slate cards and sample ballots are not exempt from the law's definition of contribution and expenditure.

Section 216(c) adds a new section to Title III of the FECA: "Political Party Committees"

"Section 324" provides that all contributions received and expenditures made by a national, state, or local party committee are entirely subject to the provisions of the FECA, if they are at least in part in connection with a Federal election and made during a Federal election period—defined as from 60 days before the date of the earliest regular primary for any Federal office through the date of the general election.

Activities deemed in connection with a Federal election include: voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives; campaign advertising that is either generic or which identifies any Federal candidate; campaign materials which are either generic or which identify any Federal candidate; the maintenance of voter lists; and any other activity which may affect a Federal election. (Generic activities are defined as those whose preponderant purpose and affect pertains to a political party rather than a particular Federal or non-Federal candidate.)

Activities not considered in connection with a Federal election and which may be paid for from state regulated funds include: party building funds; contributions on behalf of non-Federal candidates; contributions or expenditures for state or local political conventions; administrative expenses of state or local party committees; research pertaining solely to state and local races; maintenance of voter files outside a federal election period; and any activities specified above which are conducted outside of the federal election period or which solely affect non-federal elections.

The limits on contributions in the FECA shall also apply to transfers among political committees, thus eliminating the authority for such committees to make unlimited transfers under 2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(4). All money raised by national party committees must be raised in accordance with the FECA. These provisions pertaining to transfers and to national committees do not apply to funds that are transferred to a state or local committee for the purposes set forth above or for use by the national committee in support of such state activities.

State or local party committees (including any subordinate committees) may not make any expenditures in connection with Federal elections (as defined above) in any year which exceed an aggregate of 30 cents times the voting age population of the state. This does not permit such committees to spend in excess of the limits elsewhere imposed on coordinated expenditures. This limit shall be increased periodically, before 1992 and based on 1990.

Restrictions on fundraising by candidates and officeholders

Section 217 amends 2 U.S.C. 441a to prohibit Federal candidates and officeholders from raising any funds in connection with a Federal election unless such funds are raised and spent in accordance with the Act, or in connection with non-Federal elections if the amounts raised are in excess of what would be permissible under the FECA and are from sources permitted by the FECA. These prohibitions shall not apply to a candidate or officeholder appearing or participating in an activity for a state or local party committee or non-federal candidate if it is otherwise permitted by law and where the individual solicits or receives no contributions from it.

This section also prohibits Federal candidates or officeholders from raising more than $5,000 a year for a tax-exempt organization which he or she establishes, maintains, or controls. It also prohibits a Federal candidate or officeholder from soliciting contributions for any tax exempt organization which devotes a significant portion of its budget to voter registration or get-out-the-vote drives.

Reporting requirements

Section 218 requires reports by national party committees of all activities, whether or not in connection with federal elections, and by other political committees on activities in connection with federal elections. Any other political committee which maintains a non-federal account must report all activity in connection with a federal election. State and local party committees which spend money in connection with federal elections must also report any transfers and the reasons for such. Reports must include itemization of receipts and expenditures of over $200.

This provision also requires that contributions and expenditures over $200 to or by national or state party committees for building funds and state or local party committees for sample ballots and slate cards must be reported and disclosed under the Act. In determining whether an entity is a political committee as defined in 2 U.S.C. 431(4), the FEC is authorized to make judgements on what constitutes efforts to influence federal elections, such as the representations made in soliciting funds for such purposes, identification of federal candidates in general advertising, and the proximity of advertising to specific elections.

State party committees may file the same reports required under state law, if deemed by the Commission to include substantially the same information as on federal forms.

Individuals who contribute more than $10,000 to federal candidates and committees in a year must report such to the Commission within 7 days, and within 7 days thereafter each time an additional $5,000 is contributed. Candidates and committees soliciting contributions subject to FECA limits must include a notice of the aggregate annual limit and the requirement to report large contributions in its solicitation.

Subtitle C—Contributions

Limits on contributions by certain political committees to political parties

Section 221 limits the amount of contributions which the national committee of a political party (including any committee established or maintained thereby) may receive during an election cycle from multicandidate committees and separate segregated funds to an aggregate of 30% of the amount that may be spent on behalf of Senate or House candidates under Section 441a(d) of 2 U.S.C.

It limits the amount which a national party committee (including any political committee of such party) may receive during a two year election cycle from such sources to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

The limitations on national and state party coordinated expenditures shall apply to general public political advertising which identifies a candidate for federal office but not to direct mail fundraising communications that only make incidential reference to one or more federal candidates.

It also requires that solicitations for contributions which clearly identifies a candidate shall count as a coordinated expenditure for that candidate, and solicitations that refer to more than one candidate shall have the expenditures pro rated.

Contributions through intermediaries or conduits

Section 222 would limit the earmarking and bundling of all contributions made payable to a conduit, or by political action committees, party committees, corporations, unions, national banks, and lobby organizations and their officers, employees, or agents regardless of to whom the contribution is made payable, to the amount of the contribution limit of the individual or committee acting as conduit. It specifies what is meant by "contributions made or arranged to be made" and "acting on the organization's behalf." This provision would not apply to a joint fundraising activity or similar event by two or more candidates, party committees, or combination thereof. Contributions which pass through intermediaries must be reported to the Commission and the intended recipient, identifying both the original source and intended recipient.

Excess campaign funds

Section 223(a) amends Section 439a of 2 U.S.C. to allow excess campaign funds to be used to defray ordinary and necessary expenses connected to a Senator's official duties which are not expenditures to influence his or her election, including ordinary and necessary expenses for travel by the Senator's spouse or children between the home state and Washington, D.C.

Section 223(b) amends 2 U.S.C. 441a(a) to allow contributions to be made or transferred to a federal officeholder's official office account only from that official's principal campaign committee.

Contributions by dependents not of voting age

Section 224 amends 2 U.S.C. 441a to count contributions by non-voting age dependents of another individual as contributions by that individual, and allocated between that individual and his or her spouse, if relevant.

Subtitle D—Reporting Requirements

Reporting requirements

Section 231(a) modifies various sections of section 434 to the effect that reports by candidates and authorized committees aggregate on an election cycle, rather than calendar year, basis.

Section 231(b) requires that in reporting expenditures a committee must report the relevant information about a secondary payee in a situation where a primary payee providing personal or consulting services pays for goods and services for the candidate in excess of the reporting threshold of $200.

TITLE III—FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

Use of candidates' names

Section 301 provides that a political committee may not use the name of a candidate in its name, unless it is the authorized committee of that candidate. It also prohibits the use of a candidate's name in the name of a political committee in such a way as to suggest the committee is authorized to do so.

Reporting requirements

Section 302 allows House and Senate principal campaign committees the option of filing reports on a monthly basis in all years, except that pre-general election, post-general election, and year-end reports may take the place of November and December reports for an election year.

For political committees not authorized by candidates and filing monthly reports, such reports shall be due on the 15th of the month, rather than the 20th.

Provisions relating to the General Counsel of the Commission

Section 303 requires all decisions by the Commission with respect to the public funding system to be made by the affirmative vote of 4 Members. The affirmative vote of only 3 Members will be required when the general counsel makes a recommendation regarding: the requirement of production of documentary evidence; the ordering and conduct of testimony; determination of reason to believe a violation may have been committed; and determination to initiate or proceed with an investigation. Members may not delegate their votes or decision-making authority to others. This section removes the requirement of an affirmative vote of 4 members for the Commission to determine that it has reason to believe a violation may have been committed.

A vacancy in the office of general counsel shall be filled by the next highest ranking enforcement official, who will have full powers until a successor is appointed.

This provision also raises the pay of the general counsel to that of the staff director.

Retention of fees by the Commission

Section 304 allows fees collected by the Commission for copying and certifying records and providing public materials to be retained by the Commission for performance of its duties.

Enforcement

Section 305 changes the basis for enforcement proceedings by allowing the Commission to proceed if facts are alleged or ascertained that, if true, give reason to believe a person may have committed a violation, rather than requiring the Commission to have reason to believe such a violation has been committed.

It provides authority to the Commission to initiate a civil action for a temporary restraining order or injunction if there is substantial likelihood that a violation of the public funding system has occurred or is likely to occur, that expeditious action is necessary, and that the public interest would be so served. Such action is to be brought in the U.S. district court where the defendant lives, works, or can be found.

It requires, rather than allows, knowing and willful violations of the FECA to be referred to the Attorney General.

Penalties

Section 306 increases the minimum penalty involved in conciliation agreements, whether it is based on reason to believe or knowing and willful violation. It also decreases the maximum penalty in conciliation agreements where there has been a knowing and willful violation. It increases both the minimum and maximum penalties when violations are adjudicated in court.

This section also reduces the time periods allowed for the Commission to correct apparent violations of the Act through informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion.

Random audits

Section 307 allows the Commission to conduct random audits and investigations, with subjects selected on the basis of criteria established by the vote of at least 4 Members.

Attribution of communications

Section 308 clarifies the requirements for identifying the sponsor of communications and solicitations on behalf of candidates, whether authorized by candidates or not. It allows the Commission to waive such requirements in cases where such identification would be impracticable.

Fraudulent solicitation of contributions

Section 309 amends 2 U.S.C. 441h to prohibit persons from misrepresenting that they are authorized to raise contributions for a candidate or committee, or to solicit or accept such contributions unless they transmit the funds raised and the identity of the contributors to the candidate or committee.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS

Restriction of control of certain types of political committees by incumbents in or candidates for Federal office

Section 401 prohibits Federal candidates or officeholders from establishing, maintaining, or controlling a political committee, other than an authorized candidate committee or party committee.

Polling data contributed to a senatorial candidate

Section 402 provides that contributions of polling data to Senate candidates be valued at fair market value on the date of the poll's completion, depreciated at no more than 1 percent a day from the completion to the transmittal of the data.

Mass mailings

Section 403 amends 2 U.S.C. 431 to define the term "mass mailing", to mean newsletters and similar mailings of more than 100 pieces in which the content is substantially identical, except responses to communications, mailings to other government officials, and news releases to the communications media.

VOLUNTARY EXPENDITURE LIMITS, THRESHOLDS, AND PUBLIC SUBSIDIES FOR SENATE ELECTIONS SUBSTITUTE S. 137 [1]

State	VAP (1990)	Election cycle limit	General election limit	Primary election limit	Qualifying threshold	Major party candidate subsidy [2]	Broadcast vouchers [3]
Alabama	3,010,000	$2,176,010	$1,303,000	$873,010	$130,300	$912,100	$260,600
Alaska	362,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Arizona	2,575,000	1,958,075	1,172,500	785,575	117,250	820,750	234,500

VOLUNTARY EXPENDITURE LIMITS, THRESHOLDS, AND PUBLIC SUBSIDIES FOR SENATE ELECTIONS SUBSTITUTE S. 137 [1]—Continued

State	VAP (1990)	Election cycle limit	General election limit	Primary election limit	Qualifying threshold	Major party candidate subsidy [2]	Broadcast vouchers [3]
Arkansas	1,756,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
California	21,350,000	8,250,000	5,500,000	2,750,000	550,000	3,850,000	1,100,000
Colorado	2,453,000	1,895,953	1,135,900	761,053	113,590	795,130	227,180
Connecticut	2,479,000	1,909,979	1,143,700	766,279	114,370	800,590	228,740
Delaware	504,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Florida	9,799,000	5,093,083	3,049,750	2,043,333	304,975	2,134,825	609,950
Georgia	4,639,000	2,938,783	1,759,750	1,179,033	175,975	1,231,825	351,950
Hawaii	825,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Idaho	710,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Illinois	8,678,000	4,625,065	2,769,500	1,855,565	276,950	1,938,650	553,900
Indiana	4,133,000	2,727,528	1,633,250	1,094,278	163,325	1,143,275	326,650
Iowa	2,132,000	1,736,132	1,039,600	696,532	103,960	727,720	207,920
Kansas	1,854,000	1,596,854	956,200	640,654	95,620	669,340	191,240
Kentucky	2,760,000	2,050,760	1,228,000	822,760	122,800	859,600	245,600
Louisiana	3,109,000	2,225,609	1,332,700	892,909	133,270	932,890	266,540
Maine	917,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Maryland	3,533,000	2,438,033	1,459,900	978,133	145,990	1,921,930	291,980
Massachusetts	4,576,000	2,912,480	1,744,000	1,168,480	174,400	1,220,800	348,800
Michigan	6,829,000	3,853,108	2,307,250	1,545,858	230,725	1,615,075	461,450
Minnesota	3,224,000	2,283,224	1,367,200	916,024	136,720	957,040	273,440
Mississippi	1,852,000	1,595,852	955,600	640,252	95,560	668,920	191,120
Missouri	3,854,000	2,598,854	1,556,200	1,042,654	155,620	1,089,340	311,240
Montana	588,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Nebraska	1,187,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Nevada	833,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
New Hampshire	828,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
New Jersey	5,903,000	8,236,607	4,932,100	3,304,507	493,210	3,452,470	986,420
New Mexico	1,074,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
New York	13,600,000	6,680,000	4,000,000	2,680,000	400,000	2,800,000	800,000
North Carolina	4,929,000	3,059,858	1,832,250	1,227,608	183,225	1,282,575	366,450
North Dakota	481,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Ohio	8,090,000	4,379,575	2,622,500	1,757,075	262,250	1,835,250	524,500
Oklahoma	2,371,000	1,855,871	1,111,300	744,571	111,130	777,910	222,260
Oregon	2,123,000	1,731,623	1,036,900	694,723	103,690	725,830	207,380
Pennsylvania	9,199,000	4,842,583	2,899,750	1,942,833	289,975	2,029,825	579,950
Rhode Island	767,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
South Carolina	2,558,000	1,949,558	1,167,400	782,158	116,740	817,180	233,480
South Dakota	519,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Tennessee	3,685,000	2,514,185	1,505,500	1,008,685	150,550	1,053,850	301,100
Texas	12,038,000	6,027,865	3,609,500	2,418,365	360,950	2,526,650	721,900
Utah	1,076,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Vermont	425,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Virginia	4,615,000	2,928,763	1,753,750	1,175,013	175,375	1,227,625	350,750
Washington	3,545,000	2,444,045	1,463,500	980,545	146,350	1,024,450	292,700
West Virginia	1,394,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000
Wisconsin	3,612,000	2,477,612	1,483,600	994,012	148,360	1,038,520	296,720
Wyoming	339,000	1,586,500	950,000	636,500	95,000	665,000	190,000

[1] For States with runoff provisions, the limits would be as follows: Alabama—$260,600; Arkansas—$190,000; Florida—$609,950; Georgia—$351,950; Mississippi—$191,120; North Carolina—$366,450; Oklahoma—$222,260; South Carolina—$233,480; Texas—$271,900.
[2] Equals 70% of the general election limit.
[3] Equals 20% of the general election limit.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that the Senate Special Committee on Aging has scheduled a hearing to examine service delivery problems at the Social Security Administration, and how initiatives being considered in Congress and by the administration can restore the agency's proud tradition of excellence in public service.

The hearing will take place on Friday, May 18, 1990, beginning at 9:30 a.m. in room 628 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

For further information, please contact Portia Mittelman, staff director, at (202) 224-5364.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will be holding a business meeting to report on the nomination of Anthony J. Hope to be Chairman of the National Indian Gaming Commission and to mark up S. 2203, the Zuni Land Claims Settlement Act; to be followed by an oversight hearing on Monday, May 14, 1990, beginning at 2 p.m., in 485 Russell Senate Office Building on S. 1021, the Native American Grave and Burial Protection Act; S. 1980, the Native American Repatriation of Cultural Patrimony Act; and the Heard Museum report.

Those wishing additional information should contact the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at 224-2251.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SECURITY AND FAMILY POLICY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Social Security and Family Policy of the Committee on Finance be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on May 11, 1990, at 10 a.m. to hold a hearing on S. 2453, the Social Security Restoration Act of 1990.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON FEDERAL SERVICES, POST OFFICE, AND CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office, and Civil Service, Committee on Governmental Affairs, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Friday, May 11, 1990. The hearing will focus on the investigations of the production of a radar jammer system [ASPJ].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on May 11, 1990, at 9:15 a.m., to hold a hearing on the competitiveness challenge facing the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to meet on May 11, 1990, beginning at 9:30 a.m., in 485 Russell Senate Office Building, on initiatives for the 1990's.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs would like to request unanimous consent to hold a hearing on employment (including section 401 of S. 2100), education (S. 2483), and housing (S. 2484, except for sections 2, 3(a) (1) and (2), 8(b)(1), and 13) on Friday, May 11, 1990, at 9:30 a.m. in SR-418.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

DAVIS-MONTHAN AFB IS ESSENTIAL

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, on April 30, the Air Force announced that it planned to expand the scope of the Environmental Impact Statements [EIS] of its proposal to close Myrtle Beach Air Force Base [AFB], SC. The Air Force has expanded it to include the study of two "reasonable alternatives," England AFB, LA, and Davis-Monthan AFB, AZ. These EIS studies are being made in order to comply with the Base Closings law and the National Environmental Policy Act [NEPA].

You will recall that on January 29, 1990, Secretary of Defense Cheney announced his intention to initiate a second round of overseas and domestic base closings. One of the bases on his list was Myrtle Beach. As Air Force spokesman Capt. Jack Giese has stated, "Myrtle Beach was the Air Force's choice after we looked at all three last year." I see no reason to conclude that the Air Force's determination will change in any way and I welcome the opportunity for the Air Force to gather additional data which will assuredly strengthen the case that Davis-Monthan AFB is essential.

Unlike the first round of base closings, which were determined after a cursory study by an independent commission, most base closings must adhere to specific legal criteria. These include a detailed analysis and EIS evaluation required under the NEPA law, as well as implementing Council of Environmental Quality regulations. As part of that study process, the Air Force will prepare two EIS's for use in decisionmaking regarding the proposed closure and final disposition or reprogramming of property by the Air Force. The first EIS will be prepared to assess the impact of the possible closure of each Air Force base; the second would be prepared only if there is a final decision for closure.

I am confident that the study of Davis-Monthan AFB, which will begin shortly, will demonstrate the important role served by D-M for the Air Force. Additionally, the study will likely demonstrate the expandability of D-M if the Air Force determines that such a route would be desirable in the future.

This study should also avoid many of the problems associated with the Base Closings Commission. We in Arizona know only too well the problems which can occur when the functions of a base are not studied or are not studied thoroughly. At Fort Huachuca, the Army and the Secretary of Defense are only beginning to appreciate the value of Fort Huachuca, and are concluding that the realignment of the Information Systems Command is a waste of the taxpayer's dollars. With this additional, serious study of three bases, the Air Force can avoid making a similar mistake.

Those of us from southern Arizona, and those who have spent any time in the area, know that our weather is great year-round. The conditions are ideal for training new pilots. We have at least 350 days of perfect flying weather annually. Neither South Carolina nor Louisiana can boast these ideal conditions. That is one of the original reasons why Davis-Monthan was located in the Tucson area.

Davis-Monthan AFB performs multiple roles. The reason the Air Force wants to close Myrtle Beach is because it is a base for the A-10 aircraft which the Air Force plans to phase out of its inventory. D-M is the host of the 836th Air Division which includes two wings—the 355th Tactical Training Wing, which uses A-10's exclusively, and the 602d Tactical Air Control Wing, which uses OA-10's and OV-10 Broncos. The A-10's at Myrtle Beach are operational and designed to fly low in support of United States ground forces in Europe. The A-10 Thunderbolt is known as the "tank-killer aircraft." The A-10's at Davis-Monthan, conversely, are used for pilot training. While our presence in Europe is decreasing and the probability of a major conventional confrontation is thankfully reduced, there remains a need for trained pilots. D-M fits that role.

Davis-Monthan is home to the EC-130 Hercules and the 836th Medical Group. The Hercules performs a critical mission in support of both tactical ground and air operations by jamming communications and other electronics. Additionally, there are several small units at Davis-Monthan, including three F-16 fighters used by the Montana Air National Guard; training activities for the Arizona National Guard, and the expected addition in the third quarter of this fiscal year of 10 F-16's from the Royal Dutch Air Force. Myrtle Beach and England AFBs have just one wing of A-10's.

Unlike many other parts of the country, southern Arizona is not heavily developed nor heavily populated. While we are proud of Arizona's environmental legacy and are cognizant of the fragility of the Sonoran Desert, we have access to appropriate undeveloped land for expansion of D-M should the Air Force determine that it would be in the Nation's best interests.

Finally, Davis-Monthan AFB is unique among the Nation's air force bases. It is the home of the Aircraft Maintenance and Regeneration Center or AMARC. This facility is the "graveyard" for more than 3,000 retired and mothballed planes. These planes can be kept in this status indefinitely and the dry desert air is ideal for this purpose. In time of war, many of these planes could be brought back into service, if necessary.

Because AMARC is the only facility of its kind in the Air Force, this graveyard for planes will almost certainly remain open forever, thus preventing Davis-Monthan from ever being entirely dismantled. If you cannot end the AMARC function, and if you cannot entirely close the base, then you cannot sell or transfer the land on which this base sits. Thus, the Air Force would never realize any true profit from attempting to close D-M in the future.

Davis-Monthan has approximately 5,400 military personnel on its payroll, as well as about 1,400 Federal civilian employees and 1,000 non-Federal, or contractor, employees. Tucson recently felt the impact of the closure of IBM's Tucson facility, costing 2,500 jobs locally. Any decisive reduction in functions or employment at Davis-Monthan would have a substantial adverse impact on Tucson as a whole. The base is a major contributor to the greater Tucson economy while, according to Ben Beuhler-Garcia of the Tucson Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce, the "civic contributions of D-M are great—to the Community Food Bank, the Boy Scouts and the United Way, to mention a few." Contributions such as these are difficult to quantify, but the ripple effects to the community are significant.

In conclusion, I am convinced that the study of reasonable alternatives to the closure of Myrtle Beach AFB, SC, by the Air Force will convince the Air Force that Davis-Monthan is essential and should perhaps be expanded in the future. With the changes occurring around the world and the necessary restructuring of our Nation's defense structure, we are uncertain today what our defense and military base needs will be tomorrow. The study announced last week by the Air Force should help to clarify many questions. I look forward to examining the conclusions of the study. I am certain that the dedicated women and men at Davis-Monthan and the people of Tucson also look forward to showing the Air Force's investigators how essential they know Davis-Monthan to be.●

TRIBUTE TO GOODWILL INDUSTRIES OF NORTHEAST IOWA

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to salute one of the great leaders in providing vocational rehabilitation and employment programs for adults with disabilities. Goodwill Industries of Northeast Iowa is but one of 178 Goodwill units across North America providing such programs.

Goodwill Industries of Northeast Iowa is a community-based, autonomous, not-for-profit organization who, since 1960, has provided services to thousands of men and women who are disabled. With the loyal support of volunteers and the cooperation of local business, Goodwill has become an indispensable resource in northeast Iowa, ensuring that all residents, including those with disabilities, have the opportunity to realize their potential and become contributing, wage-earning citizens.

Mr. President, what has made Goodwill so successful is their model, which they have lived. It is eight words that have made Goodwill one of the most successful organizations of its kind in the world. Those words are: "Goodwill Industries * * * our business works, so people can."

I would like to Congratulate Goodwill Industries of Northeast Iowa for 30 years of distinguished service to the people of Iowa and extend my best wishes for another 30 years.●

SUPPORT OF PASSAGE OF H.R. 3961

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to thank the Senate for expeditious approval of legislation to recognize the life's work of Judge Robert S. Vance. Judge Vance was a noted scholar and respected jurist. His death is felt by all who knew him.

Naming the old Federal building in Birmingham, AL after Judge Vance will memorialize his past successful endeavors in public service. Again, I send my respect to his family and friends.●

THE AMTRAK REAUTHORIZATION AND IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1990

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate, by voice vote, adopted the conference report to H.R. 2364, the Amtrak Reauthorization and Improvement Act of 1990. While I do have strong reservations about a couple of its provisions, I want to express my support for one particular segment which addresses a vital tax issue.

During consideration of H.R. 2364, the conferees adopted language proposed by the Senate which provides "that no compensation paid by a motor carrier providing transportation subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission [ICC] or by a private motor carrier to an employee who performs duties in two or more States shall be subject to the income tax laws of any State or subdivision of that State other than that of the employee's residence."

Mr. President, this provision is particularly important to employees of the railroad and trucking industries who reside in my State, but work in surrounding States such as Utah and Montana. As my colleagues may be aware, Wyoming is one of few States which assesses no income tax. Under current law, however, Wyoming employees in the motor carrier industry are taxed in States where they work, thus providing for multistate taxation. This is a regressive tax law which simply does not make sense. It is poor public policy and I am pleased that the conferees adopted language to correct this anomaly.

Notwithstanding this provision, Mr. President, I am concerned about the authorization levels we are adopting in this bill. Instead of reducing Amtrak subsidies, we are going in the other direction. This bill provides an authorization level of $684 million in fiscal year 1991 and $712 million in fiscal year 1992. That is an 18-percent increase in just 2 years. And we wonder where our deficits come from? Amtrak is part of that problem.

Mr. President, if Amtrak is to become self-sufficient as originally intended, it must learn to live within its means. The Federal Government can no longer afford to subsidize rail passenger service on unprofitable lines. We should treat Amtrak like any other private business and insist that it operate like one, without Federal moneys. This bill does not carry us in that direction.

I must also express my objection to the provision in the conference report which requires Interstate Commerce Commission [ICC] preapproval of nonrailroad purchases of railroads. This provision sets a terrible precedent; it is unwarranted and counterproductive.

Under current law the ICC only reviews railroad acquisitions of other railroads, focusing on antitrust concerns. The provision the conferees adopted in this bill would extend ICC review to transactions that do not present competitive problems. One can only conclude that this is a step back to the 1970's when the ICC closely regulated railroad prices and entry and exit from rail markets. This process of burdensome Government regulations forced one-fourth of the railroad industry into bankruptcy. As a result, Congress, in 1980, enacted the Staggers Act to eliminate ICC regulation except in cases where there was a lack of competitive rail rates. Today we have a much healthier railroad industry and overall rates have declined, thus benefiting railroads and consumers alike.

Yet here we are adopting an unnecessary regulatory provision which will simply impede any real progress we have made under the Staggers Act. We cannot afford to impose such burdensome and costly requirements which will only discourage investment in the railroad industry. Our country's competitiveness depends on a productive and reliable transportation system and this provision undermines our ability to improve our posture in world markets.●

ASIAN-PACIFIC AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the historic significance of the White House ceremony which occurred on May 6, 1990, commemorating May 1990 as the first Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month. One of my constituents, Jeanie F. Jew, of Springfield, VA, is the creator of the idea for Asian-Pacific American Heritage Week and Month.

On June 30, 1977, approximately 13 years ago, House Joint Resolution 540 was introduced by Congressman HORTON of New York. This would mark the first time in this Nation's history when the Congress and the people of the United States would be asked to set aside a period in May as Asian-Pacific American Heritage Week. Later, the introduction of the House Joint Resolution 1007 would further the movement for increased recognition of the Asian-Pacific American. I am happy to say that the celebration of Asian-Pacific American Heritage Week was extended to span over the course of a full month by passage of a bill in both the House and the Senate, designating the month of May 1990, as "Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month."

It is my feeling that special recognition should be given to Mrs. Jeanie F. Jew whose unyielding drive facilitated the introduction of House Joint Reoslution 540 13 years ago.

Her story began when a young man, M.Y. Lee, left Toishan, Canton, China, in the 1800's to find a better life abroad. Arriving in America, Mr. Lee became one of the first Chinese pioneers to construct the Transcontinental Railroad. Rising through hard work and determination, Mr. Lee became a prominent California businessman. At this time, there existed much unrest in Chinese-American relations in Oregon. Hearing of the trouble, Mr. Lee traveled east, his destination being Oregon. Unfortunately, Mr. Lee was killed during this period of unrest soon after arriving in Oregon. It was a time of anti-Chinese and anti-Asian sentiments. The revelations about Mr. Lee and the story of Asian-Americans led this one woman to believe that not only should Asians understand their own heritage but that all Americans must learn of the contributions and histories of the Asian-Pacific American experience in the United States. The creator of the heritage month idea of Jeanie F. Jew, the granddaughter of M.Y. Lee, that early pioneer.

Originally, the dates of Asian-Pacific American Week began with May 4. However, after careful research, Mrs. Jew and Ruby Moy, administrative assistant of Congressman HORTON, selected May 10, "Golden Spike Day," the date celebrated as the joining of the Transcontinental Railroad and which is one of the inclusive dates celebrating Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month. In addition, the date May 7, 1843, was selected as a marker of the first arrival of the Japanese in the United States. Admirably, Mrs. Jew turned a personal tragedy in her family's history into a positive force. Now, Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month will be observed by all Americans.

In addition, in 1977, Mrs. Jew and Ms. Moy cofounded the Congressional Asian-Pacific staff caucus, an organization which collectively worked for the establishment of the first heritage proclamation and supports yearly efforts to perpetuate its recognition. The caucus, a group of professional staff members of Asian descent, discusses and reviews legislation and issues of concern to Asian-Pacific Americans from time to time.

At this time, I urge all my colleagues to join with me in supporting Congressman HORTON and Jeanie Jew's idea of a series of commemorative stamps for Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month first month's observance. These stamps may depict Heritage Month, individuals, events, subjects, or places that are of significance in Asian-Pacific American history in the United States.

Once again, I hope all my colleagues will join me and Congressman HORTON in supporting the idea of these stamps, and in recognizing the history and contributions of Asian-Pacific Americans particularly during Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month.●

OUR ENVIRONMENTAL FUTURE

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, during Earth Day Week, I heard many speakers refer to the profound statement by Seattle, chief of the Dwamish Tribe, that "We do not inherit the earth from our fathers. But we borrow it from our children."

Today it is the 3,000 young people from around the world are being heard by the General Assembly of the United Nations for a youth forum on the environment. The gathering is an opportunity for the young people to share experiences and learn about environmental programs in their various communities that work.

Several Minnesotans are attending, including Moriah Nolan-Rappatz who will speak to the forum today. She and her family reside in rural Browerville where they live in harmony with the environment. Their log home is built of carefully selected native materials from their own farm, and is powered by electricity harnessed from solar panels. Her family is involved in environmental forestry, timber stand improvement, selective logging, and reforestation. Every member of her family works on the projects. In fact, the day before Moriah left for New York she planted 50 new trees.

Also attending the forum are 10 students from Sunny Hollow Elementary School. They are John Hegstrand, Ffjorren Gowery, Bob DeHaven, Kate Stimson, Sara Ostroot, Lindsey Gannott, Joel Russ, Matt Bengston, Taya Brodin, and Tim Svensson. They are accompanied by their sixth-grade teacher Dave Rosene, and their principal Paul Tesdahl.

The Sunny Hollow students are members of a school club called "Kids for Saving Earth." The club was a dream of their classmate, Clinton Hill. Clinton loved nature, and at the age of 11, he wanted to become a scientist so he could invent things to help save the Earth. He started Kids for Saving Earth at Sunny Hollow, and even designed a logo for a pin and T-shirts that club members wear. Unfortunately and tragically, Clinton did not live to see his club become the active, concerned, and inspirational group that it is today. He died of a brain tumor last November.

Kids for Saving Earth meets once a week during noon hours. With the help of their teachers like Dave Rosene, Sharon Maetzold, Carol Bostrom, and Bruce Peterson, who volunteer their time, club members study global environmental issues such as the rain forest, ocean pollution, saving dolphins, recycling, water, and energy conservation. Thanks to the generous support of the Target Co., a part of Minnesota's Dayton Hudson Corp., Kids for Saving Earth has become an international environmental organization for students to learn and act on environmental issues.

The story of Moriah Nolan-Rappatz, Clinton Hill, and Sunny Hollow Elementary School students and teachers inspire the rest of us with their dedication, commitment, optimism, and enthusiasm to preserve our environment.

I am honored and proud they are Minnesotans.●

AMENDING THE HATCH ACT

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate approved S. 135, legislation amending the Hatch Act. The Hatch Act bans Federal employees from participating in only the most active levels of partisan politics to protect them from subtle forms of coercion, and ensure advancement in the civil service based solely on merit. It also guarantees nonpartisan administration of the law and government programs.

Certainly there is some merit to claims of confusion over implementation of the Hatch Act. This issue was addressed by an amendment offered by Senator ROTH, which, unfortunately, the Senate tabled. The Roth amendment would have directed the Office of Personnel Management to review the Hatch Act and clarify and simplify instructions as to what activities Federal employees may and may not participate in.

I voted against S. 135, however, because it would remove core protections against the coercion of Federal employees and basic guarantees of advancement in the civil service based solely on merit and nonpartisan administration of the law and government programs—a principle grounded in our Constitution—for which the Hatch Act for 50 years has been our only effective assurance.

In my opposition to S. 135, I am joined by Common Cause, the American Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association, the National Academy of Public Administration, the National Taxpayers Union, and the Chamber of Commerce.

I would like to quote from a letter I received from the president of Common Cause, Fred Wertheimer, that illustrates the importance of retaining current Hatch Act restrictions on involvement in the most active levels of partisan politics.

> Repeal of the Hatch Act's basic protections, as proposed in S. 135, would increase the potential for widespread abuse and open the way for implicit coercion against which there is no real protection. With basic restrictions on partisan activity repealed, no procedural or other safeguards will be sufficient to protect against subtle forms of political favoritism or coercion of Federal workers.

S. 135, although often referred to as a reform, would nonetheless repeal substantial portions of the Hatch Act. The Justice Department has relayed a number of examples of patronage abuse at the State and local level that it has investigated. For example, little less than a year ago, a Federal grand jury in Newark, NJ, indicted the mayor and a city councilman of Guttenberg Township for terminating the services of two police officers and a school crossing guard who refused to perform partisan political services for the city administration. These are the kinds of abuse that the Hatch Act has successfully eliminated from the Federal civil service. In any hierarchical situation, it is human nature that people will want to please their superiors.

The bill would also allow Federal employees, some with sensitive responsibilities such as law enforcement, tax collection, and the awarding of Government contracts to become partisan political players. For example, under S. 135, Federal employees could be officers in political parties. I do not believe the vast majority of taxpayers in my home State of Rhode Island—a very small State where people more or less know the public activities of many of their fellow citizens—would have much faith in the integrity of their Government knowing that the Internal Revenue Service agent auditing them is a top officer of a political party in opposition to the party with which they are affiliated. This is the kind of conflict of interest that would arise under S. 135.

Our goal in Congress should be to permit as many people as possible to take in the political process, but we must keep in mind the need for a balance between that goal and the right of the public to trust and confidence, as well as impartial administration, in their Government.

Finally, it is worth noting that just 1 day after the Senate approved this legislation, which expands by 3 million the number of people who can collect money for their Federal employee and Postal Union political action committees, many of which are already among the biggest PAC's, we are debating a bill banning PAC's. The latter is an idea I strongly support. I do not think we should be approving with one hand legislation that expands the ability of PAC's to solicit money, while seeking to outlaw the very practice with the other hand.●

AMTRAK AUTHORIZATION AND IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1990

● Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed the conference report to H.R. 2364, the Amtrak Authorization and Improvement Act of 1990, by unanimous consent. This is an important piece of legislation which I supported wholeheartedly, when it passed the Senate. Unfortunately, the conferees accepted a contentious House provision requiring ICC oversight of class I railroad acquisitions by a noncarrier. This leveraged buy out provision has prompted a veto threat.

I am extremely disappointed that the conferees included this provision. This legislation is too important to be weighed down with unrelated measures which threaten its passage into law. If the President does veto this legislation, I hope that the conferees will promptly remove the objectionable provisions and send the bill back to the President to be signed into law.

Amtrak service is very important in my State. It provides an alternate mode of transportation to those who live on the high line in Montana. These people lack many of the convenient transportation services that people in more urban areas enjoy, and Amtrak service is very important to them. In 1988, Amtrak served 126,407 Montanans and expended $602,653 for goods and services in Montana. They provide important services and play and important role in Montana. In fact, we hope to see them expand one day and open a southern route.

I look forward to see this bill become law, and encourage all parties involved to move quickly.●

CONFERENCE REPORT TO H.R. 2364

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to support the adoption of the conference report to H.R. 2364. This legislation would reauthorize Federal funding for Amtrak through fiscal year 1992. This would be the first reauthorization of Federal financial assistance for Amtrak since 1985. Amtrak was created 20 years ago to preserve a national rail passenger system. Since then, it has demonstrated a growing market for its energy-efficient, environmentally benign alternative to increasingly congested highways and crowded skies. Amtrak is eager to play an increasingly important role in a balanced national transportation system. It has demonstrated a market for the rail passenger service alternative and has proven the improving economics of its service. Amtrak offers a less expensive alternative to the enormous cost of highway and airport expansion and it is ready to be a leader in the development and operation of high-speed rail systems. Passage of the Amtrak Authorization and Improvement Act will send an important message to this Nation's travelers, as well as to the private financial markets, that the Federal Government supports a growing role for Amtrak in addressing the congestion and pollution that is so choking this Nation's transportation system.

Mr. President, this legislation will also allow Northern Virginia's proposed commuter rail service to move forward. The Virginia Rail Express would provide daily commuter rail service from Manassas and Fredericksburg, and points in between, to Union Station in Washington, DC. The rail service would help relieve traffic congestion along Interstates 66 and 95 and could possibly save commuters several hours of driving time on the highways each day.

Mr. President, I am very pleased the Congress moved quickly to adopt the conference report on this measure. Intercity rail passenger service has an important role to play in this country's future transportation system.●

THE HATCH ACT REFORM AMENDMENTS

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed S. 135, the Hatch Act reform amendments. I voted against the bill for several reasons, but mainly because we failed to adopt an amendment offered by Senator MCCONNELL of Kentucky, an amendment which would have greatly expanded political freedom for Federal civil servants.

The McConnell amendment would have given Federal and Postal Union members the right to withhold the payment of union dues for political purposes which they oppose. The amendment would have protected this right for union members, without forcing them to forfeit their ability to participate in the collective bargaining process. The McConnell amendment would merely have required union officials to disclose to their membership how much of their dues are spent for political purposes unrelated to collective bargaining. Finally, this amendment would have expressly prohibited political coercion of any Federal employee—union or nonunion—by union officials.

By rejecting this modest and reasonable amendment, the proponents of S. 135 made one fact abundantly and undeniably clear: S. 135 is not really designed to allow all civil servants to freely participate in political activities. Rather, S. 135 will only increase the power of Federal employee and Postal employee unions' PAC's. This bill is not about political freedoms; without the McConnell amendment, union members are coerced to financially support individuals and policies with which they disagree. This bill is simply a bold attempt by organized labor and its friends on the Hill to exploit loopholes in the system and bend the rules to their favor.

The Civil Service Reform and the Postal Reorganization Acts grant exclusive representation powers to union officials in the Federal Government and in the Postal Service. As exclusive bargaining agents in the Federal Government and in the Postal Service, union officials are in a unique position to politically coerce Federal employees.

Federal Union officials are the exclusive bargaining representatives over working conditions, grievances, and other vital employment issues; Postal Union officials have even more power, as exclusive bargaining representatives over pay. Once a Federal or Postal Union gains exclusive representation powers in a bargaining unit, no other group, not even an individual who is not a member of the union, can negotiate with management.

Therefore, a Federal or Postal employee must be a member of the union to vote on collective bargaining. While Federal and Postal Unions may not collect agency fees, Federal employees must still pay dues to the union in order to impact collective bargaining over numerous issues vital to their livelihoods.

So let us not leave the impression with the American public that union dues in the Federal Civil Service and the Postal Service are voluntary. You either pay the dues, or you do not have an opportunity to help shape or to vote on the collective bargaining contracts which dictate your pay and your working conditions. Now without the McConnell amendment, when you pay your union dues, you subsidize the costs of running the union PAC's—even if those same PAC's support candidates and issues diametrically opposed to your own beliefs.

Mr. President, that is not voluntary participation. That is political coercion, and the proponents of S. 135 are being disingenuous by suggesting otherwise.

The Federal District Court in Maryland—in the Kidwell case—recognized this fundamental principle. The court ruled that union members need not resign union membership—and thus forfeit their rights on employment issues—in order to avoid subsidizing political activities they oppose. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall echoed this principle in Austin versus Michigan Chamber of Commerce.

It is outrageous for Senators to talk for days about their concern for the political freedom of Federal employees and then deny a very fundamental aspect of that freedom to those same employees. There has been an abundance of righteous rhetoric around here on this issue. However, when a well-crafted amendment comes before us, one which seeks to place all Federal employees on equal footing in the political arena, the Senate defeats it.

If S. 135 is actually about protecting political freedoms, then the McConnell amendment would have been adopted overwhelmingly. Sadly, that was not the case. The Senate has denied to Federal employees the basic right to refrain from supporting political activities with which they disagree. Such action makes S. 135 a blatant power grab by organized labor.

For this reason and others, I could not support S. 135. If Congress subsequently sends similar legislation to the President I hope he will veto it.●

GOV. WILLIAM A. O'NEILL BIDS FAREWELL TO CONNECTICUT GENERAL ASSEMBLY

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the two highest elected officials in the State of Connecticut, William A. O'Neill, who has served as Governor longer than any one person since the early years of the Republic, and Lt. Gov. Joseph J. Fauliso, will retire to private life when their terms expire next year.

These men have between them nearly five decades of service to Connecticut. Our State has benefited greatly from their devotion to the public good.

Earlier this week Governor O'Neill gave his farewell address to the Connecticut General Assembly. Mr. President, I ask that his moving remarks be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

GOVERNOR O'NEILL'S CLOSING REMARKS TO THE 1990 GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Reverend Clergy, Mr. Speaker, Honorable President Pro Tem, Majority Leaders, Minority Leaders, Men and Women of the General Assembly, People of Connecticut.

The hour is late. The night has been long. I have no intention of detaining you unnecessarily. Nevertheless, I must ask your indulgence on what, for me, is an occasion of great moment . . . a moment which will never return.

This evening marks not only my tenth closing address to the General Assembly. It is also my last opportunity as Governor to address this body in joint convention.

This year, for the first time since the fall of 1960, I will not participate with you in the electoral process as a candidate for office. Therefore, your night of exultation, relief and resolve is for me a night of quiet reflection.

In the frantic rush of the modern political process, moments of quiet reflection are few. I would like to share mine on this last night we have together.

Here, at the close of our short legislative session, we have come to the end of an intense and highly technical process. The sounds of that process have filled this chamber and our nearby conference and hearing rooms with a strange terminology which is in many ways foreign to the human tongue and inconsistent with the human values which we as the elected representatives of our great people are sworn to advance.

The babble of "j.f."'s, "p.t."'s, "points of order" and "points of information" at times seems almost loud enough to drown out the voices of the people whom we are elected to serve. Now, as the process of legislation approaches its conclusion, it is appropriate that we sharpen our focus on people—the people of government with whom we work and the people of Connecticut whom we are sworn to serve.

For me, the true greatness of my experience in government has been people. Since first coming to Hartford as the elected representative of my small town of East Hampton, I have had the honor and privilege of serving with some 800 other individuals likewise elected to do the public's business in these honored halls.

I remember the governors—John Dempsey * * * Tom Meskill * * * Ella Grasso.

And, as I look about this chamber tonight, I see a few of the faces which initially became familiar to me on that cold winter day in January of 1967 when I first raised my hand to take Connecticut's oath of office.

I see Dick Gosselin and remember the moment when he solemnly advised me that he would not serve another term of office. I am referring to the first such advisory, of course, which was in 1967. And there's Doc Gunther, a man who even in 1967 had the same humble and reserved nature as he has today. Dick Torpey also was at the capitol in 1967 and was blind then, as he is now, to all colors but green. I first came to know Jack Tiffany, the earnest farmer from Lyme, in that year. I since have become well acquainted with both Jack and his ox, Tom, who occasionally accompanies him on his trips here. Then, of course, there's Bruce Morris, who sometimes departs these premises, but always returns—in one capacity or the other. I read that he may want to come back in still another capacity again next year.

And, of course, here, at the dais, I have the strength and support—as always—of my old friends and long-term running mate, our Lieutenant Governor, Joe Fauliso.

And there are faces long departed from these chambers which nevertheless are very fresh in my own mind. There is the gentle dignity of Dorothy Goodwin, * * * the unflinching debating style of Dick Schneller * * * the statesmanship of Lew Rome * * * the meticulously prepared and always combative Gerry Stevens * * * the fair mind of Fran Collins * * * the strong leadership of Jim Kennelly * * * my great friends John Groppo and Tim Moynihan. I vividly recall absent friends * * * Stu McKinney * * * Audrey Beck * * * Dave Neiditz * * * Tom Foley.

I think fondly and sometimes sadly of these and the many other colleagues who have gone on from this place, but then I look at the bright young faces of those who have succeeded to their mantle of leadership and my optimism returns. I see in your faces today, even at the end of a difficult session, the same energies and enthusiasms, the same compassion and understanding, which have guided the General Assemblies of the past.

In singling out these individuals, I of course intend no slight to those I have not mentioned. Their numbers are legion and the time is short. My purpose in mentioning these few is simply to emphasize for all that this body is first an assembly of people and only second a process to be mastered and controlled.

We are not in an age of instant communication and diminishing spans of attention. Sensational and often slashing sound bites have replaced reasoned and eloquent persuasion as the debating staple of the modern candidate or elected official. We seem readier today to accuse than we are to deliberate * * * to personalize than to persuade.

The media have exalted controversy over compromise and some public officials have followed suit. Yet, for my money, I will never completely trust a politican who is more comfortable in front of a television camera than he or she is in the living room of a constituent.

We, the elected representatives of the people, have a duty to those who with their votes have made us a part of this state's glorious history. We must be a proud part of that history. We must remain civil and respect each other or risk the loss not only of our civility but of all the human sentiments and feelings which, when gathered in a hall such as this, produce the perspective and sensitivity of which good legislation, good government and the grand traditions of our great state are made.

In government, we frequently regulate our progress with procedures. We mark our progress with programs. But when we come to measuring our progress, neither of these benchmarks will suffice. For each of us, the only standard which truly will measure our performance in office will be the degree to which we have provided for our people.

Politics and government must remain human endeavors, for it is humanity which politics and government are intended to serve. Tonight I stand before you with pride in the accomplishments of the past decade. I can recite with pleasure some of the programs we have worked together to enact: the nationally recognized road and bridge repair program, the landmark educational enhancement act, the clean air and clean water legislation, and all of the other bills by which we have given evidence of our commitment to Connecticut's citizens and to a brighter future for each of them.

These are important accomplishments and nobody can dismiss them easily. But there are other actions of which I am equally proud. They may have affected fewer citizens directly, but they stand equally for the broad purposes and grand design of our representative democracy.

I think of the people.

I think of the first female chief justice of our supreme court, as well as the first chief justices of Polish and Italian extraction. I think of the first black justice of that court and of the first female treasurer of our state and the first female attorney general. I think of the many fine members of racial and ethnic groups whom it has been my pleasure to call to the service of their state as members of my staff, as commissioners and deputy commissioners of our vital public agencies.

I think of the people.

I think of the human tragedy of a car hurtling into oblivion at Mianus. I think of the human triumph of a little league team from Trumbull or of a baskeball team from Storrs. I think of our beloved senior citizens gathered for an outing at Ocean Beach, of their joy at being able to afford to buy prescritpion drugs and to remain in their homes. I think of the bright-eyed youngsters who file nervously into my office to have their pictures taken with their governor. I think of what we have done and must continue to do to keep the light of hope in those eyes from being darkened by the despair of poverty and drugs.

I think of the people.

I think of the pleasure I have taken in campaigning among them * * * of marching in their parades * * * of hearing their concerns directly and of trying to respond in exactly the same fashion.

I have and always will think of the people.

I have throughout my years in office always kept them foremost in my mind. They have paid me high honor—six times elected their state representative, once their lieutenant governor, and twice their governor. I have tried to preserve for them a Connecticut state government as Connecticut's state government should be: an institution which is fair and just, generous and caring, and—at all times—which is of, by and for the people of Connecticut.

Wherever they may be at this time, I know that the 800 people with whom I served would join me in wishing that the traditions of compassion and humanity which have made the experience of this building so special for all of us will long continue.

I have treasured the opportunity to participate in this citizen assembly. I have enjoyed the splendor of this structure and the majesty of government. I have tried never to permit my zeal for office to overcome my regard for my fellow citizen. I have cherished great moments of election success and always remembered the true purpose of the public offices I have sought.

I will in the future do as I always have done. I will think of the people. I will think of you in this room and of your predecessors. I will watch with interest and concern the actions of our successors. I will think of each of the three million and more whom we are pledged to serve.

Whatever the final judgment of history, I am content as I stand before you tonight that the process of government has never taken priority over the needs of the people we govern. The institution of government is strong * * * the traditions of the past have been honored * * * and the promise of the future is bright.

I have been honored to serve with all of you and now I take my leave of your chamber. Shortly, Nikki and I will depart the mansion on a hill in Hartford to return to our little house on the lake in East Hampton. The traditions which we serve will remain forever. Many, many, fond memories, however, will go with us.●

DESIGNATING THE CENTER TABLE IN THE SENATORS' DINING ROOM IN THE U.S. CAPITOL AS THE "SPARK MATSUNAGA TABLE"

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senator DOLE, I send to the desk a Senate resolution to designate the center table in the Senators' dining room as the "Spark Matsunaga Table," and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 283) to designate the center table of the Senators' dining room in the U.S. Capitol as the "Spark M. Matsunaga Table".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, our friend and colleague, Senator Spark Matsunaga, who passed away on Sunday, April 15, 1990, was a legend in the Senate for his warmth and good cheer. Always pleasant, smiling, he made you feel good just to see him and be with him.

In the mysterious but uplifting way in which democracy works, his personality reflected perfectly the State of Hawaii he represented and loved so much: Open, sunny, full of life.

Spark Matsunaga was also well known in the Senate for extending special attention to the needs of all citizens of his State. We all fondly remember how he escorted his constituents on personal tours of the Capitol, inviting them to dine with him at the center table in the Senators' dining room. He thought it was the least he could do after they had traveled so far from Hawaii to the Nation's Capital.

Because of his extraordinary efforts and uncommon kindness and generosity, it is fitting that he be long remembered by designating the center table in the Senators' dining room as the "Spark M. Matsunaga Table."

The resolution I will ask the Senate to consider and agree to will accomplish this designation. It is the least we in the Senate can do for Spark Matsunaga. It was an honor and a pleasure to know him and to serve in the Senate with him.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, just let me indicate I think this is a most appropriate resolution on behalf of our former colleague, Senator Matsunaga. I used to kid him all the time about it being the Matsunaga table, because he was there almost on a daily basis with a number of his very good friends from Hawaii.

I want to thank the majority leader for bringing this to the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 283) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 283

Whereas Senator Spark M. Matsunaga served in the Senate with honor and distinction for more than thirteen years;

Whereas Senator Matsunaga served as Chief Deputy Democratic Whip during the 95th, 96th, 97th, 98th, 99th, and 100th Congresses;

Whereas his service to the Senate was characterized by exemplary diligence, legendary warmth, compassion, and courage, and firm devotion to American ideals;

Whereas Senator Matsunaga, during his service in the Senate, extended special attention to the needs of all citizens of his State of Hawaii, and escorted his constituents on personal tours of the Capitol, inviting them to dine with him at the center table in the Senators' Dining Room;

Whereas by virtue of his extraordinary efforts and uncommon kindness and generosity, it is appropriate that he be long remembered: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the center table in the Senators' Dining Room of the United States Capitol is hereby designated as, and shall hereafter be known as, the "Spark M. Matsunaga Table."

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AUTHORITY FOR RECORD TO REMAIN OPEN

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the record remain open until 3 p.m. today for statements and the introduction of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations: Calendar items 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, and 769.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed, en bloc; that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read; that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, en bloc; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed, en bloc, are as follows:

IN THE NAVY

The following-named officer for appointment to the grade of rear admiral in accordance with article II, section 2, clause 2, of the Constitution:

To be rear admiral

Capt. Robert C.J. Krasner, MC, U.S. Navy, xxx-xx-xxxx

THE JUDICIARY

Stanley F. Birch, Jr., of Georgia, to be U.S. circuit judge for the Eleventh Circuit.

John D. Rainey, of Texas, to be U.S. district judge for the Southern District of Texas.

James K. Singleton, Jr., of Alaska, to be U.S. district judge for the District of Alaska.

William M. Nickerson, of Maryland, to be U.S. district judge for the District of Maryland.

Stephen M. McNamee, of Arizona, to be U.S. district judge for the District of Arizona.

Jack D. Shanstrom, of Montana, to be U.S. district judge for the District of Montana.

Samuel Grayson Wilson, of Virginia, to be U.S. district judge for the Western District of Virginia.

Richard W. Vollmer, Jr., of Alabama, to be U.S. district judge for the Southern District of Alabama.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Arthur F. Van Court, of California, to be U.S. Marshal for the Eastern District of California for the term of 4 years. (Reappointment.)

Morris Lee Thompson, of Kansas, to be U.S. attorney for the District of Kansas for the term of 4 years.

Daniel J. Horgan, of Florida, to be U.S. Marshal for the Southern District of Florida for the term of 4 years. (Reappointment.)

STATEMENTS ON THE NOMINATION OF CAPT. ROBERT C.J. KRASNER

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I want to congratulate Capt. Robert C.J. Krasner on his confirmation for promotion to the grade of rear admiral in the Navy. Captain Krasner currently serves in the Office of the Attending Physician to Congress as Director of Clinical Services. He has served in this capacity since 1986. Upon his promotion to rear admiral, he will be assigned as the Attending Physician to Congress.

Captain Krasner has served in a number of important medical positions in the Navy since he entered active duty in 1973. Prior to his assignment to his current position, he served as director of medical services, Naval Hospital, Oakland, CA. I believe Captain Krasner is well qualified on the basis of his training and experience to be the Attending Physician to Congress.

Captain Krasner succeeds Rear Adm. William M. Narva, the current Attending Physician to Congress, who has done an excellent job as Attending Physician to Congress.

Admiral Narva is retiring from the Navy after 35 years of distinguished service in Navy medicine. Admiral Narva has been the Attending Physician to Congress since 1986. Prior to that, he served as vice president of the Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences.

I know that my colleagues will join me in congratulating Admiral Narva for the fine work he has done as our Attending Physician, and for his distinguished service in the Navy. He has been a dedicated, effective, and sensitive Attending Physician and we all owe him a debt of gratitude for his service to the Congress and to our Nation. I wish him "fair winds and following seas" as he retires from active service in the Navy.●

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, having had a father who was a doctor and who served as a surgeon in France during World War I, and having worked extensively with the Navy Medical Corps while I was Secretary of the Navy, I consider it both a privilege and an honor to give my strongest support to this nomination.

I join with the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee in commending and thanking Rear Adm. William M. Narva, the current Attending Physician to Congress, for his dedicated service.

Once again I congratulate Captain Krasner upon his promotion to rear admiral and his appointment as the Attending Physician to the Congress, and I urge each of my colleagues to join with me in giving their strongest support to this nomination.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF STANLEY F. BIRCH

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to endorse the nomination of Stan Birch, President Bush's nominee for one of the vacant seats on the Elevent Circuit Court of Appeals.

I have known Stan Birch since the mid-1970's and, in my estimation, he is a very capable attorney and will make an excellent appellate jurist.

Stan was born at Langley Field, VA, in 1945. He attended college at the University of Virginia, graduating in 1967 with a degree in history. Stan then made a wise decision and headed south to Georgia to attend Emory University Law School. He was graduated from Emory Law in 1970 with his juris doctorate and returned there 3 years later to obtain a masters of taxation, a degree he received in 1976.

In the interim period between law school and his masters program, Stan fulfilled his commitment to the Army with 2 years of active service and another 2 years of reserve duty. From 1972 to 1974, he served as a law clerk to the Northern District of Georgia's then chief judge, Sidney Smith.

Over the course of the next several years, Stan made his home in the northeast Georgia city of Gainesville. Stan's law practice there was a general one with a good deal of litigation and tax planning work. In the late 1970's, he began to shift the emphasis of his practice—or rather had it shifted for him—when he began to represent the Original Appalachian Artworks Co., a Georgia firm which owns the intellectual property rights to the popular Cabbage Patch Kids doll.

In 1984, Stan made one of his most judicious decisions in marrying a bright, personable and vivacious former Nunn intern—a charming young lady by the name of Saye Sutton. A year later, Stan and Saye moved to Atlanta where Stan joined the firm of Vaughn, Davis, Birch & Murphy, a firm he remains affiliated with today.

Stan has been quite active in community and civic affairs in Georgia. A former member of the State bar's board of governors, he has been particularly active in the patent, trademark, and copyright areas as well as in computer law, an area of ever-changing challenges.

Mr. President, because of his years of experience, both in private practice as well as in the community, I believe that Stan Birch will make a fine circuit judge and I commend him to the Senate and urge that his nomination be approved.●

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF MR. LEE THOMPSON

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to speak in strong support of Lee Thompson of Wichita, KS, and to urge his swift confirmation as the U.S. attorney for Kansas.

I have known Lee, a native of Hutchinson, and his wife Susan, and their families for many years. I recall his service on the staff of Kansas Senator Jim Pearson while completing his law degree at George Washington University.

Upon returning to Kansas, he joined the law firm of Martin, Pringle, Oliver, Wallace & Swartz, becoming a partner in 1979. During these years, he has demonstrated his abilities as an experienced trial attorney and a community leader.

There is no doubt that Lee is an outstanding candidate for the position. With a proven ability to communicate in the public arena and to manage an office of 25 attorneys and 40 employees with a yearly budget in excess of $3 million, Lee will be an articulate leader in maintaining law and order in our State.

It was a pleasure to join with my distinguished colleague, Senator KASSEBAUM, in recommending him to the President and the Attorney General. Lee has my full support and confidence, along with my congratulations and best wishes.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF STEPHEN MICHAEL MCNAMEE

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the nomination of Stephen Michael McNamee for the District Court for the District of Arizona. Steve McNamee will replace Judge Charles Hardy, who I recommended to President Carter for the Federal district court in 1980. Judge Hardy will be taking senior status in June of this year after 10 years of excellent service on the Federal bench. Judge Hardy has the utmost respect of his peers and the attorneys who practiced in his court. I take great pride in having played a role in Judge Hardy's appointment and confirmation in that he was the first Mormon to serve on the Federal bench in Arizona. I am confident that Steve McNamee will also be an extremely capable and fair judge.

Steve McNamee has served in the U.S. attorney's office in Arizona in various positions for the last 15 years. Since 1985, he has been U.S. attorney for the district of Arizona. You can not find a nominee who knows the inside of a Federal court better than Steve. From 1971 until 1984, Steve litigated approximately 1,000 cases in Federal court. He has also briefed and argued cases before the ninth circuit. His trial experience has covered a broad range of areas of law from crimes within Indian country to personal injury and wrongful death cases to cases involving large international narcotic cartels.

When he became U.S. attorney, Steve inherited one of the largest criminal dockets in the country. The Arizona U.S. attorney's office is on the front line of the war against drugs. Mr. McNamee's record in Arizona in dealing with organized crime and narcotics cases is outstanding. An example of his success in this area is the Garmany case where Steve's office broke up a seven State large-scale marijuana and cocaine distribution ring and money laundering conspiracy.

During the course of Steve's career as a U.S. attorney, he has testified before Congress on behalf of the Department of Justice on 10 separate occasions. Most recently, in February 1989, he testified before the Senate Special Committee on Investigations of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs. I chaired this committee with Senator MCCAIN. Steve provided insight into the complex jurisdictional questions arising from crimes committed in Indian country.

In March 1988, I chaired a hearing of the Senate caucus on international narcotics control in which Steve testifed abut drug smuggling activities along the Arizona border. Steve gave extremely insightful testimony about the success of Operation Alliance and the U.S. efforts to combat drug smuggling on our southern border.

Over the years Steve has received numerous awards for his outstanding work as a U.S. attorney. A few worth mentioning are: that he was recognized by DEA in 1987 for his outstanding contribution to drug enforcement. In 1988 Steve was the recipient of the outstanding U.S. attorney award for his dedicated leadership toward improving the management capabilities of the offices of the U.S. attorneys. In 1989, he received the National Crime Victims Award from Attorney General Thornburgh for the development of a model victim-witness program. That year he was also recognized for his outstanding service in prosecuting defense contracting fraud cases.

For the last 3 years, Steve has been chairman of the binational conference for United States attorneys and Mexican federal judicial attorneys. This year, he was commended by Mexico's Ambassador for the success of the conference in facilitating these two countries to share cooperative resources.

I have the utmost confidence that Steve McNamee will be an outstanding addition to the Arizona Federal District Court. His integrity is unquestioned and his Federal court experience is unmatched. Indeed, one of Steve's former opposing counsel contacted the Senate Judiciary Committee to tell us that although Steve has spent his entire career in the U.S. attorney's office, Steve has a "sense of balance" and is "not one-sided in perspective."

I applaud President Bush for nominating Steve McNamee to the Federal District Court. I also commend Senator MCCAIN for the role he played in choosing Steve McNamee. It was a fair process and the best person was obviously chosen. The only negative aspect of Steve's appointment to the Federal court is that Arizona loses a great U.S. attorney.

One final note. In recent years, the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, has increasingly scrutinized prospective nominees who had presently or in the past been a member of a club that discriminated on the basis of race, religion, or gender. When my staff contacted Steve about this issue, he informed them that at one time he had been offered a membership in an art appreciation club. When he became aware that membership was limited to men, he informed the membership committee that he refused to join on that basis alone. I commend Steve for his action, and want the record to reflect it. I think this story shows what kind of person Steve is and what a fine judge he will be on the court.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY ACT—CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 523, S. 2240, the AIDS care bill, and I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to S. 2240, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants to improve the quality and availability of care for individuals and families with HIV disease, and for other purposes.

George Mitchell, John Glenn, Herb Kohl, J. Lieberman, Jeff Bingaman, Patrick Leahy, Chris Dodd, Charles S. Robb, Bob Kerrey, Alan Cranston, John Heinz, Mark Hatfield, Bill Cohen, Bob Packwood, Joe R. Biden, John F. Kerry.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized to address the Senate and that following my remarks, the distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE, be recognized to address the Senate; and following the completion of his remarks, that the Senate stand in recess under the order until 1 p.m. on Monday, May 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE ELECTION ETHICS ACT OF 1990

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join 43 other Senators in support of the Democratic proposal to reform the Senate election finance system. The enactment of this legislation, the Senate Election Ethics Act of 1990, will benefit all Americans by establishing a competitive Senate election system that sharply reduces the special influence monied interests have in the election process.

This legislation includes the essential elements of true campaign finance reform: First, voluntary spending limits for Senate primary and general election campaigns; second, a ban on PAC contributions to Senate candidates; third, voluntary public financing of general election campaigns; and fourth, prohibitions on the use of soft money to fund party activities that affect Federal elections. It also includes other restrictions on the ability of Federal office holders to raise unlimited amounts of money from interests with a role in Federal legislation.

One thing is clear, the only meaningful way to reform the Senate election finance system is to have limits on campaign spending. Anything less than that avoids the real issues and simply creates the appearance of reform.

This year, 1990, should be a year that we celebrate this great democratic institution that is the U.S. Congress. In the last year we have witnessed a surge of democratic reforms around the world as nation after nation has thrown off its totalitarian yoke and embraced the democratic ideas established in our U.S. Constitution. For newly elected legislators in these nations, the U.S. Congress has served as a model of democracy which they admiringly look to for inspection and guidance.

But if this institution is revered around the world, too many of our own citizens view their Congress with cynicism. Too many feel that it no longer represents their interests. It is ironic that as democracy is expanded to more and more nations, Americans, feeling ever more remote from their elected government, are voting in declining numbers. And as people around the world invest new hope in government as an instrument of dynamic change, too many of our citizens believe their representatives are motivated not by high principle, but by the influence of money.

That is a characterization I reject. I know this institution better. But I understand the views of the American people. For it cannot be denied that money from wealthy individuals and special interests does play a role in the political process in this country.

In both the executive and legislative branches of Government, public officials are consumed with the unending pursuit of money to run election campaigns, to fund party organizations, to help colleagues raise campaign funds. The pursuit of money takes an ever increasing amount of our time and resources, intruding in ways both large and small, direct and indirect, on our responsibilities as legislators.

In the 1988 Senate elections, incumbent candidates spent, on average, $4 million for their reelection campaigns. That requires raising $13,000 a week, 52 weeks a year, for 6 years. Every election those numbers get higher and higher. They will continue to escalate still higher until reasonable limits are placed on campaign spending.

We could eliminate PAC's, reduce out-of-State individual contribution amounts, limit the participation of private organizations in the political process, impose special rules on broadcast stations, and make many other changes—but without spending limits we will not have addressed the real problem.

The men who wrote the Constitution some 200 years ago would surely be shocked to learn the paramount role that campaign money has on the political process today. Newly elected democratic leaders in Eastern Europe would be shocked as well to learn the role that money has in this democracy.

The refrain is often heard that this is nothing to worry about, that we don't spend that much on Senate campaigns. In fact, they say, all Senate campaigns combined in 1988 did not spend as much as is spent each year on dog food. That may be true but it is not particularly illuminating. The analogy is not relevant or informative.

The legislation that we offer today will directly address the problem by establishing a system of voluntary spending limits for Senate campaigns with partial public financing of Senate general election campaigns. PAC contributions to Senate candidates would be prohibited and soft money contributions would be removed from the Federal election process. Small instate individual contributions will be encouraged by requiring such contributions under $250 to qualify for public financing and by requiring such contributions under $100 to qualify for the flexible spending limits. Campaigns will be encouraged to directly address issues, rather than make negative attacks, by two provisions in this legislation. The first requires a candidate for the Senate to appear at the end of the ad to take responsibility for the broadcast. The second provides for broadcast vouchers—amounting to 20 percent of the spending limit—to be made available to a candidate to be used to purchase air time of at least 1 minute but no more than 5 minutes.

This is a balanced approach that is fair to Democrat and Republican, challenger and incumbent alike. It is a comprehensive effort to restore Senate elections to the people by stopping the spiral of ever increasing spending and distancing wealthy individuals and political action committees from the process. This is real reform of a discredited system.

THE REPUBLICAN ALTERNATIVE

The Republican alternative, in contrast, is deficient. It introduces even more money into the Federal election system by greatly expanding the role of wealthy individuals.

The Republican alternative does not contain the essential element of campaign finance reform—spending limits on Senate campaigns. Therefore it does nothing at all to limit the unending pursuit of money by Senate candidates. No matter what other changes in current law are made, without spending limits there will be no difference in the fundamental nature of the Senate campaign finance system.

The Republican proposal would introduce even more special interest money from wealthy individuals into the Federal election finance system. First, the proposal does nothing at all to remove political party soft money from the Federal election system. Wealthy individuals and corporations could continue to give unlimited amounts of money to State party organizations to fund activities that affect Federal elections. The practice that occurred in the 1988 elections, when publicly funded Presidential candidates raised upward of $45 million in $100,000 donations from individuals and corporations, would continue unabated.

Not content to limit this kind of money to the soft money system, currently unregulated under Federal law, the Republicans also propose to greatly increase the hard money limits that are regulated under Federal law. This would be accomplished by permitting wealthy individuals to give as much as $340,000 a year in contributions for Federal elections. Under current law, individuals are limited to giving $25,000 a year to influence Federal elections. Subject to that overall limit, individuals may give up to $20,000 to any of the three national party committees, $1,000 per election to candidates, and up to $5,000 to political committees including State parties. Republicans propose to exempt the party committees from this limit. The effect of that would be to permit wealthy individuals to give $20,000 to each of the three party committees, $25,000 to Senate candidates, and $5,000 to each of the 51 State party organizations, for a total of $340,000 in contributions for Federal election purposes. For those who are keeping score, that adds up to $680,000 for each individual per 2-year election cycle, or $1.36 million per married couple.

The question is, What in the world does this have to do with campaign finance reform? What are the Republicans trying to accomplish with this proposal to turn hard money into soft money, to open the floodgates to wealthy individuals financing Federal elections with almost unlimited money?

Another means of introducing still more influence by wealthy individuals into the system is proposed in the Republican provision to permit candidates to raise unlimited contributions from wealthy individuals if an opponent spends his own funds. If an opponent spends more than $250,000 of his own money, the Republican alternative would permit the candidate to raise individual contributions of $5,000 per election rather than the current law $1,000 limit. If an opponent spends more than $1 million of his own money, the Republican alternative would permit the candidate to raise unlimited contributions from individuals.

In order words, to deal with a problem of a candidate having an unfair advantage because of wealth, the Republicans propose to permit unlimited influence peddling by wealthy contributors. The existing millionaires loophole would be addressed by opening a new loophole for millionaire contributors seeking to buy influence and access.

To make matters worse, the Republican proposal would repeal national party expenditure limits in Presidential campaigns for get out the vote and voter registration activities, provisions which have been in the law since 1974. In the last election, the national party committees were permitted to spend about $8.3 million to supplement the public funding provided the Presidential candidates. Under the Republican proposal, the national party committees could spend an unlimited amount for such activities. Combined with their proposed 1,600 percent increase in individual contributions to party committees, tens of millions of more special interest money would flow into the Presidential system.

Instead of dealing with the soft money problem where it exists—with State and national party committees—the Republican proposal would ban soft money expenditures by private organizations, including corporations, labor unions, trade associations, and tax exempt organizations. This would be an unprecedented, and clearly unconstitutional, intrusion by the Federal Government into the free speech and association rights of the American people.

The proposed language is very broad and ambiguous. It simply bans the expenditure of soft money by any of these organizations to influence a Federal election. What that is intended to cover is highly uncertain. Many questions arise because soft money is obtusely defined as any amount solicited or received from a source prohibited under the act, in excess of contributions limits or not subject to disclosure and reporting under the act.

Under this definition, one individual giving another individual cab money to vote would appear to violate the law. Certainly, churches would have much to fear if they spend any money to influence a Federal election such as giving an employee time off to vote or supporting from the pulpit candidates who are opposed to abortion. The language is so brief and ambiguous that it is impossible to know what is intended but certainly any organization in America that is not a corporation or political committee should fear its reach. Clearly the authors of this provision did not let the Constitution interfere with their work.

The Republican reaction to the Democratic substitute is no surprise. They offer no reform proposals so must depend on an attack of the Democratic approach.

The Democratic proposal for partial public financing will cost approximately $60 million a year. Sixty million dollars a year to cleanse the Senate from influence peddling. I recognize that there are those who will demagogue this issue. They will probably even turn this into a 30-second, negative campaign spot accusing proponents of public financing of raiding the pockets of taxpayers. We are regularly confronted with silly arguments on the floor of this Senate, but none more so than this charge. We spend hundreds of millions of dollars annually paying for elections in other nations, promoting democracy around the world. We spend billions of dollars annually giving away tax benefits, spending subsidies, defense contracts to wealthy contributors and to PAC's who peddle influence in Congress. Just last month we passed something called a miscellaneous trade bill that gave away scores of tariff tax breaks, mostly to chemical and pharmaceutical companies, at a cost of more than $100 million a year. Every member of this body voted for that legislation.

Every year we spend in excess of $50 million on military bands. Now there are those who suggest this Nation cannot afford to spend $60 million a year to wash away special interest influence peddling from the U.S. Senate. We must spend that much every other day to pay for the savings and loan crisis connected in so many ways to presidential and congressional campaign contributor connections in both parties. It is ludicrous to suggest we cannot afford to spend that on Senate elections. The American people want a Congress they can trust to represent their interests. They want an elected body that is not beholden to wealthy contributors in search of more and more tax breaks, but one that represents the common man. They support public financing of Senate elections to clean up the system just as they support public financing of presidential elections.

DISCUSSION OF SENATE ELECTION ETHICS ACT OF 1990

SPENDING LIMITS

There are many ways to improve the current campaign finance system. But only an overall limit on campaign spending will address the central problem with the current system. As a result of the Supreme Court decision in Buckley versus Valeo, candidates for Federal office cannot be compelled to limit their spending. Instead, such limits must be voluntarily agreed to.

A commonly expressed criticism of spending limits is that they inherently benefit incumbents. I agree that can be the case if the spending limits are set so low that a challenger does not have the financial resources to reach the voting public. On the other hand, if spending limits are set sufficiently high that a challenger can communicate effectively with the voters, any system of limits will be of prime benefit to challengers because it is incumbents who now have the greatest access to money and will thus be most affected by spending limitations.

This legislation would establish reasonable limits on general election campaign spending, ranging form $950,000 in the smallest States to $5.5 million to the largest States. An additional 67 percent of that amount, up to a maximum of $2.75 million, could be spent in primary elections. General election spending could be an additional 25 percent higher, to the extent that candidates raise small in-State contributions from individuals.

This should be enough money to enable challengers to get their message across without distorting the election process.

Under the current system, incumbents have an overwhelming advantage over their challengers in raising campaign funds. It is rare for a challenger to raise and spend more money than an incumbent Senator.

Increasingly, Senate elections are decided not by the quality of the candidate, or the issues put before the voters, but by the fundraising capacity of the candidates. That is a system tailormade for incumbents because they almost always have more funds to spend in an election.

The numbers bear this out. From 1984 to 1988, Senate incumbents outspent their challengers by more than two to one—that difference amounted to $140 million over a period of three elections. There were 55 races involving incumbents and challengers in the 1986 and 1988 elections. Incumbents outspent challengers in 51 of those races by a total of more than $100 million. It was no accident that challengers lost 80 percent of those races.

Opponents of spending limits have constructed the argument that limits penalize challengers because every once in a while a challenger comes along who can raise almost as much money as an incumbent. Proof for this viewpoint is sought by citing evidence that 6 of the 11 winning challengers in the 1986 and 1988 races spent more than the limits in this proposal. While that may be true, it ignores the fact that in the case of 4 of those challengers their incumbent opponents spent even more.

There can be no question about it. The spending limits in this proposal apply almost exclusively to incumbents—not challengers. It is incumbents who will be limited by this proposal, not challengers.

In the 1986 and 1988 Senate elections, only 12 of 55 challengers were able to even spend as much as would be permitted under this proposal. In fact, 30 of those challengers did not even spend half of the limit provided for in S. 137.

This substitute addresses the handicap challengers have, not only with spending limits, but also by giving challengers the ability to mount effective campaigns. No one should underestimate the importance of this. It is unprecedented that incumbent Senators should propose this kind of proposal to restore competitive balance to Senate elections. It is a measure of our dissatisfaction with the current system that we propose this comprehensive legislation.

In addition to voluntary spending limits and partial public financing, this proposal includes several other far-reaching proposals to improve the election finance system.

POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEES

Political action committees would be prohibited from contributing to Senate election campaigns. This is a controversial proposal that is opposed by many groups. I believe political action committees have a legitimate role in the campaign finance process. Many PAC's bring together thousands of small contributors to participate in Federal elections. PAC's give voice to the concerns and interests of their members and that is an appropriate role to play in the American political process.

At the same time, however, PAC's have come to play too large a role in Federal election finance and too large a role in the legislative process. The influence, and the perception of influence that they exert on Congress has served to undermine public faith in the integrity of Congress. Clearly something must be done to change this relationship. Because we are proposing to provide Senate candidates with alternative resources to run their campaigns, we propose to prohibit PAC contributions to candidates.

We must be careful and responsible in dealing with this issue. It is ironic that the creation of PAC's under Federal election law was itself a reform of the system in 1971. It would be a mistake to abolish the role of PAC's without providing alternative resources. Otherwise Senate candidates will simply become too reliant on wealthy individuals to fund their campaigns. If that is the case, the correction of yesterday's reform could itself lead to abuses that we will later have to correct.

The important objective here should be to remove the influence that PAC's have on the political process. As long as alternative resources are provided we can do that by prohibiting PAC contributions to candidates.

SOFT MONEY

Another important part of this legislation deals with the problem of soft money. As Federal law has imposed restrictions on the amount of money spent and raised in connection with Federal elections, increasing use has been made of so-called soft money used outside the limits of the law. These soft money funds are spent for State, local and national party activities which theoretically do not directly benefit a candidate for Federal office and are therefore not covered by the limits of the Federal law.

In reality, however, soft money is often used to circumvent Federal election law limitations. These unregulated funds from corporations, unions, and wealthy individuals are spent for voter registration drives, get out the vote efforts, and generic advertising often designed specifically to benefit Federal candidates. The last presidential election witnessed a return to the Watergate era when wealthy individuals bankrolled campaigns for the presidency. Both political parties raised more than 430 million outside the limits of the law, effectively ending the Presidential spending limits.

If permitted to continue, soft money will severely undermine a Federal election law limitations, particularly if spending limits are imposed on Senate races. This legislation attempts to address this problem by bringing under Federal limits all spending which is in connection with a Federal election, including voter registration, get out the vote, and generic voter communication activities which may affect a Federal election.

This is a controversial provision which has been widely questioned because it requires certain State party activities which affect a Federal election to be funded under Federal rules. Questions have been raised about the rationale for federalizing activities which are ostensibly targeted on behalf of non-Federal candidates. Those criticisms are not without some merit but they ignore the circumstances which give fiscal year rise to this legislation.

The fact is that substantial sums of soft money are being raised under current law to be spent on activities that affect Federal elections. Current law allocation rules are inadequate to the task of removing this money from the Federal election process. Indeed, any artificial allocation rules will permit substantial soft money to be used to elect Federal candidates depending on the circumstances of a particular election. Soft money would continue to be used in large amounts of $100,000 or more on behalf of Federal candidates.

In this legislation we have attempted to draw clear lines as to the types of activities that are Federal in nature. Money spent during the Federal election period to support such activities would be required to be funded with Federal funds. The same activities which occur during an election period not involving Federal office could be funded with non-Federal money. In return for imposing these tighter restrictions on State party activities we propose to increase the contribution limits for State parties, raising PAC contributions from $5,000 to $15,000 and individual contributions from $5,000 to $20,000. Federal candidates and officeholders would in turn be prohibited from rasing soft money.

I believe this is a reasonable approach to deal with the problem of soft money in Federal elections.

BROADCAST ISSUES

I am particularly pleased with provisions in this legislation that attempt to raise the level of debate in Senate campaigns. Too often campaigns for Federal office have degenerated into name calling competitions between candidates, where victory is achieved by the candidate who runs the most negative ads. By the end of the campaign the voters are turned off by both candidates and adopt the attitude that they are voting for the lesser evil. It is no wonder politicians are not held in the highest regard and the percentage of the population that votes continues to fall.

There are no magic answers to this. Candidates will continue to be as negative as the voters permit. And as long as they are successful, negative advertisements as a form of campaigning will continue. In this legislation we attempt to get candidates to think twice about running such ads by requiring the candidate to appear at the end of every radio and television commercial they purchase to inform the viewer who they are and that their authorized campaign committee paid for the ad.

We also provide broadcast vouchers for the candidates to use for up to 20 percent of the general election spending limit. These vouchers can only be used to purchase broadcast ads of at least 1 minute in duration—a time period that is less likely to be used solely for negative purposes.

As Members of Congress who participate in the campaign funding process, we are all well acquainted with the current system. I do not know of one Member of Congress who is pleased with that system. It is awkward to try to change the system while we must operate within it. To do so opens us up to changes of inconsistency and hypocrisy. Yet, we must be prepared to move forward, even in the face of such criticisms, because the only realistic alternative is to do nothing. And that is unacceptable.

Many proposals have been offered in the past to make improvements in the campaign finance laws. Yet no legislation has been acted upon in the last 10 years. We have been stalemated in our desire to improve the system. This is due in large part because we perceive the issue through the prism of what is in our own personal interest or what we believe to be the interest of the political party of which we are a member. Because the stakes are so great, there is a reluctance to change.

But this issue demands more. We must put aside our self interest and act for the common good.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Did I hear him correctly state that on Monday he will be filing a cloture motion to bring up this campaign reform bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. No. I already filed a cloture motion on the emergency AIDS care bill.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. So we do not have reason at this point to feel that there would be those who would not want the Senate to bring forth this bill, once you bring the bill forward, debate it and voted on.

Mr. MITCHELL. The campaign finance bill is being debated and will be brought forward for vote at an appropriate time, but it is my hope that we can engage in further debate and discussion with our colleagues to see if we can reach some bipartisan agreement.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. That surely would be the outcome we would all hope for. I am pleased to see that the Republican leader seems to be joining you in the exercise. I congratulate the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague.

HATCH ACT AMENDMENTS—S. 135

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate approved S. 135 by a vote of 67 to 30. I firmly believe that this bill is not in the best interests of the Federal Government, the Federal workers, or the American public.

INTRODUCTION

During the lengthy debate on this bill during the past week and a half, the proponents of this legislation have touted S. 135 as a civil rights and free speech bill for Federal workers.

These arguments only serve to mask the real purposes of S. 135 and the real reasons why my colleagues on the other side of the aisle so strongly opposed most of the 19 amendments that were submitted for consideration.

The real issue here is not free speech and civil rights—the real issue is campaign solicitation and money.

REPUBLICAN AMENDMENTS WOULD HAVE IMPROVED S. 135

Mr. President, I would like to set the record straight that the amendments proposed by myself and others on this side of the aisle would have greatly improved this legislation.

The distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] in response to criticisms that the Hatch Act is confusing, proposed an amendment which would have provided for the Office of Personnel Management to issue regulations clarifying the do's and don'ts under the Hatch Act.

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCONNELL] proposed an amendment which would have provided for education of the Federal work force on Hatch Act standards.

The distinguished Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] proposed an amendment which would have provided for the review and study of the effects of Hatch Act reform on the Federal workplace.

One of my amendments would have allowed Federal workers to decide for themselves whether they wanted S. 135. What is more fair or democratic than that to have a referendum and if 51 percent wanted to go into this Hatch Act change, that is up to them; if they want to stay where they are, that is their choice? That is called democracy.

Another of my amendments would have excluded certain Government agencies which handle sensitive and confidential information, such as the IRS and the Department of Justice, from the loose standards on political activity set forth in S. 135. The agencies themselves supported this amendment. We had the FBI and the CIA and several others. And even those amendments were defeated by a close vote. But they were defeated, which indicates there was considerable partisanship involved in consideration of this bill.

We were able to get one of my amendments passed which excluded the 240 employees of the Federal Election Commission from S. 135. But that is only 240 employees out of 3 million Federal workers, 240 now are exempted from this loosened up Hatch Act bill.

I was pleased to see that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle at least saw the wisdon of excluding those employees who actually regulate politics from being able to actively engage in partisan political activity. Not to have done so would have been like letting the fox guard the chicken coop.

S. 135 IS ABOUT MONEY

It was unfortunately, Mr. President, that the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] which amendment was cosponsored by Senators D'AMATO, LOTT, and MURKOWSKI was defeated. This amendment also would have greatly strengthened and improved S. 135 by excluding from the bill sensitive Government agencies that, among other things, handle issues of national security.

Most importantly, the amendment would have eliminated language from S. 135 that permits employees of the same Federal employee union from soliciting contributions from fellow employee union members for the union PAC's. That is the whole heart of the S. 135. That is the reason it is on the floor.

It is strange we are discussing campaign finance reform after this travesty that slid through here yesterday on pretty much a partisan basis.

This amendment struck at the heart of S. 135 and the reason why my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have backed this piece of legislation.

It is the green light for the Federal employee unions who have been camping out in the hallways during the Senate debate to gear up their campaign solicitation efforts.

If S. 135 becomes law, Federal workers should be alert to the fact that they are—not may—but are going to be getting a lot of phone calls asking for money, and this is rather strange when the survey show that over 50 percent of the Federal workers did not want to change the Hatch Act and 70 percent in the senior executive service did not want to change the act. So, a majority in this body are going to permit a minority to put the arm on a lot of people to raise a lot of money for a lot of politicans, a lot of campaigns with over 90 percent of it going to my colleagues on the other side.

Under the Hatch Act, Federal workers were free to make campaign contributions; under S. 135 they are going to feel the pressure to do so.

I am sure that Mr. Gould's popularity—he is the chief lobbyist of the National Association of Letter Carriers—is going to skyrocket beyond that reported by the Washington Post last week.

Last year, he helped pass out almost $769,000—that is almost a million dollars—to political candidates, almost all of which went to Democratic political candidates. I guess the letter carriers deliver mail to Republicans too; maybe not—maybe they only deliver to Democrats—they deliver the money to Democrats and some of the mail to Republicans. When it comes to campaign contributions over 90 percent of the money they raise goes to Democats. That is a lot of money and under S. 135, the pot of gold will be a lot bigger.

Indeed, Mr. President, of the total amount of money given between 1987 and 1988, by Federal union PAC's about 88 percent went to Democrats and about 12 percent went to Republicans.

So, Mr. President, this is not free speech or civil rights. It is raw politics; it is pure politics; it is how much more money can be raised so we can get 90 percent of it to one party and 10 percent to candidates of the other party.

It seems to me that in addition to that, we should not be doing that when we are trying to spend less money in campaigns. At least both sides are saying that is what we are trying to do. But it is going to be intimidation of the Federal work force and Federal worker when he gets the call from somebody who might be his superior, somebody down the line to say, "Wouldn't you like to contribute money to our political action committee," and he is concerned about his job or about a promotion, or about any other thing that probably may happen in his work or her work, and it is pretty hard to say "No, I do not think I want to contribute to the political action committee." It might mean your promotion; it might mean your job. It might mean something else.

So in my view what we did yesterday in the Senate does not help the Federal workers. In my view, I have a view that most Federal workers are dedicated public servants, men and women of integrity and honesty, and I do not think they ought to be used as pawns in the game of politics.

So I hope when the bill passes it will be veoted by the President and in my view we have enough votes on the Senate side hopefully to sustain a veto. If not, we will see what happens in the future.

CONCLUSION

And so, Mr. President, S. 135 is not about political free speech or civil rights—it is about money and eliminating those aspects of the Hatch Act which restrict solicitation efforts.

If S. 135 becomes law, Federal workers should be prepared for the fact that making political contributions and working for the Federal Government will go hand-in-hand.

OLD GLORY DESERVES CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, next Monday, the Supreme Court will hear oral argument in United States versus Eichman and United States versus Haggerty—the now-infamous flag-burning cases that have placed the so-called Flag Protection Act of 1989 in a cloud of legal doubt.

EXPEDITED REVIEW HAS WORKED

Needless to say, the Flag Protection Act has not worked as advertised. It has been struck down by the courts from Washington State to Washington, DC. Its ultimate constitutional fate now hangs precariously before the nine Justices of the Supreme Court.

And despite its great sounding name, the Flag Protection Act hasn't protected a single flag—not one.

To its credit, the flag statute's expedited review provision has indeed worked, and it has worked well. With oral argument on Monday, chances are that the Supreme Court will issue a formal, written opinion sometime in late June or early July.

As far as this Senator is concerned, that is fair, and that is what Congress meant by expedited review.

So I commend the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN, for ensuring that the expedited review provision was written into the final version of the statute. And I commend the House of Representatives for directing its legal counsel to withdraw a brief that—unbelievably—asked the Supreme Court to delay its consideration of the statute until October or November, in other words, until after the elections.

I HOPE I AM WRONG

Obviously, I have some pretty strong views on this subject. I have predicted that the Supreme Court will affirm the lower court opinions and that the Flag Protection Act will once again flap helplessly in the legal wind.

Believe me, I hope that these views are mistaken. I hope that the Flag Protection Act is indeed upheld by the Supreme Court. And I hope that Old Glory—finally—gets the legal protection to which it is entitled.

I have certainly been wrong before, and my colleagues—on both sides of the aisle—often remind me of that fact.

STAND READY WITH A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

But once the Supreme Court acts—and if the Flag Protection Act is indeed declared unconstitutional—I stand ready to revisit the issue of a constitutional amendment.

Many of my colleagues said that they voted against an amendment simply to give the statutory approach a chance. And that is fair enough.

But once the Supreme Court issues its opinion, this excuse will no longer be available. The flag statute will have had its chance. It will have had its day in court. And it will be time to give the constitutional amendment the chance that it deserves.

CONCLUSION

So I hope that the distinguished majority leader will allow the Senate to consider a constitutional amendment shortly after any Supreme Court decision striking down the flag statute.

We have all seen the amendment. We have all read the amendment. We have had extensive hearings on the amendment. And we have debated the amendment on the floor.

So there will be no surprises.

And it should be no surprise that the overwhelmingly majority of the American people still want a constitutional amendment, and they want Old Glory to receive the constitutional protection that it very much deserves.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this past Wednesday, Senate Republicans formally introduced the Comprehensive Campaign Finance Reform Act of 1990.

My Republican colleagues have already described most of the bill's provisions—at our press conference last week and when we introduced the bill on Wednesday.

So I will not belabor my colleagues with yet another detailed exposition of the bill's major points.

However, I would like to take just a few moments to highlight the three main goals motivating the Republican approach to campaign finance reform.

GOAL ONE: REDUCE SPECIAL INTEREST INFLUENCE

Our first goal is to reduce the influence of special interests in politics.

Simply stated, the special interests are the political action committees, the corporations, the labor unions, the unregulated soft money operators, the tax-exempt organizations that hide behind the Tax Code while engaging in partisan political activity, the Charles Keatings of the world—all those individuals and groups, in other words, whom the American people believe somehow have special access to the hearts and minds of their elected representatives.

The Republican bill takes a big whack at the special interests by removing PAC's altogether from the Federal election process. The Republican bill bans soft money. It codifies the Supreme Court's Beck decision. It restricts the practice of bundling contributions. In other words, you cannot walk into somebody's office and say "Well, I cannot take your political action committee money, but if you just go around and collect $20,000 for me, I'll be back at 5 o'clock." That is called bundling, and the Republican bill would prohibit it.

Finally, the Republican bill reduces the contribution limits for out-of-State residents by a full 50 percent—from $1,000 to $500.

I have done a little checking on my own, and it appears that—on the special interest issue, at least—the Democrat bill fails the truth-in-advertising test.

Although the Democrat bill would ban PAC contributions to Senate candidates, it would still allow PAC's to continue to contribute $15,000 annually to the national and State party committees.

It would also allow the national party committees to accept from PAC's an amount—in the aggregate—equal to 2 cents times the U.S. voting age population. In 1988, the U.S. voting age population was 174,550,000. Multiply that number by 2 cents and you get a pretty hefty sum—$3.5 million, to be exact.

The Democrat bill would also allow PAC's to contribute big dollars to the Democratic and Republican senatorial committees—as much as $3.8 million each, according to my calculations.

And the Democrat bill would still allow PAC's to contribute to House candidates. This is not very consistent in my view. I do not know where the idea came from. But it is apparently one idea that will not be around for too much longer.

So, on the special interest front, the Republican bill—in my view—is much, much stronger.

GOAL TWO: INCREASE COMPETITION IN POLITICS

The second goal of the Republican approach is to increase competition in politics.

Two years ago, President Reagan sadly observed that there was more turnover in the Supreme Soviet than in the United States Congress.

President Reagan was right then, and he would be right today. The sad truth is that a challenger in Leningrad's Second Electoral District has a better chance of success in 1990 than a challenger in the Ninth Congressional District of New York, or in the Seventh Congressional District of Oklahoma, or in any number of congressional districts throughout this country.

The horrifying facts of incumbency speak for themselves.

In 1988, the reelection rate was 98 percent in the House and 84 percent in the Senate.

In 1988, 80 Members of Congress ran for reelection without any major party opponent.

Of the 1,305 House elections in 1984, 1986, and 1988, only 4 percent resulted in a change of party.

And of the 1,206 House races involving incumbents since 1984, incumbents won all but 28.

With these numbers, it is no wonder that the American people are cynical about Congress, and it is no wonder that the "my vote does not matter" philosophy seems to be gaining ground in popularity.

The Republican initiative tries to break incumbency gridlock with a seed money mechanism that will give House and Senate challengers a well-deserved and much needed jump start in their campaigns.

The Republican initiative also tries to increase competition in politics by raising the contribution limits for the challengers of those candidates who intend to finance their campaigns with personal funds in excess of $250,000. And the initiative reduces the power of the frank by prohibiting franked mass mailings by a Member of Congress during any election year.

GOAL THREE: REDUCE THE COST OF CAMPAIGNS

The third goal of the Republican initiative is to reduce the cost of campaigns.

No doubt about it, the money chase is an activity that dominates congressional life and gets in the way of the real business of Congress—legislation.

The Republican bill would put a big dent in campaign costs by allowing congressional candidates to purchase nonpreemptible time at the cheapest price a television station offers for preemptible time. This provision is particularly important since television advertising eats up more than 50 percent of all campaign spending.

DE FACTO SPENDING LIMITS

Last Wednesday, my distinguished colleague from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] made a very good point that ought to be repeated again today.

The Republican initiative has been criticized because it fails to incorporate something called spending limits.

But the truth is that the Republican initiative will, in fact, limit campaign spending—and limit it substantially. By banning PAC's—by reducing the contribution limits for individuals residing outside of a candidate's State—and by restricting the practice of bundling—the Republican bill imposes de facto limits on the amount of money that can be spent in a campaign. If the Republican bill is ever passed, campaign spending will—inevitably—decrease. I can assure you.

Unfortunately, the Democratic bill once again embraces the almost clinical fixation on arbitrarily determined spending limits.

The campaign finance experts are virtually unified in their view that spending limits reduce competition in politics. That is a given. And it is a given that spending limits—particularly of the sort proposed by the Democrat bill—will keep every lawyer in Washington employed for years to come.

Republicans have always argued that rigid spending limits are a form of incumbency protection.

Apparently, the New York Times may agree. An article published today suggests that the spending limits in the Democrat bill were intentionally softened for incumbents. The article cites one provision in particular that offers a 15-percent exemption from the spending limit for necessary expenses incurred by a Senator as part of his official duties.

Needless to say, we all know how flexible that standard can be in practice.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the article be printed in the RECORD immediately after my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Republican bill is straightforward. It is comprehensive. It is serious. And if enacted, it will go a long way toward cleaning up the campaign finance mess.

More importantly, the Republican bill will go a long way toward helping Congress regain the trust of the American people.

I urge my colleagues to review the bill and join me as a cosponsor.

Sometime next week, when the majority leader wishes, we will each appoint 4 or 5 members—4 or 5 Republicans and 4 or 5 Democrats. We will then try to put together and negotiate some compromise that will be meaningful and will change the way we finance campaigns in the U.S. Congress, and maybe even in Presidential races. Perhaps 2 or 3 weeks down the road or even a month from now, we can come together and find some common solutions.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the New York Times, May 11, 1990]

ALTERED CAMPAIGN BILL AIDS SENATORS

(By Richard L. Berke)

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Several Senate Democrats who face re-election in 1992 have engineered new provisions in their party's campaign financing bill that would allow their campaign organizations to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars beyond the legislation's spending limits.

While warning that the move will have the appearance of protecting incumbents, Senator George J. Mitchell of Maine, the majority leader, has gone along with some changes from the stricter rules that were passed by the Senate Rules Committee, several senators said. But they also said Mr. Mitchell had pressured his colleagues into scaling back some revisions they wanted to include.

The centerpiece of the Democratic bill, scheduled to be introduced in the Senate on Friday, is a system through which campaigns of incumbents and challengers alike would be eligible to receive subsidies of public money if the candidates agreed to accept limits on their total spending. The limits would apply to the primary and general elections together and would vary according to the state's voting-age population, ranging from $1.5 million to $8.2 million.

The revisions from the bill as passed by the committee would free the 20 Democratic and 14 Republican Senators who are up for re-election in 1992 from counting their early spending toward the new limits. The changes would also allow incumbents to exempt certain campaign costs from the limits. The effect would be that incumbents could spend hundreds of thousands of dollars more than was intended under the legislation.

INCUMBENT-PROTECTION BILL

It is not unusual for major bills in the Senate to be altered by party leaders between the time they are approved by a committee and the time they are introduced on the floor.

"I was very worried that this all was beginning to look like giant incumbent-protection legislation," said Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr., Democrat of Delaware, who argued against the changes in several long meetings of Democratic Senators in recent weeks.

Mr. Biden said in an interview that he was concerned the changes could undermine the party's commitment to curtailing campaign spending. The Senator said the revisions did not go as far as some of his colleagues had proposed, and he found that heartening. But he said he was still concerned that the legislation "appears very hypocritical."

Senator David L. Boren, an Oklahoma Democrat who is the leading sponsor of the bill, said he had misgivings about efforts to change it, and described Mr. Biden's concerns as "real legitimate." He said that the bill as revised gave "a slight advantage" to incumbents, but that he was comfortable with its current form.

"I think what we ended up with is defensible," Mr. Boren said. "What's miraculous to me is that we've come out with a bill that's as restrictive as this one is."

The bill would apply to all Senate races beginning in 1992, which is considered a critical election year because 11 first-term Democrats, an unusually large number, will face re-election.

SENATORS WHO URGED CHANGES

Several senators and their aides said the Democrats seeking re-election in 1992 who were most vocal in pushing for the revisions were Tim Wirth of Colorado, Tom Daschle of South Dakota, Kent Conrad of North Dakota, Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont and Harry Reid of Nevada. All but Mr. Leahy are in their first terms, elected in 1986.

Two Democratic senators who are seeking re-election this year, John Kerry of Massachusetts and Max Baucus of Montana, were also outspoken in advocating some of the changes, people familiar with the discussions said.

One major revision in the legislation would exempt certain expenditures by campaign committees from the limits. It is current practice for senators to charge many expenses to their campaigns, like some travel and entertainment of supporters, so they can free more of their office money for other purposes, like staff salaries.

Some senators argued that such costs were more related to their official duties than to campaigning, so the Democrats wrote new provisions for the bill that specifically said the cost of a senator's spouse or children traveling between Washington and the member's home state would not count toward the limits. Rather than include other specific exemptions, the bill was revised to include a broad new exemption that "costs of any ordinary and necessary expenses incurred in connection with an individual's duties as a holder of the office of United States Senator" would not count against the limits.

Although several senators had sought an unlimited exemption for such expenditures, Senators Boren said he and Senator Mitchell had pushed through a compromise that would limit the exemptions to 15 percent of a candidates' total spending limit or $300,000, whichever is lower. The effect of that would be that a senator's campaign could spend 15 percent or $300,000 above the limit for costs the senator said were necessary in his official duties.

Senator Kerry argued that it was only fair that there be "some adjustment for day-today expenses of running an office." As an example, he told his colleagues that his campaign had spent a large sum on computer lists of his constituents and that he did not think this should count toward a campaign spending limit.

Mr. Kerry dismissed the argument that senators should not get the exemptions because they already benefited from other incumbency advantages, like free mailing and large official staffs.

"Incumbents are giving up an enormous amount in this bill," he said. Senators are able to "raise about as much as they need to win," he said, but by accepting spending limits, they sacrifice the right to do that, he said.

Another change would apply specifically to the 1992 campaign. Under the bill approved by the Rules Committee, any spending for that election would have counted toward the limit. But the Democratic Senators changed that to apply only to spending that occurred after the bill's enactment. This would affect both incumbents and challengers, but it is generally seen as benefiting incumbents because there are not likely to be many announced challengers by the time the bill is enacted, presumably this fall.

"I don't want a special rule for incumbents," said Senator Leahy. "All I want is specific rules so people are treated the same."

Senator Daschle, one of those who backed the changes, defended them by saying he had already spent large sums for his 1992 campaign that he might have used differently had he known the money would be counted toward a spending limit.

The provision that delays the effective date of the limits, he said, is "what we call a fresh-start approach—up until the time the election cycle begins, nothing we raise or spend will be counted against us."

Other senators who had encouraged the revisions did not respond to requests for interviews. Mr. Mitchell could not be reached for comment late today.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, MAY 14, 1990

RECESS UNTIL 1 P.M.; MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 1 p.m. on Monday, May 14; and that following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 1:30 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have filed a cloture motion on the motion to proceed to S. 2240, the AIDS C.A.R.E. bill.

At 1:30 p.m. on Monday, the Senate will conduct debate only on the motion, with a vote to occur on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to the bill at 10 a.m. on Tuesday morning. There will be no rollcall votes on Monday.

RECESS UNTIL 1 P.M., MONDAY, MAY 14, 1990

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 1 p.m., Monday, May 14, 1990.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 2:31 p.m., recessed until Monday, May 14, 1990, at 1 p.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 11, 1990:

THE JUDICIARY

PAUL V. NIEMEYER, OF MARYLAND, TO BE U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT VICE HARRISON WINTER, RETIRED.

JOHN H. MCBRYDE, OF TEXAS, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS VICE ELDON B. MAHON, RETIRED.

CHARLES W. PICKERING, SR., OF MISSISSIPPI, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI VICE WALTER L. NIXON, JR.

FREDERICK P. STAMP, JR., OF WEST VIRGINIA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA VICE WILLIAM M. KIDD, RETIRED.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 11, 1990:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

MORRIS LEE THOMPSON, OF KANSAS, TO BE U.S. ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF KANSAS FOR THE TERM OF 4 YEARS.

THE ABOVE NOMINATION WAS APPROVED SUBJECT TO THE NOMINEE'S COMMITMENT TO RESPOND TO REQUESTS TO APPEAR AND TESTIFY BEFORE ANY DULY CONSTITUTED COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE.

THE JUDICIARY

STANLEY F. BIRCH, JR., OF GEORGIA, TO BE U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT.

JOHN D. RAINEY, OF TEXAS, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

JAMES K. SINGLETON, JR., OF ALASKA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

WILLIAM M. NICKERSON, OF MARYLAND, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF MARYLAND.

STEPHEN M. MCNAMEE, OF ARIZONA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA.

JACK D. SHANSTROM, OF MONTANA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF MONTANA.

SAMUEL GRAYSON WILSON, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

RICHARD W. VOLLMER, JR., OF ALABAMA, TO BE U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

ARTHUR F. VAN COURT, OF CALIORNIA, TO BE MARSHAL FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA FOR THE TERM OF 4 YEARS.

DANIEL J. HORGAN, OF FLORIDA, TO BE U.S. MARSHAL FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA FOR THE TERM OF 4 YEARS.

IN THE NAVY

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER FOR APPOINTMENT TO THE GRADE OF REAR ADMIRAL IN ACCORDANCE WITH ARTICLE II, SECTION 2, CLAUSE 2, OF THE CONSTITUTION:

To be rear admiral

CAPT. ROBERT C. J. KRASNER, MC, U.S. NAVY 155-36-6716.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, May 14, 1990

The House met at 12 noon.

The Reverend James Leo Garrett, Jr., professor of theology, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Almighty God, Lord of nations and peoples and Father of all mercies, we bless Your holy name. Strengthen this day all who labor for peace and justice, encourage and bring release to those held as hostages, and stay the hands of those who would violently abuse or take the lives of fellow human beings. Grant, we pray, to the Members of this House a clean vision of the role of statesmen, a powerful conscience against any abuse of office, a compassionate sensitivity to human need, an abundant supply of true wisdom for decisionmaking, and abiding gratitude for the privilege of public service. In Your name and for Your glory. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. WOLF led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3961. An act to redesignate the Federal building at 1800 5th Avenue, North in Birmingham, AL, as the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building and United States Courthouse."

The message also announced that the Senate has passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 20. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to restore to Federal civilian employees their right to participate voluntarily, as private citizens, in the political processes of the Nation, to protect such employees from improper political solicitations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 20) "An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to restore to Federal civilian employees their right to participate voluntarily, as private citizens, in the political processes of the Nation, to protect such employees from improper political solicitations, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GLENN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. KOHL, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. ROTH, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. RUDMAN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2364) "An act to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to authorize appropriations for the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, and for other purposes."

The message also announced, that pursuant to Public Law 99-603, the Chair on behalf of the President pro tempore, appoints Mr. Clarence E. Martin III, of West Virginia, to the Commission on Agricultural Workers, vice, Mr. Russell Pitzer, resigned.

The message also announced, that pursuant to sections 1928a-1928d, title 22, of the United States Code, the Chair on behalf of the Vice President, appoints Mr. BURDICK, as a member of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly Meeting during the 2d session of the 101st Congress, to be held in Paris, France, May 11-14, 1990.

The message also announced, that pursuant to sections 1928a-1928d, title 22, of the United States Code, the Chair on behalf of the Vice President, appoints Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. GORTON, as members of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly Meeting during the 2d session of the 101st Congress, to be held in Paris, France, May 11-14, 1990.

THE REVEREND JAMES LEO GARRETT, JR.

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, as a Baptist and the son of a Baptist minister, I am understandably proud of my religious heritage. Also Mr. Speaker, I am particularly proud of the commitment of the Southern Baptist religion when it comes to the education and training of its members.

Today, we are honored to have with us a man who has dedicated his life to God, the service of his church and the training of its leaders.

Dr. James Leo Garrett, Jr., is a professor of theology and church history at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, TX. I have known Dr. Garrett for a number of years through his affiliation and friendship with my father, the late Dr. Carroll Hubbard, Sr., who like Dr. Garrett was a Baptist minister and teacher.

Before joining the staff at Southwestern, Dr. Garrett served as a professor of Christian theology at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, KY. Dr. Garrett is highly regarded in Kentucky. He has also served on the staff at Baylor University as well as providing pastoral leadership for congregations in Texas, Indiana, and Kentucky. In fact, for a time in 1962 he was the interim pastor of Briggs Memorial Baptist Church here in Washington.

He is a graduate of Baylor University and has done postgraduate work at Southwestern Theological Seminary and Princeton Theological Seminary. He received his doctorate from Harvard University in 1966.

Like my father, I am proud to be associated with Dr. Garrett, his wife, the former Myrta Ann Latimer, and their three children, James Leo Garrett III, Nacogdoches, TX; Robert Thomas Garrett, Washington, DC; and Paul Latimer Garrett, Austin, TX.

Welcome to our House Chamber, Dr. James Leo Garrett, Jr.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to clause 4 of rule I, the Speaker signed the following enrolled joint resolution on Thursday, May 10, 1990:

S.J. Res. 275. Joint resolution designating May 13, 1990, as the "National Day in Support of Freedom and Human rights in China and Tibet."

And the following enrolled bills and joint resolution on Friday, May 11, 1990:

H.R. 922. An act to designate the building located at 1515 Sam Houston Street in Liberty, TX, as the "M.P. Daniel and Thomas F. Calhoon, Sr., Post Office Building";

H.R. 2890. An act to designate the Federal building and U.S. courthouse located at 750 Missouri Avenue in East St. Louis, IL, as the "Melvin Price Federal Building and United States Courthouse"; and

H.J. Res. 453. Joint resolution designating May 1990 as "National Digestive Disease Awareness Month."

PERMISSION FOR THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO FILE REPORTS ON H.R. 4612 AND H.R. 29

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have until 5 p.m. today to file reports on H.R. 4612 and H.R. 29.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION TO FILE REPORT ON H.R. 2273, AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation may have until midnight tonight, May 14, 1990, to file a report on H.R. 2273, the Americans with Disabilities Act.

I would advise, Mr. Speaker, this has been cleared with the minority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DESECRATION OF JEWISH CEMETERIES IN FRANCE

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks, and to include therein extraneous material.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, this weekend's revelations of graves being desecrated in Jewish cemeteries sickens any civilized person. In 1790 the Hebrew congregation in Newport, RI, was so fearful of persecution, there was an escape door and tunnel put in the middle of the temple. Our first President, George Washington, took up his pen and wrote to this harassed congregation. His words and vision give me goosebumps, they convey the very essence of America's foundation being grounded in religious tolerance. I include the text of George Washington's letter:

AUGUST 17, 1790.

To the Hebrew Congregation in Newport, RI.

Gentlemen, while I receive with much satisfaction your address replete with expressions of affection and esteem, I rejoice in the opportunity of assuring you that I shall always retain a grateful remembrance of the cordial welcome I experienced in my visit to Newport from all classes of Citizens.

The reflection on the days of difficulty and danger which are past is rendered the more sweet from a consciousness that they are succeeded by days of uncommon prosperity and security. If we have the wisdom to make the best use of the advantages with which we are now favored, we cannot fail, under the just administration of a good government to become a great and happy people.

The Citizens of the United States of America have a right to applaud themselves for having given to Mankind examples of an enlarged and liberal policy, a policy worthy of imitation. All possess alike liberty of conscience and immunities of citizenship. It is now no more that toleration is spoken of, as if it was by the indulgence of one class of people, that another enjoyed the exercise of their inherent natural rights. For happily the Government of the United States, which gives to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance, requires only that they who live under its protection should demean themselves as good citizens, in giving it on all occasions their effectual support.

It would be inconsistent with the frankness of my character not to avow that I am pleased with your favorable opinion of my administration, and fervent wishes for my felicity.

May the children of the Stock of Abraham, who dwell in this land, continue to merit and enjoy the good will of the other inhabitants, while every one shall sit in safety under his own vine and fig tree, and there shall be none to make him afraid.

May the Father of all mercies scatter light and not darkness in our paths, and make us all in our several vocations useful here, and in his own due time and way everlastingly happy.

G. WASHINGTON.

SUPPORT AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, the day after tomorrow, on Wednesday, the House will have an opportunity to debate, and then to vote and pass, I hope, the bill called the Americans With Disabilities Act.

This, I believe, Mr. Speaker, will be one of the most important bills and one of the most important civil rights acts which the 101st Congress will have an opportunity to adopt.

The Americans With Disabilities Act is a bill which will give Americans who have disabilities an opportunity to function as workers in the workplace, as mothers and fathers, as citizens and as taxpayers of our community.

This is one opportunity for America, I believe, to cast a vote through the House of Representatives for competitiveness. Because as we look down the road to the year 2000, Mr. Speaker, this Nation will need talented people in the work force if we are to be competitive with all of the trading partners around the world.

Part of this effort to have a solid talented work force is to go into untraditional areas to do our recruiting. We will be recruiting more women, and therefore the bill on child care and the related bills we have had will be helpful. We will have to go into the marketplace for people who have disabilities.

So I would urge my colleagues who have certainly every right to be proud of this to cast that vote on Wednesday with pride on behalf of the Americans With Disabilities Act.

□ 1210

TRIBUTE TO DR. AND MRS. WILLIAM NARVA

(Mrs. BOGGS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of sadness that I note the departure of Dr. William Narva as the attending physician of the House of Representatives of the Capitol. We have enjoyed his services for many, many years, for 20 years as a consultant to the attending physician, and for the past 4 years as the attending physician of the Congress. He has rendered such good and efficient service with such a personal attitude of interest and compassion. We will certainly miss his services very much.

Dr. Narva is also retiring after 35 years of distinguished service to the U.S. Navy, and we salute him for his service in that regard. The whole city of Washington will miss Bill Narva and his remarkable wife Rose Narva. She has in this city brought back the Carlton Hotel and the Jefferson Hotel. She has helped to rejuvenate the kind of gracious hospitality for which this city was previously known. We will miss her touch on the Washington scene as well.

Mr. Speaker, I wish them, of course, godspeed in their retirement to California, where they will be joining their son David, and I know that they will have many years of happiness there.

TAX REFORM: CHANGING THE MIX, NOT RAISING THE ANTE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Madam Speaker, as this body understands, deficit predictions are worsening to the extent that Congress and the executive branch have little choice but to enter negotiations to develop a bipartisan, bi-institutional approach to stemming the red ink.

The Republican Party, as the party that stresses individual opportunity in the marketplace, has positioned itself, properly in my judgment, against raising individual or corporate income tax rates; yet as prior administration budget requests to Congress evidence, the White House is prepared to call, with or without additional budget cuts, for revenue increases from other sources. The Democrats, on the other hand, as the party stressing the need for a broader social safety net, want deficit reduction to come somewhat less from paring programs and somewhat more from raising revenue.

Disputes—as well as ill-currents of ill-will—have been triggered, even before parties have met, even before the agenda has been set. What is on the table appears to have engendered as much emotion as what may be decided. As one supportive of my party and my President on general taxation issues, I would like in a spirit of constructive engagement to suggest there is a singular tax change, involving an issue of societal equity, which deserves attention in the context of the yawing deficit.

For too long this Congress has looked the other way as tax policy itself has served to impel concentration rather than dispersion of ownership of corporate assets. The precept that leveraged buyouts are driven as much by the imperative of tax policy as by the case for managerial and organizational streamlining is a scandal made not in boardrooms but in Congress. The case for or against leveraged buyouts may be a mixed one, with judgments varying on individual circumstances. But from the perspective of societal fairness it is an ethical indubitability that the U.S. taxpayer should not subsidize merger-mania and the merger maniacs who are so responsible for the over-leveraging of corporate America.

Whether or not a budget crunch is particularly perplexing at this time, the case for eliminating deductibility of interest in the instance of large leveraged buyouts is compelling. The notion that the average taxpayer should subsidize the games played by Michael Milken, Ivan Boesky, Charles Keating, and Frank Lorenzo is ludicrous. Nonplayers, the innocent, should not have their taxes raised because Wall Street takeover artists have crafted a way to make an egregious loophole out of a tax provision which has historically been considered quite sound.

While it should be premature and probably ill-advised without substantially greater study to adopt a more expansive approach in this area, it is instructive to note that a logical case could be made for eliminating the tax deductibility of all corporate interest in exchange for a lowering of the corporate income tax rate. The Nobel laureate economist, James Tobin of Yale, suggests that in exchange for eliminating the deductibility of interest, the top corporate tax rate could be reduced to 24 percent with no effect on Federal revenues. The problem with such an approach is that smaller companies are often more overleveraged than larger; fairness would dictate a transition period; and rates might look so low as to beckon their raising. These difficulties could partially be obviated by phase-in provisions and, more importantly, the establishment of a threshold level for debt service—$1 million or perhaps even $10 million—below which the deductibility of interest could be maintained, with interest costs above such levels eliminated in a tradeoff for lower corporate income tax rates. This circumstance takes on unusual interest given the assumption of most political observers that President Bush's "lip reading" no-tax commitment relates primarily to the issue of individual and corporate rates and to the prospect of a general excise tax.

Philosophically, a sophist might argue that one disadvantage of eliminating the deductibility of corporate interest, at least for larger transactions, is that it could suggest that there are no cost implications to the employment of money. Actually, such a tax revision would change rather than deny the costs associated with borrowing and put their attendant burden more squarely on the borrower instead of spreading it in part to nonparties to lender/borrower transactions.

Increasingly, corporations have a tendency to increase their leveraging in order to decrease their liabilities to the Government. This assault on the tax codes has the effect of: First, overleveraging American business, making it more vulnerable to sectoral or national downturns in the economy; second, concentrating ownership of equity assets; third, spreading the tax burden to less-leveraged corporations and individuals; fourth, utilizing capital to consolidate ownership of existing assets rather than to invest in the building of new ones; and fifth, increasing the Federal deficit. Just as undisciplined Government borrowing crowds out the private sector, capricious private borrowing crowds out the Government, forcing Treasury rates up.

None of the above strikes me as socially beneficial. In fact, the consolidation of corporate ownership implied in leveraged buyouts runs counter to the presumption that a stabilizing aspect of American capitalism is the extent to which ownership has been spread to include workers and retirees as well as management. It also runs counter to the presumption that citizens can support a tax system only if the burden is spread fairly. Elimination of the deductibility of interest for leveraged buyouts, if not more generally, would reduce substantially the numbers of profitable corporations that pay virtually no income tax. It would help stabilize the economy in the long run and propel the best and the brightest of American business talent back into corporate management instead of corporate raiding.

If America is to rejuvenate its competitive edge, a new premium should be placed on managing companies on Main Street instead of money from Wall Street.

In this context, Congress has an obligation to rethink status quo tax policy, with a goal primarily of equity, not retribution; of end effect, not short-term consequence; of changing the mix, not raising the ante.

A good first place to begin is to understand that what happens in the capital markets is the direct result of what happens in Capitol politics. We must do better to ensure others not do worse.

□ 1220

ENCOURAGING HEARINGS TO ENSURE ENFORCEMENT OF HEALTH AND SAFETY STANDARDS IN THE NATION'S MINES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HUBBARD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUBBARD. Madam Speaker, western Kentuckians along with the entire mining community were shocked last September 13 when an explosion at Pyro Mining Co.'s William Station Mine near Wheatcroft, KY, claimed the lives of 10 men. This accident was the Nation's worst coal mine disaster since 27 miners were killed in 1984 in a mine in Utah.

I spoke on the House floor that day to remind my colleagues of the danger that our Nation's coal miners face each day and to urge that we take the necessary steps to ensure that our Federal and State Governments are doing everything possible to prevent such a terrible accident from ever recurring. Madam Speaker and Members of the House, today I repeat that call.

On April 26, at the invitation of Representative JOSEPH GAYDOS, chairman of the Education and Labor Committee's Subcommittee on Health and Safety, I had the occasion to question William J. Tattersall, Assistant Secretary for Mine Safety and Health, regarding the Mine Safety and Health Administration's activities leading up to and following the Pyro Mine disaster. During those proceedings, Mr. Tattersall predicted that the agency's final report would absolve the agency of any fault whatsoever in the events that led up to the explosion.

Well the report is out, and Mr. Tattersall was right. The agency faults the actions of the company as being responsible for the explosion which claimed the lives of these 10 men.

Let me go on record as saying that I do not have the expertise to discount MSHA's findings with regard to this accident. However, I do find it particularly disturbing that the agency had inspectors at the mine almost every day of its operation and that conditions were allowed to deteriorate to the point that this accident occurred.

Safety concerns were not uncommon at the William Station Mine. In fact, prior to the accident production at the mine had to be stopped because of a water blockage that was impeding the mine's flow of ventilation. In this Saturday's edition of the Courier-Journal, a Louisville, KY, daily newspaper, is a story that suggests that MSHA could have in fact prevented the accident by not allowing the company to resume activities in the mine until the entire water blockage was removed. The story implies that such an action would not only have been prudent, but in not doing so that the agency was negligent of its enforcement of Federal safety laws.

Madam Speaker, in 1969 following the disaster at Farmington in West Virginia and later in 1977 following the explosion at Scotia in Letcher County, KY, we in Congress said that something had to be done to address the health and safety concerns of those who work in our mining industry. Today, 8 months and 1 day following the explosion at Pyro, I say that it is time that we take action to ensure that the Department of Labor is fulfilling Congress' mandate in enforcing health and safety standards in the Nation's mines.

I would like to urge Representative GAYDOS and his subcommittee to convene as soon as possible a full oversight hearing with regard to MSHA and its activities leading up to and following the explosion at Pyro.

Perhaps through such an investigation we can learn how to prevent accidents such as the one that occurred at Pyro. That is a worthwhile goal for all of us in the 101st Congress.

MASSACHUSETTS BANKERS OVERLY RIGID IN LOAN PRACTICES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FRANK. Madam Speaker, last week we saw an encouraging event in what had been a discouraging picture. The senior regulators of the banking industry in the country, the Comptroller of the Currency, the head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and their aides met with bankers, and they urged the representatives of the American banking industry to continue, in fact it seemed to me to increase the lending activities that they were engaged in.

Members might wonder, if they had not been following this, why regulators would think it necessary to tell bankers to do what it is that bankers are in business to do, and therein lies the encouraging aspect of this. In Massachusetts I am convinced from conversations I have had, both with bankers and with borrowers, or would-be borrowers, smaller business people in particular since the large corporate entities these days have other means of financing to a great extent and do not need to be bank borrowers, but those who are bank borrowers at the local level borrowing from regional banks and local banks had been experiencing cases where loans that it seems to me should have been made were not being made.

It was not appropriate for a Member of Congress to intervene in specific applications. It is quite inappropriate. But it is our duty to comment when public policy in general appears to be going in a somewhat mistaken direction, and I am convinced from the conversations I have had that that is what was happening with regard to bank regulation. I think understandably but incorrectly some of the bank regulators were overreacting to their own previous failures.

Madam Speaker, good physics is not always good government. An equal and opposite reaction, at least when I went to school it was an immutable law of physics, and it may have changed because they have had a lot of changes in physics since then, but an equal and opposite reaction is still a pretty good principle of physics, I think, but not necessarily good government regulation.

Having underregulated in the Southwest in the 1980's, it is not a good reason for overregulating in the Northeast in the 1990's. Too often I heard people in the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency refer to their experience in Texas and elsewhere when they talked about the need to be tougher in Massachusetts. To the extent that regulation in Massachusetts has to be tougher, that has very little to do with what happened in Texas. The situations are quite different and the institutions are quite different.

We have had from the head of the FBI a discussion that says there were significant amounts of fraud, I do not mean to single out Texas, but in the savings and loan industry and that is appalling. But it is also important to note that in Massachusetts and in other States in the Northeast no one has alleged any such pattern. That in itself is a difference.

What happened, I think, was that the regulators, understandably, having been criticized, with some justification for underregulating in the 1980's decided that they would err on the other side. I think we faced a situation where the incentive structure of regulators was such that if they were responsible for good loans not being made they suffered no criticism. They were worried only about bad loans and, in fact, in the banking business we are going to have good loans not made and bad loans made, and that is inevitable. There is no magic formula that is going to make every loan that ought to be made and deny every loan that should be denied.

Chairman Greenspan of the Federal Reserve Board said, and I will paraphrase him, after a meeting last week, something to the extent that we cannot expect zero bad loans, and if we are looking for zero bad loans then we are not doing the banking business well.

What happened was I believe particularly in the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency there was an overreaction to the Texas experience and loans were not being made in Massachusetts that should have been made. I do not have any quantified figures here and on one yet did, it seemed to me. We saw the beginning of a discouraging trend. Banks were being discouraged, it seemed to me, from using the kind of judgment about individuals and circumstances that would have made sense.

While the regulators denied that they had done anything wrong, they did have that extraordinary meeting last week, and it is extraordinary for the top regulators to meet with bankers. I take the fact of that meeting and the conversations that were described, because I was not there, and have not seen any transcripts, as an implicit acknowledgment by the regulators that there was an erring on the side of excessive rigidity. It certainly would not have made sense for them simply out of the blue to tell bankers to lend more. If they were perfectly happy with bank practices, there would have been no reason for meeting at all. So I welcome the fact that the regulators appear to have accepted the fact that there was some excess.

Yes, we want tough regulations, but we want reasonable regulations. We do not want excess of either kind, and I hope we are now on the road to that.

□ 1230

REFORMING THE REGULATORY STRUCTURE OF U.S. FINANCIAL MARKETS: H.R. 4477, THE MARKETS AND TRADING REORGANIZATION AND REFORM ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Madam Speaker, 2½ years have passed since U.S. financial markets suffered their most devastating crash in over 60 years. Not since the crash of 1929's Black Monday have our markets fallen the way they did in October 1987. Less than 2 years later there was a similar dislocater in securities and related markets. Finally, last week, the administration proposed to Congress its plan to prevent another market crash.

Unfortunately, it falls short of the decisive kind of action needed to forestall a potential future calamity. The administration plan fails to recognize the way U.S. markets have changed in the last decade. Perhaps most disappointing, the administration proposal holds little promise for ending the turf battles that have blocked reform efforts and that are sapping energy out of the innovation and creativity needed to keep our markets the world's leaders.

Instead of taking on the established interests and status quo and proposing a bold move for regulatory reform, the administration has opted for a weak piecemeal approach. I believe now is the time to take on the old, comfortable order and, rather than attempt minor shifts in jurisdiction, pursue the establishment of a new foundation for our financial markets.

This may seem like an abstract issue which doesn't affect the lives of average Americans. Nothing could be further from the truth. The resolution of this issue in a sensible way could prevent a financial and market collapse in America.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation I am proposing, along with our colleague Mr. ECKART who has played a pivotal role in its drafting, H.R. 4477, the Markets and Trading Reform and Reorganization Act, will make that new foundation. In many respects it is a sharp break from the status quo, which is why many find it controversial and too farreaching; on the other hand, it recognizes the developments in our financial markets which make it imperative for the Congress to act on this vitally important issue this year.

The key provisions of this bill are: Establishment of a new 5-member independent regulatory commission, the Markets and Trading Commission; Abolish the existing CFTC and SEC, providing for a 2-year transition period; Vest the new commission with responsibility for all the activities and functions, including implementing and enforcing existing securities and futures statutes, of the present-day CFTC and SEC; Transfer authority to establish margins on securities from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to the MTC; Give the MTC authority, to ensure the financial integrity of those markets, to establish limits on margins on futures and to direct exchanges to adjust margins but leaves day-to-day margin setting authority with exchanges; and Establish a new entity, the Federal Financial Markets Coordinating Council to coordinate the regulatory activities of each member agency, composed of Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Comptroller of the Currency, Markets and Trading Commission, Department of the Treasury, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Office of Thrift Supervision, and National Credit Union Administration.

If there were no Securities and Exchange Commission and no Commodity Futures Trading Commission and Congress set out to design a regulatory system to oversee the securities, futures, options, and related markets, I dare say we would not design the system we have today. Why then, do we continue it? The United States has a regulatory structure rooted in the 19th century and financial markets already well into the 21st century.

Among the world's financial centers, only the United States has such a bifurcated structure. It stifles innovation; it drains resources into turf battles; it confuses overseas investors, to say nothing of the confusion it causes among U.S. investors; and it leaves us ill-equipped for the pressures and strains our financial system is likely to face in the future.

Surveying the options for reforming the way securities and futures are regulated, I see three options: one, do nothing; two, transfer some of the functions of the SEC to the CFTC or of the CFTC to the SEC as the administration proposes; or three, as proposed in my legislation, H.R. 4477, a consolidation and wholesale revamping of the regulatory system.

The first option is a gamble I am not prepared to take nor a gamble we should not force the American public to take. We made it through the crash of 1987 and the turndowns of 1989, paying only the price of millions lost and increased public skepticism of the integrity of our markets. How long will our luck hold?

Each study of the 1987 crash has called for reforms in our regulatory structure, yet 2½ years later, Congress has failed to act in a comprehensive fashion. I am nearly completely certain that if the markets crash again as they did then, we will act. Just as nearly certain of that fact am I certain that in the aftermath of another similar calamity, we will do the hasty, and wrong, thing.

The second option, of transferring functions and responsibilities between agencies is equally inadequate. For one, it begs the larger question which the crash of 1987 demonstrated with a resounding thud: U.S., indeed world, financial markets are inextricably linked. What happens in the futures markets affects the cash markets and what happens at the New York stock exchanges affects what happens in Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis, and at the New York futures exchanges.

Computers and instantaneous transfer of funds have enabled sophisticated investors to switch millions, even billions, between markets and instruments in no longer time than it takes to type in the amounts on a computer keyboard. There is only one area of our financial markets which has failed to recognize what study after study and everyday experience have demonstrated: The U.S. Government.

Furthermore, if Congress does indeed transfer regulatory responsibility for stock index futures from the CFTC to the SEC, as many advocate, where does the process stop? The same logic which drives that argument would have us transfer responsibility for futures and options on U.S. Government debt to the Treasury Department and regulation for trading on currency derivatives to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Trading in energy contracts would be regulated by the Department of Energy and so on. If you think we have problems with the present system, can you imagine the confusion that would result from this line of reasoning and regulating?

Another point I want to make on this subject is that the present split system diverts energy and creativity not into keeping the United States the world's financial center or in ensuring the security of our markets. Rather it causes investors to focus on shopping around for the most favorable regulation. I would argue that the only kind of competition and innovation the present split system of jurisdiction induces is regulatory forum-shopping. Products are designed not with the needs of the market in mind but with which agency, the SEC or CFTC, will give it most favorable treatment.

For example, exchanges and investors spent months and who knows how much money arguing over whether index participations—IPS—should be regulated by the SEC or the CFTC. Meanwhile, the product has moved off-shore and is trading briskly. A recent court decision concerning a contract on forward contracts on oil appears, at this stage, to foreshadow another needless, wasteful turf-battle.

All the while, developments such as cross-margining between markets and common clearing between exchanges have been hobbled by jurisdictional battles. These are examples of innovations the present system stifles but if they were in place, would strengthen our markets and continue to keep the United States the world's leader.

I agree our paramount concern should be with maintaining our competitive edge. But I disagree strenuously that the status quo fosters productive competition. Competition is critical to innovation, but the kind of competition we have today—over who gets their hooks into what contract—serves none of our interests, unless, quite honestly, you happen to have a client designing the product in question.

Submerging the futures industry into a regulatory system biased against it would be a major mistake. That is where, the futures industry, in my view, most of the innovation and creativity in financial markets has been generated in the last decade.

To reiterate, now is the time to reform our regulatory system, but not the time to approach the task in a piecemeal fashion. We need to enact a comprehensive restructuring of the system. I have for some time advocated this position. The recent debate over jurisdictional matters and my continuing, growing concern about acting before another financial calamity strikes that prompted the drafting of H.R. 4477.

As committed as I am to this regulatory principle, I recognize that improvements in this bill can be and will be made during the legislative process. This product is designed to give focus to the debate and advance a concept. In previous statements I have outlined my intent as well as some recommendations for refining the bill.

First and foremost, this legislation is not a takeover of the SEC by the CFTC, or the other way around. It is regulatory neutral. That is why it is written in the skeletal fashion it is. For example, none of the seats on the new proposed Commission are earmarked. In drafting the bill, I implicitly relied on the nomination and approval process to ensure an even playing field between futures and securities markets in the selection and approval of commissioners.

However, I recognize there may be great concern from both the securities side and the futures side the new commission might be "stacked" in one way or another. I believe it may be appropriate to specify the makeup of the Commission should be balanced, impartial, and give equal weight and consideration to the constituencies of the two agencies being merged.

Alternatively, it may be appropriate to design a voting procedure so that on issues of jurisdiction relating to the underlying securities and commodities statutes the new Commission will implement that a super-majority is required. Otherwise, the Commission might devolve into situations when two members vote one way and two the other, resulting in de facto one person rule with one swing commissioner in the middle deciding alone some of the most contentious issues.

Presently, the legislation leaves to the Commission its own internal organization, with one stipulation that at least one division responsible for regulating trading of futures on physical commodities. I believe and would recommend, again at least in the legislative history of the bill, that this issue needs examination. We might create specific divisions of the Commission—responsible for securities, futures, and so on—all with the aim of keeping the new regulatory structure industry-neutral.

As I indicated, the new Commission should be neutral and evenhanded. These suggestions for appointments of commissioners, internal structure of the Commission, and voting procedure should be explored to ensure that aim.

This legislation also establishes a Federal Financial Markets Coordinating Council composed of all the Federal financial regulatory agencies. Its purpose is two-fold: One, to serve as a forum for coordinating and examining ways to improve upon the entire financial markets regulatory system and two, to examine areas of financial markets which may need further regulation. In this regard, instruments such as interest rate swaps, currency swaps, and other similar exotic, off-exchange instruments should be examined to determine how they fit within the regulatory structure of the bill at hand and whether further regulation is needed. This is an area which needs further study, through the legislative process and by this new entity.

In general, this legislation makes no changes in either the underlying futures or securities laws, except for in one area that I want to address: margins. Specifically, the bill contains a significant change from the way the Federal Government is involved with the setting of margins on futures. Presently, the CFTC is involved only once a market emergency is declared but this bill would go beyond that authority. I know this causes the futures industry great concern so allow me to amplify on the bill's intent.

I believe that the exchanges—futures as well as securities—should have primary authority and responsibility for setting margin on a day-to-day basis. However, the Government should have authority to establish parameters for margin requirements necessary to protect the integrity of the markets. So long as the new Commission is unbiased, I am confident Federal oversight in setting those boundaries will not burden the industry.

Margins on securities and futures are different, in spite of the fact that they are called by the same term. In some instances, however, they are related. In the case of agricultural commodities and contracts on other physicals, there is no similarity in the cash markets. However, on derivative instruments, since the markets are linked the way they are, margins are related to each other. That does not mean, and it is not the bill's intent to cause, equal levels of margins in both markets. It does mean that there should be some central place to coordinate the setting of margins in the two markets.

I have stressed several times that I believe this legislation will create a safer, sounder regulatory structure. I believe it can also lead to a more efficient, effective, and more streamlined regulatory process. As I noted, it can facilitate such developments as cross-margining and common clearing. In addition, it can lead to cross-registration for investors. Under this structure, investors who now must contend with two regulatory bodies will have to comply with just one.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me make one final observation. Of all the important reforms and legislation passed during the New Deal, perhaps the most significant were those which restored confidence in our Nation's financial system—the banking and securities markets. It was this body of law which restored confidence in the markets and our financial way of life so people would begin investing again following the disaster of the market crash. More importantly, these laws provided the necessary foundation for recovery from the Depression.

This bill, H.R. 4477, is designed with the same purpose in mind: To lay a new foundation of investor confidence in our financial markets as we move into the 21st century. Now is the time to be equally bold and forward-thinking and seize the opportunity at hand to make real reforms; we will have left the job undone if all we do is approach the problem with half-solutions and limited visions.

□ 1240

FREEDOM FOR IRINA VORONKEVICH

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Madam Speaker, recently the Helsinki Commission heard compelling testimony from the Prime Minister of Lithuania on the right of the Lithuanian people to determine their destiny.

Today I rise to talk about the right of a person to exercise her right to also determine her own destiny. Irina Voronkevich is a 77-year-old pensioner living in Moscow. The right she so desperately wants to exercise is to leave and join her son, Igor Uspensky, and her grandson and great-grand child in Israel. This right to leave is embodied in the CSCE Vienna Concluding Document and the International Covenants on Human Rights.

Yet, Madam Speaker, Soviet authorities refuse this 77-year-old woman permission to emigrate based on her alleged knowledge of state secrets from a job from which she retired in 1976 and from an agency that has subsequently been banned by the Soviet Government. Surely, Madam Speaker, any information she may have had at her disposal and which was regarded as secret so many years ago can no longer be considered of any consequence.

Next week Secretary of State Baker meets here in Washington with Soviet Foreign Minister Schevardnadze. Let us hope that the rights of peoples as well as the rights of individuals are advocated at that meeting and that Irina Voronkevich is given permission to emigrate.

□ 1250

CURRENT DEVELOPMENTS IN ROMANIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WOLF. Madam Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to update the Members of the House and others on the current situation in Romania. As many know, the Romanians will hold, hopefully on May 20, the first free and fair democratic elections. That will occur this coming Sunday, and we hope they are free and we hope they are fair.

I think it is important to set the stage so that the Congress and the administration and others will know where we are today and will make some good evaluations of where we will be after the election. It is important to remember that for a number of years our country, the United States, gave most-favored-nation status to the Romanian Government, that is, special trade status to the Romanian Government at the very time they were persecuting members of different religious faiths. They are bulldozing synagogues, they were bulldozing churches, they were bulldozing churches with people in the churches. They beat up a Catholic priest who said that Christmas should be a holiday, and after that they killed him. And all during this period of time, when this brutality was going on, our Govenment unfortunately was giving most-favored-nation status to the barbarous Ceausescu.

We all know that on December 22 of last year Ceausescu was overthrown by individuals in Romania who wanted a different form of government. Fortunately, the Congress, first the House and then the Senate, had the wisdom in 1987 to vote to take away the most-favored-nation status. Even though the Reagan administration—and who knows why—wanted to continue to give it to them and even though previous administrations, including the Carter administration, wanted to give it to them, the Congress had the good sense to overturn that. Now we are going to be faced with the question of whether we should give most-favored-nation status back to them again.

We have had the good fortune of having Secretary Baker visit Romania after the revolution to assess the current situation. I want to commend Secretary Baker and those in the State Department who have been formulating our policy toward Romania. They have been very tough, very aggressive, and very forceful in saying that we must have open, free, and fair elections on May 20 before we grant any most-favored-nation status or give any special trade status to Romania.

Last week, again through the good offices of Secretary Baker, we recalled our ambassador, Ambassador Green, from Romania. Let me read to the Members a little bit of what was said by the State Department, which I commend, and also give the Members some flavor of what was going on.

Margaret Tutwiler said that she had a statement she wanted to make about the recalling of the American Ambassador to Romania, Alan Green, to return to Washington for consultation. She said:

> This decision has been taken in light of the reports of irregularities in the Romanian electoral process which raise questions about whether those elections will be free and fair. Ambassador Green will return to his post before the May 20 balloting.

She went on to say:

> Among the electoral problems which concerns us is the incidence of organized acts of intimidation and harrassment directed against some opposition parties and candidates. We have urged the interim Romanian Government to take more vigorous steps to maintain order and to protect the rights of all candidates in these elections. We are also concerned about complaints that several major parties still encounter obstacles in obtaining their fair share of broadcast time on the publicly-controlled radio and television and in distributing their campaign literature through the mails, as well as problems with distributing independent newspapers.
>
> The United States has repeatedly stated that free and fair elections on May 20, conducted through a truly secret ballot—

And those are the key words, "secret ballot." Will the people of Romania be afraid to vote, or will they really believe it is a secret ballot?—are crucial to the further progress of democratization in Romania and to the future of the bilateral relations between our two countries. We call upon all Romanians to conduct themselves as befit the citizens of an emerging democracy and, especially, to vote on May 20. They now have the power and the responsibility to choose who will lead them in the years to come.

One of the press people at the press conference asked:

> * * * is this essentially a diplomatic signal of disapproval to the Romanian government over these things?

The answer was that she thinks it is fair, and this is what she said:

> I think it's a public signal of our concern that these be truly free and fair elections, and we have publicly stated, as a government, what our concerns are. I again go back to pointing out, this does not come as a surprise to Romania. These are the very things that Secretary Baker stated in person when he was there—what was it, two months ago—to both the government leaders and opposition leaders. So it is a way of showing our concern.

As the press briefing went on, there was an expression of concern with regard to minority rights in Romania, and it ended with this answer:

> Look, we obviously have a concern. We have stated our concerns. If we did not have a concern, if it was all going swimmingly well, we wouldn't be making this announcement, would we? We would not be asking our ambassador to come back for consultations. So obviously this is an additional effort we deemed would maybe be helpful there in Romania.

I just want to commend Secretary Baker and his State Department for recalling Ambassador Green and for sending a message to the president of the National Foundation Front, President Iliescu, who is in power now, at least until the elections are held, that our Government will watch this.

Second, I have asked President Bush to appoint a Presidential mission to monitor the elections, a mission that is perhaps similar in some respects to what was done in Nicaragua when we were concerned that there would be free, fair, and open elections. To date, the White House has not appointed the special group, but I understand that they will. That will be very, very beneficial, and I want to commend President Bush for taking this step of appointing an independent Presidential mission, which I hope will be announced sometime today or tomorrow, to go to Romania to monitor the elections, to talk to the opposition groups, and to talk to the Government, so that they can come back and make an assessment as to whether these elections were free and fair. So again I want to thank President Bush.

Third, I think the Members should know that under the leadership of the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, which has an outstanding record of dealing with human rights abuses around the world, sent a letter on May 10 to President Iliescu, saying the following:

As member of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, we write to express our concern about the upcoming elections scheduled for May 20th.

Though there have been significant improvements since the overthrow of the Ceausescu dictatorship, serious obstacles to fair elections remain which could affect their legitimacy. We have received several troubling reports concerning the pre-election period in Romania.

In particular, we would like to call your attention to a report recently issued by the International Human Rights Law Group. The report highlights several problems, including the mismanagement and biased allocation of government resources to the political parties, unequal access to the media and the supply of newsprint, the absence of unbiased radio and television programming, and an atmosphere of secrecy, lack of information and confusion.

While it is very late in the election process to fully rectify all of these problems, we want to impress upon you the importance of ensuring that, from this point forward, stringently fair conditions will prevail. Representatives of all opposition political parties as well as Romanian and Western journalists, should have full freedom to assign election observers. Opposition party and civic group observers should have identical access to polling places and ballot-counting stations as that afforded official government representatives. Fair and equal media coverage, especially evenhanded television reporting, will be a significant measure of the legitimacy of these elections.

In addition, we view with grave concern the continuation of activities which obstruct the exercise of basic freedoms necessary to building democratic institutions and promoting free associations. We believe the failure to dismantle the Securitate—

And we all know the brutality of the Securitate under the Ceausescu administration and to some degree currently operating in Romania—and the ongoing use of intimidation practices particularly in the provinces far from major cities is totally unacceptable.

□ 1300

We also find the activities of the Ministry of Religious Affairs to be troubling and detrimental to achieving religious freedom for all groups.

They have a Ministry of Religious Affairs that determines whether your religious faith is accepted or whether you can build a new synagogue or a church or whether you can have Bible studies and things like that.

I think one of the most progressive and positive steps for the next Romanian Government, whatever that government is, would be to abolish completely the Ministry of Religious Affairs. I know of no religious faith that believes this is necessary. I believe the Romanian people do not believe this is necessary and that would be such a positive signal to those in the West.

These matters will have a bearing on international judgments about the process of democratization in Romania.

By inviting foreign election observers, you have demonstrated a significant commitment towards ensuring the international credibility of the election outcome.

We should commend the National Salvation Front for doing this.

It closes by saying:

It is vital that voters go to the polls without fear of physical injury, and that their vote is confidential and fairly counted. However, we firmly believe that unless additional decisive steps are taken in furtherance of the issues we raise, serious questions will remain regarding the fairness of the elections and the state of democracy in Romania.

It closes by saying:

We join you in the hope that these elections will be the beginning of a truly democratic Romania based on respect for fundamental freedoms:

One final point. The Congressional Human Rights Caucus mentions this report. It mentions the report done by the Human Rights Law Group, called the International Human Rights Law Group, made up of distinguished men and women from around this country. They sent a group to Romania about April 21, maybe it was, to the 25th and they did an extensive report on the conditions in Romania. Just to summarize some of what they said, and they put out an in-depth study which I have here and anyone interested in Romania and in these elections certainly will want to get a copy, it is entitled "International Human Rights Law Group, Report on the Romanian Campaign for President and Parliament for the Elections May 20, 1990," prepared by the International Human Rights Law Group April delegation to Romania, with the law firm of Covington & Burling, which as everyone knows is a highly respected law firm here in Washington, DC.

It says:

The study, which examines the social and political conditions prior to Romania's first free elections in more than 40 years, contains the findings and recommendations of the Law Group's recent seven-member delegation to Romania. The Law Group delegation met with a diverse representation of top government officials, political party leaders, electoral administrators, religious figures, academics and journalists over a six-day period and travelled throughout the country to witness the campaign.

According to the report, the delegation found serious problems and concerns regarding the electoral process, including:

An atmosphere in Romanian society of deep suspicion, mistrust and fear for the future, as the country embarks on a process of democratic transition;

A pervasive belief among sectors of the population that the ruling National Salvation Front has unfair advantages over other political parties in terms of campaign resources and media access;

Charges of incidents of violence and intimidation by Front supporters against opposition parties or their members;

Widespread concern—indeed fear—that members of Ceausescu's nomenklatura remain members of the Provisional Government and the Front; and Numerous allegations concerning the integrity of the electoral process.

The prevalence of these allegations led the delegation to conclude that further measures must be taken to ensure that the elections are perceived to be free and fair.

Among the recommendations to the Government of Romania and other political parties and movements, the Law Group urges that:

And I read directly from the press release—

The Government take positive steps to equalize the availability of resources to other political parties and access to government-controlled enterprises and services to the extent that those resources are unavailable.

The Government make available all relevant information concerning the allocation of resources and the means by which they may be secured, including a prompt and full accounting of the assets and resources formerly owned by the Communist Party of Romania.

The Government take positive steps to protect the political participants from harassment, violence and intimidation, and provide detailed information as to the procedures undertaken to avoid such occurrences.

All parties adopt a mutual declaration pledging themselves against the use of violence, harassment or intimidation against one another, and that this declaration be distributed widely, especially in rural areas.

A law be adopted requiring all parties and candidates to make complete public disclosure of all resources received in money or in kind, with identification of the sources of significant support.

So we can know where the money is coming from.

Steps be taken to increase the dissemination of fair and objective news information.

They also went on with some other recommendations which I will not go into here today, but overall they have some very instructive and positive recommendations that the members of the National Salvation Front absolutely must implement, or the whole viability and questions of the legitimacy of these elections will be put in doubt.

I want to close by making one final comment to the Romanian Government.

The Congress of the United States has had the good sense and the decency to take away most favored nation status from Ceausescu and is prepared to deny most favored nation status to any country that violates the human rights of any of its citizens. The Congress will be watching carefully to see how these elections are held and whether they are free and fair and open and viable elections will determine what type of benefits, whether they be most favored nation status or whatever this U.S. Government grants.

It was significant, impressive and absolutely essential, and I commend Secretary Baker for the recall of our Ambassador, that should send a signal not only to the Romanian Government that this Government is watching, but even more importantly, send a signal to the Romanian citizens who will hopefully listen on Radio Free Europe and the Voice of America and the BBC that this Government, the U.S. Government, cares deeply about these elections being open, free, fair, and verifiable, and cares so much about it that they are recalling their Ambassador to give him instructions, and that President Bush hopes they will be sending a Presidential team to go and to monitor those elections, so that we have all the data, and hopefully this election will be fair, that we have all the data to then evaluate, to make and see where we are.

I want to wish the people of Romania who have suffered for so many years, suffered while many in the West sat idly by, although not this Congress. This Congress did not sit idly by, but by many others in the West who sat idly by and who were doing business and gave special treatment to Ceausescu, even though he was training terrorist groups in his government and doing many other distasteful and barbaric things that are only now becoming obvious; but I just want to wish the Romanian people well, hope that there is a massive turnout, tell them that they ought not listen to the polls. The pollsters say something is going to happen.

I cannot help but remember that in Nicaragua several days before the elections, all the pollsters predicted that the Sandinistas and Daniel Ortega would win by an overwhelming ballot. Well, having been in Nicaragua and having seen the terrorism of the activities of the Sandinistas, I knew clearly that any decent-minded person would be fearful of telling a pollster how they were going to vote, never knowing that the elections were going to be free.

So I would hope that these elections will be free so that the pollsters do not necessarily say what is going to happen, but the people of Romania, the men and women and the students of Romania, can go to that election on May 20 and vote in secret and get the type of government that they want, open, free, fair, and democratic elections, a democratic government, with freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of religion, freedom of immigration, freedom of movement, and a capitalistic market system to go along with it, where they can finally enjoy the prosperity and the fruits of democracy that we have in the West, that they can join and also have it in Romania, having suffered and been persecuted for so many years.

□ 1310

PROTECT THE ENDANGERED SPECIES ACT

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. VENTO. Madam Speaker, last Thursday the Secretary of the Interior, Manuel Lujan, made a statement with regard to the Endangered Species Act and the interference of an endangered species, the squawfish, with a water project in Colorado. He did not stop there in stating his concern about the Endangered Species Act, but went on to criticize some problems posed by the Mt. Graham red squirrel, which is indeed an endangered species in Arizona. In the same newspaper article, which I will submit for the RECORD, he stated his concerns about the impacts of protecting the spotted owl in the Northwest.

First of all, I hope that the Secretary will review his comments. In the context of emotionalism and the concerns that people have, it is very easy to focus on a single species like this in a certain area that may be causing some problems and conclude that only economic considerations should be considered in deciding whether to protect a threatened or endangered species.

However, I think that the Secretary and those that would advocate amendment to the Endangered Species Act to eliminate such species are really missing the point. The Endangered Species Act obviously focused upon specific species. But the law really talks about the entire biological diversity that exists within these communities, whether it is the water project in Colorado or the telescope project in Arizona or whether it is the Pacific Northwest. We are talking about maintaining the biological diversity concerning those communities. It is obviously represented by an indicator species like the spotted owl in the Northwest, but there is a whole forest of problems below the spotted owl, Madam Speaker. The fact is I think the American people have a strong conservation ethic, for the preservation of both these endangered plant and animal species of life that exist on our planet. We should take the lead in setting an example to the rest of the world in terms of saving this rich genetic diversity that is so important to the future of mankind.

It is easier to take the lead and give lectures about what is happening in the tropical rain forest in Brazil. It is more difficult, Madam Speaker, to save our own in North America. I hope we would opt to save such ecosystems and uphold the Endangered Species Act.

[From the Washington Post, May 12, 1990]

LUJAN: ENDANGERED SPECIES ACT "TOO TOUGH," NEEDS CHANGES

(By John Lancaster)

Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan Jr. said in a newspaper interview published yesterday that the nation's primary law protecting endangered animals and plants should be weakened and questioned the need to "save every subspecies."

In an interview in Colorado Thursday with the Denver Post, Lujan expressed concern that the 17-year-old Endangered Species Act is threatening jobs and economic development He cited the example of a Colorado reservoir project that threatens the endangered Colorado squawfish and suggested in that case he might seek an exemption the law.

"It's just too tough an act, I think," Lujan was quoted as saying. "We've got to change it."

The remarks by the nation's top conservation official found a sympathetic audience among some conservative western lawmakers and industry representatives, but they touched off a furor among environmentalists and their congressional allies at a time of growing concern over the accelerating loss of species to human activities worldwide.

They also revived criticism, which Lujan's aides have worked hard to dispel, that the former New Mexico congressman is insensitive to environmental concerns and out of steps with President Bush's pledge to be "the environmental president."

"I think there would be very little enthusiasm in the Congress" for Lujan's proposal, said Sen. John H. Chafee (R-R.I.), ranking minority leader on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. "We have recognized, and we lecture other nations on, the importance of preserving biological diversity. We inherited this world and I don't think we have the right to lay waste to it before passing it on to our children."

White House spokeman Stephen Hart said Lujan was "representing his personal opinion" and that the administration is not considering a proposal to amend the Endangered Species Act when it is reconsidered by Congress in 1993.

Interior's Fish and Wildlife Service is responsible for enforcing the Endangered Species Act, which thus far has been applied to 1,073 plants, animals and fish, according to a Fish and Wildlife spokesman. The law requires the agency to protect species listed as endangered from any activity that would jeopardize their existence.

Interior officials said Lujan's remarks arose, out of frustration with a series of recent cases involving the law, including the planned Animas-La Plata water-storage complex in southwestern Colorado that he announced earlier this week would be delayed indefinitely due to the presence of the squawfish, a member of the minnow family now on the endangered species list.

In the interview, Lujan noted that squawfish exist elsewhere, and suggested that he might consider seeking an exemption to the act if alternatives cannot be found that will allow the project to be built without jeopardizing the fish.

Lujan also expressed concern that protection of the spotted owl in the Pacific Northwest could cost thousands of timber industry jobs, and he cited the case of the endangered Mount Graham red squirrel, which is holding up a planned astrophysical complex atop Mount Graham, Arizona.

"The red squirrel is the best example," Lujan told the newspaper, "Nobody's told me the difference between a red squirrel, a black one or a brown one."

"Do we have to save every sub-species?" Lujan asked. "Do we have to save [an endangered species] in every locality where it exists?"

Lujan made his comments in an interview at Colorado's Mesa Verde National Park, where he is meeting with the private National Park Foundation.

Lujan's spokesman, Steven Goldstein, said Lujan was on a tour of the park and could not be reached for further comment. Goldstein said Lujan does not want to weaken the Endangered Species Act, but would like Congress to consider allowing the department more flexibility under a few special circumstances.

"There's a big difference between changing and weakening," Goldstein said. "It amounts to a clarification" of the law.

While Congress has yet to signal any groundswell of support for amending the Endangered Species Act, Lujan's remarks struck a sympathetic chord among conservative western lawmakers who share his concern for local economies based on natural resources such as timber.

"When you apply the Endangered Species Act, everything else takes a back seat," said a spokesman for Sen. James A. McClure (R-Idaho). "Economics is a very legitimate and important concern."

Mark Rey, executive director of the American Forest Resource Alliance, a timber industry group, said the controversy over the spotted owl "is an example of the problems you create when you use an endangered species as a surrogate for a broader objective, in this case preservation of forest land."

Citing a Forest Service estimate that 28,000 loggers will lose their jobs if they are prohibited from cutting "old-growth" forests in the Pacific Northwest, Lujan told the Denver paper, "We are caught between two things."

Under the law, he said, "One may only consider biological facts, not economic facts. "And once a species is listed, he told the paper, "I am obliged to protect them wherever they exist."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

MY ADVICE TO THE PRIVILEGED ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Madam Speaker, I rise and in fact am compelled to rise to take the floor once more in what we call and treasure as a privilege of the House, special orders. I have not had an opportunity to do so since actually last year, the last session. The reason has been the added duties as chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, as well as the continuing responsibility as chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development, which since 1981 has been the largest subcommittee, until last year.

I am compelled to rise because of the fact that we have reached a point in America where I believe there is a tremendous responsibility on those of us serving on this level to inform the American people, whom I do not think are being informed.

For one thing, just this afternoon, preceding my remarks, we had several Members addressing various aspects of what I consider to be the most critical issue or issues at a most dangerous time that this Republic has faced since the founding of this form of government and the adoption of the Constitution. It has to do with a fundamental subject that for over 20 years from time to time I have attempted to address on this same House floor, utilizing the same privilege, and also respecting those privileges.

I think at no time can anyone point to an abuse on my part of attempting to use this forum as a stumping ground that really should be reserved for back home during the political season, but which to my great sadness I have seen this great forum at various times mired down in extremely partisan and what I would consider to be political stumping jurisdiction, not this great deliberative body's great forum and privileged forum.

Madam Speaker, I have over 20 years, but particularly beginning 21 years ago in 1979, it was here that I reported in August the arrival or the conjunction and arrival of forces and events that were taking the power of decision, even from us domestically as we had been exercising from the beginning, and it had to do with the tremendous forces external to our shores over which we no longer had any control that were determining such things as basic interest rates. For so many times I took this floor and mentioned at a time when few Americans thought there would be such a thing as a 20 or 21 percent prime interest rate, which means usurious, extortionate rates of interest, which continue to flagellate our society, and which, as I said over 20 years ago, in fact going back to 1966 and the third credit crunch in June 1966, the handwriting was on the wall for anyone and particularly those of us serving on these levels, to have seen and to have prepared and tried to anticipate.

This has been what I consider the hallmark of my service, which on May 1 rounded out 37 years in public elected office for trust, as I call it, for it was on May 1, 31 years ago, that I was sworn in as a member of the local legislative body known as the city council of San Antonio. Then 3 years later I was elected to the great State senate of Texas and for 5 years served there, and then since 1961 in this great body of the U.S. House of Representatives.

So I think that, given that period of time and given the utterances that I have reported for the RECORD, and at times when we were not being covered by television, and always the purpose is to address the remarks to my colleagues for the RECORD, with the hope that some at least of my colleagues will address those remarks. They were not, and I understood, and I realized that it would be very difficult to penetrate with the plethora of issues hitting daily a Member the conscious level of my colleagues.

But in any event it was in 1966 that I first spoke out. Nobody ever dreamed at the time that there would be anything above a 6-percent interest rate. In 1979 it was obvious that forces had become quite apparent. As I said then, the Nation since the middle of 1970's, that meant 5 years before, is undergoing not one but several money manias. These are bubbles, and all bubbles burst.

The only one who paid any attention to the remarks that I made in August 1979 was apparently the chairman then of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Arthur Burns, who called me to invite me to have breakfast with him, which I did.

As a result of that breakfast, I ended up being more concerned than before, because Mr. Burns agreed with the remarks I made that August, the statistics that I produced for the first time and assembled, showing clearly that even the Federal Reserve Board was well under way in losing the ability to control interest rates and that there were forces outside of our shores that were impacting and continue to impact us in such a way that no matter what we did domestically, it could be undone.

□ 1320

There was no serious attempt to do anything about interest rates. It would have been absolutely considered infamous, though I nevertheless introduced legislation to espouse legislation that would control interest rates. I brought out the history that since the National Currency Act of 1965 the Nation had no national antiusury laws. They were eliminated in that act, and that there was nothing to control whatever interest rates could rise to, and given the enormity of the appetites for interest that ever since the founding of the Nation present in our society abounded and would make an attempt to control what I call the allocation of credit and that the American people had no protection, sadly, and we see the results.

We see that first the results were apparent and obvious statistically by 1982 and 1983 with the advent of President Reagan's administration and the compoundment of the problem by his philosophical or ideological turn to take the Government off the backs of not the people but the great corporate interests. So the 1981 tax bill in effect was the basic cause for this enormous public debt.

I am proud of the fact that I am considered, and I hope I shall be, and as I feel I have been what is loosely called a liberal. A lot depends on definitions there. But I am proud of that because I believe that the whole history of the United States is as that one country that has espoused the liberal principle. It was the liberals who fought the Revolution. The conservatives, then known as the Tories, were faithful to the Crown at every juncture in which we have had a breakthrough in pursuit of let us say universal manhood sufferage. It has been the liberals, it has not been the conservatives, certainly.

I do not want to get lost in this battle of labels because what I have to say today is ominous, and it is something that is agitating my heart and my mind, and makes me terribly apprehensive, and I feel I am impelled to report. As a result of that tax bill to begin with, in 1981 $755 billion after 5 years were drained from the U.S. Treasury. Nothing was done to infuse it with enhanced revenues in any manner, shape or form to make up for that drain. So I took the floor ad nauseum to predict that if something was not done only one of two things would happen. Either we would get a new shift with new taxes and the burden shifted from the shoulders of the richest and the most powerful who ended up paying no taxes in many cases, onto the shoulders of the less able; or we would have a monstrous, monstrous imbalance or deficit.

There are two deficits. We have the annual budgetary deficit and we have what is now the permanent public debt, which is certainly a deficit. It is a debt.

What has happened there? In the case of the deficit we reached incredible proportions of over $100 billion a year, $135 billion, $150 billion a year. Concomitant with that was our international imbalance in trade and what is known as the international currency balance. That meant that the United States as it is now was losing for every 10 billion dollars' worth that it went up, and it reached such terrible proportions, in excess of $150 billion a year, we were losing 250,000 permanent jobs in manufacturing and production. So in the 1980's, between 1981 and 1986, the United States became not a producing nation, but an importing nation. Second, it became the largest debtor nation ever, and a debtor nation for the first time since 1914.

Madam Speaker, I think it is folly to waste time pinning blame there. The record is there and it is inescapable. No matter how much effort is made by political forces to try to change history, the fact is that we have this situation confronting us. One, with the debt exponential, just in the 1980's during President Reagan's term of office, for whatever reason, and we can blame it on anybody, so what, these are the facts, the national debt grew by $2 trillion. Since Gramm-Rudman, which I fought tooth and nail, a losing fight, illusory, in fact delusory, an effort to try to guild a lily and prove to the world that the Congress and the administration was trying to do something about debt reduction, the debt grew since 1985-86, the effective date of Gramm-Rudman, the debt has grown by over $1 trillion.

How can that continue? I believe, like James Madison, that public debt is a public curse. How can we not have the day of reckoning and atonement sooner or later, for we have lost the control of our own destiny, as evidenced by Gramm-Rudman, or Grambo legislation, as I called it then and I call it now.

So where are we now internally? We are faced with the eventual dissolution of the basic predicate or foundation of our financial institutional life. It was obvious since 1966 that if we were going to enter an unstable period in the money markets that the soft underbelly of these financial frameworks of reference, such as the savings and loan industry which was founded and predicated in the 1930's, in the depression area, in another world on low interest rates, stability of interest rates, and even subsidizing, regulation Q, as it was called. Then came the 1970's and the real estate investment trust scandals of 1974 and 1975. It was obvious those were bubbles or speculative ventures. Something was bound to sooner or later have to come back down, like water seeking its level.

But no, instead of that we went into two, or three, even four money manias. That same tax law of 1981 also made it possible to bring out of the woodwork all of these predatory insects, scarabs and moths of our society, and we ended up with what: the Milkens, Blinkens, the Kravises and Roberts, and how did they make their killing? All on the basis of tax law. Every one of these leveraged buyouts, entirely questionable from the word go, were actually being able to have been put together on the basis of tax write-offs, and even tax credits, tax benefits, millions of dollars thanks to the generosity of the U.S. Treasury.

□ 1330

But in our fragmented parliamentary system where, say, the Banking Committee has jurisdiction of banking, financial institutions and debt—everybody forgets that—and you have the Committee on Ways and Means under the Constitution which has the sole prerogative to consider tax matters, then in the case of securities we have the Committee on Energy and Commerce now. With this fragmentation, it is impossible for the Congress under its present setup to meet the developments of this terminal point of the 20th century. We are ill-prepared, if we survive, to go into the 21st century with the eruption and evolution that is happening throughout the world; and every one of them with ominous implications for this very same domestic problem with which we are confronted.

We can talk about rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic and that is about it; but in the meanwhile very little heed has been paid to what should have been done or at least started to have been done 20 years ago.

So what I am saying today is as far as the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs is concerned—and I reported this to you last year soon after I became chairman when I had some time and came on the House floor and reported to the full membership, not just to those on the committee—what the intentions, plans, programs of the Committee on Banking were.

Well, we stuck to them, and we brought about, even though the size of the committee is 51 members, the members arose to the occasion and we tried to provide the kind of leadership that would be accountable beyond any question as to scruple and honesty. So that we could in good faith and with credibility and with confidence then dedicate ourselves to the basic issues as they were agitating us then, even though fragmentary.

Now at the time that we also built up this enormous public debt, this enormous annual budgetary deficit, this very, very unpardonable international, we had an administration that in order to keep funding that debt allowed foreign money and investments to come into the United States as never before.

We are the only nation that does not have some screening process to screen the investors in foreign ownerships who are buying, either direct or indirect, assets.

The Japanese, for example, up to lately, can create a crisis the moment they reveal they are not interested in that market, they own better than 35 percent of our Treasury bills, notes, debts. That is just the Japanese.

In direct investments, in banking, for instance, in California, Japanese interests own about 25 percent. Nationwide, of course, it is less. And the total—remembering that Great Britain, for instance, with all of the concern we expressed about Japan—Great Britain has almost twice as much in the United States. And that does not count West Germany, which today is the strongest economy, the strongest financial market in all of the industrialized world, believe it or not.

So what are the implications at this critical juncture? Here is why I rise and here is what I will conclude with. I have been talking about this. I have spoken, as I said, ad nauseam. I would not have minded being unaccepted or finding indifference, but to think that I have been criticized for taking special orders, not only up here but in my own hometown. Of course, there were political motivations there. But what was it that they were complaining about? That I was taking special orders that, if printed in the record, would cost x number of dollars.

Were they listening to what I was saying? No. Were they reading what I was saying? No. They just felt that whatever I said was not going to be palatable to their particular political leaning.

Now, if we reach that point—and I think we have not now because since then it is true I have been elected chairman of the Banking Committee and that does change things. It "do make a difference" to be chairman as compared to just being the ranking member as I was all during the time I was making these speeches.

What was I saying? I was saying America cannot continue this way indefinitely. We are in a fool's paradise.

Everybody knows that the lender believes in the Golden Rule. What is the Golden Rule of finance? That he who has the gold makes the rules.

Is Japan investing in Treasuries because it is pro bono? It is wanting to do the American taxpayer a favor? Of course not. They are going to have some profit.

To what extent should it be? Well, the United States has done—even Canada was compelled to have a screening board before foreign investors could come in and have access to direct-asset possession.

The Japanese may come to Canada, but they have to go through that screening board to see if that interest is in keeping with the national interest, and the greatest interest of the greatest number.

I have been denouncing this special selfish interests that have ruled the day in our country, directly and indirectly. I have said that they have traded America's heritage for what will turn out to be a mess of pottage.

But thus far what we have been doing is addressing the crisis. What crisis? S&L? What about banks? We have had more commercial banks go under than S&L's.

What about our deposit insurance fund system? That is what is at stake. If I had thought that I had anything to do with the so-called bailout bill, that is bailing out investors, bailing out stockholders, bailing out bondholders of S&L's, I would not have lifted a finger. The only reason I was concerned was because I have been talking since 1979 about the absurdity that the insurance, or the deposit insurance fund has become.

Let me give you some statistics there to show why. I will ask you: What do you have?

In the commercial banks alone, in total insured deposits you have close to, or I guess by now, $3 trillion of insured deposits. How much do you have in the insurance fund to take care of that? Less than $14 billion. Is that an insurance fund? Is it an insurance fund that was originally intended in the 1930's to protect the little depositor? Absolutely not.

□ 1340

The chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER] announced the doctrine that a bank, a big big bank, was too big to fail, so that they would pay every depositor, foreign or American, who had as much as millions of dollars on deposit. That certainly is a distortion, so since last year I have communicated to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation, and Insurance that he undertake an evaluation of that problem. Up until now, the thing we have come up with, and have sanctioned it, and approved it, is the contract to be issued so that we will have a detailed evaluative consultant study of the Deposit Insurance Fund system. However, the same thing is true with the other insured entities, S&L's and banks.

What is the crisis of the S&L? The crisis of the S&L industry, 2 years ago, 3 years ago, as some Members were desperately trying to break through and announce to the people was that the Insurance Fund was broke. No person wanted to admit that. So with a combination of greed and selfishness, and myopic indifference, we reached a point where we really have to, from here on out, count every hour, every day, every month, as a situation demanding our unceasing attention.

Here is what the picture is: The dollar, with all of this going on has lost 50 percent of its value just in the last 5 years. In the meanwhile, with the advent of a European monetary system, European currency unit, the European currency unit right now is valued at a little under $1.30. Most transactions today in Europe are based on ECU's. I was the only one reporting that in 1979 after the May summit meeting in Bonn. President Carter was present, who was attacking me then for being partisan. Nobody else seemed to give a hoot. Then I kept discussing in the interim, until it became a reality, how the system was in place and what it meant. What it means is simply this: that with the instability and the danger of the dollar's uncontrolled flow, the danger is that the dollar could, and possibly it is possible, and when anything is possible, then I worry about it. It is possible that the dollar could be replaced as the international currency unit.

Now, some listeners say, what does all that gobbledygook have to do with me? I will tell listeners what it has to do with each person. Since private debt, that is U.S. American citizens are in debt to almost the same amount the government, private indebtedness, and since the disposable income, there is no disposable income for 70 percent of Americans at the end of the month. How can we have savings? With that and the corporate debt almost $3 trillion, it means that if the dollar is replaced, all of that debt will have to be paid back in somebody's else's currency. What that means is the United States has lost its economic freedom.

REPORT OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO IRAN—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 101-190)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, without objection, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and order to be printed:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Monday, May 14, 1990.)

THE GUARD AND RESERVES IN ALASKA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Madam Speaker, I want to continue to share with my colleagues a series of articles which appeared in the Roll Call newspaper in the April 30, 1990 edition in a special policy brief, titled "National Guard and Reserves In a Changing World." This brief was developed to describe the roles and missions of the Reserve components and to educate the readers. I wrote the lead article in hopes of generating interest by the readers to learn more about the Guard and Reserve. I commend my colleagues to read these articles to gain a better appreciation of the Guard and Reserve. Today I'm sharing another in the series of articles that appeared in that April 30 Roll Call edition.

GUARD AND RESERVES IN ALASKA

(By Senator Ted Stevens)

Even if the dramatic international events of the past months have made Americans heave a collective sigh of relief, we still don't have the luxury of being complacent.

It is true that these major political changes could affect our national defense strategy. But the need to preserve our nation's security and freedom remains.

Despite federal budget constraints, a strong National Guard and Reserves continue to be important factors in the overall preservation of our democracy.

Wartime readiness is only one part of the job of the 500,000 Guardsmen and women and almost 600,000 Reserves serving across the nation.

The role of the National Guard and Reserves in Alaska is a good illustration of the vital importance these men and women have during peacetime.

This year will mark the activation of the 210th Air Rescue Squadron at Kulis Air National Guard Base in Anchorage. Taking over from the Air Force's 71st Rescue Squadron, the 210th will be responsible for search and rescue operations over much of the 500,000 square miles of Alaska's rugged terrain and unforgiving waters.

The Alaska Air Guard's 168th Air Refueling Squadron currently stationed at Eielson Air Force Base near Fairbanks, provides airlift and refueling support for military aircraft in Alaska and is equipped to render its service on a worldwide basis.

The 210th and the 168th are part of the 176th Composite Group, which furnishes trained air crews and support personnel for airlift and airdrop missions, as well as for search and rescue and refueling operations.

When the Inauguration Day parade came down Pennsylvania Avenue last year, much of the nation became aware for the first time of Alaska's Eskimo Scouts, members of the National Guard.

In their white parkas, they drew enthusiastic cheers along the parade route and were the focus of television cameras and print photographers. One newspaper called them "Alaska's best kept secret."

But to Alaskan's they're no secret. There is no other military unit in the western world like the Eskimo Scouts.

Three battalions of Scouts, based in western Alaska communities, are our nation's first line of defense. One unit of the First Battalion is on Little Diomede Island, just two and a half miles east of the Soviet Union's Big Diomede.

Guard membership is a family affair for the Eskimo Scouts. From the creation of this branch of the National Guard during World War II, awareness of civic responsibility has been passed down from fathers to sons and daughters, and now even to grandchildren of the original scouts. They are the eyes and ears of the Arctic.

Alaska's Adjutant Gen. John Schaeffer began his Guard service as an Eskimo Scout. Now he commands a force of more than 4,300 men and women whose equipment ranges from dog sleds and snowmachines to KD-135s, Army Blackhawk helicopters, and C-130 aircraft.

Taking on new challenges is business as usual for the nation's Reserves. Reserve units will be among the first to field the new technology C-17 airlifter, continuing a Reserve tradition of frontline support.

The contributions made by Reserves in contingency operations were readily apparent last December in Operation Just Cause, the US invasion of Panama, when indispensable missions were performed by Guardsman and Reservists.

As Active Forces and restructured to reflect changing world conditions, our nation will become increasingly dependent on the capabilities and readiness of Reserve components.

Members of the Reserves constitute an invaluable national asset. Those who leave Active service to join the Reserves will find themselves in an organization with traditions dating back to the origins of our union.

At the same time, the Reserves possess the technology training and pride to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. WOLF) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana, for 60 minutes, on May 15, 16, and 17.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa, for 5 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. HUBBARD) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. HUBBARD, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. FRANK, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. HOYER, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 60 minutes, on May 17 and May 21.

(The following Member (at his own request) to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 30 minutes, today.

(The following Member (at the request of Mr. GONZALEZ) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. MONTGOMERY, for 5 minutes, today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. WOLF) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. FISH.

Mr. MACHTLEY in 10 instances.

Mr. MCEWEN.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. HUBBARD) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. RANGEL.

Mr. KANJORSKI.

Mr. BONIOR.

Mr. KASTENMEIER.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which are thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 922. An act to designate the building located at 1515 Sam Houston Street in Liberty, TX, as the "M.P. Daniel and Thomas F. Calhoon, Senior, Post Office Building;"

H.R. 2364. An act to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to authorize appropriations for the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2890. An act to designate the Federal building and U.S. courthouse located at 750 Missouri Ave., in East St. Louis, IL, as the "Melvin Price Federal Building and United States Courthouse;" and

H.J. Res. 453. Joint resolution designating May 1990 as "National Digestive Disease Awareness Month."

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1846. An act to make miscellaneous amendments to Indian laws, and for other purposes;

S. 2300. An act to provide financial assistance to the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, CA, for the education programs of the Museum of Tolerance; and

S.J. Res. 275. Joint resolution designating May 13, 1990, as the "National Day in Support of Freedom and Human Rights in China and Tibet."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on the following dates present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On May 9, 1990:

H.R. 1472. An act to establish the Grand Island National Recreation Area in the State of Michigan, and for other purposes.

On May 10, 1990:

H.R. 4637. An act to amend Public Law 101-86 to eliminate the 6-month limitation on the period for which civilian and military retirees may serve as temporary employees, in connection with the 1990 decennial census of population, without being subject to certain offsets from pay or other benefits; and

H.J. Res. 490. Joint resolution commemorating May 18, 1990, as the 25th anniversary of Head Start.

On May 11, 1990:

H.R. 922. An act to designate the building located at 1515 Sam Houston Street in Liberty, TX, as the "M.P. Daniel and Thomas F. Calhoon, Senior, Post Office Building";

H.R. 2890. An act to designate the Federal Building and U.S. Courthouse located at 750 Missouri Avenue in East St. Louis, IL, as the "Melvin Price Federal Building and United States Courthouse"; and

H.J. Res. 453. Joint resolution designating May 1990 as "National Digestive Disease Awareness Month."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GONZALEZ. Madam Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 15, 1990, at 12 noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

3162. A letter from the Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency, transmitting the annual report on conditional registration of pesticides during fiscal year 1989, pursuant to 7 U.S.C. 136w-4; to the Committee on Agriculture.

3163. A letter from the Director, the Office of Management and Budget, transmitting the cumulative report on rescissions and deferrals of budget authority as of May 1, 1990, pursuant to 2 U.S.C. 685(e) (H. Doc. No. 101-191); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3164. A letter from the Secretary of Education, transmitting a notice of final funding priorities—Secondary Schools Basic Skills Demonstration Assistance Program, pursuant to 20 U.S.C. 1232(d)(1); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

3165. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting the 1988 annual report on the status of organ donation and coordination services, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 274c(4); to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

3166. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs, transmitting the semiannual reports for the period April 1989-September 1989 listing voluntary contributions by the United States to international organizations, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2226b(b)(1); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3167. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notification of the Department of the Army's proposed lease of defense articles to Denmark (Transmittal No. 9-90), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796a(a); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3168. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notification of the Department of the Army's proposed lease of defense articles to Canada (Transmittal No. 8-90), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796a(a); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3169. A letter from the Assistant Legal Adviser for Treaty Affairs, Department of State, transmitting copies of international agreements, other than treaties, entered into by the United States, pursuant to 1 U.S.C. 112b(a); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3170. A letter from the Chairman, International Cultural and Trade Center Commission, transmitting a report in compliance with the Inspector General Act Amendments of 1988; to the Committee on Government Operations.

3171. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting notification of the intention to accept a 60-acre land donation to be added to wilderness areas, pursuant to 16 U.S.C. 1135(a); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3172. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursement, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3173. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursement, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3174. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection Disbursement, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3175. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection Disbursement, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3176. A letter from the Director, National Legislative Commission, the American Legion, transmitting a copy of the Legion's financial statements as of December 31, 1989, pursuant to 36 U.S.C. 1101(4), 1103; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3177. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting the eighth annual report of accomplishments under the Airport Improvement Program, fiscal year 1989, pursuant to 49 U.S.C. app. 2220; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

3178. A letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting the quarterly report on the expenditure and need for worker adjustment assistance training funds under the Trade Act of 1974 for period ending March 31, 1990, pursuant to 19 U.S.C. 2296(a)(2); to the Committee on Ways and Means 3179. A letter from the Secretary, Department of Health and Human Services, transmitting the first annual report on the Indian Health Service health facilities construction priority system for 1989, pursuant to Public Law 100-713, section 301 (102 Stat. 4813); jointly, to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and Interior and Insular Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. BROOKS: Committee on the Judiciary. H.R. 29. A bill to amend the Clayton Act regarding interlocking directorates and officers; with an amendment (Rept. 101-483). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. BROOKS: Committee on the Judiciary. H.R. 4612. A bill to amend title 11 of the United States Code regarding swap agreements and forward contracts (Rept. 101-484). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. ANDERSON: Committee on Public Works and Transportation. H.R. 2273. A bill to establish a clear and comprehensive prohibition of discrimination on the basis of disability; with an amendment (Rept. 101-485, Pt. 1). Ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HOYER (for himself, Mr. MINETA, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. FISH, Mr. GEPHARDT, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. GRAY, Mr. GUNDERSON, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. OWENS of New York, Mr. RINALDO, and Mr. SENSENBRENNER):

H.R. 4807. A bill to establish a clear and comprehensive prohibition of discrimination on the basis of disability; jointly, to the Committees on Education and Labor, Energy and Commerce, Public Works and Transportation, the Judiciary, House Administration, and Rules.

By Mr. SHARP (for himself, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. LENT, Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. BLILEY, Mr. SCHEUER, Mr. WALGREN, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. COOPER, Mr. BRUCE, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. SWIFT, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. FAZIO, and Mr. BERMAN):

H.R. 4808. A bill to encourage solar, wind, and geothermal power production by removing the size limitations contained in the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of New Jersey:

H.R. 4809. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide higher rates of basic pay for Federal employees within Mercer County, NJ; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

387. By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, relative to anti-Semitism; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

388. Also, memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, relative to Manuel Noriega; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were added to public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 467: Mr. HYDE, Mr. GIBBONS, Mr. LANTOS, Mr. TRAFICANT, and Mr. HUBBARD.

H.R. 668: Mr. LENT.

H.R. 711: Mr. TOWNS.

H.R. 1250: Mr. WAXMAN.

H.R. 1693: Mr. CAMPBELL of California.

H.R. 2353: Mr. STUMP and Mr. MCEWEN.

H.R. 3344: Mrs. ROUKEMA, Mr. WELDON, Mr. HUTTO, Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. HILER, Mr. HEFLEY, Mr. HORTON, and Mr. MILLER of Washington.

H.R. 3735: Mr. RUSSO.

H.R. 3958: Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. CONDIT.

H.R. 3959: Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. REGULA, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. GORDON, Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, Mr. BORSKI, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN, Mr. FRANK, Mr. MCNULTY, Mr. NOWAK, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. CROCKETT, Mr. TORRES, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. BILBRAY, Mrs. UNSOELD, Ms. PELOSI, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. GLICKMAN, Mr. DYSON, Mr. OWENS of New York, Mr. ATKINS, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. STOKES, Mr. POSHARD, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. JONTZ, Mr. PEASE, and Mr. LEWIS of Georgia.

H.R. 4266: Mr. MFUME.

H.R. 4334: Mr. DEFAZIO.

H.R. 4369: Mr. WATKINS and Mr. COUGHLIN.

H.R. 4492: Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mr. VALENTINE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. RINALDO, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. YATES, Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut, and Mr. JACOBS.

H.R. 4494: Mr. BLILEY, Mr. HOUGHTON, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. OBEY, Mr. MAVROULES, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. GOSS, Mr. PASHAYAN, Mr. COOPER, Mr. PICKETT, Mr. HUBBARD, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, Mr. BAKER, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, and Mr. STUMP.

H.R. 4520: Mr. MCMILLEN of Maryland, Mr. BRUCE, Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. RUSSO, Mr. LANCASTER, and Mr. JONTZ.

H.R. 4590: Mr. TOWNS, Mr. STOKES, Mr. CROCKETT, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. SCHEUER, Mr. FRANK, Mr. WALGREN, and Mr. DEFAZIO.

H.J. Res. 554: Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. MACHTLEY, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. BLAZ, Mr. TOWNS, and Mr. PAXON.

H. Res. 78: Mr. MFUME.

H. Res. 240: Mr. HENRY, Mr. BILIRAKIS, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. MILLER of Washington, and Mr. LANTOS.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

171. By the SPEAKER: Petition of city of Cape Canaveral, FL, relative to the payment of Florida taxes; to the Committee on Government Operations.

172: Also, petition of Veritat Foundation, Los Angeles, CA, relative to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE—Monday, May 14, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 1 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable THOMAS A. DASCHLE, a Senator from the State of South Dakota.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Mary Jackson, of the Service Department, is in surgery today. Let us remember her with a moment of silence.

*Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that she shall have no need of spoil. * * * She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness. * * * Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.*—Proverbs 31:10, 11, 26, 30.

Eternal God, praise Thee for this beautiful tribute to a godly woman with which the Book of Proverbs closes. Thank Thee for this reminder of the incalculable influence of good women throughout history. We thank Thee for our memories of mother and for our awareness of the impact of her guidance which continues to be positive and strong in us as we move into positions of power and great responsibility. Thank Thee for the sacrifices of a mother, for her gentle, tender, firm, faithful touch throughout our lives. Praise Thee, God, for mothers.

In His name whose faithful mother gave her all. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, May 14, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3 of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable THOMAS A. DASCHLE, a Senator from the State of South Dakota, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. DASCHLE thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, following the time for the two leaders today, there will be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond 1:30 p.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each. At 1:30, the Senate will conduct debate only on the motion to proceed to S. 2240, the AIDS C.A.R.E. bill. There will be no rollcall votes today.

Last Friday I filed a cloture motion on the motion to proceed to the AIDS bill. The cloture vote will occur at 10 tomorrow morning. Once the bill has been called up, it is my intention to remain on it until action is completed. Therefore, Senators should be on notice that it is possible that late night sessions might occur early this week, beginning as early as tomorrow, in order to complete action on the AIDS bill as soon as possible.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time, and I reserve all of the leader time of the distinguished Republican leader.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 1:30 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

SENATOR PRYOR'S "VOLUNTEER AMERICA" BILL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to note the presence of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, Senator PRYOR, on the floor this morning. I would like to take the opportunity to commend him for initiating the idea of a private volunteer organization to provide aid to emerging premarket economies in Eastern Europe.

I noted with interest the President proposed such a program on Saturday. I believe Members of the Senate are aware that it was Senator PRYOR who first suggested this initiative, in statements on January 25 and March 8 of this year. I commend him for that. I think it is significant that the President has now adopted the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, and I hope that gives added impetus to the proposal.

I ask unanimous consent that statements by Senator PRYOR regarding and introducing legislation to create a "Volunteer America," such statements being dated January 25, 1990, and March 8, 1990, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATORS INTRODUCE BILL TO CREATE "VOLUNTEER AMERICA," MARCH 8, 1990

WASHINGTON.—Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., and two other senators Thursday introduced a bill seeking to establish a private, volunteer group to provide aid to emerging free-market economies in Eastern Europe.

Pryor was joined by Sens. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and Slade Gorton, R-Wash., in introducing the "Volunteer America for Eastern Europe Renewal Act." Under the bill, a federal charter would be granted to an organization that will be called "Volunteer America," which will create new volunteer programs and work with existing volunteer programs aimed at Eastern Europe.

"The Volunteer America program we want to establish will send volunteers from the United States with business and agricultural skills to help the budding free-market economies in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union," Pryor said.

"Volunteer America is the name, but it is also a call to action," the senator said. "It is a call for America to send its greatest resource of all to help Europe—our people."

Although it would be federally chartered, Volunteer America would not be a government program. It would be led by private-sector leaders and, apart from a $250,000 start-up grant, would be self-sustaining and privately funded.

The bill would allow the president to designate, after consultation with Congress, a leader in the business community who will initiate the formation of Volunteer America. The chairman would then select a board of directors whose membership will represent business, labor and agriculture sectors.

Pryor said sending people instead of dollars would allow the United States to begin assistance to Eastern Europe without becoming entangled in the current debate on Capitol Hill about how to distribute limited foreign aid dollars.

"We do have a deficit of dollars, but we also have a surplus of good Americans who are willing to give their time, their resources and their skills to help Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union," he said.

Pryor noted that in a recent speech, the president of Czechoslovakia told a joint session of Congress "that Eastern Europe does not need a great deal of foreign aid. Eastern Europe needs help with its business sector; it needs American business know-how and investment, it needs new agricultural ideas, it needs modern manufacturing methods and its people need to be shown how to start up small businesses."

Pryor said he had mentioned the Volunteer America idea in speeches in his home state and found the response "overwhelming." He said the senators have met with private sector groups such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Business Roundtable to further discuss the idea.

"Everyone, without exception, has been excited about Volunteer America and they are certain that if we can keep the government out of the program, the private sector support will eagerly follow," he said.

PRYOR CALLS FOR "PEOPLE'S CORPS" TO AID EASTERN EUROPE, JANUARY 25, 1990

WASHINGTON.—Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., Wednesday said the government should create a "People's Corps" to provide volunteer assistance to the emerging non-communist governments of Eastern Europe.

In a speech to Senate colleagues, Pryor said he felt the government should "send people, not dollars" to those countries. He said such a corps of American volunteers could help the countries at a time when U.S. officials are entangled in debate over how to distribute already-strained foreign aid spending.

"We have a deficit of dollars, but a surplus of good Americans who are willing to give their time and their resources of wisdom and skills in sharing," Pryor said.

"Today, there is an army of Americans with big hearts and special skills to share who are ready, willing and able to become a 'People's Corps,' representing the best of America," he said.

"We do not need governments and bureaucracies to intervene and confuse," the senator said. "We do not need misguided dollars. We need Americans to help make today's dreams become tomorrow's reality."

Pryor noted that Senate Minority Leader Robert J. Dole had recently proposed reducing aid to other countries by 5 percent to allow for financial assistance to the eastern countries. Meanwhile, Pryor said, President Bush has discussed an aid package for Panama, and Poland and Hungary have already been targeted to receive American foreign aid.

"We should be very cautious about new programs of massive foreign aid to these newly liberated countries, even as good or altruistic as our motives might be," Pryor said. "I fear our infusion of dollars could be premature and could contribute to the instability of the present unstable environment."

He said most of these countries have yet to adopt a constitution, much less come up with a plan to distribute American aid.

At the same time, he added: "We don't have the money."

"Let us encourage the leaders of business and industry," the senator said. "Let us call upon organizations who represent agriculture. Let us ask the various professions to become a part of a true American experience of sharing."

Pryor said he began proposing a "People's Corps" in speeches back in Arkansas last week, and the response he received was "truly overwhelming." He said a dentist in Benton, a school teacher in Little Rock, an engineer in Jacksonville and an irrigation expert in Pine Bluff all immediately contacted him to volunteer for duty in the eastern countries. A law professor from the University of Arkansas-Little Rock School of Law recommended establishing an "International Legal Assistance Corps."

"We as a people want to make a positive response," the senator said. "We want to extend our hand in friendship and share with eastern Europeans the blessings of liberty."

"Our goal should not be the Americanization of Eastern Europe, but the realization that our great country shared at a moment of need our greatest resource—our people and their ingenuity," he said.

Pryor said he has scheduled meetings to explore this idea with a number of groups, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the Business Roundtable, the International Executive Service Corps and a number of farm organizations.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to my distinguished colleague and again congratulate him for this suggestion and look forward to working with him and with the President in this regard.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

VOLUNTEER AMERICA FOR EASTERN EUROPE RENEWAL ACT

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I sincerely thank the distinguished majority leader for allowing me to speak for a few moments on this issue. And also, Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for recognizing the fact that not only myself but several of us in this body, as early as January, when we saw the massive and awesome changes taking place in Eastern Europe, sought to introduce and lay out for debate some type of a volunteer program. We called our program Volunteer America, a people's corps. I am very grateful the majority leader recognized it.

Mr. President, the President, in South Carolina on Saturday, May 12, did lay out the concept that he envisions, called the Democracy Corps. In January of this year and March of this year I joined with Senator KASSEBAUM, from Kansas, and Senator GORTON, of Washington. We ultimately, on March 8, introduced S. 2260. S. 2260, basically, creates a Federal charter for the volunteer program that we envision for America.

That Federal charter would be under the name of "Volunteer America for Eastern European Renewal." Once again, a Federal charter will bring to it the status of a tax-exempt, federally chartered organization.

Mr. President, almost every part of President Bush's proposal that he laid down in South Carolina on Saturday were parts of a program that I truly hope have the same elements that are in the program developed by Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator GORTON, and myself. Mr. President, I have been attempting to reach Senators KASSEBAUM and GORTON this morning. They are en route to Washington and will not be in until later this afternoon or sometime tonight.

Let me first state, Mr. President, it is immaterial and irrelevant—in fact it does not even matter—whose idea this first might have been. The hope is that we can now get together and move forward with this concept of volunteers coming from all across America, from the education sector, from the business sector, from the industrial sector, from retired people.

I know an irrigation specialist who said, "I will give 6 months." A teacher told me she will give a semester. Some retired business people said they are a little bit tired, now, of having nothing to do but play golf; they would like to give a year or 6 months. People from all across America want to be a part, I think, of this movement.

But let me state, Mr. President, there is one difference, and it is a very basic difference between what President Bush threw out for discussion on Saturday and what I have proposed and what Senators KASSEBAUM and GORTON have proposed. I am not speaking for Senators KASSEBAUM and GORTON on this point, but only for myself.

President Bush has stated that this program should be basically run out of the State Department. Mr. President, I strongly disagree. I do not believe this should be a Government program. This should truly be a people's program. It should come from the people. It should be the people. And it should not be a program financed by the taxpayers. More specifically, it must never become a program which is subjected to the turf battles, to the fiefdoms, and to bureaucratic entanglements within our State Department or any other Federal agency of Government.

Truly, this has to remain in the hands of the people.

I hope President Bush will agree to look at his concept, as proud as we are that he has proposed it; as proud as we are that now he sees this to be a very, very important part of our new relationship, and our new hope being part of a rebuilding of Eastern Europe. It is my hope that he will rethink his effort to place this under the control of the U.S. Department of State.

Mr. President, in 1953, Walter Cronkite was interviewing Dwight David Eisenhower in the White House. President Eisenhower had been our President for 1 year. It was on the eve, I think, of that first election of President Eisenhower when Mr. Cronkite was interviewing the President. I would like to quote what the President had to say in 1953.

President Eisenhower:

I like to believe that people, in the long run, are going to do more to promote peace than our governments. Indeed, I think that people want peace so much that one of these days government had better get out of their way and let them have it.

Mr. President, I think this is one of those classic examples when government should get out of the way; when they should encourage volunteers; when we should encourage a non-Federal program; when we should encourage people from all walks of life, if they have resources to give, ideas to share or hopes to bring to Eastern Europe, that truly under the volunteer America program this can happen.

I have talked to some 15 groups, Mr. President, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the Farm Bureau, the Business Roundtable, the Young Presidents Organization, the International Executive Corps.

I ask unanimous consent to print a list of those groups that I visited with, and those people with whom we have been trying to form the concepts of the Volunteer America Program.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2260, VOLUNTEER AMERICA FOR EASTERN EUROPEAN RENEWAL ACT, MARCH 8, 1990

PRIVATE INTERESTS

U.S. Chamber of Commerce;
National Association of Manufacturers;
American Farm Bureau;
Business Roundtable;
American Bankers Association;
American Agriculture Movement;
National Telephone Cooperative Association;
Volunteers in Technical Assistance;
International Executive Service Corp.;
World Council of Credit Unions;
American Express;
Armco Steel; and Young Presidents Organization.

EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

Department of State;
Agency for International Development;
Department of Commerce;
Peace Corps; and Overseas Private Investment Corporation.

SENATE COSPONSORS

Senators Kassebaum, Gorton, Boren, Simon, Cohen, Heinz, Sanford, Conrad, Johnston, Reid, Sasser, Bumpers, Fowler, Kohl, and Bryan.

Mr. PRYOR. I also ask unanimous consent that Senator SIMPSON be added as a cosponsor to S. 2260 the Volunteer America for Eastern European Renewal Act.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. PRYOR. I also ask unanimous consent that the distinguished occupant of the chair, Senator DASCHLE, be added as a cosponsor of S. 2260.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a summary of what Volunteer America is about and what it is not about. We think this will be a good summary.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF VOLUNTEER AMERICA FOR EASTERN EUROPE RENEWAL ACT

Recognizing the need for private, volunteer assistance to Eastern Europe, the bill encourages the establishment of a private, non-profit organization called Volunteer America.

Volunteer America will work to develop efficient free market economies in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union by:

Consulting with appropriate individuals in those nations to identify the need for overall business management and technical advice in areas such as agriculture, manufacturing, financial services and mining;

Creating volunteer programs to be led by experienced business and labor executives to create on-going relationships with those countries to meet the identified needs; and Operating mainly through private sector contributions of money, people, and materials.

FEATURES OF THE BILL

The President will designate, after consultation with Congress, a lead individual in the business community who will initiate the formation of Volunteer America and become its chairman.

The chairman will select a board of directors whose membership will represent major business sectors, labor, and agriculture.

Authorizes a one-time, start-up grant of $250,000 to be used by the chairman to inaugurate Volunteer America.

States that a Federal charter should be granted to incorporate Volunteer America at the appropriate time.

Establishes that Volunteer America will be non-political and non-governmental.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Washington Post article of Sunday, May 13, announcing President Bush's support of his Democracy Corps, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, May 13, 1990]

BUSH BACKS EASTERN EUROPE AID "CORPS"

(By Ann Devroy)

COLUMBIA, SC, May 12.—President Bush today summoned the nation to help complete the "unfinished business" of securing democracy across Eastern Europe by exporting not only American money but also the American experience with two centuries of democracy.

In a commencement address he called "a reflection on democratic change," the president announced the launching of a private-sector "citizens democracy corps" to carry American expertise to Eastern Europe. He also announced a liberalized line of credit to help Poland finance the purchase of U.S. machinery, technology and services as it tries to restructure its economy.

The democracy corps, which would get an initial government grant of $300,000 for start-up costs, would begin by establishing a center and clearinghouse for American private-sector assistance and volunteer activities in Eastern Europe, the president said. It would operate out of the State Department and be run by a commission appointed by the president.

The objective of the new program, the White House said, is to "support democratic change and market-oriented economic reform" in Eastern Europe by mobilizing and coordinating American private-sector efforts. It would also serve as a clearinghouse for requests from new governments for assistance in areas such as constitutional law, English-language training, journalism, market economics, environmental protection and a range of other areas.

The White House said that while the government will provide initial funding, the democracy corps should in time establish its own financial base through contributions and industry grants.

"America has much to contribute, much it can do to help these nations move forward on the path to democracy," Bush said in announcing the initiative.

There have been a number of similar proposals to help Eastern Europe, including one by House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt (D-Mo.) that he described as a "modern-day Berlin airlift, bringing planes of people across the Atlantic in both directions." A variety of bills have been introduced in Congress to promote democratic institutions in Eastern Europe.

On the Poland loan initiative, the White House announced the Export-Import Bank has opened a new line of credit to Poland, allowing medium-term loans in addition to the short-term borrowings allowed now. Firms in Poland now can repay loans in five to seven years rather than one year, White House officials said. The bank guarantees private loans and extends its own loans to facilitate foreign purchases of U.S. exports. The effort Bush announced does not involve an increase in the amount of funds available to the bank.

The Bush administration has proposed a $300 million economic aid package for Eastern Europe this year.

Bush also announced he will send presidential delegations to observe elections in Romania next week and another team to next month's elections in Bulgaria.

He also said he will seek to broaden the mandate of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe by asking it to seek "a new consensus" on what he called the "cornerstones of democracy"—free elections, political pluralism and the rule of law.

Addressing about 1,600 graduates of the University of South Carolina, Bush spoke of the nations of Eastern Europe on the "threshold of democracy" and the responsibility of the United States to secure those democracies by rooting them in democratic institutions. The United States, he said, must help the new democracies build "political systems based on respect for individual freedom, for the right to speak our mind, to live as we wish, to worship as our conscience tells us we must."

Bush called for systems "based on respect for property and the sanctity of contract" and laws that allow free association, free speech and strict equality of rights.

The president compared Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary today to America two centuries ago, as it began its experiment with democracy. "Who will be their Franklins, their Washingtons, their Hamiltons and Madisons?" he said. Who will be "their nation-builders who will set in place the firm foundations of self-government?"

The fate of Europe, he said, depends not only on this new generation of leaders but also on the political systems they put in place. "The fate of freedom depends not just on the character of the people who govern, but whether they themselves are governed by the rule of law," he said.

"That is why," he added, "we must export our experience, our two centuries of accumulated wisdom on the workings of free government."

The "essence of our vision of Europe," Bush said, is a Europe "where not only are the dictators dethroned, but where the rule of law, reflecting the will of the people, ensures the freedom millions have fought so hard to gain."

Appealing directly to the graduates, Bush said that "freedom's great triumph" does not mean "America's work is done." The "unfinished business that awaits the generation you represent," he said, is "to uphold our American ideals, not in time of war, but in a time of tremendous excitement, helping these nations secure the freedom your fathers and grandfathers fought for."

Before returning to Washington last night, the president gave another commencement address, this one on volunteerism, at Liberty University in Lynchburg, Va. The university was founded by the Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder of the defunct Moral Majority and a longtime supporter of Bush.

In that speech, Bush lauded volunteerism, both in the United States and abroad, as one of the American "ideals" undergirding democracy. "Individuality, we can change a life. Collectively, we can change the world," he said.

THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS AND OUR GREAT RIVER NETWORK

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to state the States of Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma are undergoing some of the most serious flooding conditions in the past 100 years. It has always been somewhat of a mystery to all of us involved in that great river network as to how the Corps of Engineers decides which locks to open, which dams to open, what the degree of flow might or might not be into the lower sections of the river channels.

This morning I am sending a letter to the Honorable Charles A. Bowsher, Comptroller General. I am asking for an immediate GAO update as to how these decisions are actually made and if all factors are being considered by the Corps of Engineers. We feel that this is an important time to do this. We also feel that it is a timely request to the General Accounting Office for an independent evaluation of this system of decisionmaking, which is so critical to all of those concerned.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print the letter in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, May 14, 1990.

Hon. CHARLES A. BOWSHER,
Comptroller General of the United States, General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. COMPTROLLER GENERAL: The State of Arkansas has been inundated during the past several days with floodwaters in three major river basins. This flooding has been described by experts as a one in one-hundred year event. The problems that we are seeing have been both helped and exacerbated by man-made flood control structures within each of the Arkansas, White and Red River basins.

I am writing to request that you initiate an immediate examination of the operations and procedures of the Army Corps of Engineers relating to the regulation of water levels and release schedules in the flood control structures associated with these river basins.

I have nothing that suggests that the Corps of Engineers has done anything but follow standard operating procedures. I am unsure as to whether or not these standard operating procedures are the best procedures we could be using to protect life and property. But I believe it is important that we step back and get an outside opinion, and that is why I am requesting this examination.

There is little doubt that without these federal projects the flooding would be significantly worse. However, there has been much discussing during recent years centering on the multiple missions of these facilities and their priority levels. During this year's event, the Corps has been criticized for not releasing enough water from some of the facilities in advance of the heavy rains to provide for additional flood storage capacity.

This is, as I am sure you can understand, a matter of some importance to those of us from Arkansas. I ask, therefore, that you give this request your prompt and personal attention. Should you have any questions concerning this request, please do not hesitate to contact me directly.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID PRYOR.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I yield the floor. I thank the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

THE FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, the Senate, this esteemed body in which we serve, has yet again reaffirmed to the American public its stubborn insistence on remaining the "last plantation."

Mr. President, last week the Senate voted 67 to 30 in favor of reforming the Hatch Act. By taking this step, we sent a resounding signal to civil servants that they need not live under rules which force them to be second-class citizens.

Regrettably, Mr. President, I sadly noted that an element of hyprocrisy attended our debate on this subject. For 6 days, many of my colleagues rose to eloquently address the merits of the Hatch Act reform bill. Yet, for more than 2 years, I have called on this body to end the double standard that exists right here in the U.S. Senate. We cannot continue to maintain one set of rules of privilege for ourselves and have a set of far different rules for the remainder of our society.

At the end of the last Congress, I submitted Senate Resolution 488, a measure to end the congressional practice of passing laws for the rest of the Nation to obey but exempting itself from compliance. Regrettably, the measure did not pass.

At that time, Senator GLENN expressed an interest in expanding this measure into a comprehensive bill to cover all of Congress, not just the Senate. Together, we crafted S. 1165, a bill that would provide to all congressional employees the protections of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1976, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, and the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

Mr. President, I think that most American citizens would be astounded to know that employees of the U.S. Senate have no protections or coverage under the pieces of legislation that I just mentioned. I believe that the Members who have served in Congress have made every effort to comply with these laws, but there is no substitute for the force of law. Discrimination cannot be tolerated in any environment, especially on Capitol Hill. We have no right to impose second-class citizenship on those who work here.

Mr. President, last week I listened closely to the debate regarding the Hatch Act reform bill. Proponents of that measure rallied to the side of those they perceived as suffering from an inequity in political rights that exists between civil servants and those in the private sector. Unfortunately, I am forced to ask: Where are these great proponents of equal justice now? When it comes to ending the double standard that we in Congress enjoy, why are so many of my colleagues mute?

The Governmental Affairs Committee has twice now attempted to pass the fair employment practices bill. In both cases, my good friend, Senator GLENN, had to postpone consideration of the bill due to lack of support. According to Roll Call, only 5 of the panels' 14 Members appeared inclined to support the measure. Mr. President, according to my information, nine Members of the Governmental Affairs Committee supported the Hatch Act reform bill. I would like to point out that on more than one occasion, Members of this group spoke on the floor in favor of Hatch Act reform.

Mr. President, I do not mean to make any negative inference by illuminating this fact. I draw attention solely so that my colleagues will realize the perception the public holds. If we in Congress believe that the laws we pass are truly worthy rules for a just society, then they must apply to Congress. If we truly believe we cannot tolerate a civil service where citizens are denied rights and made second-class citizens, then how can we endorse such a system here?

Mr. President, I call on my colleagues to support S. 1165, the Fair Employment Practices Act, and end this body's shameful legacy as the "last plantation."

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMEMORATING THE 125TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF DR. GEORGE WASHINGTON CARVER

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise in recognition of the birth of a great American genius—Dr. George Washington Carver. Born a slave on July 12, 1865, Dr. Carver became one of this Nation's most creative minds. He took the lowly sweet potato and the peanut and developed a vast number of products of all varieties.

Dr. Carver began his studies as an art major at Simpson College in Indiana. He was the only black student. To pursue his interest and talent in science and agriculture, Carver transferred to Iowa State University.

In 1896, as he was completing work on his master's degree at Iowa State, Dr. Carver received a job offer from Booker T. Washington inviting him to head the new agricultural department at Tuskegee Institute. Carver replied:

> It has always been the one great ideal of my life to be of the greatest good to the greatest number of "my people" possible and to this end I have been preparing myself for these many years.

The arrival of George Washington Carver in 1896 led to greatly expanded research. Under his leadership, the institute sponsored agricultural demonstrations in rural communities, monthly farmers institutes, and county fairs. An experimental station, partly funded by the State of Alabama, was started in 1897. Even though it was not designated as an 1890 land-grant institution, Tuskegee in fact provided a model for land-grant institutions. By 1897 it had created a fully developed research program and established mechanisms to transmit the knowledge to the farmer.

In 1906, Dr. Carver inaugurated the "Jessup Agricultural Wagon," named for the northern donor of $567 required to outfit the wagon. Equipped with seeds, fertilizers, and a variety of farm implements, the wagon would tour farms and give demonstrations at central points. Black as well as white farmers attended these meetings. Today, visitors to the Carver Museum at Tuskegee can still see a Jessup Wagon.

Dr. Carver was a master teacher, researcher, extension agent, landscaper, farm manager, and inventor. He was awarded three United States patents, two in 1925 and one in 1927. Most of his inventions, however, were turned over to this country as gifts to mankind.

During his career at Tuskegee University, he taught thousands of students who went on to become the county agents, teachers, and community workers throughout my native State of Alabama.

In April of this year Dr. Carver, along with Dr. Percy Julian, the Chicago chemist responsible for synthesizing cortisone and other human hormones, became the first black Americans to be inducted in to the Inventors Hall of Fame. Belatedly, his name was inscribed in the pantheon of 76 American scientists, including Thomas Edison, Alexander Graham Bell, and the Wright Brothers.

I am proud that Tuskegee University is continuing in the tradition of Dr. Carver. Four university scientists have been awarded a patent for a hydroponic system of growing sweet potatoes. This research, supported by NASA, will help this Nation prepare for a new age of space travel and exploration.

Another lasting legacy of Dr. Carver's work is the Tuskegee Institute National Historic Site. This 50-acre site was created by Public Law 93-486, inacted in 1974. The George Washington Carver Museum is the centerpiece of this site, which includes the Booker T. Washington Home and some 19 buildings—many constructed by Tuskegee University students with hand-made bricks. I am proud that over the past 3 years Congress has provided $10.6 million to the Department of the Interior to restore and rehabilitate some of these buildings.

Dr. George Washington Carver was a creative genius dedicated to being of the greatest good to mankind. The State of Alabama and this whole Nation can be proud of his contribution to our lives.

THE U.S. FLAG-WAVERS HALL OF FAME

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a friend of mine, James Record of Huntsville, AL, has come up with the idea of creating a U.S. flag-wavers hall of fame to honor flag-wavers and other patriots.

Mr. Record is an outstanding individual. He is chairman of the Madison County Constitution Bicentennial Commission, served as State commander of the American Legion in Alabama, and has served in many capacities in veterans organizations as well as civic organizations.

His idea is that if we create a U.S. flag-wavers hall of fame, we would stimulate flag flying, patriotism nationally, and it could have some effect on eliminating flag burning. I think he has an excellent idea.

I ask unanimous consent that his letter to me, along with an attachment which is signed by him, and along with a newspaper column in the Huntsville Times by Bill Easterling, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MADISON COUNTY, U.S.A., CONSTITUTION BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION,

Huntsville, AL, March 12, 1990.

Hon. HOWELL HEFLIN,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: Through my Chairmanship of the Huntsville-Madison County United States Constitution Bicentennial Celebration and participation in many patriotic activities, including finding out those who have flown the flag in Madison County during our celebration, I got the idea of creating The United States Flag-Wavers Hall of Fame to honor our flag-wavers and other patriots and I am enclosing the creating document asking you to study it. If you agree with it, and could possibly get approval and/or endorsement by Congress, I believe you would be doing much to stimulate flag-flying and patriotism nationally, and possibly even eliminate flag-burning. You would of course also stimulate creation of many Chapters of the H.O.F. nationally. Madison County is Chapter #1.

Looking forwards to hearing from you soon and favorably, I am,

Patriotically yours,

JAMES RECORD,
Chairman.

MADISON COUNTY, U.S.A., CONSTITUTION BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION,

Huntsville, Ala.

The "Flag-Wavers Hall of Fame', previously created October 11, 1989, is hereby recreated as The United States Flag-Wavers Hall of Fame", with it's original chapter located in and known as "The Madison County #1 Chapter of the United States Flag-Wavers Hall of Fame". Other chapters may be simply created by notifying the original chapter of a group believing in and subscribing to the purposes and ideals of the founding chapter. The group will then be created as a chapter. There may be an unlimited number of chapters nationally.

The primary purpose and ideals of the Flag-Wavers Hall of Fame are as follows:

1. To foster, perpetuate, encourage, and stimulate patriotism by flying the United States Flag, and to show it proper respect as the Symbol of our nation.

2. To foster, perpetuate, encourage, and stimulate patriotism by recognizing acts of patriotism in every way.

3. To act as a watchdog over publicly elected government officials and candidates for office-city-county-state-district and federal, as to their patriotism, or non-patriotism, for disrespect to our flag actions, and to so notify the general public.

4. To help Americans become more informed and active participants in the political, economic and religious life of their community, state and nation.

5. To help schools and school systems teach patriotism, flying of the flag symbolism, and respect for the U.S. Flag, and the United States Constitution.

6. To help honor other patriots, our Armed Services, and Veterans who fought on behalf of our FREEDOMS.

A Flag-Wavers Hall of Fame Medal of Honor for Patriotism is to be designed and struck and given to inductees at each annual induction, to be held at a date near July 4th.

Adopted this 14th day of February 1990.

Huntsville-Madison County United States Bicentennial.

JAMES RECORD,
Chairman.

[From the Huntsville (AL) Times, Feb. 18, 1990]

THE PATRIOT HAS A NEW HALL OF FAME

James Record knows more Madison County history than probably anyone. In fact, he wrote most of the county's history books. His role as a citizen has been well-documented over the years, and if he never puts another word on paper or offers his services again, his place in city and county archives is secure.

But after a long and illustrious public service career, Record didn't want to quietly graze in a pasture when he retired as chairman of the Madison County Commission.

He felt he still had much to offer. And not even a stroke could keep him down. He simply got a wheelchair and kept on trucking.

In his salad days, Record guided many positive ideas through the Commission. During that time, he wrote several local histories, and started a history of Alabama which he continues to research. He also breathed life into the Madison County Military Hall of Heroes, a one-of-a-kind shrine housed in the courthouse dedicated to local men and women who served with distinction in the armed forces.

In retirement, Record headed the Madison County Constitution Bicentennial Commission, was appointed county historian, and helped launch the Huntsville-Madison County Athletic Hall of Fame.

Now he has a new nut to crack. He has created the Madison County Flag Wavers Hall of Fame "to honor those Madison Countians who have been found to have flown the United States flag and-or been involved in one or more patriotic activities."

Record said it's the only such hall of fame in the country, and people who know him won't bet against him getting it done.

Several months ago, Record drove around the city and county and collected business and private addresses where the flag was being flown.

Then he sent letters to those addresses asking occupants to tell him by return mail why they flew it.

Many, many people replied, and their statements were priceless to a man like Record, whose sense of history is only surpassed by his patriotic fervor.

He gave those letters to me for a possible column or feature story.

I lost them all.

Well, I can't just apologize to him and simply let his hard work, and his hope, go to waste.

So I've decided to ask those of you who replied to him the first time and who might read this today to take time and send him another note or letter explaining why you fly the flag.

I'm also asking any who read this who did't get an original inquiry to participate, too, if you fly the flag each day or only on certain days.

This is all I know to do; and I hope it generates some response, because I know the dedicated, heartfelt attitude with which Jim Record attacks any task.

When he gets this latest HOF off the ground—and he will—Record said he plans to have a medal for patriotism called "The Flag Wavers Hall of Fame Medal of Honor which the patriot and his or her descendents can cherish for generations to come."

Record's not in this for personal glory. His achievements stand quite capably on their own. But a sentence he said to me might better explain his motive.

"The project may spread nationwide," he said, "bringing us a nation of flag wavers, not flag burners."

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF MSGR. GEORGE C. HIGGINS' ORDINATION

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, this coming Wednesday, May 16, 1990, will mark the 50th anniversary of the ordination of Msgr. George C. Higgins. A mass in celebration of this occasion will take place here in Washington. The Senate will wish to record this fine moment.

For near to half a century, almost from the moment of his ordination, George Higgins has played a singular role in American life, that of the labor priest, advocating the rights and the responsibilities of working people and of trade unions in American life, and of social justice in all of the institutions of our democracy.

As we approach the end of the twentieth century much of this seems settled, even commonplace. It is difficult to recall how contentious and problematic these issues seemed at the outset, a century ago. The great industrial societies of the world, ours not least, were torn with controversy concerning the social issue, as it was then termed. A fierce and at times unfeeling individualism which had given form to industrial society was becoming rigid and indeed reactionary in the face of the demands from workers for some collective role in the decisions which affected their lives. Equally fierce advocates of revolutionary change, Marxists in the main, called for a complete transformation of society, the "expropriation of the expropriators" as the term went. In 1891 the papal encyclical Rerum Novarum set forth a wholly different vision of a cooperative society in which there were collective rights as well as individual responsibilities, and a shared responsibility for well-being. The new concept of a welfare state received the explicit sanction of the oldest institution of the western world. In Europe these ideas led to the formation of Christian Democratic parties, such as now govern in Italy and the Federal Republic of Germany. In the United States their influence was largely confined to the Catholic community, not a small one—indeed, a quarter of our population—but still a minority, and often thinking and acting as a minority. Save in the trade union movement, where the labor priest, as some were called, attained to a singular role as guide and counselor.

None has been so luminous as George C. Higgins. From his base in Washington his quiet counsel, outspoken views, unyielding convictions and gentle manner influenced the entire Nation. I attest. His voice was heard in the White House, heard in the union halls, on ghetto streets, on shop floors, and through his special association with the International Labor Organization, in the great international councils. It has been a voice of reason and of faith; ever a voice of hope. He is one of those who helped the world through the great travail of the 20th century. Through God's grace he has lived to see so much of his efforts bear fruit.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point five of Monsignor Higgins' fine articles. Written during the last 5 years they are fitting examples of his powerful writing and I commend them to my colleague's attention.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follow:

[From the Catholic Standard, Davenport, IA, Mar. 1988]

POVERTY ANYWHERE IS A DANGER EVERYWHERE

(By Msgr. George Higgins)

"Poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere,"

That is a basic axiom of the International Labor Organization, the oldest of the specialized UN agencies. Yet, with global recession taking a mighty toll on humanity, especially in the Third World, poverty is on the rise throughout the world.

The ILO can have a noticeable impact on efforts to secure human rights and to improve working conditions worldwide through its international labor code, its push for expanded economic growth and employment, and its technical assistance program. For this reason, it is highly significant that the U.S. Senate recently ratified two ILO conventions—the first time it has done so since 1953.

By its action the Senate served notice that America will assume an important new leadership role in the ILO. U.S. influence within the world labor body has waned tremendously during the last 35 years due to the failure to ratify ILO conventions—and the global thrust for human rights has been blunted.

With the new ratifications, the United States has ratified nine of the 162 conventions adopted by the ILO since its creation in 1919. This clears the way for the U.S. delegates—representatives from business, labor and government—to review all the conventions, giving judicious consideration to those which can deeply touch the labor market.

Indeed, the door is now open for the United States to practice within the ILO what it preaches in calling for an extension of democratic values worldwide.

I hope consideration will be given to two ILO conventions which represent an international "bill of rights" for working people.

Convention 87, which concerns freedom of association and protection of the right to organize.

Convention 98, which concerns the right to organize and to bargain collectively.

Since 1988 marks the 40th anniversary of the ILO's adoption of the freedom of association convention, it would be most fitting and satisfying if the United States were to ratify this fundamental convention this year.

Convention 87 is purely democratic, and its precepts are a linchpin of America's industrial democracy. "Workers and employers," this convention provides, "shall have the right to establish and . . . to join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization."

Clearly, this is a First Amendment right for Americans, and it would be most appropriate for the AFL–CIO, representing workers, and the U.S. Council for International Business, representing employers, to join with the government to endorse its ratification.

As an economic and moral leader of the world, we can demonstrate to men and women of good will everywhere that we are insistent on achieving a just balance between economic and human needs in ratifying this worker "bill of rights."

[From the Catholic New York, June 2, 1988]

THE YARDSTICK: THE FINAL BATTLE IS NEVER WON

(By Msgr. George G. Higgins)

Thousands of striking Polish workers recently returned to work after reaching a settlement with the Polish government. But the "settlement" really settled nothing. It's safe to predict that sooner or later the workers will strike again unless the government recognizes Solidarity, the trade union it suppressed in 1981.

The Polish government's use of force was a key factor in ending the strike. Its show of force had one purpose: to squelch the human spirit of Polish workers.

Ironically, these events took place as democratic societies around the world are observing two watershed events in the history of human rights: the 40th anniversaries of the adoption of the U.N. Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Labor Organization's convention on freedom of association and protection of the right to organize.

The Polish tragedy serves as a fresh reminder that the final battle in pursuit of human rights is never won. It is a constant and endless struggle. People of good will everywhere must join forces to protect freedom and human rights where they exist and to extend those precious rights to people who have yet to secure them.

From the perspective of working people, the ILO offers hope to the world's dispossessed and downtrodden that they might lift themselves from the poverty of body and spirit. Its convention on freedom of association is the centerpiece of ILO efforts to secure basic human rights and thereby elevate the status of working men and women globally.

Fittingly, the ILO's 1988 international convention in June will focus on human rights issues, especially in the developing nations. In the Third World, the arithmetic of deprivation is stark: an estimated 900 million live in poverty, more than 70 million are unemployed and 500 million are underemployed.

"Universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice," says the Universal Declaration on Human Rights. "Poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere," the ILO's 1944 Declaration of Philadelphia asserts.

As the leading democracy of the world, the United States has a special bond with the ILO, and our people should give full support to the world labor body's diverse efforts to secure human rights. Those efforts include setting a code of international labor standards and supervising their observance; technical assistance aimed at spurring economic growth and employment; and spotlighting workplace concerns and problems.

ILO Director General Francis Blanchard points us toward a better day in his report for the June conference: "Solidarity, among nations as well as within nations, is an essential aspect of human rights. It involves both a farsighted self-interest in bolstering the chances for a more stable community of nations enjoying reasonable prospects of sustainable well-being and an element of generosity toward the weak and vulnerable."

The Catholic Church has long been a leading advocate of workers' rights in Poland and elsewhere. Pope John Paul II has expressed strong support and full approval for the actions of Polish workers. And the U.S. bishops voiced support for unions in their 1986 pastoral letter on economic justice.

Let us hope that Polish leaders will take these messages to heart and begin to act civilly toward their own people and their free labor unions. The essential lesson to be learned from the Polish tragedy is that free trade unions and collective bargaining are vital instruments to achieve human rights and a higher standard of living all over the world.

[From the Postal Record, June 1988]

THE ILO: HOPE FOR THE HOPELESS

(By Msgr. George Higgins)

An eight-year-old boy in India bears molten glass on the tip of poles. Scurrying to keep up production, he dodges piles of broken glass and blazing open furnaces. His scarred face tells the story of his travails and job dangers.

In Bangkok, a 12-year-old girl, her frail body barely able to keep going, works 15 hours a day in a textile factory for a few cents pay and scraps of food.

An African father of seven wheezes as he inhales a heavy dose of asbestos while battering down the wall of a dilapidated building. A group of Eastern European workers lumber back to their dreary factory jobs after their latest effort to organize a union was crushed by government force.

There is but one multilateral organization that offers these and millions of other workers around the globe hope from oppression: The International Labor Organization, which is the oldest of all the specialized U.N. agencies.

The Geneva-based ILO, through its code of labor standards, has sought to prevent these kinds of human and worker rights violations worldwide since its creation in 1919. The ILO, uniting representatives of workers, employers and governments, also fosters economic growth and employment, and provides wide-ranging assistance on social and development issues.

Its primary focus is this Third World, but the world labor body seeks to improve the status of working men and women everything and to abolish child labor abuses. Yet the ILO faces an uncertain future because of persisting problems of funding that threaten to weaken its programs.

OUR OBLIGATIONS

Although the United States is one of the world's leading champions of human rights, it is a principal cause of the funding plight of this world body today. All Americans with a sense of social and economics justice will find it unconscionable that the United States continues to owe some $15 million toward the now-past ILO budget for 1986–87.

Further, the U.S. failed to meet its 1988 obligation of $40.6 million that was due on January 1.

The failure of America to meet its full contribution of 25 percent of the ILO's operating costs—a pledge made long ago—is the worst record of any major contributing nation.

This poor contribution record will not only serve to diminish American effectiveness in the organization, it will also seriously diminish the ILO's efforts to secure basic human rights and to elevate the status of workers in depressed and totalitarian nations, regardless of whether the oppression is from despots of the left or the right.

Succinctly, our failure to pay what we pledge will hurt us, and, worse, the people we want to help through the ILO's humanitarian efforts.

Concerned Americans and groups should insist that the United States meet its financial obligations so that this world organization can meet its noble goals. We can start by expressing dismay about this funding dilemma to our congressional representatives.

[From the Long Island Catholic, Mar. 16, 1989]

THE INTERNATIONAL WAR AGAINST DRUGS

(By Msgr. George Higgins)

Pedro Leon Pineda, Julio Cesar Uribe, Jose Hernan Usuga and Gilberto Chaverra Robledo had a number of things in common—one of them terrifying and final. Leon, Cesar, Hernan and Chaverra, all Colombian trade unionists seeking to advance the rights of fellow workers, were gunned down by assassins' bullets.

These men of labor were among a staggering total of more than 200 Colombian trade unionists and peasant leaders murdered or missing in the Latin American country between 1986 and 1988. This horrendous violation of human and trade union rights prompted the governing body of the International Labor Organization, an agency of the United Nations, to press the Colombian government recently to take stringent steps to halt the genocide—heinous crimes committed for the most part by assassins hired, trained and protected by the nation's drug barons.

Colombia, as dreadful as the situation is, is not alone, for the tragedy of drug trafficking and abuse is a growing global problem. All of us can find some cheer in an effort by the ILO to mobilize an international war against the escalating illicit drug trade that is killing individuals, shattering families, hindering productivity and leading to wholesale violations of human rights.

With a charter to improve the status of working people worldwide, the ILO might seem an improbable organization to try to galvanize efforts to fight drugs. But through its diverse technical cooperation programs it is seeking to encourage peasants who cultivate drugs to move into alternative enterprises.

In terms of reducing drug demand, the ILO is working with employers and unions to discourage workers from abusing drugs and alcohol, thus trying to reduce the terrible cost in human and financial terms.

Recently the ILO's outgoing director-general, Francois Blanchard, took a number of positive steps to mobilize the United Nations, major international unions and his own Geneva-based organization to expand and intensify efforts in the global war on illicit drug trafficking and abuse.

In an appeal to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Mr. Blanchard urged the world organization and its satellite agencies to explore the means by which war against drug trafficking and abuse "can be intensified and made more coherent."

Simultaneously, he asked the heads of three international labor groups, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the World Federation of Trade Unions and the World Confederation of Labor, to lend their active support in fighting this "terrible scourge."

With more than 50 million people worldwide estimated to be dependent on drugs, the stakes in the war on drugs are high in terms of individual and family trauma, job losses, medical costs, lost production and profits, rehabilitation and reintegration expenses, and even death.

Anything less than all-out warfare on drugs and the criminals who push them by the world community of nations is unacceptable. Let your position on this international tragedy be known to your elected officials in Washington and urge them to support this assault on drugs under the banner of the United Nations.

[From the Tidings, Los Angeles, Mar. 31, 1989]

THE YARDSTICK: PROVIDING EMPLOYMENT

(By Msgr. George G. Higgins)

For many years Ramon Zambrano, a child of poverty, struggled about the streets of Caracas, Venezuela, begging as best he could—without legs and without hope. Four years ago, at age 20, he signed up at an International Labor Organization rehabilitation center for the handicapped and in time mastered the skill of watch repair.

Aliat Oda's long desire to have a child gave birth to an idea that led to a successful business venture in Cairo, Egypt—creating children's clothes and new jobs. With the aid of the ILO, she built a thriving business that now employs 100 workers and has begun to export clothes.

In the Sudan, Mohammed Nuri Hamed, one of nearly a half-million Ethiopian refugees and a carpenter by trade, survived on handouts for more than a decade, unable to afford tools. Two years ago, an ILO loan enabled Hamed to buy tools and raw materials and resume working.

These are just three of the tens of thousands of men and women helped each year by the ILO's technical-cooperation program, which is designed to help spur economic and employment growth in the Third World.

In the developing world, the arithmetic of deprivation and suffering is staggering: 900 million people live in poverty; 70 million are unemployed; 500 million are underemployed. The ILO predicts that 1 billion new jobs must be created worldwide by the start of the next century, as the world population soars to 6 billion and an additional 750 million job seekers flood the global work force, nearly 90 percent of them in the underdeveloped countries.

Freely chosen employment, the ILO believes, is key to raising the status of the world's burgeoning labor force. Since its creation by the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, the ILO has dedicated itself to promoting employment and protecting workers from joblessness and poverty.

As we look toward the challenges and opportunities of the 21st century, let us be guided by this basic tenet of the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights: "Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment and to just and favorable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment."

The ILO, featuring unions, employers and governments operating with equal voices to elevate the status of workers, offers a pragmatic approach to attaining this goal. It is essential that the United States play a central role in the ILO's efforts by providing effective leadership in the ILO and by fully meeting its funding obligations, which have lagged badly in recent years.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I raise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,885th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is now closed.

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY ACT OF 1990

MOTION TO PROCEED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the motion to proceed to S. 2240.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. President, today we begin debate on one of the most important initiatives that the Congress will consider this session—the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990. This legislation quite literally addresses a life and death issue—both for individuals with AIDS and for the health services programs, public and private, that provide care to people with AIDS.

Before I speak about this legislation, I want to congratulate the chairman and ranking member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. HATCH, for their truly outstanding efforts in bringing this legislation to the floor. They put aside partisanship and philosophical differences and have worked tirelessly together to secure 63 cosponsors and the support of countless organizations for this legislation. They did that for one reason—to save lives. It is not often that an issue is so terribly important and urgent that so many diverse individuals and groups rally around one bill. But, clearly AIDS is such an issue.

Mr. President, on behalf of all people with AIDS and all of us who care deeply about easing their pain, I want to thank Senators KENNEDY and HATCH for expediting this cause. I understand that Senator KENNEDY will be here later this afternoon to make his opening remarks on this legislation. I am glad that Senator HATCH is now on the floor.

Mr. President, I also want to pay tribute to the young man to whom this legislation is dedicated—Ryan White. After fighting AIDS for 6 years, Ryan succumbed to the disease on April 8. His struggle with AIDS was fought in the public's eye—from his first efforts to go back to school with his friends to his last days in the hospital. That is quite a lot for a 13-year-old boy to deal with. but he did so with grace, persistence, and good humor. He faced life with a deadly disease and discrimination head on. He showed America that someone with AIDS could be anyone of us—a friend, a neighbor, or a relative.

Mr. President, with this bill, we carry on Ryan's fight to help people in pain to live their lives to the fullest, and with dignity.

Mr. President, as the sponsor of the first bill in the Senate in 1988 to focus comprehensively on AIDS care issues, I believe that the time is long overdue for the Federal Government to provide leadership to ensure that people with AIDS have access to vital health and social services. I recently met with representatives of community-based organizations that provide services to people with AIDS in California. They said that without this legislation, they simply will be unable to continue providing such services to people with AIDS. As a caring society, we cannot stand idly by and let that happen.

The Federal Government recognizes that true disasters cannot be dealt with by individual cities or States alone. The magnitude of assistance that is needed in those situations is just too great. We acknowledge the responsibility of the society as a whole to come to the assistance of individual communities and individuals themselves during times of crisis. We responded compassionately and quickly when the residents of South Carolina and of northern California were devastated recently by natural disasters. The time has come to recognize AIDS as a national disaster that is disproportionately affecting certain parts of the country. These areas cannot be expected to continue to cope with this crisis alone.

Unless new drugs are developed, hundreds of thousands of Americans will likely develop AIDS in the coming decade. With new therapeutics, many may be able to continue working and lead productive and full lives. But many will be sick and need a broad spectrum of health and support services. We must begin now to develop a system of care that is compassionate and cost-effective.

NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. President, as of April 1, more than 128,000 Americans have been diagnosed with AIDS and 78,000 Americans have died from this horrible disease. As many as 1 million Americans may be infected with the HIV. By 1993—just 3 short years from now—it is expected that there will be anywhere from 61,000 to 98,000 new cases of AIDS and between 151,000 and 225,000 people alive with AIDS.

Health care costs to provide care to people with AIDS are also increasing rapidly. It is estimated that by next year providing direct medical care to persons with AIDS will cost $8.5 billion. Although nearly 30 percent of people with AIDS today have private health insurance, the number of people with AIDS with no insurance is increasing.

The public hospitals are bearing the brunt of providing uncompensated care to people with AIDS. A recent survey found that in 1988, 10 hospitals treated 38 percent of all people with AIDS in the United States, and public hospitals treated the largest proportions of low-income AIDS patients. Many of our public health systems are on the verge of collapsing because of the growing numbers of people with AIDS.

SUMMARY OF THE CARE ACT

Mr. President, this legislation would provide emergency relief to those metropolitan areas hardest hit by the AIDS epidemic. Funds would be available to support hospitals, clinics, community health centers and other facilities serving a disproportionate share of low-income individuals and families with HIV disease.

Fifty percent of the funding under title I—for which $300 million is authorized—would be distributed immediately to areas with more than 2,000 AIDS cases. Thirteen cities nationwide would qualify. The remaining funds would be awarded to those areas on the basis of need, local investment, and other factors.

Title II—for which $300 million is also authorized—would provide funds to all States to develop networks or consortia of care to provide a continuum of care, provide early intervention and support services, provide outpatient and home health services, provide for the continuity of health insurance coverage, and provide life-prolonging therapeutics for people and families with AIDS and HIV disease.

States would be required to set aside at least 15 percent for health and support services for infants, children, women, and families with HIV disease in order to ensure that women and children, who have unique needs, have access to specialized services.

Finally, States that have a significant incidence of AIDS must distribute at least 50 percent of their funds directly to local entities in order to develop consortia of care.

IMPACT OF THE AIDS EPIDEMIC ON CALIFORNIA

Mr. President, the impact of the AIDS epidemic on California has been enormous. Nearly 25,000 cases of AIDS—20 percent of all the cases that have been reported since the epidemic began—have occurred in my State. San Francisco and Los Angeles each have seen 7,900 and 8,700 cases respectively of AIDS—more than half having resulted in death. In San Francisco, virtually everyone knows someone who has been affected by the epidemic; last year alone, more than one San Franciscan out of every thousand developed AIDS—the highest rate of any city. But other California cities have also been hit hard—San Diego, Oakland, San Jose and Sacramento.

This legislation, if fully appropriated, would mean a significant amount of funding for the people of California. Out of the initial $150 million in title I that is to be distributed within 60 days to cities with more than 2,000 AIDS cases, Los Angeles would receive $15.8 million and San Francisco would receive $23.5 million.

Those cities would also be eligible to receive additional assistance out of the supplemental $150 million under title I. Under title II, in which funding would be provided for the organization, development and operation of comprehensive systems of care for individuals and families with HIV disease, California would receive $53 million. This funding is intended to help many of the second wave cities, like San Diego.

Mr. President, I am especially pleased that this title incorporates the model for establishing comprehensive AIDS CARE services programs—HIV care consortia—that I sought to promote in legislation I introduced on the first day of Congress, S. 14. I based that legislation on the experiences of San Francisco, which has been a leader in developing a network of home and community-based services for people with AIDS.

This case-management-based model has resulted in dramatically lowered costs for AIDS care. Dramatically lower costs. More than the cost savings, however, community-based care was far preferrable to hospitalization because it allows individuals to remain at home with friends and families and, to the maximum extent possible, to function independently.

This legislation would help other communities to develop similar consortia to meet their individual needs.

Mr. President, as the number of AIDS cases continue to grow—and it will grow well into the 1990's, unfortunately—more and more communities and States will have difficulties responding to this crisis. Cities all over the country are reporting that without some relief, the entire public health system that serves all Americans is very seriously threatened.

We must take immediate and decisive action to alleviate the tremendous suffering and to prevent further tragedy. This legislation represents such bold action. It says to the American people that we care when there is great pain, and we respond compassionately. It represents the best hope for hundreds of thousands of Americans infected with the HIV. I urge all my colleagues in the Senate to support the enactment of this important legislation.

I am pleased that Senator HATCH, who has been a very effective leader in this effort, is now on the Senate floor. I trust that he at this time will speak. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Chair. I thank my good colleague from California, and I appreciate his kind remarks with regard to both the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and myself.

I do not know why these public health bills are always such difficult bills, but we have passed two major AIDS bills that have been Kennedy-Hatch bills as well, and I remember the tremendous difficulties of getting them to the floor and getting them enacted.

Now S. 2240, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990 has had some difficulty getting to the floor, and we will see what happens as far as getting it through. It makes so much common sense. We have faith in this body—and we have 64 cosponsors—that this bill should go through the Senate before the end of this week.

It is also important to note that this bill is named after Ryan White, as the distinguished Senator from California said. It is really a commemoration of one of the most courageous young men any of us have ever met—a courageous, uplifting, always optimistic, sweet, decent, kind young man. I pay tribute to his parents, too. I have only met his mother, as I recall, but the mother is a wonderful woman who is trying to do her best to spread the word that we must do everything to end this terrible malady that affects so many people throughout our country today.

One of the reasons bills, such as this, have some difficulties is because there are people afflicted with AIDS who have differing lifestyles from others. It is a mistake to condemn this bill or find fault with it based upon anybody's lifestyle, because this is not a bill that should be characterized in any way other than as a public health bill. AIDS is a public health epidemic and we must treat those who are suffering from it.

This is a bill trying to alleviate pain and suffering. This is a bill to help communities who treat not only individuals afflicted with AIDS and their immediate families. These communities are having a very difficult time handling these problems. And, in 13 major cities, there are more than 2,000 individuals who have AIDS.

I empathize with California, because California has more than its share of persons infected with AIDS. So no one should make any mistake about this. Today we are debating a public health bill. When it comes to the public health, we should get together and resolve difficulties and problems that exist. We worked very hard to do so, as we have on the prior two AIDS bills. There are issues involving AIDS that are very controversial and very difficult to handle. I do not think this particular bill is one of them.

Let me describe this legislation. In title I, this bill authorizes emergency assistance grants to cities that have reported 2,000 or more cases of AIDS as of March 1990.

Thirteen cities, Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Houston, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Newark, Philadelphia, San Francisco, San Juan, and Washington, DC, have reported at least 2,000 cumulative cases of AIDS as of that date.

In order to receive these title I funds, each of these cities must establish an HIV-health services planning council by December 1 of next year. The Secretary of HHS must distribute half of the grant funds to the eligible cities by March 1. The remaining grant money must be allocated in the form of supplemental grants to eligible cities. These cities are to use these particular assistance funds to further assist public or private nonprofit health facilities that serve a disproportionate share of low-income people with HIV disease.

The distinguished Senator from California has indicated that there are 1 million cases of AIDS. We know there are estimated that up to 1½ million people are infected with HIV. And, there may be more than that. But, this bill provides care for individuals who have AIDS. When we talk about who needs care, we talk about children—and this bill takes care of children—it takes care of mothers with AIDS and children, heterosexuals with AIDS and homosexuals with AIDS. We should not delineate among these people. These are human beings that are suffering from one of the most dreaded diseases in our society, a disease which we should find a care by spending the money and putting in the time, effort, and research into to end the needless suffering.

It is estimated that there are 2,200 children in this society who actually have AIDS. It is estimated that the number is at least 10 times as great—10 times—or somewhere in the neighborhood of 20,000 to 25,000 children who are infected with AIDS. How do they get AIDS? They get it through contaminated blood given to their mothers during birth, and they get it because some of their mothers are IV-drug abusers.

What are we going to do? Are we going to let these children die because their mothers are IV-drug abusers? Are we going to condemn the mothers to death who have contracted AIDS because during a difficult pregnancy, like Elizabeth Glaser? She had a transfusion of blood that was contaminated with AIDS and contracted AIDS. She has lost one child already and has a second child that she is trying to save, plus her own life? Mr. President, the answer is "No."

I have never seen more courageous people—Ryan White, Elizabeth Glaser, from California, and her husband, a wonderful human being, Paul Michael Glaser. Elizabeth has not just languished and complained and worried about the disease that has afflicted her and her children.

She has gone out and raised millions of dollars for pediatric AIDS research and treatment all over this country. The least we can do as a Government is help the kids like Ryan White; babies, unlike Ryan White, who will die before they even reach Ryan White's age; help them with this difficult burden and problem of AIDS.

Many of these IV drug-abusing mothers became so because of an uncaring and insensitive society. I do not want to compound that lack of care and insensitivity by not doing what we can do now. We must contain this epidemic which was worse a few years back when we passed other AIDS bills. Nevertheless today, AIDS is still of epidemic proportions.

Some say it has leveled off. If it has, it has been because we had the heart, compassion, guts, and ability to fight to enact those prior AIDS bills in spite of the fact that some people are irritated because of the nature of the problem.

What are we going to do? Are we going to ignore the Elizabeth Glasers, Ryan Whites? Are we going to ignore anybody, other IV drug abusers? Are we going to ignore a hemophiliac man with six children, a wonderful family man who because he needed blood transfusions, accidentally contracted AIDS, and not do what we can to alleviate that suffering?

What are we going to do? Just ignore these problems?

This bill, the CARE bill, makes an enlightened attempt to try and solve these problems for everybody, as it should.

I cannot go back to the origination of AIDS and spend a lot of time on that and blame anybody. All I can say is there is a tremendous problem that exists in our society today, one that it seems to me only the Federal Government, in conjunction with the State governments, can do anything about. That is what we are trying to do here. Yes, we will have to expend more money. Yes, I am a fiscal conservative, and I do not want to spend more money. However, the fact of the matter is that we already are, and people are dying, and we have to do it. And, if we do not, we will be penny wise and pound foolish. We will really have an outrageous, raging epidemic that will be unstoppable. So, let us pay the price now, and hopefully, reap the benefits of finding a cure, treating people compassionately, and end the tragic suffering.

Let me describe the bill: In title I the authorization is $300 million for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1993 through 1995.

Title II authorizes spending designed to improve HIV care in all States including rural urban areas. The Secretary of the HHS can use up to 10 percent of these funds to provide States with technical assistance and to establish a Special Projects of National Significance Program. Title II money is to be used by the States to establish HIV care consortia, to provide care to areas most affected by disease, to provide home care and other community-based services to people with HIV disease, to develop and support mechanisms, to ensure continued coverage for people with HIV disease, and provide HIV therapies for low-income people through primary care, and support services.

Now, I have to say that up to 15 percent of the title II grants go to support infants, children, women, and families. It is a set amount.

Let me repeat: There are over 2,200 reported cases, as I have said, of children with AIDS. This number does not include children infected with the HIV virus, and it is estimated that for every child reported to have AIDS, for every 1 there are 4 to 10 other unidentified cases.

Further, it is estimated that nearly 3,500 children will have AIDS by 1991, and approximately 20,000 will be HIV-infected. AIDS will be the fifth leading cause of death for all children in the next decade and a major cause of mental retardation.

In the adolescent age group, 500 cases of AIDS have been reported as of March 1990. Health care experts assert that this number masks the true incidence of HIV infection in teenagers. While the extent of infection in teenagers is unknown, the more than 200,000 estimated cases among young people in their twenties may serve as an indicator of the prevalence of the virus among adolescents.

We have heard from these children, teenagers, and their families about the need for a special emphasis on pediatric AIDS research and services, and to address the problem of the fragmentation of education, research, health care, and support services.

This legislation provides infants, children, women, and families with HIV disease access to help. The bill provides that a portion of the States' HIV care grants be used specifically to provide health care and support services for this particular population. It also includes a definition of the term "family centered care" that highlights the pivotal role of the family in care delivery.

Further, the bill provides that transitional care facilities would be eligible to receive HIV emergency relief grant funds, and that home health services to be funded by HIV care grants would include developmental and rehabilitation services.

Transitional care facilities are utilized by children with AIDS who no longer need hospital care but for whom foster care placement has not been finalized. Also, because some children with AIDS are now going home rather than living in the hospital, community and home care services will need to expand to meet the developmental and rehabilitative requirements of children with AIDS, many with mental retardation and motor function problems.

Mr. President, I strongly support the motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 2240, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act. The specific provisions of this particular bill, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990, are listed on this particular chart. As we said, the purpose is to provide emergency relief for those metropolitan statistical areas hardest hit. This means 2,000 cases, by AIDS public health assessment. The fund used to (a) support health care facilities serving a disproportionate share of low-income families; (b) to provide case managed community-based outpatient health care, including home health care and support services, for the purpose of reducing hospitalization and spending.

The bill authorizes $300 million for 1991 and 1992, and such sums as necessary in 1993, 1994, and 1995. I have talked about the comprehensive care programs under title II including the home health care programs, and, again, the funds are to be distributed to the States based on the number of AIDS cases and relative per capita income.

All States are required by this bill to set aside 15 percent of the funds for delivery of health and support services for infants, children, women, and families with HIV disease. So this authorizes for title II, $300 million in 1991, 1992, and such sums as may be necessary for 1993, 1994, and 1995.

Title III requires research to evaluate various models of AIDS care service delivery and financing system for the care of individuals with HIV disease. I support, strongly, this motion to proceed.

We have talked about the devastating health threat AIDS really is, and what it really means. I think we have to follow President Bush's advice when he stated: "In this Nation and decade, there is only one way to deal with an individual who is sick; with dignity, compassion and care, and confidentiality, and without discrimination."

Let me just talk a little bit about the crisis. According to the Centers for Disease Control, AIDS is not going away. Dr. James Curren, a physician at CDC, stated:

> Just as HIV infection progresses in an individual, it now has done so in society. It has matured. People are getting sick at a rapid pace.

It is predicted between 52,000 and 57,000 Americans will develop full-blown AIDS just this year. New cases of AIDS are up to 12 percent among homosexuals, up more than 20 percent among intravenous drug users, and up 38 percent among heterosexuals.

So, this bill does not threat this just a homosexual issue. Yes, it will help them. But it will also help the intravenous drug users who have AIDS. And yes, it is to help the heterosexuals who contracted AIDS.

It is to help everybody who has AIDS. That is what we should do. We should not restrict who it can and cannot help. Everyone is affected. And, it is believed that AIDS will spread among heterosexuals at about the same level as other sexually transmitted diseases, with some groups being more at risk than others.

The number of currently infected individuals is at least 1 million. At least half do not know they are infected, and only a few hundred thousand seek medical help. Of the more than 1 million infected with HIV, 3 to 5 percent are going to get sick each year, leading to a continued rise in AIDS cases and strain on the health care system.

The Centers for Disease Control has set up other testing programs to measure how far and how fast the AIDS virus is spreading. For example, it tested some 2 million newborns last year for HIV antibodies. The results indicate that between 4,500 and 6,000 HIV-infected women gave birth, resulting in between 1,500 and 2,000 infected babies, and that is happening every year. While we have made some strides in reducing the rate of transmission, the epidemic is not over.

Let me take a minute here to go over a chart on who actually has AIDS and where it is increasing. The AIDS increases in 1988 and 1989 in homosexual and bisexual males, it went up to 8 percent; transmissions through heterosexual contacts, have gone up 27 percent; transmission from mothers to newborns, up 17 percent; and women, up 11 percent. A lot of people are infected by this disease. And a lot of people are affected by this. We are just talking about the people infected. We are not talking about their spouses and families and children and neighbors and others who may not even know that AIDS is in their community.

The fact is we also know that minority communities have been specially hard hit. Let us first take the impact of AIDS on blacks. In the U.S. population—on the chart, the black bars represent men, the gray bars represent women—as a portion of the total U.S. population, blacks are 12 percent. CDC figures for 1981-89 show that 27 percent of black adults and adolescents have AIDS. Homosexual or bisexual men, non-IV drug abusers represent 16 percent of black men who have AIDS. IV drug abusers, who are heterosexual represent 48 percent of the black men with AIDS. In women, the IV drug abusers are 58 percent of the total black women with AIDS, and 53 percent have partners with HIV. In children with AIDS, 53 percent are black children. These are startling. So it is not just among homosexual and bisexual men and women. But even if it is, it is still a problem that ought to be handled.

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. HELMS. I will be glad not to ask my question now if he prefers. Would the Senator go back to one of his charts?

Mr. HATCH. This one?

Mr. HELMS. No. Let me see the other one. That one will do. Put that up and let me ask a question or two.

Does the Senator have any raw numbers. He says, in this instance the number of AIDS cases is up 17 percent, but does not say from how many cases we are talking about.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say this. Most of those who are infected have become infected through high-risk behavior. There is no question about that, either through IV drug abuse or promiscuous sex.

Mr. HELMS. The Senator does not know how many?

Mr. HATCH. I think I can give the Senator some idea. Sixty percent of infected adults are homosexual or bisexual.

Mr. HELMS. I agree.

Mr. HATCH. So, if we have 1 million people infected with AIDS, we might extrapolate about 600,000 of them.

Mr. HELMS. Where does the Senator get the 600,000?

Mr. HATCH. It might be a million and a half.

Mr. HELMS. It may be 100. Percentages do not mean a lot unless you know what the base is.

Mr. HATCH. The Centers for Disease Control have said 1 million people have HIV infection. That is their best estimate. I also heard the figure could be as high as a million and a half.

Mr. HELMS. The CDC itself has backed off in saying that the whole terrorizing statistical percentage presentations have been exaggerated; is that not correct?

Mr. HATCH. Not particularly. Be that as it may, whether it is 1 million or a million and a half or 100,000, it is too many. Most authorities think it is too many.

Mr. HELMS. One case is too many.

Mr. HATCH. That is right. One is too many.

Mr. HELMS. I will not interrupt the Senator. I will listen to him with great interest.

Mr. HATCH. Let me give these facts because I think they will help answer the Senator's question. Sixty percent of infected adults are either homosexual or bisexual, 21 percent of the adults are abusers, and another 7 percent are both homosexual and drug abusers. That is part of the 60 percent. That is a total of 88 percent of adult AIDS cases who have AIDS because of high-risk behavior.

Mr. HELMS. But we are still talking in percentages.

Mr. HATCH. That is right.

Mr. HELMS. I have some specific figures that I am going to allude to.

Let me say that I do agree with the Senator about the horror of this disease. But there is one thing about it. I have never heard once in this Chamber anybody say to the homosexuals and IV drug users, who make up over 90 percent of the AIDS population, "Stop what you are doing." Does the Senator realize that if they would stop what they are doing, there would not be one additional new case of AIDS in the United States of America other than those already in progress.

Mr. HATCH. I do not agree with that. There would not be additional cases among homosexuals, but there certainly would be other cases because of the prevalence of the disease right now.

Mr. HELMS. I think I prefaced it, that there would not be one new additional case of AIDS.

Mr. HATCH. Among homosexuals.

Mr. HELMS. Ryan White was an innocent victim of these people. And I think it is about time that this Senate addressed the moral issue. I have not heard one Senator, except listening to myself, who has said, look, this talk about who is causing this, who caused it from the very beginning?

Then I will talk some more about the statistics when I take the floor. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. HATCH. I thank my friend and colleague from North Carolina.

I do not agree with him that if all homosexuals quit having any homosexual contact that that would end the AIDS crisis. I do not think it would. In fact, I do not think it would make a dent. It would certainly help alleviate some of the AIDS problem. But we would still have the problem among heterosexuals, among children, among IV drug abusers and others. This is not just a homosexual problem.

Mr. CRANSTON. If the Senator will yield, would it not require cessation of all sexual activity and all use of blood to stop this?

Mr. HATCH. If you want to reduce the transmission of AIDS, it would require cessation of all sexual activity by everyone who has a potential infection, it would also require no more transfusions and, it would require no more needle-sharing. Now, we are making headway in the transfusion area by doing effective testing on blood. I do not want to have people panic-stricken by the discussion here today. But it is no secret that Ryan White and others—I mentioned Elizabeth Glaser; I mentioned my friend down in Texas, who is the father of six children and fine family man, who contracted AIDS as a hemophiliac, but who got AIDS because of a blood transfusion. Just because AIDS is transmitted through sexual contact, blood transfusions, and IV drug use, I do not think we should condemn those to death who have the disease. We should do what we can to get rid of this disease. I do not think we should condemn people to death, individuals like Mason White, the former president of the Hemophelia Foundation.

I do not think Ryan White should be condemned to death, or anybody else like Ryan. I do not think we should condemn to death Ariel or Elizabeth Glaser, whom I mentioned. I do not think we should condemn to death Linda Mason, a member of the President's Commission on AIDS, a wonderful human being who is doing everything she can to help people who, through no fault of their own, contracted AIDS.

I do not think we should condemn to death the Ray family, of Florida. And, we should not condemn to death over 1 million Americans who are HIV infected, which include at least 4,000 children and their mothers.

I would point out a couple of other things I think are important here. The impact of AIDS on Hispanics: As a percent of American population, they are 8 percent—that is going up dramatically as we know. But of Hispanic adult/adolescents, 15 percent have AIDS. Homosexual or bisexual men who are non-IV drug abusers represent 10 percent of the AIDS cases in Hispanic males, IV-drug abusing men, represent 32 percent of those Hispanic males who have AIDS.

In Hispanic women, IV drug users are 20 percent and those with AIDS because of partners who have HIV, 23 percent. Of the children with AIDS, 24 percent are Hispanic.

So the two largest minority communities in this country are hard hit with AIDS and it is not going to get better unless we face this problem. That is what this bill, I think, forces us to do.

Let me talk just a few minutes about the origin of the AIDS virus. The biggest unanswered question is—since the Senator from North Carolina has raised this issue—we have lots of hypotheses, but no particular facts. We can say, No. 1, the virus was not created in the laboratory. It is not a product of germ warfare.

One of the areas earliest hit was central Africa, an area where homosexuality and IV drug abuse play virtually no role in the transmission of the virus. Transmission is predominantly through heterosexual contact in those areas.

Transmission from monkeys is also one of the hypotheses. Viruses similar to the AIDS virus have been isolated from nonhuman primates. A theory has been put forward that early on humans first acquired AIDS as a variant of those viruses. It is not unique for such viruses to be transmitted to men from nonhuman primates.

In Africa, a likely scenario is that transmission occurred during hunting, with exposure to blood from the infected monkey. There is no evidence that sexual contact was the means for transmission in the early instance of the transmission of AIDS.

In Haiti, transmission during the early part of the epidemic occurred through bisexual or homosexual conduct and contact. However, transmission now occurs through the whole array of possibilities, including heterosexual contact, blood transfusion, as well as perinatal transmission from mother to child.

So there is no use saying that AIDS all comes from high-risk homosexual conduct.

This body has addressed other landmark AIDS bills. Let me describe how they have worked. Several of the health care programs authorized by the HOPE legislation, have been in operation for several years, and they have a track record of success.

First, we have low-income treatment assistance programs funding the AZT therapy program. AZT alleviates pain and other difficulties and problems that are suffered by HIV-infected people. The Low-Income Treatment Assistance Program has been providing life prolonging therapeutics to people with AIDS since September 1987.

Our strong commitment to biomedical research in AIDS has brought significant advances. Those advances mean AIDS is increasingly being viewed as a chronic, treatable illness.

By helping low-income individuals gain access to AIDS treatment, like AZT, we have been able to keep many HIV infected individuals working and earning, thus eliminating their need to turn to public assistance programs. Through grants to States, thousands of individuals who face both poverty and certain death have been kept, both alive and productive.

In addition, access to early treatment, like AZT, can help reduce utilization of hospitals. Currently, the added demand for services created by the HIV epidemic is taxing many inner city health care systems to the point of breakdown.

Finally, the most compelling incentive for individuals to step forward for HIV testing and counseling is the availability of proven medical interventions, like AZT, which can extend life and reduce suffering. This program has been extremely effective. It is not bureaucracy, it is life-sustaining drugs for individuals desperately in need.

I have here a letter signed by more than 40 Members of the Senate, affirming the critical nature of this program. In addition, I also have a letter signed by the vast majority of the State public health officers in this country, including Dr. Sheldon Elman of Utah. I am pleased that the availability of these drug therapies are being authorized as an eligible use of funds under the AIDS C.A.R.E. block grant of S. 2240.

Home care is authorized in HOPE. As part of the omnibus AIDS package passed by the 100th Congress, Senator KENNEDY and I and a lot of others, including the distinguished Senator from California, worked hard to get that bill through. The Senate unanimously endorsed the delivery of home and community-based care for people with AIDS.

As the Labor and Human Resources Committee has heard during the 2 years of hearings, home care is not only more humane, it is more cost-effective. So, this bill emphasizes home care. And, in the end it really will save us money as well as help to treat those infected with AIDS.

In many areas of the country, an individual can receive home health care for at least a week for less than the cost of a single day in acute care. In addition, home care allows individuals with AIDS to be with family members rather than languishing in expensive hospital beds, isolated from traditional support systems.

The home care authorization in the HOPE legislation will sunset in 1990. So, I am very pleased that we are now about to reauthorize this critical important program that is part of the AIDS C.A.R.E. State Grant Program.

We also authorized AIDS demonstration programs. The AIDS service demonstration projects have been in operation through the Health Resources and Service Administration, HRSA, for 4 years. Currently, HRSA operates adult AIDS C.A.R.E. demonstration projects in 26 cities and pediatrics AIDS C.A.R.E. demonstration projects in 13 cities in this country.

In a recent speech, President Bush stated:

> From Seattle to Boston, from Dallas to Detroit, Federal grants have helped coordinate the efforts of care providers, business and community organizations to set priorities and pool resources to meet the treatment needs of the people with AIDS.

These demonstration projects have built partnerships between the public and private sectors and assisted in both the development and coordination of essential health and support services.

In two recent evaluations, one by the GAO and one by Systemetrics, these projects were applauded for filling critically important gaps in necessary services. Both reports recommended that these programs be expanded to other areas of the country as the AIDS epidemic continues to geographically diversify.

This has also been a clear message from both the Presidential Commission on the HIV Epidemic chaired by Admiral Watkins and the National Commission on AIDS. It is time now to take action, from what we have learned from these projects. I am pleased that the community-based consortia of care for individuals, children, and families has also been incorporated into this legislation.

So, Mr. President, much of what we are trying to do in S. 2240 here now is not entirely new. Some have been in operation and have been proven effective. What we are doing here is merely increasing the flexibility granted to the 50 States so that each can tailor programs designed to meet their needs, their public health special needs.

This action is humane, it is compassionate, and it is fiscally responsible. I think it is time we handle these matters in this type of a way.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER assumed the chair.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am hopeful that our colleagues will support Senator KENNEDY and me and the 62 other cosponsors—there are 4 of us—in moving forward with this legislation. This bill actually emphasizes aspects of the AIDS epidemic that no other Federal initiative has addressed in such a comprehensive manner. The bill targets funds directly for pediatric AIDS patients. For children who through no fault of their own, no high risk conduct on their part, have contracted AIDS.

We are talking here about children who contracted this deadly virus through no fault of their own. We are talking about children who have AIDS because they received HIV-infected blood, or because their mothers were carriers of the virus. We are talking about children like Ryan White and Ariel Glaser. We are talking about the 2,200 children who have contracted AIDS and the over 1,000 children who have died from this dreadful disease.

This bill also begins to recognize that the AIDS epidemic has not escaped rural America. When we think of AIDS, we may see images of New York City, or Los Angeles, or San Francisco. But the fact is that AIDS is in the rural North, it is in the rural South, rural Midwest, in the rural New England and rural West of the United States, and every other part of the country.

This bill also comes to grips with the adverse ramifications that the disease has on our Nation's health care system. Health care providers, particularly urban hospitals, have been stretched to the limit to provide treatment for AIDS patients who are largely low income.

Mr. President, there is not a single Member of the Senate, Republican or Democrat, who would not jump into the water to save someone who is drowning. I do not think any of us would fail to get in there and do our best. We would do it without first asking how he or she happened to fall into the water or happened to lose their confidence to swim. We would jump in and help.

This bill is not a debate about factors causing individuals to contract AIDS. It is not a debate about the efficacy of education programs. This bill is simply an effort by those of us in this body who want to do something to heal all the victims of this terrible disease. It is a terrible, debilitating, worrisome, outrageous epidemic disease. This bill provides humane care.

Mr. President, I do not want to condemn to death any person who has AIDS in this country. I do not care, in all honesty, what it was that caused them to contract the disease in the sense of wanting to help. I just want to help them.

It is fair to say that AIDS is a flagrant, widespread epidemic of high-risk conduct, in many of the people. But let me tell my colleagues, everybody in our society from time to time makes mistakes. Many people have emotional illness, or mental diseases, many people have not had the privileges that many of the rest of us have had. Many of them have not had parents that have taught them, as I have to say my parents have taught me, and as I hope Elaine and I have taught our children.

Oddly enough, any of us who may stand by and criticize better look at ourselves. We better look into our own hearts and our own minds and our own lives and if anybody, even in this body, does that, they are going to have to conclude that there are lots of things they can improve upon. We have some very wonderful people in this body, but we all make mistakes. We all do things that are wrong. We all have problems. And, I would hate to think that if people anywhere in this world or this country had diseases, and we could maybe find a cure, that we would not take the time or the effort or spend the money or do the things necessary to get a cure.

Should we just let the disease run rampant because we do not agree with the morals of certain people? For one, I, do not. I do not condone homosexual activity, but that does not have a thing to do with this bill. AIDS is a public health problem. It is hurting our country and hurting people who really should never have had to come in contact with this disease. It is hurting children, and mothers, and families and a lot of people.

Mr. President, I have only been in this world 56 years, but I can say that I know there are a lot of good people who have made mistakes in their lifetime. There are a lot of good people who are infected with the AIDS virus who make contributions to our society. We should provide them compassion and care.

The reason this Nation is great is because of diversity, because of our great laws, because of the great freedoms that we have. This Nation is great because of the rights that we protect, because of so many things that this body does, but also because we are a compassionate Nation, because we look at problems and we do not always worry about how they started. We worry about what to do to end them. That is why this Nation is so great.

I think we all need to keep that in mind as we work on bills like this. It is not pleasant to work on difficult public health issues, but it is always pleasant for me to work on them when we find a way for solutions and have ways to lead to alleviation of the problems.

I hope that all of my colleagues will look at this bill as another step in the way of resolving the difficulties surrounding AIDS. Let us not look so much at how AIDS started, because nobody can really define that, nobody really knows. Regardless, there are people who are infected by this dreaded disease that need treatment. This bill offers that.

I am proud of the two prior bills we have passed because they have made a difference in the lives of people who are effected by AIDS, and that includes many who do not have the virus. It includes family members who have to live with this problem, and it includes you and me as we interrelate with people in our society.

Mr. President, this is an important bill, and it is in the best interest of this country to pass it.

I think that is why we have such overwhelming cosponsorship of it. I hope that our colleagues will vote to invoke cloture tomorrow, and I hope we can go forward on the bill.

If there are amendments which will improve it, I will be the first to try to push to have those amendments adopted. If there are differences that have to be resolved, I know that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and others and myself will do our very best to resolve those difficulties.

Mr. President, it is time to move forward. We are running out of time on this issue. I hope that all of our colleagues will help us to do so.

With that, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this bill is going to pass the same Senate that allowed the Labor/HHS appropriations conference to strip out the amendment which would have let the wife of an AIDS-infected husband know that her husband had AIDS. I have talked about this a number of times on the floor, and I think it bears repeating before we talk about this legislation.

A couple of years ago I received a call from a young woman who was employed in the House of Representatives. She worked for a Congressman. She said, "Senator, I need to talk with you and I need to bring my mother to see you."

I said "Of course." I had not met the young woman, nor her mother, but they came in the following day, two lovely ladies, and we sat, the three of us, for a couple of minutes engaging in the customary pleasantries. Then I asked the young woman, "How may I help you? She said, "I'm going to let my mother tell you."

Tears came to the eyes of the mother, and she said, "Senator, I don't know how to begin." I said, "Just begin somewhere. What is the problem?" She said, "Well, I have AIDS." Then she began to recite the circumstances by which she developed the AIDS disease. Her husband, who was a prominent attorney in a city in the State of Michigan, to be specific, was a homosexual, and he developed AIDS. His doctor told him he had it. The husband refused to permit the doctor to advise the man's wife that he had it. That is how that lady became a victim of AIDS.

A few months ago ABC News did a report on this young lady. Sam Donaldson interviewed her. As the interview progressed he became increasingly amazed that any government could permit this type of horror to go on in the name of civil rights. Well, Sam, I'm horrified also.

Now, let us examine some aspects of this bill. And I say again that the freight train is rolling. It is going to pass. But at this moment the Senate, once again, is in the process of beginning the consideration of an AIDS spending bill. The number is S. 2240, and it has the name, the "Comprehensive AIDS Resource Emergency Act."

Just about everything that goes through this Chamber and the House of Representatives these days bears the word emergency in its title.

Mr. President, President Bush has already called for $3.5 billion in AIDS spending for next year—$3.5 billion—and now in this Chamber we are preparing to consider a 5-year authorization for another $2.9 billion—$2.9 billion—on top of what the President has requested. That is $600 million for next year, $600 million for the year after that, and then the language says whatever may be necessary after that.

It is interesting to see the orchestration of support for this bill. The way the legislative process works is that a great many Senators do not give a great deal of thought to what they agree to cosponsors; there are too many things rolling back and forth in committee and on the floor. But what we have is another legislative flagship for the homosexual segment of the AIDS lobby and its apologists in and out of Congress, and in and out of the major news media. Being whipped up today is a hysteria bordering on terror by the repeated proclamation, and we have heard it this afternoon, that AIDS is everwhere and that we are on the verge of another bubonic plague.

I think one of the saddest things is that the taxpayers' money is being proposed to be used to proselytize a dangerous lifestyle. In the meantime, millions of other Americans, gravely ill with Alzheimer's or cancer or diabetes—go down the litany of diseases—are being cast aside, along with common sense, in the headlong rush to feed the appetite of a movement which will not be satisfied until the social fabric of this Nation is irreparably changed. I invite any historian sometime in the future to go back through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and see how many times there has been even a comment on the floor about the role that immortality has played in this matter. But that is neither here nor there.

This legislation, S. 2240, is dedicated to the memory of Ryan White, and his name will be invoked over and over again, as it has already been this afternoon.

Let me say at the outset that I admired this little boy who died of AIDS on Palm Sunday of this year. He was a gutsy little fellow. The tragedy suffered by Ryan White and his family was and is very real. For Senators who have not looked beyond the People magazine headlines, let us review just a little bit the story of Ryan White and the tragedy that befell him.

Ryan was a young hemophiliac who contracted AIDS from a tainted blood transfusion in 1984. He was immediately ostracized in school because the people in his community had been led to believe that AIDS is readily transmissible by even the smallest of children. Ryan then spent 5½ years with his short life trying to enlighten the public about his own horrifying affliction.

He told Americans that you do not get AIDS by chewing on pencils or saying, "hello" to somebody in school. He told us that children have been the unknowing victims of the madness which brought this disease to Ryan White and America's young people.

Mr. President, no compassionate American can fail to be moved by the Ryan White story. He deserves an honest remembrance. But the American people deserve to have an honest assessment of those who have so callously used the suffering of Ryan White to promote their political agenda.

Think back just a moment. Just before Ryan White died, the Hollywood and media crowd were rushing to Ryan's home. They knew the television cameras would be there. Most of these people had no more credibility in issuing their medical declarations about AIDS than you and I do. Yet, there they were bidding for the time and attention of the TV cameras, helping to promote the type of ignorance and misinformation which has elevated AIDS into a political issue totally out of proportion to its medical impact on the people of this country.

Let men be candid. The homosexual lobby of America knew the Ryan White story was too good to pass up. Therefore, his struggle and his death could be used to frighten the American public into believing that AIDS is waiting to happen to everyone, even if they do not engage in illegal and/or immoral activity.

So Ryan White was portrayed as a typical victim, not the exception that he was. And the AIDS propaganda machine churned out the demand for special treatment and privileges for the kind of people who caused Ryan White's death.

There are many in this body who dare not challenge the homosexual AIDS lobby or even attempt to discuss the real tragedy of the death of Ryan White. Why? Because the rules of debate for this public health crisis are different from every other disease this Nation has ever encounted.

In the AIDS debate, Members of the U.S. Senate operate under a rule which says certain facts and certain issues must be left unmentioned and, therefore, ignored. And if that fails, then try to put down any Senator who attempts to discuss this aspect of it. We cannot talk about the kind of behavior that puts even young children like Ryan White at risk.

This AIDS lobby and its allies in the media and in the political arena are unwilling to say that Ryan White would never have contracted AIDS had it not been for the perverted conduct of people who are demanding respectability. Of course, under the orchestrated rules of the AIDS debate, if anybody talks about the role that homosexuals and drug users play in the epidemic, he or she might as well expect to be condemned as a homophobic.

I frankly do not care whether this Senator is called a homophobic. This Senator cares that AIDS activists are successfully demanding more and more of the taxpapers' money for specific research on AIDS—out of all proportion to the medical threat posed by the disease—and that AIDS patients are on the verge of being given rights which no other Americans enjoy.

Despite all of this, children continue to die because of the focus of most legislation is on the impact that AIDS has on homosexual men and now the drug user.

The real tragedy is that the public health system of this Nation has been ripped apart, and that the death of people like young Ryan White is being exploited to promote a political agenda that will put more innocent children like Ryan White at risk.

As Tony Snow wrote in the April 13 edition of the Washington Times, "That's sick."

Before turning to the statistics of where we have been heading in this epidemic, let me say that if IV drug users and homosexual men would stop their activities today there would never be another case of AIDS in this country other than the ones already in progress. For the information of Senators 94 percent of all cases of AIDS are to be found in homosexual and bisexual men, or IV drug users.

Statistics are being bandied around. I attempted to question my good friend from Utah [Mr. HATCH]. He talked about percentages. I wanted him to talk about the number of cases numerically. It is true, according to the best information available to me, that AIDS has killed 78,000 people since 1980; 78,000 in 10 years. That is bad. That is a tragedy. Each one is an individual tragedy, the same as it is a tragedy when anybody dies of any disease.

The Centers for Disease Control pointed out in its estimate of the impact of the disease that the extent of the problem is far less than was originally predicted in the early 1980's. Almost every day, certainly every week, in the 1980's, we had a new projection of how many cases there were going to be. We will hear that today and tomorrow, and perhaps in the succeeding days. But the estimates by the Centers for Disease Control show that despite all of the dire warnings there has not been an outbreak of AIDS among heterosexuals. In fact, Dr. Rand Stonebrunner, director of AIDS research at the New York City Department of Health, in reporting the discovery of seven cases of AIDS, seven, among heterosexual men in New York City, emphasized his belief that six out of seven lied about their sexual and drug abuse history.

That means that only seven purported cases of strictly heterosexual AIDS—not cases of AIDS passed because of high-risk practices—have been found in all of New York City, among the thousands who have been infected with AIDS; and six of the seven are in doubt, because Dr. Stonebrunner believes that the six lied.

Let me make one thing perfectly clear, as the expression used to go in this city. I do not claim to be a research scientist, but I can understand that the incidents of AIDS have gone down due to the fact that the people among which it thrives have already been saturated by the disease.

Nevertheless, the Federal Government spent $1.5 billion on AIDS research in fiscal year 1990, while overall Federal AIDS spending was $3 billion. As I mentioned earlier, President Bush has asked for $3.5 billion in AIDS spending in fiscal year 1991.

Senators KENNEDY and HATCH now seek to authorize another $600 million on top of that $3.5 billion. What about the possibility, if not the probability, that this is another case endemic to Washington, where solutions are found or hoped to be found by throwing money at them.

Let us look at other diseases. Heart disease, which is the No. 1 killer in the United States, will claim between 760,000 and 950,000 lives in 1990. Yet, heart disease research has been funded at only $649 million. Cancer, I heard on the radio this morning in a news report, is expected to take the lives of 518,000 people this year, but cancer research has been funded at only $1.6 billion.

Alzheimer's disease afflicts 4 million Americans and will kill over 100,000 in 1990. Yet, Alzheimer's funding stands at only $148 million, and that happens to be less than they spend on AIDS education materials and pamphlets, detailing what? So-called safe sex.

I do not know how other Senators feel, Mr. President, but spending the taxpayers' money to promote safe sex seems to me to be an excuse for promoting a dangerously promiscuous lifestyle.

Diabetes: This afflicts 11 million Americans and kills an estimated 36,000 of them each year. Yet, diabetes research received Federal funding of only $267 million for 1990.

Look at it another way, statistically, if you wish. According to the Public Health Service, people with AIDS represent one-tenth of 1 percent of the patients in this country. On the other hand, it may be of interest that 86 percent of the patients in our hospitals and clinics suffer from mental illness in one form or another.

The Centers for Disease Control states that on a yearly average, 10,000 people with AIDS have lost their lives since 1980—10,000 per year. The authors of S. 2240 and all of the cosponsors propose to spend more than $4 billion extra on AIDS programs in fiscal year 1991. To be more precise, the Federal Government spends an average of $10,000 on research for each AIDS patient, while by contrast, cancer patients receive only $185 per patient on research. Those with mental illness receive, would you believe it, $7 per patient, in federally sponsored research.

A lot of people are waking up. Time magazine is not noted for being the most conservative journal in this country, but Time has pointed out the dangers of throwing more and more money at the AIDS problem. I have in hand a copy of the January 22 edition of Time magazine, which included a detailed report entitled "The AIDS Political Machine."

I commend Time magazine for its candor. I know how many rough letters they got from irate readers who are a part of the homosexual community. But the magazine described the activities of a well-oiled special-interest lobby which has altered the way the public health apparatus of the U.S. Government conducts business by raising the legitimate question of whether or not AIDS activists have distorted the national medical response to the disease.

That is the reason I interjected briefly when my good friend from Utah was speaking, to inquire if he would talk in specific numbers of patients, rather than percentage increases, because they will not tell the same story. The dollar figures used for AIDS research represent more than excessive Federal attention to the disease, in my judgment, because money and talent and time are being diverted from other projects in research to AIDS research.

Because AIDS research is so singularly focused, the likelihood of spinoff medical discoveries are remote, according to scientists. Dr. David Korn, who is dean of the Stanford Medical School, said, in Time magazine:

> When you target money too narrowly, you exclude other areas that may prove very fruitful.

Of course, he is right.

Mr. President, the AIDS lobby has pressured Government to discard proven public health measures which have successfully controlled diseases in the past. But now we have the spectacle of these activists demanding quick Federal funding and the approval of untried miracle cures, thereby leaving the door open for quacks and snake oil salesmen.

Approval of AZT was rammed through the FDA system in less than 4 months time. James Todd, of the American Medical Association, noticed, and I quote him: "Penicillin could not get through that fast." The average drug approval time, by the way, Mr. President, is more than 2 years.

So that is the reason I am on my feet today, not because there is even the remotest chance of having the Senate consider all of the facts in this matter. I have heard in the last 5 years various Senators stand up and rail against proposals that a wife be informed that her husband has AIDS. Why? Among other things, it is only common decency that she at least be given a fighting chance to avoid the disease.

I have heard Senators advocate providing drug addicts with needles. I have heard them advocate allowing foreigners with HIV or worse to come into this country with no questions asked. All of this funnels down into one question: How many more Ryan Whites will have to die before we come to our senses? Sure we are all sorry for anybody who is sick with anything, no matter how he or she got it. But that does not require us to throw common sense to the winds.

I have already addressed the cynical exploitation of Ryan White to mask the political movement behind such legislation as we are considering. I have discussed the fact that research on other diseases is drying up as more and more resources of the Federal Government are being used to target AIDS and at a time when there is almost mayhem on Pennsylvania Avenue and on Capitol Hill about some way to control Federal spending. The old process of throwing money at a problem is really with us now.

But let me mention, and I will be as brief as I can, some other troubling aspects of this legislation.

The bill has a section which says that no less than 15 percent of the funds authorized will go to the treatment of those with pediatric AIDS to families and women. Let me tell you something, Mr. President, I certainly agree that that should be the focus of this legislation. So why only 15 percent? How did they reach the 15 percent? What about the other 85 percent?

But if you read a little further down the text of S. 2240, you will find that this legislation allows the States to waive—waive—the money for pediatric-specific programs. Why is that in there? Does that not make the pretense of dedication to Ryan White just a little bit disingenuous? I wonder how many Senators will give that a thought?

The only legislation the Senate should be considering is a proposal to save innocent children and other innocent people from AIDS. That is all. Incidentally, I might add as a footnote, the National Institutes of Health spent $139 million last year on pediatric AIDS. This so-called Comprehensive AIDS Emergency Act, S. 2240, proposes to spend $2.9 billion over the next 5 years primarily—and nobody talked much about this—primarily in 13 cities of this country. They happen to be where the largest number of AIDS cases have been found.

One tactic in getting support for this bill was to encourage the 50 States to declare that they are undergoing an AIDS crisis. See how these words just creep into legislation? Emergency; we have the dire emergency supplemental appropriation bill; we have this emergency bill. Everything is an emergency, and everything involves the use of taxpayers' money, and I think the $3 trillion debt that the coming generations will have to shoulder is testimony to the fact that you do not solve problems by throwing money at them. But that is exactly what this bill proposes to do.

Obviously this business of using States and percentages—not figures, not statistics—percentages—you will notice the charts there, they are all in percentages, so when you begin to look at the fine print, and I am inclined to do that from time to time at 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning when I am trying to figure out where a piece of legislation is going, I find some interesting things. This tactic of encouraging the States to declare that they are undergoing an AIDS crisis as a prerequisite to their receiving funds, well, it has a bad odor to me. This, of course, orchestrates and promotes the AIDS hysteria.

I was looking at title II of S. 2240, the bill we are talking about. It mandates the formation of AIDS councils in all States, with any, any, rural outbreak of AIDS. And as an attempted justification, the authors of the bill have emphasized, for example, and this is just one example that the State of North Dakota has experienced a 75-percent increase in rural AIDS in the past 10 years. Think of it, a 75-percent increase. Then you look at the fine print, Mr. President, and you find that in 10 years North Dakota has had precisely 18 cases of AIDS, and 13 of the 18 had been reported at the beginning of the 1980's. The same scenario is played out in South Dakota, South Carolina, Wyoming, Idaho, North Carolina, right on down the line.

You can prove anything with figures, particularly percentage figures. Obviously, this has the appearance of a shell game, and it is going to be played out in every State and rural area because they want that free money from Washington. The bottom line is that Greensboro, NC, or Indianapolis, IN, or rural Texas will never have an AIDS epidemic or outbreak such as New York and San Francisco. But the homosexual AIDS lobby does not want the American people to know that.

I listened to my friend from Utah, for whom I have the highest respect and affection. He made an emotional appeal—he is good at it—as he concluded his remarks. He even bordered on acknowledging, insofar as I can recall for the first time, that the cause of this problem is sodomy.

Now, somewhere in the archives of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, GA, is a document, as I understand it, describing how AIDS came to this country. You call down there now, and they say we do not know where it is. But there have been many allusions to that report in the archives of the Centers for Disease Control.

The story I have been told is that a Canadian airline attendant, male, caught the disease overseas. He came to the United States. He stopped at various places. And what do you know? Everywhere, it was documented, that he stopped and spent the night while an airline attendant, that is where AIDS popped up rather promptly. He was known at CDC as Patient Zero and the early discovery of HIV was traced to him.

Now, to be sure, you cannot go back and say, well, that is tough, that should not have happened. But I think it was Patrick Henry who said he had no light to guide him except the light of the past. But one thing is sure, as far as I am concerned: AIDS is, always has been, and always will be a behavioral epidemic confined almost exclusively to homosexual and bisexual men and to IV drug abusers.

The exhortation that this is everyone's disease will not, and does not, survive serious scientific scrutiny. It is, to be blunt about it, a hoax. And, as I tried to say earlier, if the homosexuals and IV drug abusers would stop their abnormal practices this date, there will never be another new case of AIDS in the United States except those that are in progress as a result of previous conduct.

So I return to the political agenda which keeps the AIDS machine rolling along, consuming vast sums of the American taxpayers' money and—and—destroying traditional values as it goes steamrolling along. That is what is at stake.

AIDS is rapidly on its way to becoming a declared handicap for the purpose of establishing a legalistic definition of discrimination. The Americans With Disabilities Act, which passed the Senate back in September, would extend civil rights protections to HIV carriers, even though more than 90 percent of them caught the disease through illegal, unlawful, immoral conduct.

Now, I am very sorry about this. I am a Baptist and I was taught a long time ago to hate the sin and try to love the sinner. But some of these people make the latter part of that tough.

The citizens of America are, of course, compassionate people. They have seen their Government make one concession after another to the AIDS lobby. What originally began as the measured response to a public health emergency has become a weapon for destroying America's Judeo-Christian value system.

Let me tell you something, Mr. President—and I do not hesitate to say it at all—the pratices of homosexual men and IV drug users is still revolting, no matter what coloration is put on it by legislation passed by this Senate or this Congress. But I will tell you this, I seriously doubt that the majority of Americans look with favor on this. I think the polls are pretty clear. And, I also doubt that the majority of Americans would approve this legislation if there were any way for them to know and understand the full implication of S. 2240.

That is about it, Mr. President. As I said at the outset, this is another one that I will not be on the prevailing side.

In conclusion, I ask unanimous consent that an article entitled, "The AIDS Political Machine," from the January 22, 1990, edition of Time magazine, and an editorial "Gay Rights Advancing Under the Banner of AIDS," by Mr. Charles Muggeridge, from the September 21, 1989, edition of the Wall Street Journal, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Time magazine, Jan. 22, 1990]

THE AIDS POLITICAL MACHINE

(By Dick Thompson)

Good news rarely kicks up controversy, but this may be an exception. A report soon to be published by the national Centers for Disease Control estimates that the size of the AIDS epidemic is significantly smaller than originally projected. Since 1986, the Federal Government has claimed that as many as 1.5 million Americans were infected with the incurable virus. The number soon to be announced will be around 1 million, and some Government officials suggest that the count could be as low as 650,000. Also, the rate of new infections in New York City, Los Angeles and San Francisco is at last slowing. "In retrospect," says the CDC report, those earlier estimates, "based upon limited data available at the time, were to high."

Why the controversy? Because AIDS lobbyists insisted all along that the scope of the epidemic was being understated. By doing so, AIDS activists overcame conservative resistance and rightfully elevated the fight against the disease to the top of the nation's public-health agenda. Says June Osborn, chair of the National AIDS Commission: "We should not be content or comfortable. The national response to an out-of-control epidemic has been frighteningly modest."

But now that the picture is brightening statistically after a decade of gloom, many research scientists and health-policy analysts question whether the changes brought by AIDS activists harm basic research, the public health and perhaps even those who are at risk of acquiring the virus. Says Joel Hay, a health economist and senior research fellow at the Hoover Institution: "Things are out of whack." Three areas merit special concern:

A swollen budget. After an initially sluggish response by the Reagan Administration, Washington has pumped current AIDS funding to a robust $1.6 billion. That is slightly more than the budget for cancer ($1.5 billion), which killed more than twelve times as many people last year (500,000, compared with 40,000 who died from AIDS). And it is far greater than the $610 million budget for heart disease, the nation's top killer. "It's wrong to spend more money on a disease that will never kill more than 35,000 to 40,000 people a year on a disease that will kill a half-million every year," says Michael Fumento, author of the recently published Myth of Heterosexual AIDS.

Cures first, prevention second. The most effective means of controlling a contagious epidemic is through prevention. But the AIDS movement has emphasized the rapid development of treatments for AIDS victims. Says Michael Nesline of the activist group ACT UP: "We're fighting for people for whom the question of prevention is a moot point." In this regard, the movement found allies in conservative politicians who were unable to support "safe sex" education but saw AIDS research as politically neutral.

Consequently, spending on drug development has outpaced funding of prevention programs 2 to 1. Some public-health officials fear that the concentration on cures has been at the expense of educating Americans who remain at risk—primarily blacks and Hispanics of the inner cities of the East. Thus the epidemic in those ghettos is likely to grow. Says Samuel Thier, president of the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine: "We should have known that focusing largely on treatment after infection would not be an adequate long-range strategy."

The emphasis on AIDS research is also beginning to draw fire from scientists, whose non-AIDS projects have been squeezed for funds. Traditionally, major health efforts have fueled broad basic-research programs. But "AIDS money is targeted," observes Donald Fredrickson, former director of the National Institutes of Health. The narrow focus reduces the chances of spin-off discoveries for other diseases. Says David Korn, dean of the Stanford School of Medicine: "The course of discovery in biology is not linear. When you target money too narrowly, you exclude other areas that may prove to be very fruitful."

Lowered standards for drug approval. Almost as soon as drugs are shown to be somewhat effective, the AIDS lobby pushes for their immediate release. To overcome bureaucratic delays, some activists have launched so-called underground testing of drugs that have been of questionable value. The lobby's greatest influence has been at the Food and Drug Administration. AZT, for example, won Government approval in less than four months, compared with a current average of two years. Says James Todd, senior vice president of the American Medical Association: "It's distorted all the traditional principles for drug approval. Penicillin couldn't get through that fast." While some modification of FDA regulations may have been necessary, many people believe that the changes being made at the FDA to accommodate AIDS activists threaten a system that has protected the public from quack cures, like the apricot pits once touted for cancer sufferers.

The AIDS lobby has been so successful because early on it grasped a fundamental principle of American research. Explains Philip Lee, University of California at San Francisco professor of social medicine: "The system is a political process." By using Washington connections, media savvy and even civil disobedience, the AIDS movement may have become the most effective disease lobby in the history of medicine. Says Jeff Levi, a former executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force: "Long after AIDS is gone, we will have changed how research is done in this country."

Certainly every disease has its lobby. But AIDS is the first deadly epidemic to strike an already organized political constituency, the gay-rights movement, which began with a fundamental distrust of mainstream society, including organized medicine. The AIDS lobby, says Columbia law school professor Harold Edgar, "is independent of and really indifferent to the interests of the scientific establishment." AIDS lobbyists have often been motivated by fear and anger about public indifference, or even hostility, to their terrible problem. AIDS activism, "has to do with racism and homophobia," say Nesline of ACT UP. "What's new is that queers and junkies started doing something about it."

Translating the grass-roots movement into legislation was the work of the National Organizations Responding to AIDS. Representing 150 health and civil rights groups, NORA orchestrates long-range strategy and shepherds all AIDS legislation through Congress. "The coalition provides an opportunity for groups to have more influence than their size would dictate," says William Bailey, federal-policy officer for the American Psychological Association and a founding member of NORA. "When you have 40 to 60 groups saying the same thing, that's a very compelling statement."

The efficient AIDS lobby towers over lobbies for other diseases that strike just as many people. NORA executive director Jean McGuire acknowledges, "The unlevelness of the playing field is a result of the gay community's initial articulateness and money." That has come to mean that AIDS has a far greater impact than the number of victims would dictate.

If the current response to AIDS is skewed, it may be because so much effort was required to overcome the inertia of the Reagan years. Congress found every Reagan AIDS budget inadequate and increased funding year after year. The AIDS political machine is running as efficiently as ever, and any modifications of the nation's AIDS response will require a more dispassionate approach among activists.

Still, AIDS remains a significant problem worldwide. And while researchers have made tremendous strides in drug development, these drugs are expensive and more difficult to use elsewhere, especially in the hardest-hit areas of Africa. The challenge to American researchers now is to find not only better treatments but also treatments that are low in cost and easy to use.

Fundamentally, the problem is that scientists are better at making pleas for more money than at setting priorities for research. "There's a lot more to do [in science] than money to do it with," says Stanford's Korn. "Without priorities, we're left to well-organized lobbyists. That's the American way." Bumper stickers and demonstrations may be acceptable in picking a mayor, but the political process is proving to be a mixed blessing when confronting an epidemic.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 21, 1989]

GAY RIGHTS ADVANCING UNDER BANNER OF AIDS

(By Charles Muggeridge)

Rep. Barney Frank's personal difficulties have caused this society once again to consider the limits of its tolerance for public expression of homosexuality. Barriers to such behavior seem to be falling with gathering speed.

Twenty years ago this summer, New York City police battled with patrons outside a gay bar named the Stonewall, and only the Village Voice reported it prominently. In April, the mayor of New York renamed the site where the riot occurred, "Stonewall Place." But despite the claims often made for it, the Gay Liberation movement that began after the riot scored few advances until recently.

Statutes and ordinances prohibiting discrimination on the basis of "sexual orientation" or "sexual preference" are still comparatively rare. San Francisco was the first jurisdiction to adopt one, in 1972.

Los Angeles enacted a similar law in 1979, as did Austin, Tex., in 1982. Berkeley, West Hollywood, Sacramento and Santa Cruz, Calif., all adopted gay rights laws early. But the slow amelioration of the legal status of homosexuals has dramatically accelerated since 1986—and credit for the acceleration must go to the thing that gay activists feared would hamper their progress most: the AIDS virus. As Cleve Jones, a gay lobbyist from San Francisco, told the fifth annual conference on AIDS research—which met in Montreal in April—"In spite of the horror of the epidemic, in many ways the cause was advanced by it."

The New York City Council approved an ordinance forbidding discrimination against homosexuals in employment, housing and access to public accommodations in March 1986. The Canadian province of Ontario did the same later that year. Gay city employees in Hartford, Conn., were extended special protections in May 1988.

Last January, Colorado Gov. Roy Romer issued an executive order adding "persons perceived to be at risk from HIV infection" to the list of persons protected against discrimination by the state's human rights code. A bill to add sexual preference to the list of complaints that can be brought to the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination has reached third reading in the state legislature. Montgomery County, Md., approved special legislation to protect gays and lesbians against hate crimes Wednesday.

AIDS has come to be considered a handicap for anti-discrimination purposes in almost every jurisdiction. The federal handicapped rights bill that passed the Senate in August and that is now before the House would extend protection to AIDS victims. Gay activists hailed the legislation as a milestone in their struggle for equality. AIDS sufferers are explicitly protected by special legislation in, among other jurisdictions, Los Angeles, Colorado, Illinois, Maryland, New Jersey, and New York.

And that is only the beginning of AIDS's contribution to the struggle for gay rights. On Aug. 7, New York Mayor Ed Koch introduced Executive Order 123, creating the status of "domestic partner" for persons who have a "close and committed personal relationship" to a city employee. At least several cities, including Takoma Park, Md., Berkeley, Calif., Madison, Wis., Los Angeles, Seattle and San Francisco have put domestic partnership laws into effect. (Angry citizens have forced the San Francisco Board of Supervisors to put the order to a referendum that's still pending.)

The most important consequence of these laws is to put responsibility for the medical bills of the lovers of homosexual city employees onto the city. The pressure for domestic partnership laws is an obvious consequence of the AIDS crisis and the tremendous cost of treating AIDS. Unionized municipal employees confronting $300,000 in medical bills for a loved one are understandably eager to shift that cost.

One effect of that cost-shifting, and presumably not an unintended one, is an extraordinary change in the legitimacy with which society regards homosexual relationships.

Another legitimating effect of the AIDS crisis is even more pervasive and comes from the "AIDS education" that is now being conducted in the schools, on college campuses and in the mass media. A young man sits on the edge of his bed, preparing to go out for the evening. He will be ready for whatever happens because he is bringing condoms along. He pulls on a sock: "It's as easy as that." That is a relatively inexplicit public service announcement that was broadcast in prime time in New York state this summer.

In a more provocative version, made for the City of New York but not yet broadcast, a handsome man talks directly to the camera: "It was a perfect evening. Candlelight, music, stars. And then he asked me whether I enjoyed safer sex. I've never felt so good about saying, 'Yes.'"

In democratic societies, majoritarian habits of thinking elide the difference between what is common and what is normal. These commercials, although ostensibly meant only to tell people how to protect themselves if they do engage in homosexual activity, in fact carry a powerful legitimating message. Perhaps that is why Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York sent back to committee for re-examination a recent paper from four bishops on AIDS education. The paper, "The Many Faces of AIDS: A Gospel Approach," called for teaching students about the use of condoms, despite the Catholic Church's opposition to artificial birth control. Cardinal O'Connor described the paper as "a very grave mistake."

But other institutions have proven more accommodating to the AIDS-inspired trend than the Catholic Church. Trans World Airlines announced in July that homosexual couples could share frequent flier points. A TWA official told a lawyer representing gay rights groups, "We are aware of the non-traditional lifestyles prevalent in our society and our sole interest is the promotion of travel, not social commentary."

A New York state court held in July that a homosexual man who had shared a rent-controlled apartment for 11 years with a tenant who subsequently died of AIDS was entitled to inherit the apartment from his dead partner. Richard Higgins, the Housing and Community Renewal Commissioner for the city of New York, has said that he will enforce and extend the rights of gay "widowers."

Whatever the symbolic importance of Barney Frank, the future of gay rights does not lie with the dramatic, but with the seemingly inevitable accommodations of city and state officials to AIDS and its suffers. Those officials may have begun by responding to a public health crisis; in the end, they will have sanctioned a transformation of North American moral attitudes.

NEXT ON THE AGENDA?

In "After the Ball," (Doubleday, 1989) Marshall Kirk and Hunter Madsen propose a radical departure from the traditional tactics of the gay rights movement:

Gay life in America is hard, and promises little improvement unless something is done, and promptly, to transform society's antigay attitudes. We have in mind a strategy as calculated and powerful as that which gays are accused of pursuing by their enemies—or, if you prefer, a plan as manipulative as that which our enemies themselves employ. It's time to learn from Madison Avenue.

Some stalwart gay revolutionaries feel strongly that appealing for acceptance through advertising bespeaks groveling capitulation and conformitarianism. It is the public's job, they insist, to disburden itself magically, on its own, of its massive sexual hang-ups; the homosexual's only duty is to "learn how to love" himself or herself. Sooner or later, the public will be impressed by our gay pride, and come around.

We think this radical argument is rubbish. We are Americans, going nowhere living cheek-by-jowl with our persecutors. To gain straight tolerance and acceptance is not just a legitimate goal of gay activism. It must be the principal goal.

How is tolerance forgot? Not just through affirmative self-expression, but through communication. Self-expression, like singing in the shower, is usually its own reward, but communication has failed unless one has persuaded the listener. To date, most public acts by the gay community, ranging from eccentric modes of dress to rancorous mass demonstrations, have accomplished self-expression at the expense of communication.

Every public message in our mass media campaign should be the result of gays having put themselves in the public's binding high-button shoes and asked: If I were straight and felt the hostility most straights feel toward gays, what would it take to get me to change my antigay feelings?

Straights should hear that gays are victims of circumstances, that they no more choose their sexual orientation than straights chose theirs. Gays must also be portrayed as victims of violence and humiliation, job and housing insecurities, loss of child custody and countless other miseries.

Our campaign should not demand explicit support for homosexual practices per se. It must focus, instead, on antidiscrimination and fundamental freedoms. In practical terms, this means that cocky mustachioed leather-men, drag queens and bull dykes, who constitute a small minority within the gay community, would not appear in the first wave of gay commercials. Rather, TV viewers would be introduced to conventional young people, middle-aged women, and older folks of all races, who happen to be gay.

To confound bigoted stereotypes, strongly favorable images of gays must be set before the public. We would summons history's eye-popping honor roll of prominent men and women who were homosexual or bisexual. That roll is long enough to represent gay men and lesbians as a veritable pillar of Western civilization. At the same time, we must make homohatred look bad by vilifying those—Klansmen, neo-Nazis, gay-bashing punks—who persecute gays.

How can gays get their case before the public? It will be easiest to approach the print media first, encouraging magazines and newspapers to accept gay money by showing them ads whose messages are pure white bread. Straight Americans will begin to see them everywhere, small print ads (and, if the campaign has the funds, large billboards):

"In Russia, they tell you what you have to be. In America, we have the freedom to be ourselves. The National Gay & Lesbian Community proudly joins America in celebrating July 4."

"People Helping Instead of Hating—That's What America is All About."

And so forth. Through a hailstorm of such brief messages, the public will become accustomed to gay commercial sponsorship. Several years down the road, our salami tactics will have carved out, slice by slice, a large portion of access to mainstream media. What next? The campaign will launch media messages of open support for the civil rights of gay persons.

Through such efforts over the next decade, we will gradually build a society in which gays are not set apart. We want straights to revoke all laws criminalizing sex acts between consenting adults, as the abhorrently arrogant and invasive barbarisms they are. We want straights to provide for us, by special legislation and affirmative action if need be, the same rights to public speech and assembly, to work, shelter, and public accommodations, to legal marriage and parenthood that straights have always enjoyed.

To get there from here, however, it will be up to gays to clarify for the public what bigots have deliberately obscured: that we are not fighting merely for the right to look different or to have as many one-minute stands as we can possibly line up. We're fighting for the right to love and marry. We're not fighting to eliminate community ethics, to live like selfish libertines, narcissistically and meanly. We're not fighting to eradicate Family; we're fighting for the right to be Family. Once that message has struck home, we can all return to our regularly scheduled programming.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. HEFLIN pertaining to the introduction of S. 2620 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, quite a bit has been said in the course of the opening stages of the debate about Ryan White, about his valiant struggle and his noble effort to assist others afflicted by AIDS before he died. It has been suggested that some people have sought to use him in ways that were not proper or appropriate.

I would like to read a letter from his mother, that all of us, as Senators, received. I met with her a wee bit ago when she was here. She hoped we might be able to act upon this measure while she was in Washington so she could witness this act that is dedicated to her son as it was considered in the Senate. Unfortunately that was impossible, due to the Senate schedule. So, here we are today, finally dealing with this measure.

On April 26, not long ago, she wrote the following letter, Ryan's mother, to every Member of the U.S. Senate:

DEAR SENATOR: My son, Ryan White, spent the last five years of his life not only fighting for his life, but also fighting for the lives of all people living with AIDS. Although we have now lost Ryan, we cannot lose sight of his courage and his hope. Ryan always said that we must fight the disease of AIDS and not the people who have it. No one more than Ryan understood the fear, prejudice, and discrimination suffered by people with AIDS. This fear must be eliminated, and people with AIDS must be treated with the dignity and compassion that all our fellow citizens deserve.

I am therefore tremendously proud that the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee has chosen to dedicate the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency (CARE) Act of 1990 to the memory of Ryan. This bill will help ensure that all people with AIDS and HIV infection receive the health care they need and deserve. I know that Ryan was always somewhat bewildered by the attention he received. At the same time he was determined to use this attention to ensure that all Americans learned more about how to help people with AIDS, rather than fear them. I believe Ryan would be proud to know that his struggle may help pass a bill that will aid thousands of others in their fight against this dreaded disease.

The CARE bill will accomplish two important goals. First, the bill will provide 300 million dollars in emergency assistance to our cities most severely affected by the AIDS epidemic. Second, the bill will provide another 300 million dollars to help smaller communities throughout the country develop comprehensive care programs for people with AIDS.

My own experience tells me how desperately this funding is needed. Shortly before Ryan died, we were in Los Angeles for an Academy Awards party. Ryan suddenly fell ill and we desperately tried to find some medical attention for Ryan in L.A. We found that the AIDS care specialists in L.A. were overwhelmed by the ever-growing caseload and they were unable to see Ryan. If Ryan, perhaps one of the most well-known persons with AIDS in the United States, could not get medical attention, can you imagine what it must be like for those who are less privileged?

We then flew overnight back to Indiana where Ryan was immediately admitted to Riley Hospital. There, Ryan was fortunate enough to get outstanding medical care and Riley Hospital generously offered to pay for all of Ryan's medical costs. But what happens to those who are not so fortunate? What happens to the hospitals that are increasingly facing bankruptcy because they continue to provide free medical care to persons with AIDS who can't afford to pay? What happens to people with AIDS in the thousands of other rural communities across the country that are not equipped to meet their special needs?

Title II of the CARE bill will provide much needed funds to smaller communities throughout the country to enable them to plan comprehensive care programs for people with AIDS. As my experience has shown, rural America is desperately unprepared to meet this growing epidemic. Without careful planning, many smaller communities could find themselves in a position similar to that of our large urban cities today. The CARE bill will help ensure that rural America will be prepared for AIDS, and that no one will ever again have to experience the frustration and despair that Ryan and I have to face when trying to get him the health care he needed.

I urge you with all my heart, knowing that Ryan would join me in this if he could, to give the CARE bill your urgent attention and ensure that it swiftly passes through Congress.

It is signed, "Very truly, Jeanne White," the mother of Ryan White.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon my colleague and friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], reviewed this legislation, different provisions of the legislation, in very careful detail, and so now available to the Members not only in the report but in the full RECORD there is a very ample examination of the reasons that this legislation has been developed and an analysis of the various provisions and the reasons for those various provisions.

I will touch on the major provisions just briefly this afternoon. But I want to thank him for his explanations, and also the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], for his excellent statement.

Senator CRANSTON and Senator HATCH and other members of our committee in a very strong bipartisan fashion bring this legislation which is reported out of our committee virtually unanimously. I think that says a good deal on where we have come as a committee, and also the Senate, in terms of coming to grips with this particular disease which affects so many of our fellow citizens and is increasingly a danger and threat to the public health of the people of this Nation.

And also I think the American people have developed a better understanding about how we can and should be dealing with this particular disease. In this legislation, we are providing some special help and assistance to those areas of the country, those cities, which have the highest degree or high incidence of HIV and AIDS.

Then the other section, section 2, provides a formula grant to the States so that they can focus those resources within the State that may have high concentrations but that may not meet the other title I requirements. It provides some very special recognition of the increasing growth of AIDS in many of the rural areas of this country.

This is a new phenomenon. If you will examine the report, you will see the actual percentage in the increase of AIDS. The percentagewise increase is much more dramatic in rural America and in small communities. That is certainly something that has not been generally understood, but I believe the Members certainly are increasingly appreciating that.

We attempted to recognize that in the development of the legislation, particularly in title II. We have incorporated in title I and title II what I consider to be the cutting edge—I guess in terms of delivery of a range—of services that those afflicted with this disease need, and to do it in a way which stresses compassion, stresses care, stresses good-quality medicine.

Also as a result of the way this is approached, we will provide, we believe for actual savings of hundreds of millions of dollars to the States that are increasingly picking up the charges in Medicaid provisions, and the local taxes which is picking it up in terms of the support for public health service and community hospitals.

So we will have a chance to get into all of these areas in the course of the debate as we move through the consideration.

I know the name of Ryan White has been mentioned earlier, Mr. President, but I want to draw to the attention of the membership, in the report that was issued by our committee, the dedication of this legislation:

* * * to the memory of Ryan White, who died on April 8, 1990, after a 6-year battle against AIDS. Beginning at the age of 13, Ryan valiantly fought not only the human immunodeficiency virus itself, but also fears about AIDS that were based on ignorance and senseless discrimination against people with AIDS and HIV disease. With dignity, patience, and almost unvarying good cheer, Ryan White introduced to people across America and across the world a face of AIDS that caring human beings could not turn their back upon. First through his courageous fight to be allowed to go to school with his peers, then through his tireless efforts to educate and explain the realities of his illness, young Ryan White changed our world. By dedicating this legislation to Ryan, the committee affirms its commitment to provide care, compassion, and understanding to people with AIDS everywhere Ryan would have expected no less.

Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to bring this legislation to the floor with our colleague, Senator HATCH. We express our appreciation to the leadership, to Senator MITCHELL and Senator DOLE, for giving us the opportunity to address this extremely important health challenge that we are facing all across our country.

We really are facing an emergency. This legislation is necessary. It is essential for helping and assisting millions of our fellow citizens, and helping and assisting many of our neediest communities.

The measure which we ask the Senate to consider has overwhelming bipartisan support; 65 sponsors. In authorizing legislation of this type, we rarely achieve such a large number of cosponsors, particularly on a bill that was introduced such a short time ago.

By backing this measure, over two-thirds of the Senate is acknowledging the continuing urgency of the AIDS problem. The HIV infection is a lethal, transmittable disease that is systematically claiming the lives of American men, women, and children. The most recent reports indicate that the AIDS nightmare is by no means behind us.

I draw attention of the membership to this report, whereas I just mentioned earlier the increase percentagewise in terms of rural communities and small towns. It was increased most dramatically. The other very dramatic area of increase is among children. The dramatic increase in the number of young children that are being afflicted with this also presents a matter of, I believe, enormous need.

In fact, new data from the CDC's "Sentinel Survey" revealed that in certain hospitals in New York City and Newark, NJ—nearly one in four young men are now infected with HIV. CDC epidemiologists conclude that the epidemic is not declining but continuing to spread. The toll that AIDS is taking on local communities and health care systems is literally overwhelming.

This legislation, which received unanimous approval by the Labor Committee, is designed to provide two different types of immediate financial relief: Grants to the States to develop care systems, and fund essential health care and support services; direct grants to the other 13 cities which have reported over 2,000 AIDS cases, or more than 55 percent of the total AIDS cases.

In preparing this measure with Senator HATCH, we have worked hard to address the concerns of dozens of Senators.

We believe we have developed a proposal that is responsive to the special needs of both inner city populations, and individuals and families in rural areas.

We feel we have devised a workable framework for the delivery of HIV health services to children, women, and families, and we have given State and local governments enough flexibility to send funds to those areas where the need is the greatest.

This measure marks a critical step forward in responding to the catastrophic situation in hard-hit cities in developing services for the hundreds of thousands of Americans who will become ill with AIDS over the next few years.

In particular, I want to recognize Senator HATCH for his continuing leadership in the issue. He has again demonstrated how much he cares about Americans who are suffering. The $600 million in emergency funding authorized by this legislation will not end the pain and sorrow unleashed by this killer. What it can and will do is diminish the devastating toll that AIDS has taken on our entire health delivery system.

It is our hope that programs funded by this measure can help reduce the large number of needless tragedies associated with the AIDS epidemic.

Mr. President, we know that we have, I believe, a health care crisis in our Nation with those that are uninsured, as well as those who are paying the bills. We will expend about $650 billion this year on health care costs. That is going to go up to $1 trillion 300 billion in the next 20-25 years. We know that we have millions of our fellow citizens who are not covered. We know that a great percentage of those who are not covered are children and women, particularly single women with children.

We see with the decline in the coverage of health care that the one facility which is being vastly overused and utilized is the emergency room. There has been about a 40- to 50-percent increase in the use of emergency rooms over the period of the last 4 years, and it is estimated that 40 to 50 percent of those that are using emergency rooms, if they had been treated outside of the hospital setting and early enough, could have avoided going to the hospital in the first place.

But that happens to be a fact, Mr. President, and those numbers, and that flow line is continuing. So we have a dramatic increase and burden that is being placed on emergency rooms and on municipal hospitals.

Then you have the additional kind of burden that is being placed because of the failure to rationalize the health care system. That is just one aspect of it, one feature.

Then you add to that the impact of substance abuse in our society with the increasing utilization of emergency rooms as a result of substance abuse, and also the violence which is associated with the substance abuse.

You have those two additional phenomenons which have taken place. Now you add this whole tragedy of the significant growth of AIDS, and the impact that is having on our health care system—they all converge, Mr. President, into the municipal hospitals across this country.

Five percent of the public hospitals have 50 percent of the AIDS patients. We have that phenomenon that is taking place, Mr. President, where many of the rooms in major hospitals across this country, which may cost $800 or $900 a day, have individuals who may have HIV but could be at home or in nursing home care; nonetheless, they are unable to, because we have not been able to coordinate the range of different systems to take care of them.

Well, Mr. President, we attempt to address that issue in this legislation as well, and to try to recognize the extraordinary burden on the hospitals which have been receiving the burden of treating these HIV and AIDS patients, also to try to provide some imaginative and creative ways to have a more efficient way of treatment, and certainly one which is more humane.

Mr. President, in particular, this measure addresses the unmet needs of the growing number of the disadvantaged persons who have this illness, as well as those, as I mentioned earlier, that live in smaller towns and communities and in rural America. Society ends up paying, one way or another, for the delivery of uncompensated health services. By acting to provide critical services early in the course of this disease, we can actually reduce the total lifetime expense of caring for a patient with AIDS.

Unplanned service delivery—through overcrowded hospital emergency rooms and in precious acute-care beds—ends up costing all of us more. With this measure, we are creating the possibility of a more rational and compassionate use of our limited health care resources.

I thank the Members of the Senate for their support in developing this sensible approach to this difficult national problem, and I urge all Members to give the Comprenhensive AIDS Resource Emergency Act their swift approval.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRYOR). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to draw the attention of the Members to the report that we had put out in support of this legislation. On page 7 we go into the HIV disease in rural areas. I refer to some of the highlights of this particular report. We had been asked, is this legislation just to skew a handful of cities, and will it really help and assist in some of the rural areas and some of the smaller communities.

We did address the issue in our legislation to show that it does have a balanced approach, although we do target the resources where the need is the greatest. But let me point out some of the material that we developed in the course of our committee's consideration:

While HIV disease remains most heavily concentrated in the Nation's urban areas, and especially in the inner cities, the number of new cases diagnosed in similar smaller cities and rural areas is growing. Cases outside metropolitan areas accounted for 18.5 percent of new AIDS cases reported in the 12 months ended March 1990, compared to 16.1 pecent in the preceding 12 months. In 1989, the Centers for Disease Control reported a 5 percent increase in diagnosed AIDS cases in metropolitan areas with populations over 500,000 and a 37 percent increase in rural areas. The Atlanta

Journal and Constitution reported a tripling of AIDS cases in Georgia over the past two years and noted that for the first time, the spread of AIDS in rural areas and small towns was keeping pace with the increase in Altanta—with Macon experiencing a 400 percent increase. AIDS cases more than doubled in areas such as Gary, Indiana, Lubbock, Texas, Biloxi, Mississippi, and Portland, Maine.

Here is another rather tragic and disturbing development, Mr. President. As of March 31, 1990, there are almost 2,200 reported cases of children with AIDS. This number does not include children who are HIV infected. And it is estimated for every child reported to have AIDS, there are 2 to 10 other unidentified cases, and estimated that nearly 3,500 children will have AIDS by 1991 and approximately 20,000 will be HIV infected.

AIDS will be the fifth leading cause of death for all children in the next decade, and a major cause of mental retardation.

This, Mr. President, is a matter of very considerable concern to all of us.

Mr. President, I will include in the RECORD a random sample of many of the editorials from newspapers all over the country that support the legislation, and I will also include a more comprehensive list of the various supporting national organizations.

I think we come to this legislation with the kind of support which we see occasionally, but not as often as those of us who are involved in public policy would like to see. This legislation has the support of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, U.S. Conference of Local Health Officials, National Association of Counties, National Association of County Health Officials, National Governors Association, National Conference of State Legislatures, Association of State and Territorial Health Officers, and the National Commission on AIDS.

Then, I will not list off the various groups, but I will include the health, social service, religious, and labor organizations. There must be 75 of those, both the religious and the various health organizations, which support this legislation, most of whom were very helpful to us in the development of the program itself.

The National Commission on AIDS, in a recent letter to the President, pointed out—and I will include that in the RECORD—the Federal disaster relief for direct emergency relief is urgently needed to help State and localities seriously impacted to provide the AIDS prevention and treatment care and services in short supply. The Commission strongly supports the efforts in Congress embodied in S. 2240 to address these needs. The resources simply must be provided now or we will pay very dearly later.

Mr. President, this is from the AIDS Commission, some extremely knowledgeable individuals. It is a balanced panel and a very strong letter of support and endorsement by the National Commission on AIDS that has probably as much expertise on the particular need, and we work very closely with them. We welcome their strong support and appreciate their reasons for it. In fact, Mr. President, of the resources now that are expended at the Federal level, 97 percent of the money is basically on research. Research has to be done. It certainly should be supported.

But what we have seen in this very unique and devastating illness and disease is that we have not been as creative in trying to deal with this disease in the kind of humane and compassionate way that this bill incorporates. That is, I think, one of the very important aspects besides the resources to help and assist many of the communities which have been so impacted by this disease. This will provide the range of different kinds of ways of delivery of services which we think is enormously important.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the material to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY [CARE] ACT OF 1990

COSPONSORS

Kennedy, Hatch, Adams, Bentsen, Biden, Bingaman, Boren, Bradley, Breaux, Bryan, Bumpers, Burdick, Chafee, Coats, Cohen, Conrad, Cranston, D'Amato, Danforth, Daschle, DeConcini, Dodd, Dole, Durenberger, Fowler, Glenn, Gore, Gorton, Graham, Harkin, Hatfield, Heinz, Inouye, Jeffords, Johnston, Kassebaum, Kerrey, Kerry, Kohl, Lautenberg, Leahy, Levin, Lieberman, Lugar, Mack, Matsunaga, McCain, Metzenbaum, Mikulski, Mitchell, Moynihan, Nunn, Packwood, Pell, Reid, Riegle, Robb, Rockefeller, Sarbanes, Sasser, Simon, Specter, Warner, Wilson, Wirth.

SUPPORTING NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS
(PARTIAL LISTING ONLY)

Governmental organizations

United States Conference of Mayors.
United States Conference of Local Health Officials.
National Association of Counties.
National Association of County Health Officials.
National Governors Association.
National Conference of State Legislatures.
Association of State and Territorial Health Officers.
National Commission on AIDS.

Health, social service, religious, and labor organizations

AIDS Action Council.
AIDS National Interfaith Network.
American Academy of Pediatrics.
American Anthropological Association's Task Force on AIDS.
American Association for Counseling and Development.
American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy.
American Association of University Affiliated Programs for Persons with Developmental Disabilities.
American College Health Association.
American College of Preventive Medicine.
American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME).
American Foundation for AIDS Research.
American Home Economics Association.
American Hospital Association.
American Indian Health Care Association.
American Medical Student Association.
American Nurses Association.
American Psychological Association.
American Public Health Association.
Association of Junior Leagues International.
Association of Minority Health Professions Schools.
Association of Schools of Public Health.
Black Women's Agenda.
Catholic Health Association of the United States.
Center for Women and Government.
Child Welfare League.
Childrens Foundation.
Church of the Brethren.
Citizens Commission on AIDS.
Coalition for the Homeless.
Coalition of Labor Union Women.
Committee for Children.
Consortium of Social Science Associations.
Corporate Health Management Consultants, Inc.
Council on Perinatal Substance Abuse.
Disability Rights Education and Defense Fund.
Episcopal Church.
Federation of Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays.
Friends Committee on National Legislation.
Girls Clubs of America.
Hispanic AIDS Committee for Education and Resources.
Human Rights Campaign Fund.
Infectious Diseases Society of America.
Latin American Research and Service Agency.
Legal Action Center.
Mexican American Women's National Association.
National AIDS Network.
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).
National Association for Home Care.
National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions.
National Association of Commissions for Women.
National Association of Community Health Centers, Inc.
National Association of People with AIDS.
National Association of Protection and Advocacy Systems.
National Association of Public Hospitals.
National Association of Social Workers.
National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors.
National Conference of Puerto Rican Women.
National Council of Churches.
National Council of La Raza.
National Council of Negro Women.
National Council of Alcoholism and Drug Dependence.
National Hemophilia Foundation.
National Hospice Organization.
National Institute for Women of Color.
National Medical Association.
National Minority AIDS Council.
National Network of Runaway and Youth Services.
National Puerto Rican Coalition, Inc.
National Urban Coalition.
National Women's Health Network.
Pediatric AIDS Foundation.

Presbyterian Church USA.
Service Employees International Union (SEIU).
Synagogue Council of America.
Unitarian Universalist Association.
United Auto Workers.
United Church of Christ.
United Jewish Appeal.
Women and AIDS Resource Network.

[From the Atlanta Constitution, Mar. 8, 1990]

CITIES NEED "AIDS DISASTER" RELIEF

The AIDS epidemic has slammed into the nation's biggest cities, causing as much economic damage as any hurricane or tornado. Because the disease has struck so unevenly, just 4 percent of the nation's hospital are treating more than half the people with AIDS.

The burden of AIDS care threatens to overwhelm city hospitals, severely limiting their ability to help other seriously ill people. In addition, the low incomes of many AIDS patients and the high cost of their care threatens to drive public hospitals into insolvency.

To address this problem, an unlikely tandem in the U.S. Senate—liberal Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and conservative Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah)—has proposed that Congress create a $600 million-a-year fund to help Atlanta and 12 other major cities get "AIDS disaster" relief.

Of the nation's 120,000 AIDS victims, about two out of three live in just those 13 cities. Under the Kennedy-Hatch bill. Atlanta, with its 2,300 AIDS cases, would be entilied to $4 million to help the city's beleaguered social service agencies and Grady Memorial Hospital.

The federal aid not only would help hospitals stay afloat financially, but also would provide much better care for sick people by concentrating resources in key cities. Small towns generally are poorly equipped to deliver appropriate help to people with AIDS.

For example, AIDS patients need nutritional services, experienced doctors, home health care, transportation, counseling, skilled nursing care and hospice services. Such comprehensive care networks are best developed in bigger cities.

Besides making good medical sense, the AIDS disaster bill is fair-minded as well. The U.S. government has long been willing to give funds to cities hard hit by disasters, and it should not turn away from this responsibility.

When the earthquake struck San Francisco last fall, President Bush flew in with reassurances that federal dollars would help relieve the suffering. He should do no less for the cities' swamped hospitals.

[From the Dallas Morning News, Mar. 23, 1990]

AIDS EPIDEMIC REQUIRES FEDERAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE

(By Bob Moos)

Days after an earthquake struck San Francisco last year, killing 17 people, Congress agreed to spend more than $3 billion in emergency disaster relief. Nine years into the AIDS epidemic, which has claimed 5,000 lives in that city alone, a similarly dramatic federal response has yet to be seen there.

That contrast did not go unnoticed among public health officials and others who have been struggling to care for the growing number of people living with acquired immune deficiency syndrome. What it did was inspire a novel approach for trying to obtain more assistance for trying to obtain more assistance for those cities hardest hit by the epidemic.

Why not begin treating AIDS like a natural disaster, the group asked. If the federal government can rush in and help communities recover from a flood or hurricane or tornado, why couldn't it do the same for cities whose health care systems have become overburdened by AIDS cases?

Legislation that would provide $600 million in disaster relief for AIDS has been introduced in Congress. This money would be in addition to the $1.6 billion the federal government now spends for discretionary AIDS programs, only $112 million of which goes directly to communities for care.

One of the bill's authors is Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. But lest anyone think this is a liberal giveaway, the other drafter is Republican Orrin Hatch of Utah. At last count, 29 senators have signed on as cosponsors, including such fiscal conservatives as Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, Alfonse D'Amato of New York and Pete Wilson of California.

All of them understand that the public health care system is fast approaching the day of reckoning. They have seen the figures and know that the hardest-hit cities and states are choking on the enormous cost of caring for AIDS patients and that the federal government needs to come to the rescue.

Public health officials report that the average daily cost of hospital care for an AIDS patient is $681. Only $545 is covered by public or private insurance. The rest must be paid for by local taxpayers or absorbed by the hospitals. All told, uncompensated care adds up to $2,285 per AIDS admission.

As taxing as the epidemic has been to the public health care system, the worst is yet to come. The first 100,000 cases of AIDS occurred over nine years. The next 100,000 are expected to require only 15 months. In all, a million Americans are thought to be infected by the virus and may become sick.

The Kennedy-Hatch bill seeks to do essentially two things. First, it would direct $300 million in emergency relief to the 13 cities with the highest number of AIDS cases. The money would pay for both hospital and outpatient care. Dallas would receive about $3.8 million immediately and more later.

Next, the measure would distribute another $300 million to states to develop comprehensive programs to care for people with AIDS. One of the uses for the money might be to defray the high cost of drugs like AZT for patients who cannot afford them. Texas would be expected to get about $20.5 million.

Notwithstanding the long list of sponsors, the legislation is likely to face tough questions, the most pointed of which will be: Why spend another $600 million on AIDS when heart disease and cancer claim many more lives? Isn't this a case of a special interest group looking after its own?

Nine years into the epidemic, it is frustrating that such questions still must be answered. No one fighting for AIDS money seeks to undercut heart or cancer funding. But a distinction needs to be made. AIDS is a communicable disease with a frightening rate of growth. Heart disease and cancer are not.

Many of the public and private grants that have helped pay for AIDS care are expiring. Community-based organizations' fund raising is becoming exhausted. Public hospitals, having barely made it this far, wonder how they will care for the next 100,000 cases—and the 100,000 after that.

The fact that the hardest-hit cities should turn to the federal government for aid is not at all unreasonable. As with a natural diaster like a flood or tornado, the taxpayers of these communities did not ask for this crisis. Yet they are being expected to bear its heavy costs by themselves.

The grief the AIDS epidemic has caused their cities is just as real as the heartache that follows an earthquake or violent storm. In some cases, far more so. Federal disaster relief is warranted.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Mar. 30, 1990]

BUSINESS LEADERS CALL FOR MORE U.S. AIDS FUNDS

(By Victor Zonana)

WASHINGTON.—Members of the National Business Leadership Conference on AIDS, like President Bush, called Thursday for an end to the stigma that surround the disease, although some castigated the Administration for not spending more to fight it.

"As business leaders, we must make it clear that we expect more of the government than mere words," said Robert D. Haas, chairman and chief executive of Levi Strauss & Co., in a sharply worded speech that preceded the President's. "Even if the private sector helps create 'a thousand points of light' across the land, it will be of no avail if there is darkness in the White House."

Haas called on the federal government to enact a number of initiatives, including a disaster relief plan for the 13 hardest hit metropolitan areas. The $600-million bill was introduced earlier this month by Sens. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah).

The Bush White House has asked Congress for almost $3.5 billion for AIDS—which includes Medicaid spending. Not including Medicaid, the figure is $1.6 billion.

Haas argued that such cities as Los Angeles, New York, Chicago and his own city, San Francisco, "need emergency help that parallels the aid we provide to communities in the aftermath of earthquakes, hurricanes and floods."

He charged that the President's decision to concentrate the resources of his war on drugs on law enforcement—rather than on prevention and treatment of drug abuse—"represents nothing less than a death sentence" for many needle-using addicts and their sex partners and children. AIDS is spread by the use of contaminated needles.

Nearly 500 business and labor leaders and AIDS workers attended a daylong session of the leadership conference.

Time Warner Inc. Co-Chairman J. Richard Munro noted that most corporations are relative newcomers in the fight against AIDS. Five years ago, he said, Fortune magazine surveyed top corporate executives and responses "ranged from casual to callous."

Leaders from the epicenters of the epidemic of the epidemic shared their executive with others who are still bracing for their first cases.

Indeed, Dr. James W. Curran of the Federal Centers for Disease Control told the gathering that epidemiologists are currently witnessing "the ruralization of AIDS".

"We have had no AIDS cases among employees, but it is just a matter of time," said Dr. Stephen Goldman, corporate medical director of Mack Trucks Inc. in Allentown, PA.

In contrast, Munro said, "We began to lose talented, wonderful people at Time very early in the epidemic."

He said that policies to keep infected workers on the job and reimburse sick employees for alternatives to hospital care are both humane and "in your business interest."

AIDS, according to the CDC, has stricken 125,000 U.S. citizens and killed 75,000.

Although the agency recently lowered its estimate of the number of infected Americans, CDC still forecasts that the cumulative total of AIDS cases will at least triple, to between 390,000 and 480,000, by the end of 1993.

[From the New York Times, Apr. 4, 1990]

RELIEF FOR THE AIDS DISASTER

In a recent heartfelt speech, President Bush called for more compassion and less discrimination against victims of AIDS. That was welcome moral leadership, but AIDS, now pushing health care systems of big cities into crisis, demands much more from Washington. A bill pending in Congress recognizes the urgent need.

More than 121,000 cases of AIDS have been diagnosed in the United States since 1981; it's estimated that a million people now are infected, with a high percentage likely to develop the disease. Medical care for each case costs tens of thousands of dollars, and the total for AIDS care may now be more than $5 billion annually.

Those bills are paid haphazardly, forcing hospitals to absorb huge losses. Private insurers shrink from the problem. The poor are entitled to some help from Medicaid, the Federal-local insurance program. But state reimbursement rules differ; rates aren't always sufficient to cover actual costs of treatment, and not all poor patients get covered. One recent study found that a quarter of AIDS patients have no insurance at all.

In addition to inflicting financial stress, AIDS may severely aggravate crowding in urban hospitals already troubled by drug-related illnesses and staff shortages. AIDS swells the numbers seeking hospital treatment; many remain when they no longer need the full range of hospital services. Some are in no shape to function completely on their own, but have no way to get help at home. AIDS leaves other unemployed and homeless.

There is universal agreement on the need for more resources and for alternatives to the hospital: nursing homes, home-care services, hospices and apartment complexes that offer access to medical help. Use of such facilities and services to limit hospital stays can, typically, cut the cost of care to half or even a quarter of the usual $150,000 per case.

The new Federal legislation, introduced by Senators Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and Orrin Hatch of Utah, would address the need. It calls for spending $300 million in the next two years in emergency relief for urban hospitals with high AIDS caseloads. The most afflicted are in New York, New Jersey, California, Florida and Texas, five states that account for 64 percent of all American AIDS cases.

The bill would provide $300 million more to communities that come up with comprehensive case management plans. Such money could equip smaller cities, where the problem remains in the early stages, to avoid the ruinous costs and crowding experienced by New York or Los Angeles.

Late last year, Congress quickly voted $4 billion in disaster relief for victims of the northern California earthquake and Hurricane Hugo. Cities bearing the brunt of the AIDS epidemic are experiencing similar disaster, even if not quite so sudden.

Perhaps more important, the Kennedy-Hatch bill would promote aggressive management of the AIDS-care crisis rather than reactive management. Continued neglect of that need compounds devastating disease with financial waste.

[From the Washington Post, May 5, 1990]

AIDS: AN EXPANDING EMERGENCY

Each year the sobering figures move inexorably higher. As of March 31, it is estimated that about a million Americans are infected with the virus that causes AIDS. More than 128,000 cases of full-blown AIDS have been reported, and more than 78,000 people have died. By the end of this year, public health experts expected that another 50,000 cases will be diagnosed. By next year, AIDS will be the leading cause of death for Americans between 25 and 44.

The toll on individuals is, of course, indescribable. But there is a public health impact, too, and it must be addressed, or the nation's hospitals—particularly the large, urban, public facilities—will collapse under the weight of this burden. The problem is concentrated: 13 metropolitan areas—Washington is one—have 55 percent of all reported AIDS cases, and 5 percent of the nation's hospitals care for half of all AIDS patients. Fortunately, emergency legislation is now moving through Congress to deal with this crisis. In the Senate, a bill with 65 cosponsors has been reported unanimously by the Labor and Human Resources Committee, and in the House, another proposal has been reported unanimously by the Health subcommittee of the Committee on Energy and Commerce. Both bills would authorize federal grants of $300 million a year to help cities with severe AIDS problems. The Senate measure would include hospital care, and the House bill would limit assistance to outpatient services and hospices. Both bills also provide money—the Senate $300 million, and the House $500 million—for services including counseling and testing, early intervention help and drugs. Only the House provision is means tested.

On another track, Rep. Henry Waxman and Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan have introduced bills to broaden the Medicaid program to include HIV-infected poor people before they become disabled and to provide new subsidies to hospitals that bear a disproportionate share of caring for AIDS Medicaid patients. When the epidemic was in its early stages, about half of all patients were covered by private insurance. Now, as the number of patients who are drug abusers and generally uninsured increases, the demands on Medicaid have doubled. Funding must be increased and eligibility standards adjusted to account for these developments.

The principles that underlie these bills are clear: help those suffering from this devastating disease who have neither resources nor insurance. Provide early intervention that can delay the onset of the disease. Promote the development of alternatives to expensive hospital care when clinics, home health services and hospices are preferable. And save the big city hospitals that can no longer cope with the crisis unaided.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, President Bush made a speech on March 29, 1990, to the National Leadership Coalition on AIDS. I ask unanimous consent to have that speech printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
OFFICE OF THE PRESS SECRETARY.

TEXT OF REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT TO THE NATIONAL LEADERSHIP COALITION ON AIDS, ARLINGTON BALLROOM, CRYSTAL GATEWAY MARRIOTT, ARLINGTON, VA, MARCH 29, 1990

I am delighted to be with you, the leaders who guide American business as it helps those suffering with HIV and AIDS. You make our hearts glad. And you make your country proud.

Other generations have faced life-threatening medical crises, from polio to the plague. This virus is our challenge. Not a challenge we sought. Not a challenge we chose. But today our responsibility is clear: We must meet this challenge. We must beat this virus. For whether talking about a nation or an individual, character is measured not by our tragedies—but by our response to those tragedies.

And for those who are living with HIV and AIDS, our response is clear: They deserve our compassion. They deserve our care. And they deserve more than a chance—they deserve a cure.

America will accept nothing less. We are slashing red tape. Accelerating schedules. Boosting research. And somewhere out there, there's a Nobel prize—and the gratitude of planet Earth—waiting for man or woman who discovers the answer that's eluded everyone else.

We pray that day will come soon. But until that day—until this virus can be defeated by science—there's a battle to be waged by society.

Because in 1990, the most effective weapon in our arsenal against AIDS is not just medication, but also education.

Our goal is to turn irrational fear into rational facts.

Every American must learn what AIDS is—and what AIDS is not. And they must learn now. You in this room already know. The HIV virus is not spread by handshakes or hugs. You can't get it from food or drink, coughing or sneezing, or by sharing bathrooms or towels or conversation.

The transmission of HIV is as simple as it is deadly. In most cases, it's determined not by what you are—but by what you do—and by what you fail to do.

Let me state it clearly: People are placed at risk not by their demographics, but by their deeds—by their behavior.

And so it is our duty to make certain that every American has the essential information needed to prevent the spread of HIV and AIDS. Because while the ignorant may discriminate against AIDS, AIDS won't discriminate among the ignorant.

Like many of you, Barbara and I have had friends who have died of AIDS. Our love for them when they were sick and when they died was just as great and just as intense as for anyone lost to heart disease or cancer or accidents.

Probably everyone here has read the heartbreaking stories about AIDS babies and those infected by transfusions. When our own daughter was dying of leukemia, we asked the doctor the same question every HIV family must ask—why—why this was happening to our beautiful little girl. And the doctor said: "You have to realize that every well person is a miracle. It takes billions of cells to make a well person. And all it takes is one cell to be bad to destroy a whole person."

In this Nation, in this decade, there is only one way to deal with an individual who is sick. With dignity, compassion, care, confidentiality, and without discrimination.

Once disease strikes—we don't blame those who are suffering. We don't spurn the accident victim who didn't wear a seatbelt. We don't reject the cancer patient who didn't quit smoking. We try to love them and care for them and comfort them. We do not fire them, or evict them, or cancel their insurance.

Today I call on the House of Representatives to get on with the job of passing a law—as embodied in the Americans with Disabilities Act—that prohibits discrimination against those with HIV and AIDS. We're in a fight against a disease—not a fight against people. And we won't tolerate discrimination.

The disease is attacking our most precious resource—our people, especially our young. The statistics are numbing. You heard them this morning. But just look at the amazing quilts hanging here today. They prove that no one is a statistic. Every life has its own fabric, its own colors, its own purpose, its own soul. And like the quilts, no two are alike.

When Barbara and I left Washington for Christmas, our last stop was a clinic up at NIH. We were impressed by the determination of the people there—the doctors, nurses, and health care workers—and especially the brave people who are living with HIV. We learned a lot about caring, a lot about family, and a lot about hope. We saw the face of humanity in the face of AIDS.

You, too, are in a powerful, unique position to influence the response to HIV and AIDS. Washing our hands of it won't help solve this problem, but rolling up our sleeves will.

The roster of participants at this Conference is an honor roll. Allstate sponsored a landmark conference on HIV and work. Fortune magazine launched a survey on C.E.O.'s response to HIV. General Motors pledged to conduct an education program. Others are fighting the spread of HIV by fighting to keep schools and workplaces drug-free. This is America responding to a crisis. This is America at its best.

This epidemic is having a major impact on our health care system. The Federal response is unprecedented. In 1982, we knew little about AIDS—and spent only $8 million. But this year I have asked Congress for almost $3.5 billion to battle HIV—money for basic research, for HIV treatment and education, for protecting civil rights.

From Seattle to Boston, from Dallas to Detroit, Federal grants have helped coordinate the efforts of care providers, business and community organizations to set priorities and pool resources to meet the treatment needs of people with AIDS.

We've initiated clinical trials for promising new therapies for HIV, expanded the availability of experimental drugs. Approved three new therapies that for the first time offer help to HIV-infected people before they become sick with AIDS. We've started a toll-free number where HIV patients and doctors can get state-of-the-art information on new treatments; worked with the P.T.A. to distribute hundreds of thousands of copies of the "AIDS Prevention Guide" for use in schools and families nationwide.

And our $10 billion war on drugs is also a war on AIDS. IV drug use now accounts for some of the fastest growing infection rates—afflicting Americans that are often among those least able to get adequate medical help.

America has the most sophisticated health care system in the world, but it is not without its problems. We face many challenges. Our system depends on private insurance and individual payments, as well as government programs. AIDS magnifies the challenges, including the challenge of expanding access, bringing costs under control, and overcoming obstacles to quality care. With these concerns in mind, I asked Dr. Louis Sullivan to lead a Cabinet-level review of health care in the 1990's, and businesses like those you represent must play a major role in helping improve our Nation's health care system.

The crisis is not over. We report tens of thousands of new cases every year. And many predict we can expect to continue to do so in this decade, and even into the next century.

And yet, "where there is life there is hope." There are hopeful signs. To begin with, we can be encouraged by the news that current projections of the infection rate will not be as high as we thought just a year ago.

My Administration recently acted to extend AZT coverage to help HIV-infected people not yet sick with AIDS. All 50 states now provide Medicaid coverage for AZT treatments. Thanks to these actions, more and more people will be able to live and work with HIV. Keep them in your workforce—as I know many of you are already doing, as leaders in this effort. They can serve many, many more productive years with no threat to you, your other workers, or your companies. It will reduce costs for everyone. And it's the right thing to do.

The pace of progress is promising. The HIV virus has been identified, isolated, and attacked with experimental treatments in a span of less than 10 years. The normal, centuries-long evolution of disease and treatment compressed into a decade.

And this race against time has produced an explosion in knowledge and basic understanding about the nature of disease and immunology. Like the unexpected technological boons from Apollo's race to the moon, some physicians predict the race to cure AIDS may even lead to a cure for cancer.

Dollars spent for AIDS research are dollars spent for the better health of all Americans. AIDS research strikes at the heart of many human health problems from infectious disease to aging and cancer. It includes research on a class of viruses now increasingly believed to be the cause of not only AIDS, but also incurable diseases like muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis and at least two forms of leukemia.

We're on a war-time footing at NIH and CDC—the Centers for Disease Control. Tonight, like every night, the lights will burn late in Bethesda and Atlanta, as a group of American pioneers work to solve this problem. If they do—I should say, when they do—it will be one of the greatest things our Nation could do for the world.

We're going to continue to fight like hell. But we're also going to fight for hope. America has a unique capacity for beating the odds—and astounding the world.

During my own childhood, the silent, whispered terror was a mysterious killer called polio. Like HIV, the virus ignored class distinctions and geographic boundaries. Monday would come, and kids who'd been in school on Friday were simply never seen again. Theaters were closed, summer camps, swimming pools.

As with AIDS, there was a lot of ignorance. Thousands of stray cats and dogs put to death. Kids sleeping with camphor inhalers. At least one town was fumigated with D.D.T.

There was terrifying outbreaks in the teens, in the thirties, in the fifties. A cure was so far distant the experts refused to speculate. And then, suddenly, it was over. The dreaded iron lung, unused, cluttering hospital hallways. Children again growing up in a world without fear.

Many comparisons have been made to epidemics past—cholera, small pox, yellow fever—none of them perfect. So let me boil down the lessons of polio to two: There was a lot of ignorance—let's learn from that. And in the darkest of hours—hope came unexpectedly, powerfully and with finality. Let's work hard to see that day come to pass.

Together, we will make a difference, for those with HIV and AIDS—and for all Americans.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will just mention very briefly the parts of it which I think are very powerful and certainly ought to be listened to as this debate moves along. I quote from the speech of the President.

Other generations have faced life-threatening medical crises, from polio to the plague. This virus is our challenge. Not a challenge we sought. Not a challenge we chose. But today our responsibility is clear: We must meet this challenge. We must beat this virus. For whether talking about a nation or an individual, character is measured not by our tragedies—but by our response to those tragedies.

And for those who are living with HIV and AIDS, our response is clear: They deserve our compassion. They deserve our care. And they deserve more than a chance—they deserve a cure.

America will accept nothing less. * * *

In this Nation, in this decade, there is only one way to deal with an individual who is sick. With dignity, compassion, care, confidentiality, and without discrimination.

Once disease strikes—we don't blame those who are suffering. We don't spurn the accident victim who didn't wear a seatbelt. We don't reject the cancer patient who didn't quit smoking. We try to love them and care for them and comfort them. We do not fire them, or evict them, or cancel their insurance.

Mr. President, I have included the statement in the RECORD. One part of it which I would just mention that I take some issue with in the speech is where the President says "I have asked Congress for almost $3.5 billion to battle HIV—money for basic research, for HIV treatment and education, for protecting civil rights."

I find it difficult to find out where that figure comes from because I think during the course of this debate we will be asked, Are we spending enough, are we spending too much, are we spending as much as is suggested in this legislation? There is no real accurate information on exactly how much we can expect to spend on HIV disease through the Federal entitlement programs for the next year.

The President's 1991 budget assumes approximately $1.4 billion in AIDS CARE outlays. This is $870 million for Medicaid, $180 million for Medicare, and $227 million through the Veterans' Administration. The Health Care Financing Administration itself cautions us that this Medicaid estimate is very soft data from only a handful of States and cities. So we should be careful of the number the President has used of $3.4 billion for the total AIDS commitment in 1991.

The AIDS spending we can talk about with certainty is the discretionary funding. For all AIDS programs of the Public Health Service, the President has asked for a total of $1.7 billion. While that includes an overall increase for AIDS of 7 percent from last year, the White House budget actually cuts the Public Health Service dollars available for care and treatment by 35 percent. So when you are talking about what the Federal response is, that is a very, very significant and important reduction and one that does have an important impact on the care and treatment for AIDS victims.

Given what we know about the expanding number of AIDS cases flooding into our health care system, it just does not make any sense to be reducing care and treatment funding.

I might also mention, Mr. President, a quotation that appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine written by Dr. David Rogers, who is President Bush's appointee to the National Commission on AIDS:

I believe that we are spending vastly too little on AIDS from the Federal purse and are targeting some of it very poorly. Although the amount of scientific knowledge about HIV infection that has been generated in a very short time has been breathtaking and bodes well for the future, the degree of human misery and suffering associated with AIDS far exceeds anything I have witnessed during my 40-year professional lifetime. What has happened to too many persons with AIDS is so heartwrenching as to be almost unbelievable. It shames us as a nation. Not all this sorrow could have been prevented by increased expenditures on the disease, but some of the tragedies could have been softened by better funding, coupled with aggressive but compassionate leadership at all levels.

The following quotation is by Elizabeth Glaser, founder of the Pediatric AIDS Foundation, and is from her testimony before the House Budget Committee. I think it is a very powerful message. I will just quote a part of that:

My last fear is what I hear all over Washington and around the country. That AIDS spending has topped off, that the percentage of increases has been enough. Let me ask you—if you needed to go to war and a military bomber cost $1 million to build and the first year only $100,000 was allocated, you know you wouldn't have a bomber to do battle with. If the next year $500,000 was allocated, one could say: "Look, we've increased the budget by 500%," and this would be true, but you still would not have the necessary weapon to do battle with. The same is true with AIDS. Partial funding won't win this war either.

Mr. President, even if we accept the expenditures, the outlays, I think, quite frankly, all of us know around here that particularly today everything is measured in the bottom line, dollars and cents. That is important, clearly. But what the budget also does is an indication of our priorities, our priorities as a nation and what we do think we ought to be expending on. I, for one, feel that investment in basic research and other kinds of programs is a wise investment in terms of the future of the American people.

But, nonetheless, if there are those that want to play with these numbers, there are some numbers which I will include and these are part of the Medicare Program spent in 1988 on inpatient hospital care for some of the common illnesses: For heart failure and shock, $1.5 billion; cerebrovascular disease, $1.3 billion; pneumonias and pleurisy, $1.1 billion. The Federal Government spends over $4.4 billion for the care of dementia, such as Alzheimer's disease.

The proposed expenditure, Mr. President, is not out of line with what we are doing in other areas of health policy commitment, in terms of investing both in the areas of research and providing some degree of care.

The last point I want to make in this part of the discussion is about the current situation and the current condition. There are those who think we have gone past the brink, in terms of the AIDS virus. That could not be further from the truth.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the selected part of our National Commission on AIDS report that indicates what the current condition is with regard to those cases which are reported and those cases which are underreported.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME,
Washington, DC, December 5, 1989.

President GEORGE BUSH,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR PRESIDENT BUSH: The official charter for the National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) was signed on August 2, 1989. Since that time the National Commission has convened a series of hearings to solicit information and recommendations from experts in the field of medicine and public health policy to assist the Commission in meeting its statutory mandate of "promoting the development of a national consensus on policy concerning acquired immune deficiency syndrome."

The testimony we recently heard on health care and financing was so compelling we felt it is vital to write to you now, rather than wait until our statutorily required annual report next August. In fact, the Commission will continue to bring these urgent matters to your attention and to the attention of Congress as we hear from the experts about the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) epidemic and what is needed to respond to it.

The following represents the first of such reports which we hope will prompt appropriate action.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME, REPORT NO. 1

Overview

"We don't have time to sit around and have this Commission live out its life and issue another report and have another report, another Commission . . . . We have to act and we have to act swiftly."

This testimony was presented before the National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome at a hearing held in Washington, D.C., November 2nd and 3rd of this year. The Commission convened a meeting of experts to examine the global, national and local challenges confronting the United States in the HIV epidemic. The message from the experts was clear and alarming:

There is a dangerous, perhaps even growing, complacency in our country toward an epidemic that many people want to believe is over.

Far from over, the epidemic is reaching crisis proportions among the young, the poor, women and many minority communities. In fact, the 1990's will be much worse than the 1980's.

The link between drug use and HIV infection must be acknowledged and addressed in any national drug strategy.

There is no national plan for helping an already faltering health care system deal with the impact of the HIV epidemic.

Over the coming months, the Commission intends to bring the message of experts who have studied the problems and proposed the solutions to those who have the power to act. The Commission believes it is time to match rhetoric with action.

This letter is intended to outline the first of these messages from experts in the field of health care and financing: the public health care system in this country is not working well and nowhere is that more evident than for people with HIV infection and AIDS. While AIDS is not the cause of the health care system's disarray, it may well be the crisis that could pressure responsible national action to correct its serious shortfalls.

Scope of the problem

To date, AIDS has claimed more American lives than the Vietnam War. Over the course of the next four years in this country, AIDS will likely claim an additional 200,000 lives. It is estimated that by 1991 AIDS will be among the top ten leading causes of death in the United States. Nearly one-half of all AIDS cases reported to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) through May 1989 were diagnosed in people 30 to 39 years old. By 1991, ten years after the first AIDS cases were reported, AIDS will far exceed all other causes of death for people between the ages of 25 and 44 years. In testimony before the Commission, it was stated that nine times more adults around the world may develop AIDS during the 1990's than have developed AIDS during the 1980's.

The proportion of AIDS cases with intravenous drug use as a risk behavior has risen from 25 percent prior to 1985, to 30 percent in 1988. In New York City, alone, an estimated 100,000 intravenous drug users are HIV-infected.

The HIV epidemic is not just a New York City or a San Francisco problem as some would like to believe. While it is true that before 1985, 44 percent of all cases of AIDS were diagnosed in the New York City or San Francisco areas, by 1988 this proportion had fallen to 25 percent. By 1991, it is expected that 80 percent of new AIDS cases will come from outside New York City and San Francisco.

In increasing numbers, these new cases will be women and children. As one prominent pediatrician from New Jersey told the Commission, "As a society, we claim to protect and cherish our children, but in fact, we have placed women and children squarely in front of an onrushing HIV epidemic."

The cumulative incidence of AIDS cases is disproportionately higher in Blacks and Hispanics than in whites. Fully 25 percent of all persons with AIDS in the United States are African-American and the number is growing. In fact, there has been, as one witness told the Commission, "a disproportionate impact of HIV on disenfranchised populations, gays, the poor, racial minorities, women, adolescents and drug users—populations having already less than optimal access to quality health care. . . . The development of a national care and treatment strategy will require a rethinking of our past effort."

Access to care

Recent years have seen considerable advances in the development of new HIV-related drugs, including the prospect of treating HIV infection before symptoms develop. But scientific breakthroughs mean little unless the health care system can incorporate them and make them accessible to people in need.

The belief that Medicaid will pay for the health care needs of the growing number of low income people with HIV infection and AIDS is, as one expert witness told the Commission, a "Medicaid fantasy." According to a 1987 U.S. Hospital AIDS Survey, almost one quarter of all AIDS patients have no form of insurance, private or public. Less than 20 percent of the persons with AIDS treated in southern hospitals were covered by Medicaid, compared with 55 percent in the Northeast and 44 percent nationwide.

For the medically disenfranchised, there is no access to a system of care. For those who have no doctor, no clinic, no means of payment, access to health care services is most often through the emergency room door of one of the few hospitals in the community that treats people with HIV infection and AIDS. Five percent of the nation's hospitals treat fifty percent of the people with AIDS.

For those who are covered by Medicaid, access to care is better than for those who have no insurance at all. However, the obstacles to care under Medicaid funding can be insurmountable for many. One obstacle is the wide variation among states in Medicaid eligibility and scope of benefits. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA), under considerable public pressure, has struggled with mechanisms to speed new drugs to the market. Yet there is no requirement that Medicaid make even life-prolonging drugs such as zidovudine (AZT) available.

Another obstacle to needed care for persons with HIV infection and AIDS who qualify for Medicaid is the low reimbursement rates. Stunning examples of Medicaid physician compensation rates far below those by private insurance or Medicare were illustrated during the Commission hearing. For example, a new patient intermediate office visit in New York City is compensated by Blue Cross at $78, by Medicare at $80, and by Medicaid at $7. One witness indicated that physicians in New York with large AIDS practices were reluctant to refer Medicaid patients for specialty consultations because of low levels of reimbursement—levels so low that several physicians said the few dollars to stake per office visit were not worth the time and paperwork to bill the Medicaid program.

In summary, a series of problems have resulted in a health care system singularly unresponsive to the needs of HIV infected people: the initial appearance of HIV infection and AIDS in groups often shunned by the larger society—gay men, the poor, minorities, and intravenous drug users encouraged a slow response, a gross lack of training support for primary care physicians to treat people with HIV infection and AIDS, and serious disincentives for physicians to take Medicaid patients and perhaps poor people in general.

What is needed?

First, frank recognition that a crisis situation exists in many cities that will require extraordinary measures to overcome. Significant changes must be made not only in our health care system but in how we think about the system and the people it is designed to serve. As one witness told the Commission, it can no longer be "business as usual."

Second, the creation of a flexible, patient-oriented, comprehensive system of care, closely linking hospital, ambulatory, residential, and home care. Primary care physicians must be central to such a system. But if primary care doctors are to care for patients with HIV infection and AIDS, they need the financial, social and institutional support to assist them in managing complicated patients.

Third, consideration of the creation of regional centers or networks, of care, perhaps using the already existing regionalized hemophilia treatment program as a model. These centers would not serve as a replacement for the care provided by primary care physicians but would provide backup and consultation to help strengthen community based primary care.

It is essential that everyone be afforded early intervention and access to care. In addition, the availability of backup and consultation from appropriate specialists is required to provide the assistance and encouragement primary care doctors need to see more people with HIV infection and AIDS. Regional centers should also provide the appropriate link with the hospital when hospital services are needed.

Fourth, create units which can treat patients who have both HIV infection and drug addiction. The availability of drug treatment on request is essential for responding to the combined HIV and drug epidemic that imperils not only drug users but also their sexual partners and children.

Given the massive link between drug use and HIV infection, and the fact that there is an alarming increase in the number of new infections among intravenous drug users, the Commission wishes to go on record in expressing its surprise and disappointment that the White House National Drug Control Strategy mentions AIDS only four times in its ninety pages of text and not at all in its recommendations or discussions of how to allocate resources. The President's drug strategy simply must acknowledge and include HIV infection and AIDS.

Fifth, provide comprehensive health care services under one roof. Fragmented services create additional barriers to needed health care. Often mothers will seek health care services needed for their babies but are not able to then gain access to care for themselves. Health care services for women and children need to be provided in one place. For the homeless, housing and health care need to go hand-in-hand. This is true not only for those who are homeless today but for those who will become homeless tomorrow because of the HIV epidemic.

What will it cost?

Estimates of the national costs of direct medical care for persons with AIDS in 1991 range from $2.5 to 15.1 billion (in 1988 dollars). These estimates represent a small fraction of the total health care costs for the nation—from less than one to slightly more than three percent. We simply must be prepared to make these expenditures.

Who is responsible for action?

In carrying out its mandate, the National Commission on AIDS will attempt to delineate clearly the roles and responsibilities of various levels of government and the private sector in responding to and managing the HIV epidemic.

To date, there is no national policy or plan, and no national voice. Currently, as one witness testified, without the definition of roles each level of government points a finger at another and says it is their job. Clearly, managing the HIV epidemic is a responsibility which must be shared by all.

Without federal leadership the states have assumed various degrees of responsibility for planning, coordination and the provision of care. Likewise some local governments have played key roles in determining how patient services could be provided and in demonstrating important models for service delivery.

The role of the private sector voluntary and professional AIDS service organizations has been all important in managing the HIV epidemic to date. Foundations and corporations have also been important and their roles need better recognition and definition.

"We must," the Commission was told, "move swiftly to bring the missing players to the table . . . this includes a greater presence of our federal, state and local governments in terms of leadership, financing and service delivery. It includes the support and cooperation of the insurance industry, employers, physicians and other medical providers, and last but profit-wise not least, the pharmaceutical industry as well."

Responding to the challenge to bring the "missing players to the table," the National Commission on AIDS intends to do just that in hearings, working groups and other forums that can swiftly translate the facts into action and hold us all accountable for the national strategy that is long overdue. The time has come to define exactly what needs to be done, and measure how far we have come, and how much farther we still have to go.

On behalf of all the members of the National Commission on AIDS, we look forward to being able to continue to bring important information to your attention.

Sincerely,

DAVID D. ROGERS, M.D.,
Vice Chairman.
JUNE E. OSBORN, M.D.,
Chairman.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME,

Washington DC, April 24, 1990.

President, GEORGE BUSH,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR PRESIDENT BUSH: We much appreciated your meeting with us on March 29 and your historic speech that same day.

In our continuing effort to bring important and urgent matters to your attention, and to the attention of Congress, enclosed is a second report on the HIV epidemic from the National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS). Again, it contains a short series of recommendations for swift action.

Sincerely,

JUNE E. OSBORN, M.D.,
Chairman.
DAVID E. ROGERS, M.D.,
Vice Chairman

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME, REPORT NO. 2

Introduction

On December 5, 1989, the National Commission on AIDS wrote to President Bush indicating that "significant changes must be made not only in our health care system but in how we think about the system and the people it is designed to serve." It was also the Commission's belief that a clear statement from the President indicating that in this crisis, care must be dispensed equitably, non-judgmentally, and without discrimination to all who had AIDS and HIV infection would do much to improve the climate and permit swifter progress in combatting this tragic epidemic.

On March 29, 1990, in a speech to a national meeting of business leaders the President responded to the Commission's call. In it he said:

"And for those who are living with HIV and AIDS, our response is clear: They deserve our compassion. They deserve our care. And they deserve more than a chance—they deserve a cure . . . In this Nation, in this decade, there is only one way to deal with an individual who is sick. With dignity, compassion, care, confidentiality, and without discrimination."

In addition to establishing a national standard for caring for people living with HIV infection and AIDS, the President outlined the challenge confronting all of us in the HIV epidemic.

"It is our duty to make certain that every American has the essential information needed to prevent the spread of HIV and AIDS. Because while the ignorant may discriminate against AIDS, AIDS won't discriminate among the ignorant."

"Once disease strikes—we don't blame those who are suffering. We don't spurn the accident victim who didn't wear a seatbelt. We don't reject the cancer patient who didn't quit smoking. We try to love them and care for them and comfort them. We do not fire them, or evict them, or cancel their insurance."

We congratulate the President on his important and historic statement. It sets the stage for expansion of efforts of critical importance if we are to genuinely contain the spread of the HIV epidemic. His call for more preventive education, vaccines and new therapies to improve the care for the increasing number of Americans who will fall ill with this disease moves this nation in the proper direction. Now the President's commitment needs translation into action.

Since 1981, more than 75,000 people have died of AIDS and the 1990's will be much worse than the 1980's. This second report from the National Commission on AIDS to the President and the Congress highlights another set of critical issues and focuses on the particular needs of communities most heavily impacted by the epidemic. It contains an additional five recommendations for swift action.

Overview

"Much in AIDS care is happening all over this nation. But like an orchestra without a conductor, we are all playing our own tune. Sometimes we harmonize, sometimes we don't . . . It's pretty tough without a conductor."

The above quote is from National Commission Member Diane Ahrens summarizing the testimony the Commission received at a Working Group Meeting in St. Paul, Minnesota. The call for leadership in response to the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) epidemic was heard repeatedly during the Commission's hearing in Southern California and again during our visit to New York City's homeless shelters and New Jersey's hospital and drug treatment programs.

We were told, "Governments must assume leadership in this crisis," and, "Leaders often must take unpopular stances and try that which has not been tried." And, we were reminded that Thomas Jefferson once said, "The care of human life and happiness is the first and only legitimate object to good government." The President's speech was an important initial step in this direction.

Commission findings

Nowhere was it more evident that the care of human life must be a priority for our government than in the streets of New York City. Here the estimates of the numbers of homeless vary from 20,000 to as many as 70,000. It is further estimated that 20 to 30 percent of the overall number of homeless individuals are HIV positive. Perhaps 10,000 have AIDS or HIV-related illness. They live in places that are beyond belief in their horror. We heard that the number of homeless in New York City now exceeds the number seen at the height of the great depression. "The new Calcutta" is a term now often applied to this, our premier city.

On February 26th, the Commission visited a variety of homeless "shelters"—ranging from subway tunnels to flophouses to an aging armory. At the armory, which can really best by described as a human warehouse, we stood on a balcony and saw stretched out below us nearly 900 tightly packed cots in a gloomy, cavernous old building. Each night the cots are filled with homeless men. The very great likelihood is that many of those huddled there (we visited on the coldest night of the year) were infected with HIV. While we were there two homeless men, showing their positive tuberculin skin tests to us, voiced their concern that—"people who are extra-susceptible to infections should never be sleeping in a place like this!"

Fort Washington Armory was not the only human catastrophe we witnessed. During our travels we heard about families not only broken but kept asunder by rigid visitation rules for addicted mothers—even those under treatment. We met women with HIV infection who sleep in shelters during the night and struggle to maintain their health (and their children) on the streets and in the shelters during the days. We heard about a supportive housing program that funds only 140 units when at least 2,400 could be filled immediately. We talked to teenagers who trade sex for drugs and money, putting themselves at risk for HIV infection everyday. Now referred to as "throwaway kids," these teenagers seek shelter not only from the cold but from the Hudson River piers and neighborhood streets where adults visiting from out of town, out of state, and, in some cases, out of the country, seek sex for $15 without a condom and $10 with one.

We met with outreach workers who go down into the subway tunnels day after day fighting a battle where they have no ammunition and, indeed, no battlefield on which to stand. The outreach workers hope that one day the "down under" people will come to one of the day programs offered in the Bowery where they can receive medical assessement, treatment and referrals. "Many homeless people are suspicious of promises made for better lives," staff of the Bowery Residence Committee (BRC) told the Commission." "Too often these promises have been broken." In fact, the promise of health care for many of the homeless HIV-infected population in New York's Bowery will be further delayed if, as we were told, the federal dollars are terminated.

In California, New York and New Jersey, we heard repeatedly about the "disaster relief" needed from the federal government for those cities hardest hit by the epidemic.

In Los Angeles, the Commission was deeply troubled by the hamstringing restrictions on the use of public dollars imposed by the elected local officials. Here local decision makers are prohibited from initiating the very efforts that could prevent further spread of the epidemic in a county with the second highest number of reported cases of AIDS in the United States.

In some areas of California there is absolutely no outpatient care available to people with HIV infection and AIDS. In yet other areas, there are six to eight week waits for outpatient services. "Outrage," the Commission was told, "is the only morally credible response."

In February of 1990, the Commission visited a drug treatment program in northern New Jersey. We were told that, this year, New Jersey received in excess of $6 million in federal funds to reduce its waiting list for drug treatment services. New Jersey created more than 1,000 new treatment slots with the funds, but the Commission was told these funds will run out at the end of September. When we asked what drug treatment programs would do when the one-year-only federal dollars run out the response was, "Serve more with less—just like we always to." New Jersey ranks fifth among the states in its reported number of AIDS cases and first in its proportions of cases among intravenous drug users, minorities, women and children.

Across the country, the Commission also heard tales of health care denied unless it required acute hospitalization, and we heard desperate pleas that something be done to insure that all hospitals participate equally in provision of under-reimbursed AIDS care, rather than continue the grossly disproportionate distribution resulting from the subtle "patient dumping" now apparently practiced all too frequently in too many parts of the country.

Summary

A lack of clear definition of government roles at all levels has hampered our national ability to organize health care services, to recruit and train human services personnel, to provide housing for the sick, to provide effective AIDS education and prevention programs, to provide coordinated, comprehensive substance abuse treatment and prevention and to develop sufficient monies to finance all of these efforts. All across the country there is a cry for leadership from the federal government and partnership between the different levels of government. There is no question that there have been creative and often heroic efforts at every level of government to address the HIV epidemic, but coordination of these efforts is the missing link to an effective national strategy.

We are increasingly convinced that one set of actions recommended in our first report must be swiftly implemented. A national plan, with clearly delineated responsibilities and agreement on the roles of federal, state and lcoal government and the private sector is essential and long overdue. If we are to respond effectively to the HIV epidemic we must have a clear cooperative plan and make responsibile use of the limited dollars available.

The National Commission on AIDS, therefore, makes the following recommendations:

1. The National Commission on AIDS will continue to recommend policy goals for a national plan. However, the Commission believes it is essential that a federal interagency mechanism be in place to coordinate a national plan. In this way, those who are ultimately responsible for the implementation will have an active role in its development.

2. Federal disaster relief or direct emergency relief is urgently needed to help states and localities most seriously impacted to provide the HIV prevention, treatment, care and support services now in short supply. The Commission strongly supports the efforts in Congress, now embodied in S. 2240, to address this need. The resources simply must be provided now or we will pay dearly later.

3. Housing is an absolutely vital component of any comprehensive effort to address the multiple problems posed by HIV infection and AIDS. While the Commission recognizes that coordination between the state and local government, with input from community based organizations, is essential to effectively respond to the homeless crisis, we also believe the federal government must take the lead in providing the dollars needed to respond to this overwhelming, indeed catastrophic, problem.

4. Government restrictions imposed on the use of education and prevention funds are seriously impeding HIV control. They are clearly serving to prolong the HIV epidemic and should be removed.

5. Because the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) guarantees protection against discrimination for people with HIV infection and AIDS, the National Commission on AIDS strongly urges the U.S. House of Representatives to pass the ADA in a swift and timely manner. State and local governments should pass laws forbidding discrimination in areas not covered by the ADA or other federal statutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. We are able to say now with a good deal of credibility that there are vast numbers of cases that are underreported and many of those, percentagewise, exist in parts of the country where the forms of discrimination against those individuals and facilities is more widespread than in others.

I will read just this. The full National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome said:

There is a dangerous, perhaps even growing, complacency in our country toward an epidemic that many people want to believe is over. Far from over, the epidemic is reaching crisis proportions among the young, the poor, women and many minority communities. In fact, the 1990's will be much worse than the 1980's. * * * There is no national plan for helping an already faltering health care system deal with the impact of the HIV epidemic.

Mr. President, I did include other relevant provisions in this part of the record.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEFLIN). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT ON NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO IRAN—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 118

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby report to the Congress on developments since the last report of November 14, 1989, concerning the national emergency with respect to Iran that was declared in Executive Order No. 12170, dated November 14, 1979, and matters relating to Executive Order No. 12613 of October 29, 1987. This report is submitted pursuant to section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1703(c)), and section 505(c) of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 (22 U.S.C. 2349aa-9). This report covers events through March 31, 1990, including those that occurred since the last report under Executive Order No. 12170, dated November 14, 1989. That report covered events through September 6, 1989.

1. Since the last report, there have been no amendments to the Iranian Assets Control Regulations, 31 C.F.R. Part 535 (the "IACRs"), or the Iranian Transactions Regulations, 31 C.F.R. Part 560 (the "ITRs"), administered by the Office of Foreign Assets Control ("FAC"). The major focus of licensing activity under the ITRs remains the importation of certain nonfungible Iranian-origin goods, principally carpets, which were located outside Iran before the embargo was imposed, and where no payment or benefit accrued to Iran after the effective date of the embargo. Since September 6, 1989, FAC has made 333 licensing determinations under the ITRs.

During the reporting period, the Customs Service has effected numerous seizures of Iranian-origin merchandise, primarily carpets, caviar, and pistachios, for violations of the Iranian Transactions Regulations. FAC and Customs Service investigations of these violations have resulted in forfeiture actions and imposition of civil monetary penalties amounting to $409,736. Numerous additional forfeiture and civil penalties actions are under review.

In the case of United States v. Ahmad Elyasian, the defendant was sentenced to 2 years' probation, a $3,000 fine, and the merchandise was forfeited. Criminal proceedings are pending in various jurisdictions involving several individuals and corporate entities. One arrest warrant is outstanding.

2. The Iran-United States Claims Tribunal (the "Tribunal"), established at The Hague pursuant to the Algiers Accords, continues to make progress in arbitrating the claims before it. Since the last report, the Tribunal has rendered 38 awards, for a total of 476 awards. Of that total, 341 have been awards in favor of American claimants: 210 of these were awards on agreed terms, authorizing and approving payments of settlements negotiated by the parties, and 131 were decisions adjudicated on the merits. The Tribunal has dismissed a total of 30 other claims on the merits and 65 for jurisdictional reasons. Of the 40 remaining awards, 2 were withdrawn and 38 were in favor of Iranian claimants. As of March 31, 1990, awards to successful American claimants from the Security Account held by the NV Settlement Bank stood at $1,296,219,879.08.

As of March 31, 1990, the Security Account has fallen below the required balance of $500 million 33 times. Iran has replenished the account 33 times, as required by the Algiers Accords, by transferring funds from the separate account held by the NV Settlement Bank in which interest on the Security Account is deposited. Iran has also replenished the account twice when it was not required by the Accords, for a total of 35 replenishments. This figure includes the transfer of $243 million to the Security Account on November 22, 1989, from Dollar Account No. 2 held at the Bank of England. The total amount in the Security Account as of March 31, 1990, was $643,268,583.07. The amount in the interest account as of March 31, 1990, was $118,520,896.63. The aggregate amount that has been transferred from the interest account to the Security Account is $695,648,999.39.

3. The Tribunal continues to make progress in the arbitration of claims of U.S. nationals for $250,000 or more. Over 70 percent of the nonbank claims have now been disposed of through adjudication, settlement, or voluntary withdrawal, leaving 145 such claims on the docket. The largest of the large claims, the progress of which has been slowed by their complexity, are finally being decided, sometimes with sizable damage awards to the U.S. claimant. Since the last report, eight large claims have been decided.

4. The Tribunal continues to process claims of U.S. nationals against Iran of less than $250,000 each. As of March 31, 1990, a total of 432 small claims have been resolved, 38 of them since the last report, as a result of decisions on the merits, awards on agreed terms, or Tribunal orders. Eight contested claims have been decided since the last report, raising the total number of contested claims decided to 36, 18 of which favored the American claimant. These decisions will help in establishing guidelines for the adjudication or settlement of similar claims. To date, American claimants have also received 72 awards on agreed terms reflecting settlements of claims under $250,000. The Tribunal's current small claims docket includes approximately 200 active cases.

5. In coordination with concerned government agencies, the Department of State continues to present U.S. Government claims against Iran, as well as responses by the U.S. Government to claims brought against it by Iran. Since the last report, the Department has filed pleadings in eight government-to-government claims. The Department defended a claim concerning standby letters of credit brought by Iran against the United States in a hearing before the Tribunal. In addition, 15 claims have been settled.

6. Since the last report, nine bank syndicates have completed negotiations with Bank Markazi Jomhouri Islami Iran ("Bank Markazi," Iran's central bank) and have been paid a total of $2,403,504.53 for interest accruing for the period January 1-18, 1981 ("January Interest"). These payments were made from Dollar Account No. 1 at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York ("FRBNY"). Moreover, under the April 13, 1988, agreement between the FRBNY and Bank Markazi, the FRNBY returned $1,748,999.00 of Iranian funds to Bank Markazi. This amount includes settlement amounts for two syndicates that made no claim to the funds held on their behalf in Dollar Account No. 1. All such funds were consequently returned to Bank Markazi. That transfer represents the excess of amounts reserved in Dollar Account No. 1 to pay off each bank syndicate with a claim for January Interest against Bank Markazi.

On November 3, 1989, the United States and Iran agreed to the disposition of $810 million in Dollar Account No. 2 at the Bank of England that was not needed to pay remaining claims against that account. Pursuant to that agreement, on November 22, 1989, $243 million was transferred to the Security Account and $567 million was returned to Iran. The latter payment was made in accordance with the Algiers Accords, which calls for the return of excess funds in Dollar Account No. 2 to Iran.

7. Since the last report, there have been no amendments to the Iranian Assets Control Regulations, 31 C.F.R. Part 535, administered by the Office of Foreign Assets Control. There have been no amendments to the Iranian Transactions Regulations, 31 C.F.R. Part 560, since their publication on November 17, 1988.

8. The situation reviewed above continues to implicate important diplomatic, financial, and legal interests of the United States and its nationals and presents an unusual challenge to the national security and foreign policy of the United States. The Iranian Assets Control Regulations issued pursuant to Executive Order No. 12170 continue to play an important role in structuring our relationship with Iran and in enabling the United States properly to implement the Algiers Accords. Similarly, the Iranian Transactions Regulations issued pursuant to Executive Order No. 12613 continue to advance important objectives in combatting international terrorism. I shall continue to exercise the powers at my disposal to deal with these problems and will continue to report periodically to the Congress on significant developments.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 14, 1990.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 1:29 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3910) to require the Secretary of Education to conduct a comprehensive national assessment of programs carried out with assistance under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3 to the bill (H.R. 1805) to amend title 5, United States Code, to allow Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments rather than through annuity withholdings if the annuity is insufficient to cover the required withholdings and to make a technical correction relating to the life insurance program; it disagrees to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to the bill; and it agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1594) to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the People's Republic of Hungary for 3 years; it insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints the following as managers of the conference on the part of the House:

From the Committee on Ways and Means, for consideration of the House amendment to the Senate amendment, and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, Mr. GIBBONS, Mr. JENKINS, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. PEASE, Mr. RUSSO, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. ARCHER, Mr. VANDER JAGT, Mr. CRANE, and Mr. FRENZEL.

As additional conferees, soley for consideration of title II of the House amendment to the Senate amendment, and for title II of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. PICKLE and Mr. SCHULZE.

From the Committee on Agriculture, for consideration of titles VI and VII of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. DE LA GARZA, Mr. VOLKMER, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. OLIN, Mr. STALLINGS, Mr. MORRISON of Washington, Mr. ROBERT F. SMITH, and Mr. HERGER.

From the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, for consideration of titles VI and VII of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. UDALL, Mr. VENTO, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. DEFAZIO, Mr. MCDERMOTT, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. CRAIG, and Mr. DENNY SMITH.

From the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for consideration of titles VI and VII of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. FASCELL, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. GEJDENSON, Mr. KOSTMAYER, Mr. FEIGHAN, Mr. BROOMFIELD, Mr. ROTH, and Mr. MILLER of Washington.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 1846. An act to make miscellaneous amendments to Indian laws, and for other purposes;

S. 2300. An act to provide financial assistance to the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, CA, for the education programs of the Museum of Tolerance; and

H.R. 2364. An act to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to authorize appropriations for the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, and for other purposes.

The enrolled bills were subsequently signed by the Acting President pro tempore [Mr. DASCHLE].

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, May 14, 1990, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1846. An act to make miscellaneous amendments to Indian laws, and for other purposes;

S. 2300. An act to provide financial assistance to the Simon Wiesenthal Central in Los Angeles, CA, for the education programs of the Museum of Tolerance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-483. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Appropriations.

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, in the 1930s and 1940s, the Civilian Conservation Corps engaged in many public works including constructing public buildings; and

"Whereas, many of these buildings are now considered historic buildings and quite a few of them are still in use in public parks such as Itasca State Park and other public areas; and

"Whereas, the buildings are now fifty and sixty years old and in need of repair and restoration; and

"Whereas, the cost of such an undertaking is great, but these buildings are important public resources and should at all costs be preserved as part of the American heritage; Now, therefore,

"Be it Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota that it urges the President and the Congress of the United States to appropriate the necessary funds to aid in the restoration and preservation of the Civilian Conservation Corps buildings.

"Be it Further Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate of the State of Minnesota is directed to prepare certified copies of this memorial and transmit them to the President of the United States, the President and Secretary of the United States Senate, the Speaker and Chief Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, and Minnesota's Senators and Representatives in Congress."

POM-484. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky; to the Committee on Armed Services.

"CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

"A concurrent resolution requesting the United States Congress, the President of the United States and the United States Secretary of Defense to replace cerain aircraft of the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing of the United States National Guard with more modern aircraft.

"Whereas, the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing of the United States Air National Guard based at Standiford Field, Louisville, Kentucky, is operating in and over the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accomplishing its principal military training and total force missions in the defense of the United States and in the humanitarian service of its people; and

"Whereas, the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky supports the efforts of the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing to improve and update their aircraft fleet through assignment of newer C-130H model aircraft to replace the present 30 year old C-130B aircraft; and

"Whereas, the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing has a consistent record of excellence in flight operations, aircraft maintenance and unselfish service to the United States and its allies; and

"Whereas, the members of the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing are largely citizens of the Commonwealth of Kentucky and represent an important segment of this state's community; and

"Whereas, it is in the best interest of this state and the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing, and its members, that the C-130B model aircraft now being flown be replaced with C-130H model aircraft to ensure the continued safe operations of the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing; Now, therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, the House of Representatives concurring therein:

"Section 1. That the United States Congress, the President of the United States and the United States Secretary of Defense are requested to take the appropriate procurement action in fiscal year 1991 to replace the C-130B model aircraft now being flown by the 123rd Tactical Airlift Wing with C-130H model aircraft.

"Section 2. That the Clerk of the Senate shall send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the United States Department of Defense, the President pro tempore of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Chairmen of the House and Senate Armed Services and Appropriation Committees, and each member of the United States congresssional delegation from Kentucky."

POM-485. A resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on the Budget.

"SENATE RESOLUTION 219

"Whereas, the Federal Highway Trust Fund was established in 1956 for the specific purpose of financing improvements to highway systems and the users fees collected into this fund are allowed to be spent for transportation purposes only; and

"Whereas, in recent years the Highway Trust Fund has been made a part of the United Federal Budget, thereby subjecting it to arbitrary expenditure ceilings for the purpose of reducing the national deficit, despite the fact that Trust Fund expenditures do not contribute to the federal deficit; and

"Whereas, the imposition of such expenditure limitations has resulted in the accumulation of over $9 billion in unapportioned highway funds; and

"Whereas, the unapportioned funds and withheld interest in the Highway Trust Fund have been borrowed for non-highway related purposes and the cash balance has been replaced by U.S. Treasury notes against the General Fund: Now, therefore,

"Be it Resolved by the Senate of the Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Section of 1990, That the United States Congress is requested to remove the Highway Trust Fund from the Unified Federal Budget and to protect the Trust Fund from predatory proposals to divert highway user revenues to programs unrelated to the transportation purposes for which it was established; and

"Be it Further Resolved, That the United States Congress is requested to have those funds repaid to the Highway Trust Fund which have been borrowed from it and that the excess funds accumulated be paid out for highway projects over a five-year period, beginning in Fiscal Year 1992; and

"Be it Further Resolved, That U.S. Senators Daniel K. Inouye and Spark M. Matsunaga, and U.S. Representatives Daniel K. Akaka and Patricia Saiki take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that the foregoing requests are implemented; and

"Be it Further Resolved, That certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States the Secretary of the Department of Transportation, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and Hawaii's Congressional Delegation."

POM-486. A resolution adopted by the Municipal Council of the township of Wayne, New Jersey; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

POM-487. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 79

"Whereas, The federal government has spent two years and committed $6,500,000 on an airport study for the location of a new international airport off the southern tip of Lake Michigan;

"Whereas, The Gary Regional Airport is one of four sites that have been included in that study since it began, the other three being south of Chicago, in Illinois;

"Whereas, Recently, when promoting a fifth site for the proposed airport, the mayor of Chicago referred to Gary as "deadhead space", while a spokesman for the mayor recalled that FAA officials have denigrated Gary Regional's suitability for airport development;

"Whereas, It has been reported that United States Transportation Secretary Sam Skinner, who is from Chicago, has given verbal support to the late entry of a fourth site in Illinois for the location of the new airport, even though $6,500,000 has been committed by the FAA to a study that confines consideration to the other four sites; and

"Whereas, Gary Regional Airport is ideally located for the convenience of the people in northwestern Indiana and northeastern Illinois and is an area in great need of economic development; Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, the Senate Concurring:

"Section 1: That we urge United States Transportation Secretary Sam Skinner and the Federal Aviation Administration to disavow the inflammatory remarks of the mayor of Chicago concerning Gary, Indiana.

"Section 2: That we urge Secretary Skinner to make an unqualified statement that the plan of the mayor of Chicago will not be considered because it was suggested more than two years too late, and that the site chosen will be one of the four that have been under consideration since 1986, if not earlier.

"Section 3: That we urge Secretary Skinner and the Federal Aviation Administration to select Gary Regional Airport as the site for the new international airport south of Lake Michigan.

"Section 4: That copies of this resolution be sent to the United States Transportation Secretary, Sam Skinner, the Federal Aviation Administration, the presiding officers and the majority and minority leaders of both houses of Congress, and to each member of the Indiana Congressional Delegation."

POM-488. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

"SENATE RESOLUTION 55

"Whereas, the State of Hawaiii has a fiduciary responsibility to native Hawaiians as defined by the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920, as amended, and the Statehood Admissions Act of 1959; and

"Whereas, the Federal Government has a special relationship with native Hawaiians dating back to its relationship with the Kingdom of Hawaii and its last reigning monarch, Queen Lili'uokalani; and

"Whereas, the Federal Government has recognized native Hawaiians as native Americans because they are aboriginal peoples of what is not a member State of the United States; and

"Whereas, the Federal Government has passed numerous acts on behalf of native Hawaiians addressing specifically identified needs and concerns; and

"Whereas, one of the great needs of native Hawaiians yet to be addressed is housing; and

"Whereas, the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920, as amended, is the first compact signed between the Federal Government and native Hawaiians and its purpose is the rehabilitation of native Hawaiians, which includes the educational, economic, political, social, and cultural processes by which the general welfare and conditions of native Hawaiians are thereby improved and perpetuated; and

"Whereas, the Hawaiian Homes Commission and the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands have made a commitment to focus their energies on building homes for native Hawaiians and developing viable contributing communities to island society; and

"Whereas, the State of Hawaii has provided substantial support to the Hawaiian Homes Commission and the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands to carry out this program; now, therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 1990; That the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to enact legislation so that the Federal Government can become equal partners in the Hawaiian Homes Commissions' plans to build homes and develop viable native Hawaiian communities throughout the State of Hawaii; and

"Be it further resolved, That Hawaii's congressional delegation is urged to seek the support of pertinent federal agencies in this endeavor; and

"Be it further resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, Hawaii's congressional delegation, the Governor of the State of Hawaii, and to the Chairman of the Hawaiian Homes Commission."

POM-489. A joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 90-12

"Whereas, There is currently pending before the United States Congress legislation to establish additional wilderness areas in Colorado; and

"Whereas, The benefits of designating wilderness areas must be balanced against the consequences of such designation upon the economic and social welfare of the citizens of Colorado; and

"Whereas, The designation of wilderness areas may significantly affect the economic health of this state by adversely impacting private and public property interests and rights in land, water, and mineral resources, by establishing barriers to access to such property interests, by preempting existing private property rights, and in other ways; and

"Whereas, Readily available and reliable water supplies are absolutely vital to the health and economic development of the people of this state; and

"Whereas, Uncertainty relative to the existence of implied federal reserved water rights for existing and new wilderness areas clouds property titles, discourages natural resource management and development, and disrupts the State's water rights administration system, resulting in economic stagnation and unproductive litigation; and

"Whereas, The recognition of federal reserved water rights for wilderness areas in Colorado, be such rights expressed or implied, damages the integrity of the property system in water established by the Colorado Constitution and the doctrine of prior appropriation set forth therein, and impedes the ability of Colorado to effectively manage and fully utilize its valuable water resources; and

"Whereas, The laws of Colorado and the instream flow program of the Colorado Water Conservation Board afford adequate protection for any wilderness values which the United States may wish to secure for wilderness areas in Colorado; and

"Whereas, National forest lands are foreclosed from multiple use while they remain in wilderness study status, resulting in loss of economic and recreational opportunities, and sufficient time has passed for study of the suitability of such lands for wilderness designation; Now, therefore,

"Be It Resolved by the Senate of the Fifty-seventh General Assembly of the State of Colorado, the House of Representatives concurring herein:

"That Congress is urged to adopt only such wilderness legislation as embodies the following principles:

"(1) Wilderness legislation must fully protect private property rights:

"(2) Boundaries for wilderness areas must be drawn so as to include only those areas which are suitable for such designation, while excluding conflicting uses within such boundaries to the extent possible;

"(3) Reasonable rights of access for private property must be reconfirmed and maintained;

"(4) Implied federal reserved water rights for all existing and new wilderness areas must be expressly disclaimed;

"(5) Any water rights for wilderness areas in this state must be obtained pursuant to the laws of the State of Colorado; and

"(6) Public lands which have been studied for possible designation as wilderness areas and which are not being designated as wilderness areas at this time should be released from study status and returned to multiple use.

"Be It Further Resolved, "That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, each Member of Congress from the State of Colorado, the Chairman of the United States Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, and the Chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives."

POM-490. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin; to the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

"JOINT RESOLUTION 80

"Whereas, on May 8, 1989, a U.S. district court in California struck down the U.S. department of veterans affairs regulations issued in response to P.L. 98-542, the Veterans' Dioxin and Radiation Exposure Compensation Standards Act, requiring the U.S. department of veterans affairs to establish standards for disability compensation for veterans suffering from diseases associated with exposure to agent orange; and

"Whereas, that decision confirms what Vietnam veterans, scientific studies and veterans organizations have recognized for the last decade, that despite delays, denials and deceptions, there is sufficient evidence to warrant compensation to veterans injured as a result of their exposure to agent orange; and

"Whereas, those delays have caused additional suffering and distress among Vietnam veterans and their families; and

"Whereas, the principal findings of the district court were that the cause and effect standard the U.S. department of veterans affairs has required veterans to meet for agent orange-related claims is unfair and unprecedented, that the U.S. department of veterans affairs has failed to give veterans the benefit of the doubt mandated by federal law and afforded other veterans when considering agent-orange claims and that the U.S. department of veterans affairs must reopen the cases of more than 30,000 veterans who were denied compensation under the unlawful regulations; and

"Whereas, the district court ruling offers the secretary of the U.S. department of veterans affairs and the federal administration a remarkable opportunity to break with the unfortunate policy of the past and assume a positive leadership role on the issue of agent orange; and

"Whereas, P.L. 95-542, designed to make compensation more accessible to disabled agent orange veterans, gives the U.S. secretary of the department of veterans affairs the power to amend the department's compensation regulations to include any diseases that may be associated with exposure to agent orange; and

"Whereas, studies have shown increased incidences of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and soft tissue sarcoma among veterans exposed to agent orange and others exposed to components of agent orange; therefore, be it

"Resolved by the assembly, the senate concurring, That the Wisconsin legislature urges congress to pass legislation including these 2 forms of cancer as compensable diseases for veterans exposed to agent orange; and, be it further

"Resolved, That the Wisconsin legislature urges the secretary of the U.S. department of veterans affairs to include on the list of compensable diseases under P.L. 98-542, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and soft tissue sarcoma; and, be it further

"Resolved, That the U.S. department of veterans affairs and congress allow compensation for additional conditions as the evidence accumulates; and, be it further

"Resolved, That the chief of the assembly shall transmit copies of this resolution to the president of the U.S. senate, the speaker of the U.S. house of representatives, each member of the congressional delegation from this state and the secretary of the U.S. department of veterans affairs."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. BIDEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and an amendment to the title:

S. 396: A bill to amend title 11 of the United States Code, the bankruptcy code, regarding swap agreements (Rept. No. 101-285).

S. 994: A bill to amend the Clayton Act regarding interlocking directorates and officers (Rept. No. 101-286).

By Mr. BIDEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 995: A bill to amend the Clayton and Sherman Acts regarding antitrust procedures (Rept. No. 101-287).

By Mr. BIDEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment:

S. 996: A bill to amend the Clayton Act regarding damages for the United States (Rept. No. 101-288).

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. PELL, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BAUCUS, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, and Mr. BURDICK):

S. 2617. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to make various improvements in existing scholarship and loan repayment programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. HEFLIN (for himself and Mr. SHELBY):

S. 2618. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to establish the appropriate grade and rates of pay for certain administrative law judges; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. GLENN:

S. 2619. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for coverage of bone mass measurements for certain individuals under part B of the Medicare Program; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. HEFLIN:

S. 2620. A bill to provide for a 5-year intercircuit conflict resolution demonstration within the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S.J. Res. 313. Joint resolution designating October 3, 1990, as "National Teacher Appreciation Day;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. PELL, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BAUCUS, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, and Mr. BURDICK):

S. 2617. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to make various improvements in existing scholarship and loan repayment programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS REVITALIZATION ACT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today, on behalf of myself and Senators HATCH, HARKIN, PELL, COCHRAN, ADAMS, KASSEBAUM, BAUCUS, and BURDICK, I am introducing legislation to extend the authority of the National Health Service Corps for an additional 4 years. This reauthorization will revitalize this vital public health program and establish the basis on which to increase funding over the next few years to achieve this goal. The great need for health professionals in many regions of the country makes it essential that we give this measure a high priority.

For 20 years the National Health Service Corps has served as a major source of medical help for communities and populations which have been unable to recruit and retain physicians, nurses, and other health providers on their own. The corps' mission has always been the same, to improve and maintain the health status of medically underserved populations by addressing the shortage and geographical maldistribution of physicians. The Scholarship Program of the National Health Service Corps, in which students receive scholarships to medical school in exchange for a minimum of 2 years of service in designated shortage areas, has been the principal source of providers who have served in these areas and has enabled many minority and disadvantaged students to attend medical schools.

Despite its success in providing access to care for millions of medically underserved people, the National Health Service Corps was one of the social programs targeted for elimination during the Reagan years. Two national health manpower studies provided the rationale for the phasing out of the corps. It was thought that a physician surplus would force physicians to migrate to isolated rural communities and inner-city underserved areas. The number of new corps scholarship awards were sharply reduced and the program was scheduled for termination. While the number of new scholarships peaked at 2,380 in 1979, no new awards were made in fiscal year 1989. The total field strength of health physicians declined from 3,127 in 1986 to 1,920 in 1989.

The shrinking of the National Health Service Corps Scholarship Program could hardly have come at a worse time. The anticipated overflow of physicians into underserved areas never occurred. Instead, we are faced with a major shortage of primary care physicians and obstetrician/gynecologists. The Public Health Service estimates that 4,000 physicians are needed to provide primary care services in 1,955 health manpower shortage areas. Less populated rural areas are experiencing particular difficulty in attracting health care professionals. In the United States as a whole, an average of 163.3 physicians are available for every 100,000 citizens, but only 53 physicians exist for the same number of people in counties with populations of less than 10,000. Whether because of geographic isolation, extreme poverty, or deterioration of local health systems resulting from general economic decline, certain areas have not benefited from the increased supply of physicians. In 1988, the National Health Service Corps identified 500 to 600 communities where providers refuse to locate for prolonged periods, including frontier areas and hard-core inner cities.

The legislation we are introducing today will reinvigorate the National Health Service Corps and restore its capacity to serve populations with limited access to quality health care.

This effort will add new categories of health professionals to the ranks of the corps and improve both the recruitment and retention of service providers. Physicians are desperately needed in many communities. But there is also a great need for trained nurses, nurse practitioners certified nurse midwives, and physician's assistants. Studies by the Office of Technology Assessment and the Institute of Medicine in the 1980's have demonstrated that midlevel providers are capable of delivering many services in their respective scopes of practice that are equal in quality to those provided by physicians. The OTA report indicated that physician's assistants and nurse practitioners can perform 60 to 80 percent of the tasks done by primary care physicians. By adding such providers to the programs of the National Health Service Corps, we can increase access to health care and guarantee a mix of providers that responds to the wide range of needs in every community.

My bill establishes new incentives for joining and staying in the corps. Career advisers will be designated by the corps to maintain contact with scholarship recipients during their training, and keep them informed of corps activities and events at their future practice sites. The career advisers are essential to the development of a professionalized corps with members who proudly look forward to serving instead of viewing it solely as an obligation.

Corps members will gain the opportunity to hold faculty appointments at health professions schools, participate in exchange programs with teaching institutions, and earn leave time to attend professional conferences. We also propose the creation of respite squads to provide services while established corps providers are participating in career development activities or are on vacation. The respite squads would be particularly helpful in rural areas where solo practitioners with large responsibilities and no time off are often located.

Corps assignees would also be permitted to join the commissioned corps of the U.S. Public Health Service and benefit from the privileges that this uniformed service offers. Scholarship-obligated medical students would be able to begin a service obligation in the third year of a residency program, on a part-time basis.

All of these incentives will attract practitioners into areas they might otherwise not have considered, and will alleviate the geographic, professional and social isolation that practitioners frequently feel.

The bill also identifies minorities and the disadvantaged, as well as certain midlevel and mental health providers, as priority applicants to both the scholarship and loan repayment programs, since such students are more likely to serve populations in their socioeconomic groups. I would like to commend Senator ADAMS for his persistent efforts to assure that minorities and the economically disadvantaged get the priority they deserve in this program.

In anticipation of this proposed revitalization of the National Health Service Corps, some administrative adjustments must be made to assure successful implementation of the bill's provisions. In the 1970's, the corps expanded too quickly, without a corresponding increase in programming staff, and the administration of the program, was undermined. Our bill allows an increase in the number of administrative staff to carry out the new initiatives. At the same time, we are asking for a General Accounting Office review of the program by 1993 to help the corps identify any administrative and managerial deficiencies and recommend solutions.

In order to support these innovations, substantial new funding will be required. We envision at least a doubling in funds for this program in the next fiscal year and a tripling in the year after. The authorization levels have been defined on a "such sums" basis to allow for this increase.

The mission and purpose for which Congress established the National Health Service Corps are as relevant today as they were in 1970. No new bureaucracy is needed, just a rejuvenation of existing mechanisms and a tailoring of the program to the needs of the 1990's. This bill represents a worthwhile effort to help the National Health Service Corps fulfill its mission and provide new sources of urgently needed health care providers to populations and communities across the Nation. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this essential legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my remarks, the bill, and the bill summary be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2617

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Health Service Corps Revitalization Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the mission of the National Health Service Corps is to improve access to health care services for medically underserved populations by addressing the geographic maldistribution of physicians and other health care personnel;

(2) over the years, more than 13,000 health care providers have been placed in communities that greatly needed their services with the peak field strength of the National Health Service Corps occurring in 1986 with 3,127 providers;

(3) the key contributor to this field strength were the individuals who had received medical school scholarships in return for a commitment to serve with such Corps;

(4) the number of scholarship awards by the National Health Service Corps peaked in 1979 when 2,380 were awarded;

(5) due to a planned phase out of the scholarship program combined with reductions in funding, the number of scholarships and commitments to serve in the Corps declined steadily throughout the 1980's, and between 1986 and 1989, the number of providers in place around the country declined by over 1000;

(6) the cut back described in paragraph (5) was based on the theory that a physician surplus would drive physicians into underserved communities, but the anticipated overflow of physicians into underserved areas did not happen and many communities lost their sole provider of health services due to the cutback in this Federal program;

(7) inner city and rural communities face an especially serious deterioration in the availability of health services that has been greatly exacerbated by the decline in the strength of the Corps with the situation reaching a crisis level in some communities;

(8) as of December 1987, the Department of Health and Human Services had designated the following number of health personnel shortage areas—

(A) 786 dental shortage areas;

(B) 562 psychiatry shortage areas; and

(C) 1,944 primary care shortage areas;

(9) it would take more than 4,000 physicians to fill the primary care shortage areas and eliminate the designations referred to in paragraph (8);

(10) approximately 50 percent of the medically indigent population in the shortage areas reside in rural areas and rural areas constitute roughly 70 percent of the shortage area designations;

(11) in 1987, to begin to address the shortage created by the cuts in the scholarship program, a new loan repayment program for health professionals was established;

(12) the loan repayment program referred to in paragraph (11) was offered to doctors and nurses with the response making it clear that additional funds were needed for such program;

(13) the number of mid-level health practitioners, including nurse practitioners and physicians assistants, in underserved areas, and especially in rural areas, has increased significantly in recent years, and such practitioners have provided an important source of care when physician services are not available and have often been complementary to existing physician services;

(14) a mix of providers that include nurses, nurse practitioners, certified nurse midwives, physicians assistants, social workers, mental health workers, and physicians is needed in order to provide for the full range of services needed by underserved communities;

(15) though loan repayment may represent a useful incentive to bring such health personnel to underserved areas, scholarships are specially needed in order to successfully recruit nurses, certified nurse midwives, and nurse practitioners to serve in such areas; and

(16) due to the high turnover of health professionals in underserved areas, improved methods of retention are needed to keep existing National Health Service Corps personnel in underserved communities to which such personnel are assigned to serve.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to increase the supply of vital health professionals to urban and rural underserved health professional shortage areas;

(2) to halt proposals to phase out the National Health Service Corps scholarship program and to increase the number of scholarships and loan repayments for physicians and other providers to address the serious decline in the availability of health professionals in underserved areas; and

(3) to revitalize the National Health Service Corps by improving the recruitment and retention of providers and by diversifying the Corps so that it includes mid-level practitioners, social workers, and mental health professionals.

SEC. 3. PUBLICITY AND RECRUITMENT.

Section 338A(c)(2) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l(c)(2)) is amended by inserting before the period the following: ", including a statement of all factors considered in the selection of applicants and the assignment of corps members".

SEC. 4. SCHOLARSHIP AND LOAN REPAYMENT PROGRAM PRIORITIES.

(a) SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—Section 338A(d) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (2)(C), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) to applications from individuals who are legal residents of health manpower shortage areas or who, at the time of the submission of the application, reside in a health manpower shortage area;

"(4) to applications from disadvantaged individuals and minorities;

"(5) to applications from individuals who have demonstrated an interest in providing primary care service for the underserved through the participation of such individuals in clinical programs;

"(6) to applications from nurses, nurse midwives, nurse practitioners, physicians assistants, social workers, and counseling professionals; and

"(7) to applications from physicians in the primary care fields.".

(b) LOAN REPAYMENT PROGRAM.—Section 338B(d) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l-1(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) to applications from individuals who are legal residents of health manpower shortage areas or who, at the time of the submission of the application, reside in a health manpower shortage area;

"(4) to applications from disadvantaged individuals and minorities;

"(5) to applications from individuals who have demonstrated an interest in providing primary care service for the underserved through the participation of such individuals in clinical programs;

"(6) to applications from nurses, nurse midwives, nurse practitioners, physicians assistants, social workers, and counseling professionals; and

"(7) to applications from physicians in the primary care fields.".

SEC. 5. INCENTIVES AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

Subpart III of part D of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 338K. INCENTIVES FOR RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish and implement a program of incentives, as described in subsection (b), to improve National Health Service Corps recruitment and retention.

"(b) INCENTIVES.—

"(1) PRIORITY SCHOOLS.—The Secretary shall give priority in the awarding of scholarships and loans to those schools and training programs that can demonstrate a record of success in training, or a comprehensive effort to train, individuals to enter primary care fields, and to serve underserved areas.

"(2) MATERIALS.—The Secretary shall distribute materials that encourage the financial aid offices of medical, nursing, and social work schools, primary care oriented medical school departments, and residency programs to inform all students and residents about the Scholarship and Loan Repayment Program.

"(3) STUDENT TRAINING AND EXTERNSHIP PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall make grants and enter into contracts with health professions institutions and public and private nonprofit entities for the conduct of programs that would expose and train health professions students throughout their academic careers to clinical settings administered by countries, States, or the Public Health Service that provide primary care services to medically underserved areas.

"(4) CAREER ADVISOR.—The Secretary shall appoint individuals to serve within the National Health Service Corps as career advisors to assist Corps members from the time such members enter into a contract with the Corps until such members complete their obligation.

"(5) FELLOWSHIPS IN PRIMARY CARE.—The Secretary, in conjunction with eligible residency programs and other training programs, shall establish fellowship programs for physicians, nurse practitioners, nurse midwives, and physician assistants who have an interest and commitment to primary care, to enable such health professionals to gain exposure and expertise in the delivery of medical services to underserved populations in health professional shortage areas.

"(6) FACULTY APPOINTMENTS.—The Secretary shall encourage the provision of faculty appointments for Corps providers at health professional schools, to provide access for such providers, and the communities they serve, to university facilities and to make such providers a source of expertise for health professions students.

"(7) EXCHANGE PROGRAMS, ETC.—The Secretary shall establish exchange programs with teaching centers, leave time for professional conferences, sabbatical leave, and traveling medical consultation teams to increase opportunities for patient case presentations and discussions and research by Corps personnel.

"(8) COMMISSIONED CORPS.—The Secretary shall establish a program to provide Corps members the opportunity to join the Commissioned Corps of the United States Public Health Service and take advantage of membership privileges such as—

"(A) ability to move to different parts of the country without losing accrued benefits (such as pay status, saved vacation and sick leave, and acquired time toward retirement);

"(B) access to military base privileges (such as athletic facilities, commissary and exchange stores); and

"(C) free use of military space available travel.

"(9) JOB SHARING, ETC.—The Secretary shall establish options, such as job sharing and couple recruitment, and other flexible work programs for Corps members.

"(10) RESPITE SQUAD.—The Secretary shall establish a 'respite squad' that shall consist of mid-career health professionals who would work in underserved areas on a short-term basis, such as a two-week period or a one day a month basis.

"(11) INDEPENDENT RECRUITMENT.—The Secretary shall establish an independent recruitment program to recruit individuals, who are not participants in the Scholarship or Loan Repayment Programs, to become Corps members.

"(c) TRACKING AND EVALUATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall track and evaluate the incentive programs established under subsection (b), to determine the effectiveness of such programs in increasing the participation of individuals in the programs established under this part, and in the continuing participation of such individuals in such programs.

"(2) EFFECTIVENESS.—The Secretary shall evaluate the effectiveness of the programs established in paragraphs (3) and (5) of subsection (b) in influencing the specialty choice and practice setting of program participants.

"(3) REPORTING.—Not later than March 1 of every even numbered year, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report concerning the evaluations conducted under paragraphs (1) and (2).

"SEC. 338L. INCREASE IN STAFF.

"The Secretary shall ensure that the administrative staff of the National Health Service Corps is adequate and appropriate to administer the programs established and operated under this subpart. The Secretary shall increase such staff if such increase is necessary to effectively administer such programs.".

SEC. 6. DEPENDENT ALLOWANCE.

(a) SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—Section 338A(g)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l(g)(1)) is amended—

(1) in clause (ii) of subparagraph (A), by striking out "and";

(2) in subparagraph (B), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) a reasonable dependent allowance as determined by the Secretary.".

(b) LOAN REPAYMENT PROGRAM.—Section 338B(g)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254l-1) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B), by striking out "or";

(2) in subparagraph (C), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by inserting at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) a reasonable dependent allowance as determined by the Secretary.".

SEC. 7. CONTRACT FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 338A(g)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l-1(g)(1)) is amended in the material preceding subparagraph (A) by striking out "A scholarship" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided for in paragraph (5), a scholarship".

(b) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Section 338A(g) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254l) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) In developing a contract under this subsection, the Secretary is authorized to individually tailor a package of financial assistance that includes both scholarship components and loan repayment components.

"(5) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the Secretary may award a partial scholarship to an individual with circumstances that warrant less financial assistance than the financial assistance provided under paragraph (1).

SEC. 8. TRACKING AND EVALUATION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—Section 338A(i) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l(i)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (4), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(5) the effectiveness in maintaining or increasing the interest in and commitment of individuals participating in the Scholarship Program to primary care and service to the underserved; and

"(6) the retention rate of participants in the Scholarship Program.".

(b) LOAN REPAYMENT PROGRAM.—Section 338B(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254l-1(i)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (4), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(5) the effectiveness in maintaining or increasing the interest in and commitment of individuals participating in the Loan Repayment Program to primary care and service to the underserved; and

"(6) the retention rate of participants in the Loan Repayment Program.".

SEC. 9. FULFILLMENT OF OBLIGATION.

(a) PART-TIME FULFILLMENT.—Section 338C(b)(5)(C) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254m(b)(5)(C)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "No" and inserting in lieu thereof "(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), no";

(2) by inserting at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(ii) Notwithstanding clause (i), the Secretary may permit a resident in-training with the approval of the training program director, in the third year of residency to begin fulfilling a service obligation on a part-time basis, including providing services referred to in 338K(b)(9).".

(b) RESPITE SQUADS.—Section 338E(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254o(d)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) If an individual defaults on an obligation under the Scholarship Program (or a contract thereunder) or the Loan Repayment Program (or a contract thereunder), the Secretary may permit such individual to partially fulfill such obligation through service. Such service shall not in a substantial way supplant the penalties referred to in section 338E.".

SEC. 10. TRANSFER OF FUNDS.

Section 338G of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254q) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—The Secretary may transfer funds between the Scholarship Program and the Loan Repayment Program as needed due to the availability of applicants for such programs.".

SEC. 11. ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.

The Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 336A the following new section:

"SEC. 336B. ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.

"Not later than January 1, 1993, the General Accounting Office shall complete an administrative review of the Corps including the administration of the Scholarship Program and the Loan Repayment Program.".

SEC. 12. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS.—Section 338(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254k(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) To carry out this subpart, there are authorized to be appropriated—

"(1) $65,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994; and

"(2) such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994, which in no event shall be less than 8 percent of the amount appropriated under paragraph (1), with respect to nurses, nurse practitioners, certified nurse midwives, physician assistants, social workers, and other non-physician health providers.".

(b) SCHOLARSHIP AND LOAN REPAYMENT PROGRAM.—Section 338G(b) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254q(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for scholarships and loan repayments under this subpart.

"(2) SET-ASIDE.—Of the amount appropriated under paragraph (1) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make available not less than 10 percent for scholarships and loan repayments under this subpart with respect to nurses, nurse practitioners, nurse midwives, physician assistants, social workers, and other non-physician health providers.".

(c) STATE PROGRAMS.—Section 338H(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254q-1(d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The Secretary shall use such sums as may be necessary from amounts available under section 338G(b)(1) to carry out the physician loan repayment program, and such sums as may be necessary from the amounts available under section 338G(b)(2) for loan repayment for nurses, social workers, and other health professionals.".

SEC. 13. GRANTS TO STATES FOR OPERATION OF OFFICES OF RURAL HEALTH.

Subpart III of part D of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l et seq.) (as amended by section 5) is further amended by adding the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 338M. STATE OFFICES OF RURAL HEALTH.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make grants to States in accordance with this section to enable such States to establish State Offices of Rural Health, or to assist existing State rural health offices, to engage in the activities described in subsection (d)(2).

"(b) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—

"(1) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—The Secretary shall not make grants to a single State for a fiscal year under this section in an amount that is more than the quotient of the aggregate amount appropriated pursuant to subsection (g) for such fiscal year divided by the number of applications under subsection (f) that are approved for such fiscal year.

"(2) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—Except as provided in paragraph (3), a State that receives a grant under this section shall provide an amount equal to the amount provided under such grant to establish, administer, or enhance the ongoing operations of the Office. Such amounts may be provided in cash or in-kind.

"(3) EXCEPTION.—To assist in the establishment of new rural health offices, for the first year of operation of a State Office of Rural Health, the Secretary may modify the matching requirement under paragraph (2) to the extent that the State shall contribute not less than $1 for each $3 of Federal funds provided.

"(c) LIMITATION ON USE OF GRANT FOR RESEARCH ACTIVITIES.—Each State receiving a grant under this section shall not use in excess of 5 percent of the amounts provided under such grant for research activities.

"(d) STATE OFFICES OF RURAL HEALTH.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—Each State that receives a grant under this section may establish, or continue the operations of, the State Office of Rural Health in a State agency, or through contract with a public or private educational institution or other organization, or any combination of the preceding entities, as determined by the State.

"(2) ACTIVITIES.—

"(A) DUTIES.—Each State Office of Rural Health established or operated under a grant made under this section shall—

"(i) provide leadership and advocacy for rural residents with regard to rural health;

"(ii) coordinate the activities of such Offices with Federal, State, local, and private health entities, and with the rural development activities of, and cooperate with, the Agricultural Extension Service;

"(iii) make recommendations on improving the quality and cost effectiveness in the delivery of rural health care;

"(iv) identify Federal and State programs regarding rural health, and provide technical assistance to public and nonprofit private entities regarding participation in such programs;

"(v) prepare and submit reports periodically to the Office of Rural Health Policy concerning the activities of the office; and

"(vi) communicate and cooperate with rural health research centers established by the Federal Office of Rural Health Policy established under section 301.

"(B) OPTIONAL ACTIVITIES.—Each State Office of Rural Health established under a grant made under this section may—

"(i) assist rural areas in responding to changes in access to health care;

"(ii) plan and assist in the professional recruitment and retention of medical professionals and assistants in rural areas;

"(iii) improve community involvement in health care delivery through methods including the conduct of leadership development programs for the members of the community;

"(iv) improve rural emergency medical services;

"(v) improve access to health care in rural areas through innovative transportation and communications services;

"(vi) encourage the sharing of rural health care information;

"(vii) evaluate data on rural health conditions and needs; and

"(viii) provide technical assistance for rural hospital transition grants.

"(3) ANNUAL MEETINGS.—Representatives from each State Office of Rural Health that receives a grant made under this section shall meet annually with representatives from the Office of Rural Health Policy to share information and coordinate strategies for improving quality and cost effectiveness in the delivery of rural health care.

"(4) LIMITATION.—No amounts appropriated under subsection (g) shall be used for health planning uses of the type performed under title XV (as such title existed prior to January 1, 1987,) such as certificate of need programs.

"(e) STATE DEFINED.—As used in this section, the term 'State' means the 50 States.".

"(f) REQUIREMENT OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall not make a grant under subsection (a) unless an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary and the application is in such form, made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out such subsection.

"(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $3,750,000, for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1992 through 1994.".

SEC. 14. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) ASSIGNMENT OF PERSONNEL.—Section 333(h) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254f(h)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting "(M.D. and D.O.)" after "physicians"; and

(2) in paragraph (2), by inserting "payment," after "utilization,".

(b) COST SHARING.—Section 334(f)(2)(B)(ii) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254g(f)(2)(B)(ii)) is amended by inserting "payments or" after "third party".

(c) PROVISION OF HEALTH SERVICES.—Section 335 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254h) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1), by inserting "(M.D. and D.O.)" after "physicians";

(2) in subsection (c), by inserting "(M.D. and D.O.)" after "medical; and

(3) in subsection (e)(1)(A), by inserting "(M.D. and D.O.)" after "physician".

(d) SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—Section 338B of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l-1) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1), by inserting "nursing," after "dentistry,"; and

(2) in subsection (g)—

(A) by inserting "all" after "related expenses on" in paragraph (1);

(B) by striking out "may" in paragraph (3), and inserting in lieu thereof "shall"; and

(C) by striking out "or part" in paragraph (3).

SEC. 15. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) UNIFORMED SERVICES HEALTH PROFESSIONS REVITALIZATION ACT OF 1972.— Section 2123(e) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out "an area of health manpower shortage" and inserting in lieu thereof "a health professional shortage area".

(b) PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT.—

(1) Sections 303(d)(2)(B), 331, 333, 334, 335, 336(a), 336A, 338A, 338B, 338C, 338D, 338F(a)(1), 735, 741(f)(1)(C), 759(a), 781(a)(2)(B)(iii), and 822 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 242a(d)(2)(B), 254d, 254f, 254g, 254h, 254h-1(a), 254i, 254l, 254l-1, 254m, 254n, 254p(a)(1), 294h, 294n(f)(1)(C), 294aa(a), 295g-1(a)(2)(B)(iii), and 296m) are amended by striking out "health manpower shortage area" each place such appears and inserting in lieu thereof "health professional shortage area".

(2) Section 332 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254e) is amended—

(A) by striking out the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"DESIGNATION OF HEALTH PROFESSIONAL SHORTAGE AREAS";

and

(B) by striking out "health manpower shortage area" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "health professional shortage area".

(c) SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—The Social Security Act is amended—

(1) in section 1156(b)(5) (42 U.S.C. 1320c-5(b)(5)), by striking out "health manpower shortage area (HMSA)" and inserting in lieu thereof "health professional shortage area"; and

(2) in sections 1833(m), 1842(b)(4)(F), and 1861 (42 U.S.C. 1395l(m), 1395u(b)(4)(F), and 1395x), by striking out "health manpower shortage area" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "health professional shortage area".

(d) COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH MANPOWER TRAINING ACT OF 1971.—Section 202 of the Comprehensive Health Manpower Training Act of 1971 (42 U.S.C. 3505d) is amended—

(1) by striking out the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"NATIONAL HEALTH PROFESSIONAL SHORTAGE CLEARINGHOUSE";

and

(2) in subsection (a), by striking out "manpower" and inserting in lieu thereof "professional".

(e) HEAD START ACT.—Section 645(a)(2)(B) of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9840(a)(2)(B)) is amended by striking out "health manpower shortage area" and inserting in lieu thereof "health professional shortage area".

SUMMARY OF THE PROPOSAL TO REVITALIZE THE NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS

1. Scholarship and Loan Repayment Program Priorities.

For applicants to both the Scholarship and Loan Repayment Programs, priority would be given to the following:

Residents of HMSA's minorities, and the disadvantaged;

Students who attend for or plan to attend schools or residency programs that have records of training primary care providers who work with the underserved;

Individuals who have demonstrated an interest in providing primary care service for the underserved through participation in clinical programs;

Nurses, nurse midwives, nurse practitioners and physicians assistants, social workers, and other counseling professionals; and Physicians in primary care fields.

2. Incentives for Recruitment and Retention.

A. The bill directs the Secretary to—

Give priority in the awarding of loans and scholarships to schools and training programs that can demonstrate success in training graduates for primary care fields or to serve underserved areas;

Disseminate materials to the financial aid offices of health professions schools and training programs to promote awareness of opportunities in the Corps;

Make grants and enter into contracts to expose health professions students to underserved areas;

Appoint individuals to serve as career advisors to assist Corps members;

Establish fellowship programs to provide experience in the delivery of services in health professional shortage areas;

Encourage the provision of faculty appointments for Corps members at health professions schools to provide members access to university facilities;

Establish exchange programs, sabbatical leave and traveling medical consultation teams to increase opportunities for patient case presentations and discussion;

Extend the opportunity to Corps members to become Commissioned Officers in the U.S. Public Health Service;

Provide opportunities for job sharing, couple recruitment, and flexible work programs;

Establish a respite squad to relieve Corps members on a short-term basis; and Establish a recruitment program for non-scholarship or loan programs participants.

B. The bill requires that the Secretary track and evaluate the incentive programs and report to the Congress on their effect.

3. Increase in Administrative Staff.

The bill provides for an increase in NHSC administrative staff as needed to administer the new programs.

4. Dependent Allowance.

Dependent allowances would be permitted for both Scholarship and Loan Repayment Program participants.

5. Flexibility in Scholarship and Loan Repayment Determinations.

Corps members could receive a financial assistance package with both scholarship and loan repayment components. The awarding of partial scholarships would be permitted.

6. Tracking and Evaluation of Program Effectiveness.

The Secretary will submit an annual report to Congress on the success of NHSC program initiatives to increase enrollment and retention of health care personnel in HMSA's.

7. Fulfillment of Obligation.

Medical students would be able to begin fulfilling a service obligation in the third year of residency on a part-time basis.

8. Transfer of Funds.

Funds may be re-allocated between the Scholarship and Loan Repayment programs as needed on the basis of the applicant pool.

9. Administrative Review.

The General Accounting Office would perform an administrative review of the Corps for presentation to the Congress in 1993.

10. Authorization of Appropriations.

A. Field Program.

The Secretary is authorized to appropriate $65 million FY 1991, such sums in FY 1992, 1993, and 1994 for the NHSC field program. No less than 8% of the funds appropriated will be allocated for nurses, nurse practitioners, certified nurse midwives, physicians assistants, social workers, and other non-physicians health providers.

B. Scholarship and Loan Repayment Program.

No less than 10% of the amounts appropriated shall be allocated for nurses, midwives, etc. as above.

C. State Programs.

From such sums appropriated for the scholarship and loan repayment program, funds may be appropriated for the state loan program; such sums shall be appropriated from the 10% set aside under B for nurses, midwives, etc.

11. Technical Amendments.

12. State Offices of Rural Health.

Creates a federal matching grant program to establish or enhance state offices of rural health.

13. Conforming Amendments.

Changes the term Health Manpower Shortage Area to Health Professional Shortage Area throughout the Public Health Service Act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the reauthorization of the National Health Service Corps Program [NHSC]. The NHSC has played a key role in providing many communities with the health care they so desperately need.

This legislation is important because there are currently 1,955 health manpower shortage areas [HMSA] that need health care providers. A majority of them are located in rural areas. In Utah, 15 of the National Health Service Corps health care providers completed their service in 1988 and 1989, leaving only 2 providers. Eight of the fifteen vacancies remain unfilled today.

I am proud to join Senator KENNEDY as a cosponsor of this bill which will revitalize and expand the National Health Service Corps to meet the health care needs of underserved areas. Several changes have been made in the current law which I believe are vital to increased effectiveness of the program.

We have all heard the news reports about the lack of health care providers in rural America. It is not easy to encourage recent medical school graduates to work in such out-of-the-way places. Their medical responsibilities in such areas can be overwhelming. But, we must do all we can to help citizens living in rural areas get the health care they need. A person who is sick or injured needs care regardless of whether he or she lives in Salt Lake City or Emery, UT.

I would urge my colleagues to support this bill that calls for the reauthorization of the National Health Service Corps. I look forward to developing a bipartisan bill that will strengthen the ability of the National Health Service Corps to recruit, retain, and place health care providers in underserved areas.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am very pleased today to join my distinguished chairman on the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY, as well as our ranking minority member, Senator HATCH, ranking majority member, Senator PELL, fellow committee members, Senators COCHRAN, ADAMS, KASSEBAUM, BAUCUS, and BURDICK, in introducing the National Health Service Corps Revitalization Act of 1990. This legislation represents a major step toward addressing the crisis in rural health care which exists today. It will bring doctors and other health professionals to many areas where today there are none. It will bring quality health care to millions of Americans who live in rural and other medically underserved areas.

Nearly 2,000 communities, home to over 33 million Americans face a shortage of medical personnel and have been designated as shortage areas by the Federal Government. These communities, including 23 in my State of Iowa, are literally starving for access for basic medical care. Small town after small town have no doctor or other basic health care provider. Over 150 towns in Iowa are actively seeking family doctors and many more face similar problems as doctors retire and replacements must be found.

Mr. President, the National Health Service Corps has done much good since its establishment in 1970. Medical and other health professional students are given scholarships and offered loan repayments in exchange for practicing in medically underserved areas. Over 30,000 doctors, nurses, and other health professionals have received scholarships under the program. In 1980, 6,409 scholarships were awarded and as a result, in 1986, the National Health Service Corps [NHSC] had 3,127 health personnel repaying their scholarships and loans through providing care to over 5 million Americans in medically underserved areas.

However, under the Reagan administration, this critical program was seriously retrenched. Based largely on a report which has been proven to be inaccurate, the importance of the program was questioned and the number of new students brought into the NHSC was slashed. As a result, by August it is predicted that the NHSC will have only 900 members providing care across the Nation. Last year, I am pleased to say, as chairman of the appropriations subcommittee which funds the NHSC and other health programs, I was able to reverse the downward spiral of funding for the corps. Its total funding for fiscal year 1990 represented an increase of $33 million over the administration's proposal.

The legislation we are introducing today builds on that reversal, seeking to fully revitalize the NHSC. The National Health Service Corps Revitalization Act of 1990 calls for a number of important program improvements. First, it authorizes $65 million for the field program and additional funds for scholarship and loan repayments to substantially increase the supply of doctors and other health providers to rural and other underserved areas.

The bill also establishes new incentives to improve the program's recruitment and retention, including: A publicity and recruitment program through health professions schools and medical residency programs to promote increased awareness of the opportunities available in the NHSC; the appointment of career advisers to assist corps members; job sharing and flex time, and the creation of special respite squads to relieve corps members on a short-term basis. Perhaps most importantly, the bill gives priority to the recruitment of students and residents who live in rural and other underserved communities and are thus more likely to continue to practice in these areas past their service obligation. In addition, the bill gives priority to scholarship and loan applicants who are from these areas, minority and disadvantage students, and to individuals who have demonstrated an interest in providing primary care service for the underserved.

I am very pleased that a primary component of the revitalization of the NHSC contained in this bill is the expansion of support for nurses, nurse practitioners, nurse-midwives, physician assistants, social workers, and other nonphysician health care providers. This critical expansion will greatly improve access to basic health care services in our rural communities. It properly reflects the increasingly important role these quality, cost-effective providers are playing in the care provided Americans, especially those in rural areas. Since, 1973, an average of only 1.2 percent of all NHSC funds have been used to support these alternative health care providers. Under a provision of this legislation, which I was pleased to author, no less than 10 percent of the funds appropriated for scholarships and loan repayments will go to nurses, nurse-midwives, nurse practitioners, physician assistants and other nonphysician health providers. This provision will also increase the total number of NHSC providers as scholarships and loans for alternative providers are less costly than those for physicians.

I was also pleased to author, along with my colleague from Mississippi, Senator COCHRAN, provisions in this bill which will support the establishment and operation of State offices of rural health. These offices, such as the one currently operating in my State of Iowa, provide leadership and advocacy for rural health and improve the coordination and availability of rural health care. The provision we have included will provide $3.75 million a year in grants to the States for this purpose.

Mr. President, I also want to take this opportunity to provide special thanks to my distinguished colleagues, Senator BURDICK and Senator DASCHLE and Majority Leader MITCHELL for their continued outstanding leadership in rural health issues and specifically for their help with this legislation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am an original cosponsor of the National Health Service Corps Revitalization Act of 1990, which reauthorizes and improves our current National Health Service Corps program. I commend my colleague from Massachusetts for carefully drafting this bill so that it has generated broad support, particularly from the rural health community. I also want to thank him for adding to the bill an important title similar to legislation I introduced in February, establishing State Offices of Rural Health.

This year marks the 20th anniversary of the National Health Service Corps [NHSC], which provides scholarships or repays health education loans for physicians and other health professionals willing to serve in areas with shortages of health care providers.

Over 12 million Americans live in areas lacking primary health care services. According to the Department of Health and Human Services, my own State of Mississippi has 58 health manpower shortage areas. We need 107 additional health care providers in Mississippi to serve citizens living in these areas. The National Health Service Corps Revitalization Act of 1990 will help Mississippi and other States meet health needs by enhancing the Federal commitment to help States address their shortages of health care professionals.

The National Health Service Corps Revitalization Act emphasizes the need to recruit a variety of health care providers, such as nurses, midwives, physician assistants, and mental health workers, and gives special attention to recruitment of more primary care physicians in short supply in rural communities throughout the Nation.

The bill improves the current program by targeting scholarships and loan repayments to individuals whose backgrounds and educational experiences increase the likelihood of long-term service. Priority will be given to applicants residing in health manpower shortage areas, coming from disadvantaged and minority backgrounds, or showing an interest in providing primary care services to underserved areas by participation in clinical programs. It also establishes incentives for medical schools and other health professional schools which expose their students to programs that provide primary care services to medically underserved areas.

Another important element of the bill is the establishment of State Offices of Rural Health. In February, I introduced S. 2187, the State Offices of Rural Health Act of 1990. The House companion version, introduced last August by Congressman STENHOLM of Texas, has been incorporated into the House version of the National Health Service Corps reauthorization bill.

The Department of Health and Human Services established the Office of Rural Health Policy in 1987 to work within the Department and with other Federal agencies, States, national associations, foundations, and private sector organizations to seek solutions to rural health care problems. The office has very effectively disseminated information to those seeking assistance in rural health care delivery.

To supplement Federal efforts, I believe it is important for each State to build its own infrastructure to facilitate coordinated approaches to rural health care problems. Since it is evident that solutions to these problems will require cooperative effort, I introduced the State Offices of Rural Health Act to establish Federal matching grants to encourage creation of State offices of rural health and to augment those already in existence.

These offices will concentrate on eliminating deficiencies in our rural health care delivery systems. Unhampered by unnecessary Federal requirements, they will have maximum flexibility to meet community needs within each State and will coordinate with other public and private health agencies and with the Agricultural Extension Service.

Among other things, they will examine rural health care and recommend improvements in quality and cost effectiveness, assist in recruitment and retention of health professionals, make recommendations to the Federal Office of Rural Health Policy for consideration as part of Federal rural health policy, identify Federal and State programs regarding rural health, and provide technical assistance to public and nonprofit private entities regarding participation in such programs.

States will decide how to organize these offices, whether within another agency or through an educational institution or private contracting organization. However organized, the aim of these State Offices of Rural Health will be the integration of State, Federal, and private sector activities and the development of innovative solutions for improving access to quality care in rural communities.

Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the National Health Service Corps Revitalization Act of 1990. Through this bill and the administration's commitment to the corps through its budget request, I hope we can remedy the health care deficiencies in the 1,955 health manpower shortage areas in the Nation, 1,337 of which are located in rural America.

I urge other Senators to work for enactment of this important legislation.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I am pleased to join today as an original cosponsor of legislation to reauthorize and revitalize the National Health Service Corps.

Although it has been weakened by budget cuts in recent years, the National Health Service Corps continues to play a vital role in making primary health care available to medically underserved areas. The corps offers scholarships or repays loans for doctors and other health professionals. In return, these providers agree to practice in health manpower shortage areas for a determined period of time.

If adopted, the legislation introduced today will breath new life into this 20-year-old program and, in so doing, will help bring desperately needed primary health care services to the 33 million Americans who continue to live in areas without such care.

This bill will be particularly beneficial to America's remote rural communities, many of which are suffering from increasingly acute medical manpower shortages. As we are all aware, low Medicare reimbursements, declining population bases, and drought-burdened economies have dangerously weakened rural hospital care and have helped drive physicians and other health professionals out of rural practice. In my own home State of Kansas, for example, fully 50 of the State's 105 counties have been identified by the University of Kansas Medical Center as being critically underserved in primary care.

Early in this decade, Congress and the administration reacted to projections of an upcoming physician surplus by significantly reducing funding for the National Health Service Corps. As a result, the corps' total field strength has declined dramatically, from over 3,100 providers in 1986 to fewer than 1,700 in 1989.

Tragically, the anticipated physician surplus did not, as expected, ease the medical manpower shortage in underserved areas. In fact, the number of federally designated primary care shortage areas has increased by 36 percent since 1981. Currently, there are nearly 2,000 such areas nationwide, and the Department of Health and Human Services estimates that there would have to be an infusion of more than 4,200 health professionals to bring these communities up to even a minimal level of primary care.

This bill would reauthorize the corps at such sums as may be necessary to eliminate the medical manpower shortages in underserved regions. In addition, it would make a number of constructive changes in the corps, a few of which I would like to highlight here.

First, the bill would strengthen the corps' focus on primary care by giving priority to students interested in pursuing a career in family medicine, as well as to schools which can demonstrate an ability to graduate a high proportion of primary care providers.

Second, this legislation would increase the corps' attention to non-physican providers, such as nurse practitioners or physician assistants. Such practitioners have consistently shown themselves to be valuable components of health care delivery systems—particularly in rural areas, where doctors are especially scarce. This bill would increase the access of such practitioners to corps programs.

Third, the bill contains a number of provisions designed to improve recruitment and retention of corps providers. These efforts would include greater outreach to current medical students, as well as the creation of special "respite squads" to provide temporary relief to corps providers serving in difficult placements.

A number of States—including Kansas—have set up medical scholarship or loan repayment programs of their own. These programs are extremely valuable, but they cannot solve the problem alone. The continued high number of manpower vacancies is sobering evidence that a strong National Health Service Corps is as vitally necessary as ever.

Combined with enhanced appropriations for the corps, the reforms authorized in this revitalization bill will significantly improve the access of rural and inner city Americans to quality health care. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Labor Committee in preparing the legislation for prompt consideration by the full Senate.

Mr. President, although I strongly support this bill as a whole, I want to comment briefly on one provision which does trouble me: the bill's creation of a dependent allowance for corps providers. Having dealt with this issue in the context of other student aid programs, I am concerned that establishing a dependent allowance in the National Health Service Corps could create undo administrative burdens out of proportion to potential benefits.

The added paperwork and regulatory apparatus which would accompany a dependent allowance would be substantial. Consider, for example, that detailed determinations would have to be made relating to factors such as eligibility, amount, working spouses, and disability. It may well be that the advantages of such an allowance would turn out to be worth the trouble, but I think we ought to carefully consider whether our limited corps funding might better be spent directly on the loan repayments and scholarships themselves.

It is my understanding that the Department of Health and Human Services shares my concern about this issue, and I am hopeful that the question can be more carefully addressed before the bill goes to markup.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator KENNEDY and others in introducing this very important legislation to reauthorize the National Health Service Corps.

This is truly a rural health bill. The corps is critically important to meeting the health needs of rural areas. Since the corps was established in 1970, it has been a vital tool for placing physicians in underserved areas, known as health manpower shortage areas, especially in rural areas. Traditionally, approximately 70 percent of the corps providers who have served, have done so in rural areas. This bill beefs up the corps and authorizes more funding to carry it out.

Mr. President, my own State is a perfect example of why this legislation is so badly needed. Although Montana has 29 designated health manpower shortage areas, only five corps physicians currently serve in the State.

In rural areas, access to care requires traveling more than just across town. It means traversing entire counties, often in bad weather. In many isolated areas, local hospitals have closed because of their inability to retain or recruit a physician in the community. When a hospital closes, the single source of health care has been eliminated, taking with it jobs, and forcing people to travel long distances for even the most basic health care services. For example, in my own State, the town of Jordan, MT, saw its hospital close because it lost its physician. The nearest remaining hospital is 67 miles away.

Rural areas in general, and especially Montana's less populated communities, have had trouble maintaining an adequate number of physicians. The problem is even more acute for some of the most basic services, such as prenatal care and delivering babies. The number of doctors who deliver babies in rural areas throughout the country fell 20 percent over the last 5 years, sometimes leaving entire counties without obstetrics care. Montana has only eight obstetrician/gynecologists per 100,000 women of childbearing age, putting Montana among seven States with the lowest ratio of ob-gyns to patients.

Mr. President, I would like to mention that the author of this bill, Senator KENNEDY, has graciously listened to my concerns on this bill and the concerns of other Senators. Two months ago I worked with 44 other members of the Senate Rural Health Caucus in expressing our strongly held view that the National Health Service Corps must maintain its traditional rural focus. The chairman heard our concerns and addressed them very thoroughly and generously. The bill we are introducing today is evidence of that, and I thank him for his willingness to accommodate our interest.

By Mr. HEFLIN (for himself and Mr. SHELBY):

S. 2618. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to establish the appropriate grade and rates of pay for certain administrative law judges; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

CHANGING THE METHOD OF PAYING ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce legislation to bring a degree of parity and fairness to the current method of paying administrative law judges [ALJ's].

Currently, some administrative law judges are capped at a GS-15 level while other administrative law judges are capped at a GS-16 pay level. This disparity developed over time due to the different practices of various agencies in the manner in which they addressed issues involving these judges. The current distinction in these pay levels turns upon an archaic and meaningless definition of the degree of latitude exercised by ALJ's in carrying out their responsibilities.

I believe that this distinction is outdated. The functions of all ALJ's, whether GS-15 judges or GS-16 judges, are very similar and require an equal degree of complexity and flexibility, and most importantly knowledge and skill. As a result, this pay disparity deserves to be eliminated.

To achieve this fairness, I am introducing legislation today which would cure this inequity. The effect of this bill would be to raise all current judges subject to the GS-15 cap to the GS-16 level. Further, this legislation provides that this conversion not be treated as a transfer or promotion. I do not believe that this legislation would serve as a raise for one class of ALJ's, but rather as a balancing and resolution of a problem of inequity which has developed over time.

It is important to note that this change is widely supported. This issue has the support of the American Bar Association's National Conference of Administrative Law Judges and the Federal Administrative Law Judges Conference. These groups represent all ALJ's, not only those judges who would benefit from this legislation.

Administrative law judges plan an important role in the United States. I know that this is a modest proposal, but I hope that this legislation is enacted to address a problem which deserves to be resolved.

I urge my colleagues to support this principle of fairness and endorse this legislation.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to join with my distinguished colleague, Senator HEFLIN, in introducing legislation that will upgrade all administrative law judges [ALJ's] from GS-15 to GS-16.

The legislation is designed to correct an inequity in the existing classification structure affecting ALJ's. Last year the House of Representatives Committee on Post Office and Civil Service completed a series of hearings concerning the recommendations of the National Commission on the Public Service. Included in those testifying before the House committee were witnesses representing various ALJ organizations detailing their specific observations and experiences regarding the current state of Federal compensation.

The evidence presented in those hearings keenly illustrated that the current distinction between the GS-15 and GS-16 grades should be discarded. The disparity in grade structure is outdated and no longer truly identifies any distinction in the expertise required for work as an ALJ.

Administrative law judges, or the "hidden judiciary" as they are called, provide essential services that affect average citizens on a daily basis. ALJ's act as checks on State and Federal agencies that make millions of administrative decisions each year—dealing with everything from the issuance of drivers' licenses and the payment of jobless benefits and Social Security pensions to the regulation of utility rates and television stations. In addition, when regulations are being written—whether the subject is surface mining, building design for the handicapped, mechanically deboned meat or one of the myriad other areas in which Government intervenes—ALJ's preside over the hearings.

Mr. President, the legislation before you today would treat the functions and responsibilities of the administrative law judge in the GS-15 or GS-16 levels as being of equal complexity and flexibility. This area of the Federal benefit and pay system is in need of reform. The maintenance of a competent and motivated work force is important if Government is to function effectively and efficiently.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to consponsor the legislation.

By Mr. GLENN:

S. 2619. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for coverage of bone mass measurements for certain individuals under part B of the Medicare Program; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICARE BONE MASS MEASUREMENT COVERAGE ACT OF 1990

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, today I am introducing S. 2619, the Medicare Bone Mass Measurement Coverage Act of 1990, which would provide Medicare reimbursement for bone mass measurement for individuals likely to suffer from osteoporosis. An identical bill is being introduced in the House of Representatives by Congresswoman OLYMPIA SNOW.

Osteoporosis is a condition characterized by a gradual and initially painless decrease in the amount of bone tissue. It is the most common bone disease affecting older Americans, particularly older women. As osteoporosis progresses, the bones become weaker and more porous, which makes them increasingly susceptible to fractures. The condition can affect any bone in the body, but the most common fracture sites are the hip, spine, and wrist.

The number of people afflicted with osteoporosis is overwhelming. Today, at least 24 million Americans have some degree of osteoporosis. At least 1.3 million Americans a year—including 250,000 hip fractures—are attributable to this condition. Beyond the tremendous emotional and physical toll, osteoporosis has greatly increased our health care bill, costing over $10 billion annually in health care services and lost income.

Osteoporosis, with its associated fractures, is an enormous public health problem; and there is no doubt that the emotional, physical, and financial costs related to osteoporosis will continue to increase as our population ages. This could be ameliorated if individuals who are at the greatest risk of fractures were identified and treated to prevent further bone loss. The best method for identifying persons at risk of fracture is bone mass measurement.

S. 2619, the Medicare Bone Mass Meeasurement Coverage Act of 1990, would define four of the most at-risk groups of individuals—estrogen-dependent women, individuals with verteral abnormalities, individuals receiving long-term glucocorticoid steroid therapy, and individuals with primary hyperparathyroidism—who would then be eligible for Medicare reimbursement of procedures to determine whether or not they were at risk of developing fractures. Measurements would be done through the use of single and dual photon absorptiometry, dual energy x-ray absorptiometry, or quantitative computed tomography, and would include a physician's interpretation of the result of the procedure.

The purpose of this legislation is not only to provide Medicare reimbursement for bone mass measurement, but also to send a message to private insurers to provide reimbursement for individuals who are not Medicare-eligible. This is important since, ideally, women at risk of fractures due to osteoporosis should be measured before they reach age 65 and become eligible for Medicare. Preventing fractures would save money for Medicare and would reduce our Nation's expenditures for long-term care.

Mr. President, I ask that a paper summarizing the National Osteoporosis Foundation's position on bone mass measurement be submitted in the RECORD following my remarks. This paper discusses the many benefits of bone mass measurement, including its importance as a means of preventing fractures in individuals likely to suffer from osteoporosis.

Osteoporosis presents a challenge to all of us. I urge my colleagues to support S. 2619, to enable us to prevent some fractures and their associated costs—physical, emotional, and financial—which can be so devastating for people with osteoporosis. I am hopeful that Congress will pass the Medicare Bone Mass Measurement Act, as well as legislation I recently introduced with Senator GRASSLEY to increase Federal funding for research on osteoporosis and for educational programs that can help prevent osteoporosis.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2619

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Bone Mass Measurement Coverage Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. MEDICARE COVERAGE OF BONE MASS MEASUREMENTS.

Section 1861 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x), as revived by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989 and as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in subsection (s)—

(A) in paragraph (11), by striking all that follows "(bb))" and inserting a semicolon,

(B) in paragraph (12)(C), by striking all that follows "area)" and inserting "; and", and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) bene mass measurement (as defined in subsection (jj));"; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (ii) the following new subsection:

"BONE MASS MEASUREMENT

"(jj)(1) The term 'bone mass measurement' means a radiologic or radioisotopic procedure performed on a qualified individual (as defined in paragraph (2) for the purpose of detecting bone loss through the use of single and dual photon absorptiometry, dual energy X-ray absorptiometry or similar dual energy techniques, or quantitative computed tomography, and includes a physician's interpretation of the results of the procedure.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'qualified individual' means (in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary)—

"(A) an estrogen-deficient woman at clinical risk for osteoporosis;

"(B) an individual with vertebral abnormalities;

"(C) an individual receiving long-term glucocorticoid steroid therapy; or

"(D) an individual with primary hyperparathyroidism.".

NATIONAL OSTEOPOROSIS FOUNDATION POSITION ON BONE MASS MEASUREMENT

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Osteoporosis is the most common metabolic bone disorder, resulting in reduced bone strength and increasing the risk of bone fractures. Osteoporosis is a complex, chronic disease that may progress silently for decades—there are no symptoms until fractures occur.

In the United States, at least 1.3 million fractures are attributable to osteoporosis annually. The cost of care for these fractures is estimated to exceed 10 billion annually and at current rates will exceed $30 billion within 30 years.

The only effective means of preventing fractures is to preserve bone mass; lost bone cannot be replaced effectively. At present, relatively few people are diagnosed in time for therapy to be effective.

Bone mass measurement is the only basis for selecting therapy. Single Photon Absorptiometry ("SPA"), Dual Photon Absorptiometry ("DPA"), Dual Energy X-ray Absorptiometry ("DEXA"), and Quantitative Computed Tomography ("QCT") are the only effective and accurate means of measuring bone mass.

In recently published prospective studies, bone mass as measured with SPA and DPA accurately measures the risk of fracture.

Bone mass measurement is indicated for four population groups:

Certain estrogen-deficient women;

Patients with vertebral abnormalities;

Patients receiving long-term steroid therapy;

Patients with primary hyperparathyroidism.

NOF recommends that HCFA approve the use of SPA, DPA, DEXA or QCT for these limited indications.

I. EXTENT AND COST OF OSTEOPOROSIS-ASSOCIATED FRACTURES

Osteoporosis with its associated fractures is an enormous public health problem. At least 1.3 million fractures in the United States each year are attributable to osteoporosis. The cost of acute and long-term care resulting from fractures is staggering: fractures of the proximal femur (hip) were estimated to cost $7.3 billion in 1984, and distal forearm fractures may cost more than $140 million annually. Costs for vertebral fractures have not been estimated, but undoubtedly are substantial; in patients aged 45 years or older, these fractures account for 161,000 physician office visits annually and over 5 million restricted patient activity days. This situation will worsen as the population ages. It is projected that in 30 years' time, there could be as many as 350,000 hip fractures each year in the United States at an annual cost estimated to be between $31 and $62 billion.

Fractures result from low bone mass. Bone mass declines with age in all individuals, but falls precipitously in women following menopause. Thus, millions of women in the United States are currently at risk for fractures. U.S. Bureau of the Census data from 1984 show that between 1988 and 2050, the number of individuals aged 65 years and over will increase from 30 to 67 million. The number of fractures in our elderly population will grow accordingly.

This picture may be partially ameliorated if individuals who are at greatest risk of fracture can be identified and treated to prevent further bone loss. Bone loss is the only contributing cause of fractures that can be manipulated in mid-life so as to reduce the incidence of fractures later in life. Bone loss can be reduced by treatment; in contrast, it is difficult, if not impossible, to restore the biomechanical competence of the skeleton once bone has been lost. The best method for identifying persons at risk of fracture is bone mass measurements.

Safe and accurate techniques are now available for measuring bone mass. These techniques include single photon absorptiometry (SPA), dual photon absorptiometry (DPA), quantitative computed tomography (QCT), and dual energy x-ray absorptiometry (DEXA), all of which are far superior to standard x-rays. Accuracy of bone mass measurements with these techniques compares favorably with that of other accepted tests, such as serum cholesterol for assessing risk of heart disease. Use of these techniques is the only way to measure bone mass accurately and to assess fracture risk. These bone mass measurements also influence the choice of therapy.

II. DESCRIPTION OF AND INDICATIONS FOR THESE TECHNOLOGIES

A. Description of SPA, DPA, QCT, and DEXA

All four technologies are based on the fact that bone absorbs photons at a different rate than does soft tissue. The common element of these technologies is that photons are directed at that body, and their differential absorption is measured. SPA uses photons at a single energy level, and is limited to measuring bone at peripheral sites such as the forearm and heel. QCT also uses single energy photons, but has the capability to measure bone mass in the spine. DPA and DEXA use photons at two energy levels and can measure bone deep in the body, in the spine and hip. All of these methods are safe and acceptable to patients.

The accuracy of these technologies is quite good:[1] the accuracy error of SPA is 4-5%; the accuracy error of both DPA and DEXA is 3-6%; and, the accuracy error of QCT is 5-10%. Similarly, these technologies show excellent precision. The precision error is only 1-2% for SPA, 2-4% for DPA, 1% for DEXA, and 1-3% for QCT. These error levels are small relative to differences in bone mass between individuals. Because bone mass is normally distributed in women at every age, those with low, average, or high bone mass easily can be detected.

Any of the four technologies can be used to assess the risk of fracture, and any is sufficient for determination of bone mass in estrogen-deficient women (indication #1, discussed below) and patients with asymptomatic primary hyperparathyroidism (indication #4, discussed below). Because the spine is the focus of diagnosis for patients with vertebral abnormalities and those on long-term steroid therapy (indications #2 and #3, discussed below), only DPA, QCT, and DEXA should be used to measure bone mass in these patients.

B. Indications for bone mass measurements

1. Those Estrogen-deficient Women Who Are Candidates for Estrogen Replacement Therapy

Estrogen deficiency following menopause, oophorectomy, or prolonged amenorrhea from any cause is associated with accelerated bone loss. Long-term estrogen replacement therapy (ERT) of approximately 5- to 10-years' duration is the most effective means of preventing or slowing bone loss and reducing the associated fracture risk. The Food and Drug Administration has approved the use of ERT for "abnormally low bone mass;" this can only be detected by bone mass measurements. As with any drug regimen, ERT is associated with side effects and costs, including the possibility of an increased risk of uterus and breast cancer. It is thus important to select only those at greatest risk of future fractures for long-term ERT. Bone mass measurement will allow a rational decision regarding long-term ERT for protection from osteoporosis. Use of ERT guided by bone mass measurement would reduce lifetime risk of hip fracture by an estimated 20% (from 10% to 8%), with a 12% reduction in vertebral fracture risk (from 25% to 22%), and a 25% reduction in all other limb fractures (from 35% to 26%).

2. Patients with Vertebral Abnormalities or X-ray Evidence of Osteopenia

Vertebral abnormalities or X-ray evidence of spinal osteopenia are present in many older patients. While both conditions may be caused by osteoporosis, many individuals with these abnormalities do not have significant osteoporosis. Suspicion of osteoporosis should prompt a further evaluation to determine if aggressive therapy to prevent further bone loss is indicated. However, a full work-up and evaluation is potentially quite costly, and such therapy is associated with significant health risks. Consequently, it is essential to identify those patients who actually have reduced bone mass. This can only be done with bone mass measurement.

Practitioners have found the use of a bone density threshold to be helpful in determing the need for a full work-up or therapy; one common guideline is 1.0g/cm^2, or about 1.5 standard deviations below the mean level in normal young women. Where a patient's bone mass exceeds this level, a fracture should not be attributable to osteoporosis. Where a patient's bone mass falls below this threshold, however, a fracture should be attributed to osteoporosis. Recent data suggest that over 2 million middle-aged women nationally have vertebral abnormalities; of these women, an estimated 20% have normal or above normal bone mass. Thus, through use of bone mass measurement, a comprehensive workup may be averted for an estimated 400,000 middle-aged women with vertebral abnormalities whose spinal bone mass is above the fracture threshold. The potential savings from bone mass measurements are thus substantial.

[1] "Accuracy" refers to how well the technology measures bone mass compared to a reference of known mass. "Prescision" refers to whether the technology gives the same result upon multiple scans of the same bone.

In addition, bone mass measurements guide the choice of a specific therapy. For example, the appropriate course of therapy for patients with bone mass above 1.0g/cm² may involve only adequate calcium intake and exercise; bone mass between 1.0 and 0.85g/cm² would indicate the need for estrogen therapy in estrogen-deficient women under age 70. Higher doses of estrogen may be indicated for those patients with bone mass below 0.85 cm², and experimental drugs to augment bone mass might be considered as well. Calcitonin could be used if estrogen were contraindicated.

3. Patients Receiving Long-term Steroid Therapy

Steroid (glucocorticoid) therapy is required for such diseases as rheumatoid arthritis, chronic active hepatitis, inflamatory bowel disease, asthma, and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease. It has serious side effects, including rapid bone loss leading to vertebral and other fractures. Since steroid therapy often is a long term therapy, assessment of bone mass is extremely important for these patients. In addition, children on chronic steroid theraphy require bone mass measurements to determine, if skeletal development is abnormal. Bone mass measurements, therefore, may permit improved patient management through more precise adjustments of the required dosage and duration of steriod therapy. This in turn should minimize skeletal complications.

4. Patients with Asymptomatic Primary Hyperparathyroidism

Primary hyperparathyroidism is associated with a decrease in bone mass in some patients. Such a reduction in bone mass is accompanied by an increased frequency of fractures of the vertebrae, distal forearm, and hip. Thus, low bone mass in patients with otherwise asymptomatic hyperparathyroidism should be considered a possible indication for surgery. This bone loss only can be detected by measurement of bone mass, not be standard x-ray.

Bone mass more than 1 standard deviation below values for young "normals" indicates a greater risk of fractures. The greater the deviation below this value, the greater the risk of future fractures. Thus, bone mass can be used as a quantitative measure to assist in determining the need for surgery. Following successful surgery bone mass has been found generally to increase, which should reduce the incidence of fractures.

III. RESPONSE TO THE OHTA REPORT

Several of the authors of the papers cited in the OHTA reports dispute the applicability and conclusions of those reports. For example, Drs. Melton, Johnston, and Lindsay, whose research is cited throughout the OHTA reports on SPA and DPA, participated in the preparation of the position paper supporting coverage of SPA, DPA, DEXA, and QCT. Dr. Cummings, whose research is also cited in the OHTA reports, has provided the attached letter indicating his support for coverage of these technologies. Clinically, the reports' conclusions are based on outdated research; recently published studies show that bone mass measurements accurately assess the risk of fracture. Further, the OHTA reports do not reflect several important practical implications of HCFA's decision regarding these technologies. SPA and DPA should not be reviewed in a vacuum, apart from the context in which they are used.

A. Clinical Issues

1. Bone Mass Measurements Accurately Predict Fracture Risk

OHTA's conclusion that bone mass measurements are not adequately predictive of the risk of fracture is seriously out of date; the studies cited in the OHTA report do not reflect current clinical experience with these technologies. Recently published prospective studies show that bone mass measurements made with DPA and SPA at various skeletal sites can identify those who have the greatest risk of developing fractures (and thus those who should benefit most from therapy). Hui and colleagues (1988) studied 521 women an average of 6.5 years (3,399 person years), and 138 fractures (excluding spine) were observed. Forearm bone mineral content measured by SPA predicted fracture risk, even after adjusting for age. Likewise, Wasnich and colleagues (1987) followed 1,237 women aged 43 to 80 years who had bone mass measured at four sites (mid-forearm, distal forearm, and heel measurements by SPA; lumbar spine measured by DPA) for an average of 4.4 years. During that time, 52 new fractures at all sites occurred. The fracture incidence rate was inversely related to bone mineral content at all four sites, and the relationship was statistically significant for the lumbar spine and heel measurements. After adjustment for age, height and weight, women in the lowest quartile of heel bone mineral content were 8 times more likely to suffer fractures than women in the highest quartile.

As with other chronic diseases, there is a gradient of risk of fracture. Bone mass measurements determine the extent of the person's risk. Obviously, not all persons with low bone mass will sustain fractures, and some persons with high bone mass will suffer fractures. Nonetheless, it is important to recognize that persons with low bone mass are at significantly higher risk of fracture. The technologies in question are not diagnostic tests for fractures. They are, however, important tests which accurately establish a particular patient's risk of fracture. They are the only tests which do so with sufficient accuracy for making treatment decisions.[1]

2. Risk Factors Do Not Predict Bone Mass or Fracture Risk

While some clinicians believe that osteoporosis-prone individuals can be identified through common "risk factors," a number of studies have shown that a patient's history and physical examination are not good predictors of bone mass. Bone mass is pertinent to treatment decisions and must be measured directly.

[1] While not all persons with high serum cholesterol will suffer a heart attack, and some persons with cholesterol in the normal range will suffer a heart attack, serum cholesterol is nonetheless an important indicator of the risk of heart attack in a given person. No one would suggest that, because serum cholesterol cannot separate totally those who will suffer a heart attack from those who will not, physicians should not measure cholesterol and base treatment on the results.

B. Policy Issue

In deciding whether a technology should be covered by the Medicare Program, it is important to consider the alternatives available for each indication; for evaluation of low bone mass, no alternatives exist. No other clinical tests accurately measure whether bone density is dangerously low, and analysis of risk factors have proven to be an inadequate measure of the risk of fracture. In the absence of access to these technologies, hundreds of thousands of persons at risk will not be diagnosed, and thus will not receive therapy which could prevent fractures. Others will be exposed to costly treatment that bone mass measurement would show to be unnecessary.

2. Potential Cost Savings to the Medicare Program are Enormous

Bone mass measurement technologies will bring savings to the Medicare Program in two significant ways. First, prevention of fractures in the elderly will reduce hospital and physician treatment costs, as well as associated physical therapy costs. Nursing home costs for those patients whose hip fractures result in further health complications also should be reduced, with significant savings to the Medicare and Medicaid programs. If only one in ten hip fractures are prevented, the savings could reach one billion dollars annually.

Second, as noted above, bone mass measurements will indicate that related treatment is unnecessary for as many as a third of the estimated 400,000 women with abnormalities of the spine that might indicate osteoporosis. The cost savings from avoidance of expensive estrogen-replacement therapy will be substantial.

3. HCFA's Coverage Policy Decision Will Have Profound Implications for Private Insurers' Coverage of Osteoporosis-Related Technologies

Private insurers frequently use HCFA's coverage determinations as guidance in their own decisions regarding coverage of new technologies. A HCFA decision not to cover these technologies would discourage private payer coverage of the only effective diagnostic tool for measuring a person's risk of sustaining fractures. Because a reduction in bone mass may occur before a person is Medicare-eligible, coverage of these technolgies by private insurers is most important to timely and effective diagnosis and treatment. For example, those estrogen deficient women who are candidates for hormone replacement therapy are usually identified prior to age 60. Many persons at risk from long-term steroid therapy are young adults. There is particular justification, therefore, for HCFA to encourage the coverage of technologies which promote osteoporosis treatment and fracture reduction.

IV. CONCLUSION

Osteoporosis with its attendant fractures is associated with significant morbidity and mortality, particularly in the elderly. The cost of this disease in terms of dollars, reduced activity, dependence on public monies, and impaired quality of life has reached alarming proportions. These costs can only be reduced by identifying those individuals at risk for low bone mass and fractures, so that treatment may be provided where indicated. The technology to safely and accurately measure bone loss is now available. Its application is essential to reduce the monumental costs associated with osteoporosis. bone mass measurement must be approved for the indications listed in this report in order to protect the elderly and other individuals in our society from the pain and suffering caused by osteoporosis.●

By Mr. HEFLIN:

S. 2620. A bill to provide for a 5-year intercircuit conflict resolution demonstration within the judiciary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JUDICIAL INTERCIRCUIT CONFLICT RESOLUTION DEMONSTRATION ACT

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation entitled the Judicial Intercircuit Conflict Resolution Demonstration Act. This legislation directly arises from the work of the Federal Courts Study Committee. This committee, of which I was proud and honored to be a member, recently provided many important and worthwhile recommendations to Congress.

The committee was established under legislation enacted during the 100th Congress. The committee was assigned the ominous task of making recommendations to Congress of ways in which the Federal system of justice could be improved. On April 2, 1990, the committee presented its findings and recommendations to Congress and the public. One of the specific and important tasks of the committee was to review the work of the Federal appellate courts. The committee found that one of the most important issues which continued to face the Federal appellate courts was the question of resolving conficts between the Federal circuit courts over various issues of law. To address this problem, the Federal Courts Study Committee recommended a proposal to establish a trial project in which legal conflicts between different Federal circuit courts could be resolved short of a decision by the Supreme Court. The legislation which I am offering today establishes this trial program.

This legislation provides for a scheme by which the Supreme Court can refer a case which presents a conflict of law question. Under this scheme once the Supreme Court makes such an order, the clerk shall select at random a Federal circuit which has not issued an opinion on the point of law which is in conflict. That appellate court is then given jurisdiction over all issues in that case and can make all necessary orders. Upon disposition by the selected appellate court, the case is deemed final, subject only to a further petition to the Supreme Court for review.

The bill further provides that the Supreme Court may establish rules to govern the specific procedures of this procedure. Also, the bill provides that the judicial conference shall establish a committee to monitor and evaluate the operations and effects of this act. Finally, this bill provides for the sunsetting of this legislation after 5 years.

I believe that the work of the Federal Courts Study Committee was very important. The committee made many positive contributions, and I am confident that over time the work of the committee will be praised by scholars and historians. In crafting this bill, I wish to thank the committee, and especially the valuable work of Dennis Hauptley and Judge Levin Campbell for their skill and dedication to the improvement of the Federal courts.

In introducing this bill I am making a small, but I believe important, first step in seeing that many of the valuable recommendations of the committee are enacted into law. I believe that this trial project will be a success, and that at its conclusion the Congress and the Federal courts will have a much clearer picture of the problem and possible solutions to the issue of intercircuit conflicts.

I heartily endorse this proposal and ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

By Mr. HEFLIN:

S.J. Res. 313. Joint resolution designating October 3, 1990, as "National Teacher Appreciation Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL TEACHER APPRECIATION DAY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation designating October 3, 1990, as "National Teacher Appreciation Day."

In the United States, over 3 million teachers strive to shape the life of each and every American. I am sure that each of us can recall the importance of a special teacher who influenced our thoughts and helped shape our career. These dedicated men and women strive to spur not only the academic growth of their students, but also their ethical, social, and emotional development.

America's superior teachers have been integral to the success of our Nation, and they will continue to play a vital role in the future. In almost every major challenge currently faced by the United States, from maintaining our global competitiveness to stemming drug abuse, teachers are in the front trenches. If anyone deserves our recognition and appreciation, it is the teachers of this country.

It has been said that a teacher affects eternity. No one can tell where his or her influence stops. The foundation of America's future rests on our children and I can think of no group more influential in their development or more deserving of this recognition than our teachers. By enacting this legislation, we will be giving America's educators but a small token of our appreciation for the personal sacrifices they make while enabling us to build an even greater nation.

Our society depends upon its teachers to ensure a bright future for this Nation. Unfortunately, we often overlook the contributions of these teachers and fail to reward them with the recognition and respect which they deserve. This is our opportunity to shine the spotlight squarely on our teachers illuminating their many selfless deeds and outstanding devotion.

Please join me in supporting this joint resolution to name October 3, 1990, as "National Teacher Appreciation Day."

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 260

At the request of Mr. HEINZ, the name of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 260, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to make the exclusion from gross income of amounts paid for employee educational assistance programs.

S. 273

At the request of Mr. HEINZ, the name of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 273, a bill to amend title 39, United States Code, to designate as nonmailable matter solicitations of donations which could reasonably be misconstrued as a bill, invoice, or statement of account due, solicitations for the purchase of products or services which are provided either free of charge or at a lower price by the Federal Government connection or endorsement, unless such matter contains an appropriate, conspicuous disclaimer, and for other purposes.

S. 1304

At the request of Mr. GLENN, the name of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1304, a bill to enhance nuclear safety at Department of Energy nuclear facilities, to modify certain functions of the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board, to apply the provisions of OSHA to certain Department of Energy nuclear facilities, to clarify the jurisdiction and powers of Government agencies dealing with nuclear wastes, to ensure independent research on the effects of radiation on human beings, to encourage a process of environmental compliance and cleanup at these facilities, to protect communities that contain these facilities, and for other purposes.

S. 1511

At the request of Mr. PRYOR, the name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1511, a bill to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 to clarify the protections given to older indivduals in regard to employee benefit plans, and for other purposes.

S. 2051

At the request of Mr. HEFLIN, the name of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. COATS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2051, a bill to amend the Social Security Act to provide for more flexible billing arrangements in situations where physicians in the solo practice of medicine or in another group practice have arrangements with colleagues to "cover" their practice on an occasional basis.

S. 2111

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the name of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2111, a bill designating the month of May as "Asian/Pacific American Heritage Month."

S. 2187

At the request of Mr. COCHRAN, the name of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] was added as cosponsor of S. 2187, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to make grants to encourage States to establish Offices of Rural Health to improve health care in rural areas.

S. 2260

At the request of Mr. PRYOR, the names of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] were added as cosponsors of S. 2260, a bill to promote the formation of a private, nonprivate organization to foster development of free market economies in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

S. 2556

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the name of the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2556, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to expand the list of diseases presumed to be service-connected in the case of veterans who were exposed to radiation from a nuclear detonation and to eliminate the requirement that the listed diseases become manifest within certain time periods; and to require that the Secretary of Veterans Affairs consider creation of similar presumptions for veterans who were exposed to radiation from another activity.

S. 2561

At the request of Mr. GORTON, the names of the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], the Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] were added as cosponsors of S. 2561, a bill to amend the Controlled Substances Act with respect to the regulation of precursor chemicals.

S. 2591

At the request of Mr. BAUCUS, the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2591, a bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide relief from certain regulations relating to physicians' services.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 267

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 267, a joint resolution to authorize and request the President to designate May 1990 as "National Physical Fitness and Sports Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 274

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the names of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY] and the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 274, a joint resolution to designate the week beginning June 10, 1990, as "National Scleroderma Awareness Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 278

At the request of Mr. ROCKEFELLER, the name of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 278, a joint resolution designating July 19, 1990, as "Flight Attendant Safety Professionals' Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 304

At the request of Mr. SHELBY, the names of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] were added as cosponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 304, a joint resolution to designate October 17, 1990, as "National Drug-Free Schools and Communities Education and Awareness Day."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 127

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the names of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE], and the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] were added as cosponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 127, a concurrent resolution to express the sense of Congress that Greyhound Lines, Inc., and the Amalgamated Transit Union should pursue meaningful negotiations under the auspices of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the Secretary of Labor to resolve their dispute and restore vital transportation services to American communities.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I announce, for the information of Senators, that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, which I am privileged to chair, is scheduled to hold a hearing on Friday, May 18, 1990, in SR-418 at 9:30 a.m., to consider titles I and III of S. 2100, S. 2556, S. 1887, S. 2454, S. 2499, S. 2102, S. 2482, and S. 2615.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services Subcommittee on Defense Industry and Technology be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Monday, May 14, 1990, at 2 p.m. to continue to receive testimony on implementation of the Defense Management Report in review of S. 2171, the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1991; and S. 2440, the Defense Management Improvement Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to meet on May 14, 1990, beginning at 2 p.m., in 485 Russell Senate Office Building, to consider and report the nomination of Anthony J. Hope for the position of chairman for the National Indian Gaming Commission, and to mark up S. 2203, the Zuni Land Claims Settlement Act, to be followed by an oversight hearing on S. 1021, the Native American Grave and Burial Protection Act, S. 1980, the Native American Repatriation of Cultural Patrimony Act, and the Heard Museum Report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

A TRIBUTE TO THE GAINESVILLE THEATER ALLIANCE, THE PRIDE OF GEORGIA'S COLLEGE THEATER

● Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I bring to your attention today the accomplishment of Georgia's first college theater group to be honored by an invitation to perform at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, DC.

The Gainesville Theater Alliance, a group of students and professors from Georgia's Gainesville College and Brenau College who have pooled their resources to form a joint theater program, won the honor of performing in national competition at the Kennedy Center after an initial competition in the American College Theater Festival XXII. They were one of seven schools chosen from a group of 795 competing schools to participate in the national competition. The Gainesville Theater Alliance performed "The Scarlet Pimpernel" at the Kennedy Center on April 25 and April 26, 1990.

Mr. President, the Gainesville Theater Alliance, founded 10 years ago by Brenau College's theater professor Ed Cabell is a perfect example of how cooperation and goodwill between two institutions can produce shining success. The hard work of these students and their advisors deserves the highest recognition. Their determination and spirit of cooperation has earned my most sincere admiration.

I would like to recognize the director of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," Ed Cabell, and the play's technical team: Lawrence L. Graham, Angela Brown, Dan Carter, Ann Elizabeth Armstrong, Hugh Adams, Roy Forrester, Virginia Deayton, Hahn C. Hanrahan, Christopher C. Mabry, Ben P. Williams, Laura Buchanan, Laura Carlson, Joe Jones, and Francine Dibben. Their expertise has certainly guided and polished this production. Ed Cabell, Lawrence Graham, and Jeff Nichols should be commended for their accomplishments as professors in charge of the Gainesville Theater Alliance.

The actors, who have been rehearsing since September 1989, deserve recognition for their dedication and hard work. Not only have they carried the work load of a college education, but they have also committed one year and a half of their time to the production of "The Scarlet Pimpernel." The cast includes: Robin Hale, Brent Glenn, Amy Nichols, Danny Acres, Ted Bill, Shannon Hannah, Sabrina Mazer, Jeff McClure, Tracy Palma, Amy Ray, Elaine Simpson, Sara Wilkinson, Gretchen Fennell, Matt Magill, Mitchell Wood, Michael Granberry, Glaire Porter, Scott Simpson, Ken Wright, Hugh Adams, Daniel Jones, Charlie Knoch, and Nicole Dodd.

The Gainesville Theater Alliance clearly serves as an example of both educational and artistic excellence for Georgia and the Nation. I congratulate the students and teachers for their fine work.●

MISSOURI COUPLE HELPS ABUSED AND NEGLECTED CHILDREN

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of Kay and Francis Ater of Shelbina, MO. The Aters have participated for the last 7 years in the Shiloh Christian Children's Ranch Homeparents Program. During their years as participants in the program, they have improved the quality of life for many children who have been abused and neglected. The Aters' special brand of caring lives on in the mind of every child who has crossed their doorstep, and I am sure each child has fond memories and many thanks for the time they spent in the Aters' house.

To the Aters, I extend my congratulations and appreciation for their 7 years of service with the Shiloh Christian Children's Ranch. I trust that they will continue to help children involved in the program for many years to come.●

JIM LAMPHEAR NAMED COLORADO AND WESTERN REGION TEACHER OF THE YEAR

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I offer my congratulations to Irving Junior High School English Teacher Jim Lamphear, recently named Colorado and western region Teacher of the Year. IBM Corp. and Classroom Learning magazine were inspired to offer the award to the seventh grade teacher upon learning of his students' sophisticated response to a chronic national problem. The seventh graders, concerned with a news report about American students trailing their international counterparts in spelling, wrote a sophisticated research project examining America's fall from preeminence in major fields entitled, "When Decades Collide: From Crisis to Solution." In a time when the teaching profession is under criticism, this man's obvious love of his job is a refreshing change, and I ask that an article on Jim Lamphear and the Teacher of the Year Award be inserted into the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Gazette Telegraph, Apr. 27, 1990]

CLASS RESEARCH PROJECT HELPS LAMPHEAR EARN AWARD

(By Angela Dire)

It was more of the same old thing—a news report about American students trailing their international counterparts, this time in spelling.

But what a stir it made among Jim Lamphear's and Kathy Mathers' 7th grade students at Washington Irving Junior High School. The accelerated English class groaned like an old assembly line grinding to a halt.

"It's it's,"—a girl could not put her finger on the word.

"Symptomatic?" asked Lamphear.

"Yes!"

"So what are we going to do about it?"

What the students did was a sophisticated research project examining America's fall from preeminence in major fields, called "When Decades Collide: From Crisis to Solution."

Since September, they studied trends in health, education, space exploration, scientific research and the automotive and electronic industries.

They sought solutions for problems ranging from the drop-out rate to rising medical malpractice suits.

And it inspired IBM Corp. and Classroom Computer Learning Magazine to tab Lamphear "Teacher of the Year" for Colorado and the Western Region.

"This is a renaissance," he said. "To watch them say something, and to look into those faces and see, 'That kid knows!' "

Said Mathers, "this project has rejuvenated two, 20-year-old teaching careers. At a time when the profession is being criticized roundly right and left, we have never been more happy to be teachers."

The students found information in a variety of research journals.

They sent electronic messages to companies for reports—and received their requests on the superintendent's fax machine. They did computer searches via the school modem.

Their work brought them in contact with leaders in government and business. They attended Vice President Quayle's U.S. Space Symposium address, conducted a conference call with top Hewlett Packard executives in Japan, and have an interview set with an American Honda chief executive.

The sources who never replied was a lesson in itself. The Big Three auto companies have yet to reply.

When they sought an audience with Secretary of Education Lauro Cavazos they were told, "We're very busy here." A secretary told Mathers whoever might respond would not be "very high up in the department" because the students were too young to understand complex issues.

The students hope to present their work to leaders in the fields they have researched.

"We can speak like experts now," 12-year-old Marre Shedden said. "It's not just a little 7th grade report. It's something that 85 to 95 percent of adult Americans don't know."●

THE SECOND ANNUAL GLORIA STEINEM AWARDS A NATIONAL SALUTE TO WOMEN OF VISION

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, on May 7 the Second Annual Gloria Steinem Awards was held in New York as a National Salute to Women of Vision. The Ms. Foundation for Women sponsors the awards. Founded 15 years ago, it is the only national, public, and multi-issue women's foundation in the United States. It has funded ground breaking projects that have brought issues vital to the social and economic well-being of women and children to the public at large.

The Ms. Foundation supports the grassroots efforts of women in the fight against discrimination and violence and in protecting children. Its efforts go toward development of healthy families by helping to achieve economic and social empowerment, and supports and helps launch nonsexist, multiracial education programs and safeguards reproductive rights.

Nearly $5 million has been distributed by the Ms. Foundation since it began grantmaking. The funds have been distributed to over 600 grassroots women's groups in 49 States and Puerto Rico.

The awards program is a part of the foundation's commitment to recognize grassroots women leaders. I want to acknowledge and congratulate the recipients of the Second Annual Gloria Steinem Awards. Individuals who have consistently worked toward achieving the foundation's goals, they are recognized in areas of concern to the foundation.

For her work on behalf of children, Judith Webb of Young Peacemakers and Teen Peacemakers was recognized, and Sarah Fields-Davis of the Poultry Workers-Center for Women's Economic Alternatives was honored for her work in the field of economic justice.

Maria Christina Lopez of the Santa Fe women's health project was recognized for leadership development-empowerment, and Julia Scott of Washington, DC was honored for her work with women of color and reproductive rights in the field of reproductive rights, health, and AIDS. Gayle Woodsum of Looking Up of Augusta, ME, was the recipient of the award in the category of safety-prevention of violence. Phoebe V. Valentine was honored with the Philanthropic Vision Award.

At the second annual awards program, the founding members were awarded the Founding Sisters Award. Visionaries, they with Gloria Steinem saw the need for the establishment of the Ms. Foundation for Women. These outstanding individuals are: Patricia Carbine, Letty Cottin Pogrebin, and Marlo Thomas.

Mr. President, I congratulate and salute all of these worthy recipients. They are women of vision. May their fine work and that of the Ms. Foundation for Women continue in the future.●

SUSAN ANDERSON RECEIVES FELLOWSHIP FROM U.S. DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I offer my congratulations to Sandburg Elementary School second grade teacher Susan Anderson, the recipient of a prestigious $32,000 grant for her pioneering of the Design for Learning Program that improves upon the traditional elementary school structure in many ways. In her Design for Learning Program, the ratio between students and teachers is decreased for part of the school day without adding extra staff; students of different grades have the opportunity to work with each other while studying different coordinated subjects—math with English with social studies, et cetera—and skills are being taught that help apply subject matter to real-life situations. In a time when the teaching profession seems under constant criticism, Ms. Anderson's obvious love of her job is a refreshing change, and I ask that the article on the creative efforts of Susan Anderson and her colleagues at the Sandburg School be inserted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Denver Post, Mar. 3, 1990]

A SALUTE TO SANDBURG SCHOOL

At a time when our educational system is being criticized roundly for its shortcomings, it is refreshing to hear of teachers and schools with innovative programs that are making real progress toward improving the quality of education.

One such example is Suan Anderson, a second-grade teacher at Carl Sandburg Elementary School in the Littleton district. Mrs. Anderson has been awarded the Christa McAuliffe fellowship by the U.S. Department of Education, a prestigious $32,000 grant given to just one teacher in each state for work on new educational techniques that show promise.

Anderson and other teachers at Sandburg are pioneering a "Design for Learning" program that improves upon the traditional elementary school structure in several ways. Student-teacher ratios are lowered for part of the school day without adding staff: there are opportunties for students of different grades to work together part of the time; different subjects are being coordinated with each other (math with English with social studies, etc.) and youngers are being taught new methods to apply subject matter to real-life situations.

Coloradans should salute Anderson and the Sandburg staff for winning the national award, plus a $5,000 grant from Gov. Roy Romer, and we should encourage the school to continue working on such creative programs as "Design for Learning" that will better prepare our children for the 21st century.●

THE NOMINATION OF JOHN D. SHANSTROM

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the Senate considered a judicial nomination of great importance to my home State of Montana on last Friday.

We are considering the nomination of Judge Jack D. Shanstrom to be a U.S. district court judge.

Judge Shanstrom has dedicated his career to public service.

After graduating from the University of Montana Law School in 1957, Jack served in the Judge Advocate's Office of the Air Force. After leaving the service, he went on to become an assistant city attorney in Livingston, then was elected to be the Park County attorney.

He was a Montana State district court judge for 18 years, until December 1982. The following month he became the U.S. magistrate for the district of Montana and has served in that position ever since.

Judge Shanstrom has been recommended for this position by highly respected members of Montana's judicial community. His many years of experience in the legal profession have been cited as examples for others who wish to enter public service.

I am confident Judge Shanstrom will execute his duties as a U.S. district court judge with the same diligence and dedication he has exhibited in the past.

I would like to thank the Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee for working so quickly to fill this judicial position.

The people of my home State of Montana and I thank the committee for its dedication to filling this opening. I wish Judge Shanstrom and his wife Audrey well as the judge assumes his new duties.●

NATIONAL POLICE WEEK AND PEACE OFFICERS MEMORIAL DAY

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to our 500,000 sworn law enforcement officers as they prepare for the upcoming National Police Week and Police Officers Memorial Day.

Policemen in the United States have long been our first line of defense against crime, and it is our responsibility to provide them with all the encouragement and support possible as they attempt to stem the tidal wave of crime and drug-related violence in this country.

National Police Week, which will occur from May 13 to May 19, 1990, will seek to highlight through various activities and celebrations the extraordinary service provided by our 500,000 officers. A candlelight vigil will be held on May 13 to commemorate the beginning of National Police Week, and a National Police Survivors' Seminar will be hosted by the Concerns of Police Survivors on May 13 and 14. Also, at noon on May 15, the National Fraternal Order of Police and the National FOP Auxiliary will be hosting the ninth annual National Peace Officers' Memorial Day Service. Any officers killed in the line of duty since 1989 will be recognized in this special service.

Finally, the new National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial, located in Judiciary Square, will be completed and dedicated sometime between May 13 and May 18 to coincide with National Police Week. The memorial will include the names of all officers who have served the United States, as well as those who have died in the line of duty. The memorial, funded by the contributions of over 500,000 American citizens, will serve as a permanent expression of our collective respect and appreciation.

The contributions of our national police force are overwhelming, and their courage and dedication demand our constant support and recognition. I welcome this opportunity to commend their extraordinary efforts, and also to convey my sincerest wishes for a successful celebration week.●

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 3910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3910) entitled "An Act to require the Secretary of Education to conduct a comprehensive national assessment of programs carried out with assistance under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965", with the following amendment:

Page 9, after line 21, insert:

SEC. 7. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2 of Public Law 81-874 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection (d):

"(d) The United States shall be deemed to own Federal property, for the purposes of this Act where—

"(1) prior to the transfer of Federal property, the United States owned Federal property meeting the requirements of subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of subsection (a)(1); and

"(2) the United States transfers a portion of the property referred to in paragraph (1) to another nontaxable entity, and the United States—

"(A) restricts some or any construction on such property;

"B) requires that the property be used in perpetuity for the public purposes for which it was conveyed;

"(C) requires the grantee of the property to report to the Federal Government (or its agent) setting forth information on the use of the property;

"(D) prohibits the sale, lease assignment or other disposal of the property unless to another eligible government agency and with the approval of the Federal Government (or its agent); and

"(E) reserves to the Federal Government a right of reversion at any time the Federal Government (or its agent) deems it necessary for the national defense.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1989.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HEALTH BENEFITS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 1805.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3 to the bill (H.R. 1805) entitled "An Act to amend title 5, United States Code, to allow Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments rather than through annuity withholdings if the annuity is insufficient to cover the required withholdings, and to make a technical correction relating to the life insurance program.".

Resolved, That the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to the aforesaid bill.

Resolved, That the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the aforesaid bill, with the following amendment:

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to amend title 5, United States Code, to allow Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments rather than through annuity withholdings if the annuity is insufficient to cover the required withholdings, and for other purposes.".

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate recede from Senate amendment No. 2 and concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendment to the title.

The motion was agreed to.

OMNIBUS TRADE AND TARIFF ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 1594.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill (H.R. 1594) entitled "An Act to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the Peoples' Republic of Hungary for 3 years" with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert:

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Sec. 1. Short title.

TITLE I—TRADE AGENCY AUTHORIZATIONS, CUSTOMS USER FEES, AND OTHER CUSTOMS PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Trade Agency Authorizations for Fiscal Years 1991 and 1992

Sec. 101. United States International Trade Commission.
Sec. 102. United States Customs Service.
Sec. 103. Office of the United States Trade Representative.

Subtitle B—Customs User Fees

Sec. 111. Customs user fees for formal entries made during fiscal year 1990.
Sec. 112. Enforcement authority.
Sec. 113. Exemption of Israeli products from user fees.
Sec. 114. GAO report.
Sec. 115. Extension of customs user fee program.
Sec. 116. Effective dates.

Subtitle C—Miscellaneous Customs Provisions

Sec. 121. Customs forfeiture fund.
Sec. 122. Increase in value subject to administrative forfeiture; processing of money seized under the customs laws.
Sec. 123. Annual national trade and customs law violation estimates and enforcement strategy.
Sec. 124. Reports regarding expansion of customs preclearance operations and recovery for damage resulting from customs examinations.
Sec. 125. Eligibility of Czechoslovakia and East Germany under the generalized system of preferences.
Sec. 126. Extension of time for preparation of report on supplemental wage allowance demonstration projects under the worker adjustment assistance program.
Sec. 127. Technical amendments regarding nondiscriminatory trade treatment.

TITLE II—CARIBBEAN BASIN ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Subtitle A—Short Title and Findings

Sec. 201. Short title.
Sec. 202. Congressional findings.

Subtitle B—Amendments to the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act and Related Provisions

PART 1—AMENDMENTS TO CARIBBEAN BASIN ECONOMIC RECOVERY ACT

Sec. 211. Repeal of termination date on duty-free treatment under the Act.
Sec. 212. Duty reduction for certain leather-related products.
Sec. 213. Worker rights.
Sec. 214. Reports.
Sec. 215. Application of Act in eastern Caribbean area.

PART 2—AMENDMENTS TO THE HARMONIZED TARIFF SCHEDULE AND OTHER PROVISIONS AFFECTING CBI BENEFICIARY COUNTRIES

Sec. 221. Sugar imports from beneficiary countries.
Sec. 222. Increase in duty-free tourist allowances.
Sec. 223. Duty-free treatment for articles assembled in beneficiary countries from components produced in the United States.
Sec. 224. Rules of origin for beneficiary country products.
Sec. 225. Cumulation involving beneficiary country products under the countervailing and antidumping duty laws.
Sec. 226. Ethyl alcohol and mixtures thereof for fuel use.
Sec. 227. Conforming amendment.

Subtitle C—Scholarship Assistance and Tourism Promotion

Sec. 231. Caribbean-Central American Scholarship Partnership.
Sec. 232. Promotion of tourism.
Sec. 233. Pilot preclearance program.

TITLE III—TARIFF PROVISIONS

Sec. 301. Reference.

Subtitle A—Temporary Suspensions and Reductions in Duties

PART 1—NEW DUTY SUSPENSIONS AND TEMPORARY REDUCTIONS

Sec. 311. Castor oil and its fractions.
Sec. 312. Certain jams, pastes and purees, and fruit jellies.
Sec. 313. Mercuric oxide.
Sec. 314. Hexyl chloride.
Sec. 315. Tertiary-Butyl chloride.
Sec. 316. Hexachlorobutadiene.
Sec. 317. DMBS and HPBA.
Sec. 318. MBEP.
Sec. 319. 6-t-Butyl-2,4-xylenol.
Sec. 320. 4,4¹-Methylenebis-(2,6-dimethylphenylcyanate).
Sec. 321. Neville and winter's acid.
Sec. 322. 7-Hydroxy-1,3-naphthalene-disulfonic acid, dipotassium salt.
Sec. 323. 7-Acetyl-1,1,3,4,4,6-hexamethyltetrahydronaphthalene.
Sec. 324. Anthraquinone (AQ).
Sec. 325. 1,4-Dihydroxyanthraquinone.
Sec. 326. 2-Ethylanthraquinone.
Sec. 327. Chlorhexanone.
Sec. 328. P-Toluic acid.
Sec. 329. Naphthalic acid anhydride.
Sec. 330. Diflunisal.
Sec. 331. Diphenolic acid.
Sec. 332. 6-Hydroxy-2-naphthoic acid.
Sec. 333. Methyl and ethyl Parathion.
Sec. 334. N-Methylaniline and m-Chloroaniline.
Sec. 335. 4,4¹,-Methylenebis-(3-chloro-2,6-diethylaniline).
Sec. 336. 4,4¹-Methylene-bis-(2,6-diisopropyl aniline).
Sec. 337. 2-chloro-4-nitroaniline.
Sec. 338. 4-chloro-a-a-a-trifluoro-o-toluidine.
Sec. 339. Trifluoromethylaniline.
Sec. 340. 5-Amino-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid.
Sec. 341. 7-Amino-1,3-naphthalene-disulfonic acid monopotassium salt.
Sec. 342. 4-Amino-1-naphthalenesulfonic acid, sodium salt.
Sec. 343. 8-Amino-2-naphthenesulfonic acid.
Sec. 344. Mixtures of 5- and 8-amino-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid.
Sec. 345. 1-Naphthylamine.
Sec. 346. 6-Amino-2-naphthenesulfonic acid.
Sec. 347. Broenner's acid.
Sec. 348. D salt.
Sec. 349. 2,4-Diaminobenzenesulfonic acid.
Sec. 350. Paramine acid.
Sec. 351. Tamoxifen.
Sec. 352. K-acid.
Sec. 353. O-anisidine.
Sec. 354. 2-Amino-4-chlorophenol.
Sec. 355. Ornithine.
Sec. 356. Demap.
Sec. 357. 7-Anilino-4-hydroxy-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid.
Sec. 358. 1,4-Diamino-2,3-dihydroanthraquinone.
Sec. 359. TFA LYS PRO in free base and tosyl salt forms.
Sec. 360. Levodopa.
Sec. 361. 1-Amino-2-bromo-4-hydroxyanthraquinone.
Sec. 362. ADC-6.
Sec. 363. L-Carnitine.
Sec. 364. Quizalofop-ethyl.
Sec. 365. Acetoacet-para-toluidide (AAPT).
Sec. 366. Naphthol as types.
Sec. 367. N-[[(4-chlorophenyl)-amino]-2,6-difluorobenzamide.
Sec. 368. Anis base.
Sec. 369. Acetoacetsulfanilic acid, potassium salt.
Sec. 370. Iohexol.
Sec. 371. Iopamidol.
Sec. 372. Ioxaglate.
Sec. 373. 4-Aminoacetanilide.
Sec. 374. D-Carboxamide.
Sec. 375. 2,6-dichlorobenzonitrile.
Sec. 376. Octadecyl isocyanate.
Sec. 377. 1,6-Hexamethylene diisocyanate.
Sec. 378. 1,1-Ethylidenebis-(phenyl-4-cyanate).
Sec. 379. 2,2-Bis(4-cyanatophenyl-1,1,1,3,3,3-hexafluoropropane.
Sec. 380. 4,4-Thiodiphenyl cyanate.
Sec. 381. 2[(4-Aminophenyl)sulfonyl] ethanol, hydrogen sulfate ester.
Sec. 382. Dimethoate.
Sec. 383. Diphenyldichlorosilane and phenyltrichlorosilane.
Sec. 384. Bendiocarb.
Sec. 385. Rhodamine 2C base.
Sec. 386. 2,5-Dichloro-4-(3-methyl-5-oxo-2-pyrazolin-1-yl)benzenesulfonic acid.
Sec. 387. Nimodipine.
Sec. 388. BPIP.
Sec. 389. 2,2,6,6-Tetramethyl-4-piperidinon and amino hydroxy- and imido derivatives.
Sec. 390. Norfloxacin.
Sec. 391. Ciprofloxacin and ciprofloxacin hydrochloride.
Sec. 392. 6-Methyluracil.
Sec. 393. 2,4-Diamino-6-phenyl-1,3,5-triazine.
Sec. 394. Amiloride hydrochloride.
Sec. 395. Trimethyl base.
Sec. 396. Ala pro.
Sec. 397. Thiothiamine hydrochloride.
Sec. 398. Ethyl 2-(2-Aminothiazol-4-yl)-2-Hydroxyiminoacetate (ATHAET).
Sec. 399. Ethyl 2-(2-Aminothiazol-4-yl)-2-Methoxyiminoacetate(ATMAET).
Sec. 400. 7-Nitronaphth[1,2]-oxadiazole-5-sulfonic acid.
Sec. 401. Ceftazidime tertiary butyl ester.
Sec. 402. Chemical intermediate.
Sec. 403. Sulfachloropyridazine.
Sec. 404. Mixed ortho/para toluene sulfonomide.
Sec. 405. Herbicide intermediate.
Sec. 406. N-[4-[[(2-Amino-5-formyl-1,4,5,6,7,8-hexahydro-4-oxo-6-pteridinyl) methyl]amino]benzoyl]-1-glutamic acid.
Sec. 407. Theobromine.
Sec. 408. (6R-(6a, 7B(Z)))-7-(((2-Amino-4-thiazolyl)((carboxymethoxy)imino)acetyl)amino)-3-ethenyl-8-oxo-5-thia-1-azabicyclo(4.2.0) oct-2-ene-2-carboxylic acid (CEFIXIME).
Sec. 409. Teicoplanin.
Sec. 410. Carfentanil citrate.
Sec. 411. Calcium acetylsalicylate.
Sec. 412. Resolin red F3BS.
Sec. 413. Certain acid black powder and presscake.
Sec. 414. Pigment red 178.
Sec. 415. Pigment red 149 dry and presscake.
Sec. 416. Solvent yellow 43.
Sec. 417. Solvent yellow 44.
Sec. 418. Modeling pastes.
Sec. 419. Mono- and dibenzyl toluenes.
Sec. 420. Chemical light activator blends.
Sec. 421. Polymin p and polymin p hydrochloride, and polymin SNA 60.
Sec. 422. Specialty thermoset resin.
Sec. 423. Hydrocarbon novolac cyanate ester.
Sec. 424. Chlorinated synthetic rubber.
Sec. 425. Wicker products.
Sec. 426. Certain plastic web sheeting.
Sec. 427. Protective sports apparel.
Sec. 428. Garments specially designed for handicapped persons who are not ambulatory.
Sec. 429. Gripping narrow fabrics.
Sec. 430. In-line roller skate boots.
Sec. 431. Self-folding collapsible umbrellas.
Sec. 432. Glass bulbs.
Sec. 433. Drinking glasses with special effects in the glass.
Sec. 434. Certain glass fibers.
Sec. 435. Articles of semiprecious stones.
Sec. 436. Luggage frames of aluminum.
Sec. 437. Molten-salt-cooled acrylic acid reactors.
Sec. 438. Zinc printing type.
Sec. 439. Impact line printer.
Sec. 440. Machines used in the manufacture of bicycle parts; certain bicycle parts.
Sec. 441. Motor vehicle parts.
Sec. 442. Parts of generators for use on aircraft.
Sec. 443. Magnetic video tape recordings.
Sec. 444. Certain infant nursery monitors and intercoms.
Sec. 445. Certain machined electronic connector contact parts.
Sec. 446. Certain piston engines.
Sec. 447. Timing apparatus with opto-electronic display only.
Sec. 448. Furniture and seats of unspun fibrous vegetable materials.
Sec. 449. Christmas ornaments.
Sec. 450. 3-dimensional cameras.
Sec. 451. Operatic scenery, properties, including sets.

PART 2—EXISTING TEMPORARY DUTY SUSPENSIONS

Sec. 461. Extension of certain existing suspensions of duty.
Sec. 462. Extension of, and other modifications to, certain existing suspensions of duty.
Sec. 463. Termination of existing suspension of duty on c-amines.

Subtitle B—Other Tariff and Miscellaneous Provisions

PART 1—TARIFF CLASSIFICATION AND OTHER TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

Sec. 471. Certain edible molasses.
Sec. 472. Certain woven fabrics and gauze.
Sec. 473. Classification of certain articles in whole or part of fabrics coated, covered, or laminated with opaque rubber or plastics.
Sec. 474. Gloves, mittens, and mitts.
Sec. 475. Chipper knife steel.
Sec. 476. Elimination of inverted tariff on cantilever brakes and brake parts for bicycles.
Sec. 477. Bicycles having 26-inch wheels.
Sec. 478. Processing of certain blended syrups.

PART 2—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Sec. 481. Renewal of existing customs exemption applicable to bicycle parts in foreign trade zones.
Sec. 482. Rail cars for the State of Florida.
Sec. 483. Reliquidation of certain entries.
Sec. 484. Protest relating to certain entries.
Sec. 485. Effective dates.

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Customs and Trade Act of 1990".

TITLE I—TRADE AGENCY AUTHORIZATIONS, CUSTOMS USER FEES, AND OTHER CUSTOMS PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Trade Agency Authorizations for Fiscal Years 1991 and 1992

SEC. 101. UNITED STATES INTERNATIONAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Section 330(e)(2) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1330(e)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission for necessary expenses (including the rental of conference rooms in the District of Columbia and elsewhere) not to exceed the following:

"(i) $41,170,000 for fiscal year 1991.

"(ii) $44,052,000 for fiscal year 1992.

"(B) Not to exceed $2,500 of the amount authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year under subparagraph (A) may be used, subject to the approval of the Chairman of the Commission, for reception and entertainment expenses.

"(C) No part of any sum that is appropriated under the authority of subparagraph (A) may be used by the Commission in the making of any special study, investigation, or report that is requested by any agency of the executive branch unless that agency reimburses the Commission for the cost thereof.".

SEC. 102. UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Section 301(b) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)) is amended to read a follows:

"(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) FOR NONCOMMERCIAL OPERATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the salaries and expenses of the Customs Service that are incurred in noncommercial operations not to exceed the following:

"(A) $510,551,000 for fiscal year 1991.

"(B) $536,079,000 for fiscal year 1992.

"(2) FOR COMMERCIAL OPERATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated from the Customs User Fee Account for the salaries and expenses of the Customs Service that are incurred in commercial operations not less than the following:

"(A) $672,397,000 for fiscal year 1991.

"(B) $706,017,000 for fiscal year 1992.

"(3) FOR AIR INTERDICTION.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the operation (including salaries and expenses) and maintenance of the air interdiction program of the Customs Service not to exceed the following:

"(A) $143,047,000 for fiscal year 1991.

"(B) $150,199,000 for fiscal year 1992.".

SEC. 103. OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE.

Section 141(g)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 217(g)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g)(1)(A) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Office for the purposes of carrying out its functions not to exceed the following:

"(i) $23,250,000 for fiscal year 1991.

"(ii) $21,077,000 for fiscal year 1992.

"(B) Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under subparagraph (A) for any fiscal year—

"(i) not to exceed $98,000 may be used for entertainment and representation expenses of the Office; and

"(ii) not to exceed $1,000,000 shall remain available until expended.".

Subtitle B—Customs User Fees

SEC. 111. CUSTOMS USER FEES FOR FORMAL ENTRIES MADE DURING FISCAL YEAR 1990.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 13031(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(except fiscal year 1990)" after "1987" in paragraph (10); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) For the processing of any merchandise (other than an article described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (9)) that is formally entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, during fiscal year 1990, a fee (not exceeding $575) in an amount equal to—

"(A) 0.17 percent ad valorem, or

"(B) an ad valorem rate which the Secretary of the Treasury estimates will provide a total amount of revenue during fiscal year 1990, equal to—

"(i) the total amount authorized to be appropriated for such fiscal year to the United States Customs Service for salaries and expenses incurred in conducting commercial operations during such fiscal year, reduced by

"(ii) the excess, if any, of—

"(I) the total amount authorized to be appropriated for such salaries and expenses for such fiscal year, over

"(II) the total amount actually appropriated for such salaries and expenses for such fiscal year, except that if appropriations are not authorized for fiscal year 1990, the fee imposed under this paragraph with respect to that year shall be in an amount equal to 0.17 percent ad valorem or $575, whichever is less.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 13031 of such Act of 1985 is further amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (b) is amended—

(A) by striking out "(a) (9) or (10)" in paragraph (8)(A) and inserting "(a) (9), (10), or (11)";

(B) by amending paragraph (10) to read as follows:

"(10) The fee charged under subsection (a) (10) or (11) of this section with respect to goods of Canadian origin (as determined under section 202 of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation Act of 1988) shall be in accordance with article 403 of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement."; and

(C) by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(11) No fee may be charged under subsection (a) (10) or (11) with respect to products of Israel if an exemption with respect to the fee is implemented under section 113 of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990.

"(12) For purposes of applying subsection (a)(11)(B), expenses incurred in conducting commercial operations do not include costs incurred in—

"(A) air passenger processing;

"(B) export control; and

"(C) international affairs.".

(2) Subsection (f)(2) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(A)" after "(2)",

(B) by striking out "(other than costs for which direct reimbursement under paragraph (3) is required)" and inserting "(other than costs described in subparagraph (B))", and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(B) The following costs may not be funded with money contained in the Customs User Fee Account:

"(i) Costs for which direct reimbursement under paragraph (3) is required.

"(ii) Costs for any of the following services (other than a service for which direct reimbursement is made under paragraph (3)):

"(I) Any service for which a fee exemption is provided by reason of subsection (b)(10).

"(II) Any service for which a fee exemption is provided by reason of the determination referred to in section 113 of the Customs and Trade Act of 1990.

"(III) Any service provided in processing during fiscal year 1990 air passengers and articles described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (a)(9).".

SEC. 112. ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY.

Section 13031(g) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(g)) is amended—

(1) by amending the side heading to read as follows: "REGULATIONS AND ENFORCEMENT.—"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) Except to the extent otherwise provided in regulations, all administrative and enforcement provisions of customs laws and regulations, other than those laws and regulations relating to drawback, shall apply with respect to any fee prescribed under subsection (a) of this section, and with respect to persons liable therefor, as if such fee is a customs duty. For purposes of the preceding sentence, any penalty expressed in terms of a relationship to the amount of the duty shall be treated as not less than the amount which bears a similar relationship to the amount of the fee assessed. For purposes of determining the jurisdiction of any court of the United States or any agency of the United States, any fee prescribed under subsection (a) of this section shall be treated as if such fee is a customs duty.".

SEC. 113. EXEMPTION OF ISRAELI PRODUCTS FROM USER FEES.

If the United States Trade Representative determines that the Government of Israel has provided reciprocal concessions in exchange for the exemption of the products of Israel from the fees imposed under section 13031(a) (10) and (11) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, such fees may not be charged with respect to any product of Israel that is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the 15th day (but not before October 1, 1989) after the date on which the determination is published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 114. GAO REPORT.

The Comptroller General of the United States, within 180 days after the effective date of this section, shall report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the costs incurred by the Customs Service in conducting commercial operations and on appropriate fees to be charged to the beneficiaries of such services.

SEC. 115. EXTENSION OF CUSTOMS USER FEE PROGRAM.

Section 13031(j)(3) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(j)(3)) is amended by striking out "September 30, 1990" and inserting "September 30, 1991".

SEC. 116. EFFECTIVE DATES.

This subtitle (except section 113) takes effect October 1, 1989. Section 113 takes effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Subtitle C—Miscellaneous Customs Provisions

SEC. 121. CUSTOMS FORFEITURE FUND.

Section 613A of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1613b) is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a)(1) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (D);

(B) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting "; and"; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) equitable sharing payments made to other Federal agencies, State and local law enforcement agencies, and foreign countries under the authority of section 616(c) of this Act or section 981 of title 18, United States Code.".

(2) Subsection (a)(2) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(A)" after "(2)"; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(B) Any payment made under subparagraph (F) of paragraph (1) with respect to a seizure or forfeiture of property shall not exceed the value of the property at the time of disposition.".

(3) Subsection (c) is amended by inserting "forfeited currency and" before "proceeds".

(4) Subsection (e)(1) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" after the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (A);

(B) by amending subparagraph (B)—

(i) by striking out clause (ii),

(ii) by redesignating clauses (iii) through (vi) as clauses (ii) through (v), respectively,

(iii) by striking out "and" after the semicolon in clause (iv) (as so redesignated); and

(iv) by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting "; and"; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) a report containing, for the previous fiscal year—

"(i) a complete set of audited financial statements (including a balance sheet, income statement, and cash flow analysis) prepared in a manner consistent with the requirements of the Comptroller General, and

"(ii) an analysis of income and expenses for cases closed showing the revenue received or lost—

"(I) by property category (general property, vehicles, vessels, aircraft, cash, and real property) and

"(II) by type of disposition (sales, remissions, cancellations, placed into official use, sharing with State and local agencies, and destructions).".

(5) Subsection (f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), there are authorized to be appropriated from the Fund not to exceed $20,000,000 for each fiscal year to carry out the purposes set forth in subsections (a)(3) and (b) for such fiscal year.

"(2) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated under paragraph (1), not to exceed the following shall be available to carry out the purposes set forth in subsection (a)(3):

"(A) $14,855,000 for fiscal year 1991.

"(B) $15,598,000 for fiscal year 1992.".

SEC. 122. INCREASE IN VALUE SUBJECT TO ADMINISTRATIVE FORFEITURE; PROCESSING OF MONEY SEIZED UNDER THE CUSTOMS LAWS.

Section 607 of the Traiff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1607) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$100,000" in subsection (a)(1) and inserting "$500,000";

(2) by striking out "or" at the end of subsection (a)(2);

(3) by inserting "or" after the semicolon at the end of subsection (a)(3);

(4) by inserting after paragraph (3) of subsection (a) the following new paragraph:

"(4) such seized merchandise is any monetary instrument within the meaning of section 5312(a)(3) of title 31 of the United States Code;";

(5) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) The Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Congress, by no later than February 1 of each fiscal year, a report on the total dollar value of uncontested seizures of monetary instruments having a value of over $100,000 which, or the proceeds of which, have not been deposited into the Customs Forfeiture Fund under section 613A within 120 days of seizure, as of the end of the previous fiscal year."; and

(6) by striking out "$100,000" in the section heading and inserting "$500,000".

SEC. 123. ANNUAL NATIONAL TRADE AND CUSTOMS LAW VIOLATION ESTIMATES AND ENFORCEMENT STRATEGY.

(a) VIOLATION ESTIMATES.—Note later than 30 days before the beginning of each fiscal year fiscal year 1991, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Committees") a report that contains estimates of—

(1) the number and extent of violations of the trade, customs, and illegal drug control laws listed under subsection (b) that will likely occur during the fiscal year; and

(2) the relative incidence of the violations estimated under paragraph (1) among the various ports of entry and customs regions within the customs territory.

(b) APPLICABLE STATUTORY PROVISIONS.—The Commissioner of Customs, after consultation with the Committees—

(1) Shall, within 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, prepare list of those provisions of the trade, customs, and illegal drug control laws of the United States for which the United States Customs Service has enforcement responsibility and to which the reports required under subsection (a) will apply; and

(2) may from time-to-time amend the listing developed under paragraph (1).

(c) ENFORCEMENT STRATEGY.—Within 90 days after submitting a report under subsection (a) for any fiscal year, the Commissioner of Customs shall—

(1) develop a nationally uniform enforcement strategy for dealing during that year with the violations estimated in the report; and

(2) submit to the Committees a report setting forth the details of the strategy.

(d) CONFIDENTIALTY.—The contents of any report submitted to the Committees under subsection (a) of (c)(2) are confidential and disclosure of all or part of the contents is restricted to—

(1) officers and employees of the United States designated by the Commissioner of Customs;

(2) the chairman of each of the Committees; and

(3) those members of each of the Committees and staff persons of each of the Committees who are authorized by the chairman thereof to have access to the contents.

SEC. 124. REPPORTS REGARDING EXPANSION OF CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE OPERATIONS AND RECOVERY FOR DAMAGE RESULTING FROM CUSTOMS EXAMINATIONS.

(A) CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE.—The Secretary of the Treasury, in consulation with the Secretary of State, shall assess the advisability of expanding the use of preclearance operations by the United States Customs Service at foreign airports. The Secretary of Treasury shall submit a report on the assessment to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Committees") no later than February 1, 1991.

(b) RECOVERY FOR CUSTOMS DAMAGE.—

(1) The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Attorney General, shall determine and evaluate various means by which persons whose merchandise is damaged during customs examinations may seek compensation from, or take other recourse against, the United States Customs Service regarding the damage.

(2) No later than February 1, 1991, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the Committees a report on the evaluation required under paragraph (1), together with any legislative recommendation that the Secretary considers appropriate.

(c) MERCHANDISE DAMAGE STATISTICS.—The Commissioner of Customs shall keep accurate statistics on the incidence, nature, and extent of damage to merchandise resulting from customs examinations and shall provide an annual summary of these statistics to the Committees.

SEC. 125. ELIGIBILITY OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND EAST GERMANY UNDER THE GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES.

The table in section 502(b) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2462(b)) is amended by striking out "Czechoslovakia"and "Germany (East)".

SEC. 126. EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PREPARATION OF REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTAL WAGE ALLOWANCE DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS UNDER THE WORKER ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

Section 246(d) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2318(d)) is amended by striking out "3 years" and inserting "6 years".

SEC. 127. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS REGARDING NONDISCRIMINATORY TRADE TREATMENT.

(a) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—

(1) Subsection (d) of section 402 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2432(d)) is amended to real as follows:

"(d) If the President determines that the further extension of the waiver authority granted under subsection (c) will substantially promote the objectives of this section, he may recommend further extensions of such authority for successive 12-month periods. Any such recommendation shall—

"(1) be made not later than 30 days before the expiration of such authority;

"(2) be made in a document transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate setting forth his reasons for recommending the extension of such authority; and

"(3) include, for each country with respect to which a waiver granted under subsection (c) of this section is in effect, a determination that continuation of the waiver applicable to that country will substantially promote the objectives of this section, and a statement setting forth his reasons for such determination.

If the President recommends the further extension of such authority, such authority shall continue in effect until the end of the 12-month period following the end of the previous 12-month extension with respect to any country (except for any country with respect to which such authority has not been extended under this subsection), unless before the end of the 60-day period following such previous 12-month extension a joint resolution described in section 153(a) is enacted into law disapproving the extension of such authority generally or with respect to such country specifically. Such authority shall cease to be effective with respect to all countries on the date of the enactment before the end of such 60-day period of a joint resolution disapproving the extension of such authority, and shall cease to be effective with respect to any country on the date of the enactment before the end of such 60-day period of a joint resolution disapproving the extension of such authority with respect to such country.".

(2) Subsection (a) of section 153 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2193(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) CONTENTS OF RESOLUTION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'resolution' means only a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: 'That the Congress does not approve the extension of the authority contained in section 402(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 recommended by the President to the Congress on with respect to .', with the first blank space being filled with the appropriate date, and the second blank space being filled with the names of those countries, if any, with respect to which such extension of authority is not approved, and with the clause beginning with 'with respect to' being omitted if the extension of the authority is not approved with respect to any country.".

(3) Subsection (b) of section 153 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2193(b)) is amended—

(A) by striking out ", and, in the case of a resolution related to section 402(d)(4), 20 calendar days shall be substituted for 30 days" in paragraph (2),

(B) by striking out "an except clause, in the case of a resolution described in subsection (a)(1), or" in paragraph (3),

(C) by striking out ", in the case of a resolution described in subsection (a)(2)" in paragraph (3),

(D) by striking out "an except clause, in the case of a resolution described in subsection (a)(1), or" in paragraph (4), and

(E) by striking out ", in the case of a resolution described in subsection (a)(2)" in paragraph (4).

(4) Subsection (c) of section 153 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2193) is amended by striking out "in subsection (a)(1)" and inserting "in subsection (a)".

(b) BILATERAL COMMERCIAL AGREEMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (c) of section 405 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2435(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) An agreement referred to in subsection (a), and a proclamation referred to in section 404(a) implementing such agreement, shall take effect only if a joint resolution described in section 151(b)(3) that approves of the agreement referred to in subsection (a) is enacted into law.".

(2) Section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2191(b)) is amended—

(A) by amending paragraph (2) of subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(2) The term 'implementing revenue bill or resolution' means an implementing bill or approval resolution which contains one or more revenue measures by reason of which it must originate in the House of Representatives.",

(B) by striking out "concurrent" in subsection (b)(3) and inserting "joint",

(C) by striking out "revenue bill" each place it appears in subsection (e)(2) and inserting "revenue bill or resolution", and

(D) by striking out "such bill" each place it appears in subsection (e)(2) and inserting "such bill or resolution".

(3) Subsection (c) of section 407 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2437(c)) is amended—

(A) by striking out paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting the following new paragraph:

"(1) In the case of a document referred to in subsection (a), the proclamation set forth in the document may become effective and the agreement set forth in the document may enter into force and effect only if a joint resolution described in section 151(b)(3) that approves of the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the country concerned is enacted into law.", and

(B) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (2).

(c) COMPLIANCE REPORTS.—

(1) Paragraph (2) of section 407(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2437(c)(2)), as redesignated by subsection (b)(3)(B) of this section, is amended—

(A) by striking out "either the House of Representatives or the Senate adopts, by an affirmative vote of a majority of those present and voting in that House, a resolution of disapproval (under the procedures set forth in section 152)" and inserting "a joint resolution described in section 152(a)(1)(B) is enacted into law that disapproves", and

(B) by striking out "the adoption" and inserting "the enactment".

(2) Subparagraph (B) of section 152(a)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(a)(1)(B)) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: 'That the Congress does not approve transmitted to the Congress on .', with the first blank space being filled in accordance with paragraph (2), and the second blank space being filled with the appropriate date.".

(3) Paragraph (2) of section 152(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(a)(2)) is amended—

(A) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (A),

(B) by striking out "407(c)(3)" in subparagraph (C) and inserting "407(c)(2)",

(C) by striking out subparagraph (B),

(D) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(4) Subsection (f) of section 152 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(f)) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) FINAL PASSAGE IN THE SENATE.—A resolution that has passed the House of Representatives shall, when received in the Senate, be placed on the calendar. The procedures in the Senate with respect to a resolution introduced in the Senate that concerns the same matter as the resolution that passed the House of Representatives shall be the same as if no resolution had been received from the House of Representatives, but the vote on final passage in the Senate shall be on the resolution that passed the House of Representatives.".

(5) Subsection (b) of section 154 of the Trade Act of 1974 (194 U.S.C. 2194(b)) is amended by striking out ", 407(c)(2), and 407(c)(3)" and inserting "and 407(c)(2)".

TITLE II—CARIBBEAN BASIN ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Subtitle A—Short Title and Findings

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Expansion Act 1989".

SEC. 202. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) a stable political and economic climate in the Caribbean region is necessary for the development of the countries in that region and for the security and economic interests of the United States;

(2) the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act was enacted in 1983 to assist in the achievement of such a climate by stimulating the development of the export potential of the region; and

(3) the commitment of the United States to the successful development of the region, as evidenced by the enactment of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act, should be reaffirmed, and further strengthened, by amending that Act to improve its operation.

Subtitle B—Amendments to the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act and Related Provisions

PART 1—AMENDMENTS TO CARIBBEAN BASIN ECONOMIC RECOVERY ACT

SEC. 211. REPEAL OF TERMINATION DATE ON DUTY-FREE TREATMENT UNDER THE ACT.

Section 218 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2706(b)) is repealed.

SEC. 212. DUTY REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN LEATHER-RELATED PRODUCTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 213 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2703) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) The rate of duty on any handbag, luggage, flat good, work glove, or leather wearing apparel that—

"(A) is a product of a beneficiary country; and

"(B) was not designated on August 5, 1983, as an eligible article for the purpose of the generalized system of preferences under title V of the Trade Act of 1974; is a rate equal to 50 percent of the general column 1 rate of duty under the HTS that would apply to such article but for this paragraph.

"(2) The President shall proclaim the rates of duty imposed under paragraph (1).

"(3) The duty applied under paragraph (1) to an article is in lieu of the duty provided for that article under general column 1 of the HTS.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 213(b) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out ", handbags, luggage, flat goods, work gloves, and leather wearing apparel" in paragraph (2);

(2) by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (4);

(3) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting "; or"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) articles to which reduced rates of duty apply under subsection (h).".

SEC. 213. WORKER RIGHTS.

Section 212 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after the semicolon at the end of subsection (b)(5);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subsection (b)(6) and inserting "; and";

(3) by adding at the end of subsection (b) the following new paragraph:

"(7) if such country has not or is not taking steps to afford internationally recognized worker rights (as defined in section 502(a)(4) of the Trade Act of 1974) to workers in the country (including any designated zone in that country).";

(4) by amending the last sentence in subsection (b) by striking out "and (5)" and inserting "(5), and (7)";

(5) by amending subsection (c)(8) to read as follows:

"(8) whether or not such country has taken or is taking steps to afford to workers in that country (including any designated zone in that country) internationally recognized worker rights."; and

(6) by adding the following new subparagraph at the end of subsection (e):

"(3) Not later than January 4, 1991 and biennially thereafter, the President shall conduct a general review of eligible countries based on the considerations described in subsections (b) and (c).".

SEC. 214. REPORTS.

Section 212 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) On or before October 1, 1992, and the close of each 3-year period thereafter, the President shall submit to the Congress a complete report regarding the operation of this title.".

SEC. 215. APPLICATION OF ACT IN EASTERN CARIBBEAN AREA.

It is the sense of the Congress that there should be undertaken special efforts in order to improve the ability of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States countries and Belize to benefit from the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act.

PART 2—AMENDMENTS TO THE HARMONIZED TARIFF SCHEDULE AND OTHER PROVISIONS AFFECTING CBI BENEFICIARY COUNTRIES

SEC. 221. SUGAR IMPORTS FROM BENEFICIARY COUNTRIES.

(a) ALLOCATIONS TO BENEFICIARY COUNTRIES.—Paragraph (c) of additional U.S. note 3 of chapter 17 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended—

(1) by inserting after note 2 of subparagraph (i) the following:

"NOTE 3: The Secretary shall determine whether any country is not utilizing fully the base quota amount allocated to it for a quota year and any amount determined to be unused during such year shall be reallocated on a pro rata basis among the countries listed in general note 3(c)(v) (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'CBI countries') receiving base quota allocations for such year. The unused quota amount reallocated to any CBI country under this note for any quota year is in addition to any reallocation made under subparagraph (iv) to that country for such year. No portion of any reallocation made to a CBI country for a quota year under this note or subparagraph (iv) that is unused at the close of such year is available for use in any other quota year";

(2) by amending subparagraph (iii) to read as follows:

"(iii) Notwithstanding any authority given to the United States Trade Representative under paragraphs (e) and (g) of this note, in allocating any limitation imposed under any paragraph of this note on the quantity of sugars, syrups, and molasses described in the subheadings cited under paragraph (a) of this note which may be entered—

"(A) the percentage allocation made to the Philippines under this paragraph may not be reduced,

"(B) no allocation may be made to the Republic of South Africa, and

"(C) the aggregate of the amounts of the base quota allocations to the CBI countries for any quota year beginning after December 31, 1988, may not be less than 371,449 metric tons, raw value."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(iv) If under law authorizing such an action for purposes of dealing with a threat to the national security or foreign policy of the United States, the allocation under subparagraph (i) for any quota year is suspended or terminated with respect to any country, the amount of the suspended or terminated allocation shall be reallocated on a pro-rata basis among the CBI countries receiving allocations for that year. Any quota amount reallocated to any CBI country under this subparagraph for any quota year is in addition to any reallocation made under note 3 of subparagraph (i) to that country for such year.

"(v) The President may enter into trade agreements with foreign governments for purposes of granting appropriate compensation, and may proclaim such compensation, if any action taken by the United States under the authority of note 3 of subparagraph (i), subparagraph (iii)(C), or subparagraph (iv) is found to be inconsistent with the international obligations of the United States (including the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade). Before offering compensation under this subparagraph, the President shall consult with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate regarding the reasons for taking the action concerned and the compensation proposed to be offered.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply with respect to the quota year in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act and to quota years thereafter.

SEC. 222. INCREASE IN DUTY-FREE TOURIST ALLOWANCES.

(a) DUTY-FREE ALLOWANCE FOR RETURNING RESIDENTS.—Subchapter IV of chapter 98 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended—

(1) by inserting the following new note at the end of the notes to such subchapter.

"4. As used in subheadings 9804.00.70 and 9804.00.72, the term 'beneficiary country' means a country listed in general note 3(c)(v)(A).";

(2) by striking out "subheading 9804.00.65 or 9804.00.70" and all that follows thereafter in the superior article description to subheadings 9804.00.65 and 9804.00.70 and inserting "subheadings 9804.00.65, 9804.00.70, and 9804.00.72 within 30 days preceding his arrival, and claims exemption under only one of such items on his arrival.";

(3) by striking out "$800" in subheading 9804.00.70 and inserting "$1,200";

(4) by inserting "or up to $600 of which have been acquired in one or more beneficiary countries" before the parenthetical matter in subheading 9804.00.70; and

(5) by inserting after subheading 9804.00.70 the following new subheading with the article description for the new subheading having the same degree of indentation as subheading 9804.00.70:

"9804.00.72	Articles whether or not accompanying a person, not over $600 in aggregate fair market value in the country of acquisition, including—. (a) but only in the case of an individual who has attained the age of 21, not more than 1 liter of alcoholic beverages or not more than 2 liters if at least one liter is the product of one or more beneficiary countries, and. (b) not more than 200 cigarettes, and not more than 100 cigars. If such person arrives directly from a beneficiary country, not more than $400 of which shall have been acquired elsewhere than in beneficiary countries (but this item does not permit the entry of articles not accompanying a person which were acquired elsewhere than in beneficiary countries)	Free	Free".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply with respect to residents of the United States who depart from the United States on or after the 15th day of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 223. DUTY-FREE TREATMENT FOR ARTICLES ASSEMBLED IN BENEFICIARY COUNTRIES FROM COMPONENTS PRODUCED IN THE UNITED STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—U.S. Note 2 of subchapter II of chapter 98 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended—

(1) by striking out "2. Any" and inserting "2. (a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), any"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(b) No article (except a textile or apparel article) may be treated for purposes of this Act as a foreign article, or as subject to duty, if—

"(i) the article is—

"(A) assembled in whole of fabricated components that are a product of the United States, or

"(B) processed in whole of ingredients (other than water) that are a product of the United States, in a beneficiary country; and

"(ii) neither the fabricated components or ingredients, after exportation from the United States, nor the article itself, before importation into the United States, enters the commerce of any foreign country other than a beneficiary country. As used in this paragraph, the term 'beneficiary country' means a country listed in general note 3(c)(V)(A).".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) applies with respect to goods assembled or processed abroad that are entered on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 224. RULES OF ORIGIN FOR BENEFICIARY COUNTRY PRODUCTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of administering the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act and subject to subsection (b), the President may proclaim new rules, to take effect on January 1, 1991, for determining whether articles originate in beneficiary countries.

(b) CONSULTATION AND LAY-OVER REQUIREMENTS.—Rules of origin may not be proclaimed under subsection (a) unless—

(1) the President has obtained advice regarding the proposed rules pursuant to consultation with—

(A) the appropriate advisory committees established under section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974,

(B) the governments of the beneficiary countries,

(C) the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and

(D) other interested parties;

(2) the President has submitted a report to such Committees that sets forth the rules proposed to be proclaimed and the reasons thereof;

(3) a period of at least 90 calendar days that begins on the first day on which the President has met the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) with respect to such action has expired; and

(4) the President has further consulted with such Committees regarding the proposed action during the period referred to in paragraph (3).

SEC. 225. CUMULATION INVOLVING BENEFICIARY COUNTRY PRODUCTS UNDER THE COUNTERVAILING AND ANTIDUMPING DUTY LAWS.

(a) MATERIAL INJURY.—Section 771(7)(C)(iv) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1677(7)(c)(iv)) is amended to read as follows:

"(iv) CUMULATION.—

"(I) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of clauses (i) and (ii) and subject to subclause (II), the Commission shall cumulatively assess the volume and effect of imports from two or more countries of like products subject to investigation if such imports compete with each other and with like products of the domestic industry in the United States market.

"(II) CBI EXCEPTION.—When the imports subject to investigation are products of a country designated as a beneficiary country under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.), the volume and effect of imports from such country may only be cumulatively assessed with imports of like products from one or more other countries designated as beneficiary countries.".

(b) THREAT OF MATERIAL INJURY.—Section 771(7)(F)(iv) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1677(7)(F)(iv)) is amended by striking out "(C)(v)," and inserting "(C)(iv)(II)and (v),".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) and (b) apply with respect to investigations initiated under section 720 or 732 of the Tariff Act of 1930 on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 226. ETHYL ALCOHOL AND MIXTURES THEREOF FOR FUEL USE.

(a) DETERMINATION OF INDIGENOUS PRODUCTS.—Section 423(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 (19 U.S.C. 2703 note) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) as paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), respectively; and

(2) by striking out paragraph (2) and inserting the following:

"(2) Ethyl alcohol or a mixture thereof that is produced by a process of full fermentation in an insular possession or beneficiary country shall be treated as being an indigenous product of that possession or country.

"(3)(A) Ethyl alcohol and mixtures thereof that are only dehydrated within an insular possession or beneficiary country (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as 'dehydrated alcohol and mixtures') shall be treated as being indigenous products of that possession or country only if the alcohol or mixture, when entered, meets the applicable local feedstock requirement.

"(B) The local feedstock requirement with respect to any calendar year is—

"(i) 0 percent with respect to the base quantity of dehydrated alcohol and mixtures that is entered;

"(ii) 30 percent with respect to the 35,000,000 gallons of dehydrated alcohol and mixtures next entered after the base quantity; and

"(iii) 50 percent with respect to all dehydrated alcohol and mixtures entered after the amount specified in clause (ii) is entered.

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph:

"(i) The term 'base quantity' means, with respect to dehydrated alcohol and mixtures entered during any calender year, the greater of—

"(I) 60,000,000 gallons; or

"(II) an amount (expressed in gallons) equal to 7 percent of the United States domestic market for ethyl alcohol, as determined by the United States International Trade Commission, during the 12-month period ending on the preceding September 30; that is first entered during the calendar year.

"(ii) The term 'local feedstock' means hydrous ethyl alcohol which is wholly produced or manufactured in any insular possession or beneficiary country.

"(iii) The term 'local feedstock requirement' means the minimum percent, by volume, of local feedstock that must be included in dehydrated alcohol and mixtures."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply with respect to calendar years after 1989.

SEC. 227. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 503(b) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2463(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The duty-free treatment provided under section 501 shall apply to any eligible article which is the growth, product, or manufacture of a beneficiary developing country if—

"(A) that article is imported directly from a beneficiary developing country into the customs territory of the United States; and

"(B) the sum of (i) the cost or value of the materials produced in the beneficiary developing country or any 2 or more countries which are members of the same association of countries which is treated as one country under section 502(a)(3), plus (ii) the direct costs of processing operations performed in such beneficiary developing country or such member countries is not less than 35 percent of the appraised value of such article at the time of its entry into the customs territory of the United States.

"(2) The Secretary of the Treasury, after consulting with the United States Trade Representative, shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection, including, but not limited to, regulations providing that, in order to be eligible for duty-free treatment under this title, an article must be wholly the growth, product, or manufacture of a beneficiary developing country, or must be a new or different article of commerce which has been grown, produced, or manufactured in the beneficiary developing country; but no article or material of a beneficiary developing country shall be eligible for such treatment by virtue of having merely undergone—

"(A) simple combining or packaging operations, or

"(B) mere dilution with water or mere dilution with another substance that does not materially alter the characteristics of the article.".

Subtitle C—Scholarship Assistance and Tourism Promotion

SEC. 231. CARIBBEAN-CENTRAL AMERICAN SCHOLARSHIP PARTNERSHIP.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—The Administrator of the Agency for International Development shall establish and administer a program of scholarship assistance, in cooperation with State governments, universities, community colleges, and businesses, to provide scholarships to enable students from eligible countries in the Caribbean and Central America to study in the United States.

(b) GRANTS TO STATES.—In carrying out this section, the Administrator may make grants to States to provide scholarship assistance for undergraduate degree programs and for training programs of one year or longer in study areas related to the critical development needs of the students' respective countries.

(c) CONSULTATION WITH STATES.—The Administrator shall consult with the participating States with regard to the educational opportunities available within each State and on the assignment of scholarship recipients.

(d) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share for each year for which a State receives payments under this section shall be not less than 50 percent.

(e) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of payments under this section may be in cash, including the waiver of tuition or the offering of in-State tuition or housing waivers or subsidies, or in-kind fairly evaluated, including the provision of books or supplies.

(f) FORGIVENESS OF SCHOLARSHIP ASSISTANCE.—The obligation of any recipient to reimburse any entity for any or all scholarship assistance provided under this section shall be forgiven upon the recipient's prompt return to his or her country of domicile for a period which is at least one year longer than the period spent studying in the United States with scholarship assistance.

(g) PRIVATE SECTOR PARTICIPATION.—To the maximum extent paracticable, each participating State shall enlist the assistance of the private sector to enable the State to meet the non-Federal share of payments under this section. Wherever appropriate, each participating State shall encourage the private sector to offer internships or other opportunities consistent with the purposes of this section to students receiving scholarships under this section.

(h) FUNDING.—Any funds used in carrying out this section shall be derived from funds allocated for Latin American and Caribbean regional programs under chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2346 and following; relating to the economic support fund).

(i) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

(1) The term "eligible country" means any country—

(A) which is receiving assistance under chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 and following; relating to development assistance) or chapter 4 of part II of that Act (22 U.S.C. 2346 and following; relating to the economic support fund); and

(B) which is designated by the President as a beneficiary country pursuant to the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act.

(2) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

SEC. 232. PROMOTION OF TOURISM.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL FINDING.—The Congress finds that the tourism industry must be recognized as a central element in the economic development and political stability of the Caribbean Basin region because of the potential that the industry has for increasing employment and foreign exchange earnings, establishing important linkages with other related sectors, and having a positive complementary effect on trade with the United States.

(b) FEDERAL AGENCY PRIORITY.—It is the sense of the Congress that increased tourism and related activities should be developed in the Caribbean Basin region as a central part of the Caribbean Basin Initiative program and, to that end, the appropriate agencies of the United States Government should assign a high priority to projects that promote the tourism industry in the Caribbean Basin.

(c) STUDY.—The Secretary of Commerce shall complete the study begun in 1986 regarding tourism development strategies for the Caribbean Basin region. The study shall include—

(1) information on the mutual benefits received by the United States and the Caribbean Basin economies as a result of tourist activity in the area; and

(2) proposals for developing increased linkages between the tourism industry and local industries in the region such as the agro-business.

SEC. 233. PILOT PRECLEARANCE PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Subject to subsection (b), the Commissioner of Customs shall carry out, during fiscal years 1990 and 1991, preclearance operations at a facility of the United States Customs Service in a country within the Caribbean Basin which the Commissioner of Customs considers appropriate for testing the extent to which the availability of preclearance operations can assist in the development of tourism.

(b) RESTRICTIONS REGARDING PROGRAM.—

(1) The Commissioner of Customs may not consider a country within the Caribbean Basin to be appropriate for the testing referred to in subsection (a)—

(A) if preclearance operations are currently carried out by the United States Customs Service in that country; or

(B) unless immigration preinspection operations are currently carried out in that country with respect to individuals traveling to the United States.

(2) Preclearance operations may not be commenced in the country selected for testing under subsection (a) unless the Commissioner of Customs and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization jointly certify that—

(A) there exists a bilateral agreement between the United States Government and the government of such country which protects the interests of the United States and affords diplomatic protection to United States employees working at the preclearance location;

(B) the facilities at the preclearance location conform to Federal Inspection Services standards and are suitable for the duties to be performed therein;

(C) there is adequate security around the structure used for the reception of international arrivals;

(D) the government of such country grants the United States Customs Service and the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service appropriate search, seizure, and arrest authority; and

(E) United States employees and their families will not be subject to fear of reprisal, acts of terrorism, and threats of intimidation.

(c) REPORT.—As soon as practicable after September 30, 1991, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Congress a report regarding the preclearance operations program carried out under subsection (a). The report shall include—

(1) a summary of the preclearance operations, including the number of individuals processed, any administrative problems encountered, and cost of the operations;

(2) an evaluation of the extent to which the preclearance operations contributed to—

(A) the stimulation of the tourism industry of the country concerned, and

(B) expedited customs processing at United States ports of entry;

(3) the opinion of the Commissioner of Customs regarding the efficacy of extending preclearance operations to other countries within the Caribbean Basin that are developing tourism industries, and if the opinion is affirmative, the identity of those countries to which such operations should be extended and the estimated costs and results of such extensions; and

(4) such other matters that the Commissioner of Customs considers relevant.

TITLE III—TARIFF PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. REFERENCE.

Whenever in this subtitle an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a chapter, subchapter, note, additional U.S. note, heading, subheading, or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a chapter, subchapter, note, additional U.S. note, heading, subheading, or other provision of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007).

Subtitle A—Temporary Suspensions and Reductions in Duties

PART 1—NEW DUTY SUSPENSIONS AND TEMPORARY REDUCTIONS

SEC. 311. CASTOR OIL AND ITS FRACTIONS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"990215.15	Castor oil and its fractions (provided for in subheading 1515.30.00)....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 312. CERTAIN JAMS, PASTES AND PUREES, AND FRUIT JELLIES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of the U.S. notes thereto the following:

"10. (a) The general column 1 rate of duty for goods provided for under heading 9902.20.07 is a rate equal to the column 1 rate of duty that would have applied to such goods under the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202) on the day before the effective date of this schedule.

"(b) If the President determines that appropriate trade concessions, including the correction of errors and oversights in foreign tariff schedules, have been obtained, the President may proclaim such modifications to the column 1 rates of duty on jams, pastes, and purees, and fruit jellies of peaches, apricots, or cherries, classified in subheading 2007.99 as are necessary and practicable to restore with respect to such goods the tariff treatment that applied under the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202) on the day before the effective date of this schedule.";

(2) by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"990220.07	Jams, pastes, and purees, and fruit jellies, the foregoing of peaches, apricots, or cherries (provided for in subheading 2007.99).....	The rates of duty prescribed in U.S. note 10(a) to this subchapter	No change	No change	On or before the earlier of—(1) 12/31/92 or (2) the effective date of the rates proclaimed under U.S. note 10(b) to this subchapter".

SEC. 313. MERCURIC OXIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.28.25	Mercuric oxide (provided for in subheading 2825.90.60)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 314. HEXYL CHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.07	1-Chlorohexane (hexyl chloride) (CAS No. 544-10-5) (provided for in subheading 2903.19.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 315. TERTIARY-BUTYL CHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.08	2-Chloro-2-methylpropane (tertiary-Butyl chloride) (CAS No. 507-20-0) (provided for in subheading 2903.19.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 316. HEXACHLOROBUTADIENE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.09	Hexachlorobutadiene (provided for in subheading 2903.29.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 317. DMBS AND HPBA.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new headings:

"9902.30.10	4,4-Isopropylidenedicyclohexanol (CAS No. 80-04-6) (provided for in subheading 2903.19.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92;" and
"9902.30.83	Bis-O-[(4-methylphenyl)methylene]-D-glucitol (CAS Nos. 54686-974 and 58956-31-3) (dimethylbenzylidene sorbitol) (provided for in subheading 2932.90.41)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 318. MBEP.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.11	2-(1,1-Dimethylethyl)-4-ethylphenol (CAS No. 96-70-8) (provided for in subheading 2907.19.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 319. 6-T-BUTYL-2,4-XYLENOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.12	6-t-Butyl-2,4-xylenol (provided for in subheading 2907.19.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 320. 4,4'-METHYLENEBIS-(2,6-DIMETHYLPHENYLCYANATE).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.13	4,4'-Methylenebis-(2,6-dimethylphenylcyanate) (CAS No. 101657-77-6) (provided for in subheading 2907.29.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 321. NEVILLE AND WINTER'S ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.14	1-Naphhol-4-sulfonic acid and the monosodium salt (CAS Nos. 84-87-7 and 6099-57-6) (provided for in subheading 2908.20.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 322. 7-HYDROXY-1,3-NAPHTHALENEDISULFONIC ACID, DIPOTASSIUM SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading

"9902.30.15	7-Hydroxy-1,3-naphthalenedisulfonic acid, dipotassium salt (CAS No. 842-18-2) (provided for in subheading 2908.20.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 323. 7-ACETYL-1,1,3,4,4,6-HEXAMETHYLTETRAHYDRONAPHTHALENE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.16	7-Acetyl-1,1,3,4,4,6-hexamethyltetrahydronaphthalene (CAS No. 1506-02-1) (provided for in subheading 2914.30.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 324. ANTHRAQUINONE (AQ).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.17	Anthraquinone (CAS No. 84-65-1) (provided for in subheading 2914.61.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 325. 1,4-Dihydroxyanthraquinone.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.18	1,4-Dihydroxy-anthraquinone (CAS No. 81-64-1) (provided for in subheading 2914.69.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 326. 2-ETHYLANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.19	2-Ethylanthraquinone (CAS No. 84-51-5) (provided for in subheading 2914-69.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 327. CHLORHEXANONE.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.20	1-Chloro-5-hexanone (CAS No. 10226-30-9) (provided for in subheading 2914.70.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 328. P.TOLUIC ACID.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.21	p-Toluic acid (provided for in subheading 2916.39.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 329. NAPHTHALIC ACID ANHYDRIDE.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.22	Naphthalic acid anhydride (CAS No. 81-84-5) (provided for in subheading 2917.38.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 330. DIFLUNISAL.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.23	2',4'-Difluoro-4-hydroxy-3-biphenyl-carboxylic acid (provided for in subheading 2918.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 331. DIPHENOLIC ACID.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.24	4,4-Bis(4-hydroxyphenyl)-pentanoic acid (CAS No. 126-00-1) (provided for in subheading 2918.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 332. 6-HYDROXY-2-NAPHTHOIC ACID.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.25	6-Hydroxy-2-naphthoic acid (CAS No. 16712-64-4) (provided for in subheading 2918.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 333. METHYL AND ETHYL PARATHION.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.26	0,0-Diethyl-O-(4-nitrophenyl) phosphorothioate and 0,0-Dimethyl-0-(4-nitrophenyl) phosphorothioate (provided for in subheading 2920.10.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 334. N-METHYLANILINE AND M-CHLOROANILINE.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.42.20	N-Methylaniline (provided for in subheading 2921.32.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".
"9902.30.28	m-Chloroaniline (provided for in subheading 2918.42.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 335. 4,4'-METHYLENE-BIS-(3-CHLORO-2,6-DIETHYL ANILINE).

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.29	4,4'-Methylene-bis-(3-chloro-2,6-diethylaniliine) (CAS No. 106246-33-7) (provided for in subheading 2921.42.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 336. 4,4'-METHYLENE-BIS-(2,6-DIISOPROPHYL ANILINE).

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.30	4,4'-Methylene-bis-(2,6-diisoprophyl-aniline) (provided for in subheading 2921.42.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 337. 2-CHLORO-4-NITROANILINE.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.31	2-Chloro-4-nitroaniline (CAS No. 121-87-9) (provided for in subheading 2921.42.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 338. 4-CHLORO-α-α-α-TRIFLUORO-O-TOLUIDINE.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.32	4-Chloro-α-α-α-trifluoro-o-toluidine (CAS No. 445-30-4) (provided for in subheading 2921.43.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 339. TRIFLUOROMETHYLANILINE.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.33	Trifluoromethylaniline (CAS No. 98-16-8) (provided for in subheading 2921.43.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 340. 5-AMINO-2-NAPHTHALENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchaper II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.34	5-Amino-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-79-9) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 341. 7-AMINO-1,3-NAPHTHALENEDISULFONIC ACID, MONOPOTASSIUM SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.35	7-Amino-1,3-naphthalenedisulfonic acid, monopotassium salt (CAS No. 842-15-9) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 342. 4 AMINO-1-NAPHTHALENESULFONIC ACID, SODIUM SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.36	4-Amino-1-naphthalenesulfonic acid, sodium salt (CAS No. 130-13-2) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 343. 8-AMINO-2 NAPHTHENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.37	8-Amino-2 naphthenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-28-8) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 344. MIXTURES OF 5- AND 8-AMINO-2 NAPHTHALENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.38	Mixtures of 5- and 8-amino-2 naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-28-8) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 345. 1-NAPHTHYLAMINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.39	1-Naphthylamine (CAS No. 134-32-7) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 346. 6-AMINO-2-NAPHTHENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.40	6-Amino-2-naphthenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 93-00-5) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 347. BROENNER'S ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.41	2-Naphthylamine-6-sulfonic acid (CAS No. 93-00-5) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 348. D SALT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.42	2-Naphthylamine-1,5-disulfonic acid and its monosodium salt (CAS Nos. 117-62-4 and 19532-03-07) (provided for in subheading 2921.45.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 349. 2,4-DIAMINOBENZENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.43	2,4-Diaminobenzenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 88-63-1) (provided for in subheading 2921.51.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 350. PARAMINE ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.44	1,4-Diaminobenzene-2-sulfonic acid (CAS No. 88-45-9) (provided for in subheading 2921.59.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 351. TAMOXIFEN.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.45	Tamoxifen citrate (provided for in subheading 2922.19.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 352. K-ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.46	1-Amino-8-hydroxy-4,6-naphthalenedisulfonic acid, monosodium salt (CAS No. 85292-32-2 (provided for in subheading 2922.21.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 353. O-ANISIDINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.47	1-Amino-2-methoxybenzene (o-Anisidine) (CAS No. 90-04-0) (provided for in subheading 2922.22.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 354. 2-AMINO-4-CHLOROPHENOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.48	2-Amino-4-chlorophenol (CAS No. 95-85-2) (provided for in subheading 2922.29.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 355. ORNITHINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.49	L-Omithine, ethyl ester (L-2,5- Diaminopentanoic acid, ethyl ester) (CAS No. 84772-29-2) (provided for in subheading 2922.49.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 356. DEMAP.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.50	m-Diethylaminophenol (CAS No. 91-68-9) (provided for in subheading 2922.29.15)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 357. 7-ANILINO-4-HYDROXY-2 NAPHTHALENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.51	7-Anilino-4-hydroxy-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 119-40-4) (provided for in subheading 2922.29.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 358. 1,4-DIAMINO-2,3 DIHYDROANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.52	1,4-Diamino-2,3 dihydroanthraquinone (CAS No. 81-63-0) (provided for in subheading 2922.30.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 359. TFA LYS PRO IN FREE BASE AND TOSYL SALT FORMS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.53	Trifluoroacetyl-L-lysine-L-proline in free base and tosyl salt forms (provided for in subheadings 2922.49.50 and 2922.49.30, respectively)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 360. LEVODOPA.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.54	3-Hydroxy-L-tyrosine (provided for in subheading 2922.50.25)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 361. 1-AMINO-2-BROMO-4-HYDROXYANTHRAQUINONE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.55	1-Amino-2-bromo-4-hydroxyanthraquinone (CAS No. 116-82-5) (provided for in subheading 2922.50.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 362. ADC-6.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.56	3-Amino-2-(1-hydroxethyl) pentanedioic acid, 5-methyl ester (provided for in subheading 2922.50.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 363. L-CARNITINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.57	L-Carnitine (CAS No. 541-15-1) (provided for in subheading 2923.90.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 364. QUIZALOFOP-ETHYL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.58	2-[4-[(6-Chloro-2-quinoxalinyl)oxy)-phenoxy]propionuc acid, ethly ester (Quizalofop-ethyl) (provide for in subheading 2924.21.15)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/13/92".

SEC. 365. ACETOACET-PARA-TOLUIDIE (AAPT).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.59	Acetoacet-para-toluidide (AAPT) (CAS No. 2415-85-2) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.09)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 366. NAPHTHOL AS TYPES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.60	3-Hydroxy-2-naphthanilide (CAS No. 92-77-3); 3-hydroxy-2-naphtho-o-toluidide (CAS No. 135-61-5); 3-hydroxy-2-naphtho-o-anigidide (CAS No. 135-62-6); 3-hydroxy-2-naphtho-o-phenetidide (CAS No. 92-74-0); 3-hydroxy-2-naphtho-4-chloro 2,5-dimethoxyanilide (CAS No. 4273-92-1); and N,N'-bis(acetoscetyl-o-toluidine) (CAS No. 91-96-3) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.14)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 367. N-[[(4/CHLOROPHENYL)-AMINO]CARBONYL]-2,6-DIFLUOROBENZAMIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new headings:

"9902.30.61	N-[[(4-chlorophenyl)-amino]carbonyl]-2,6-difluorobenza-mide, 90% or more (provided for insubhead 2924.20.19	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92". and
"9902.38.13	mixtures of N-[[(4-chlorophenyl)-amino]carbonyl]-2,6-difluorobenza-mide and inert substances (provided for in subheading 3808.10.20	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 368. ANIS BASE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.62	3-Aminomethoxyben-zanilide (CAS No. 120-35-4) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.25)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 369. ACETOACETSULFANILIC ACID, POTASSIUM SALT.

SUBCHAPTER II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.63	Acetoacetsulfanilic acid, potassium salt (CAS No. 70321-85-6) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 370. IOHEXOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.64	N,N'-Bis(2,3-dihydroxpropyl)-5-[N-(2,3-dihydroxpropyl)-acetamido]-2,4,6-truodoisophthalamide (iohexol) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.,40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 9/30/90".

SEC. 371. IOPAMIDOL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.65	1.3-Benzenedicarboxa-mide (provided for in subheading 2924.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 9/30/90".

SEC. 372. IOXAGLATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

"9902.30.66	N-(2-Hydroxyethyl)-2,4,6-truodo-5-[2(2,4,6-truodo-3(N-methylacetamido)-5-(methylkcarbamoyl)-abenzamidoaceta-mido]-isophthalamic acid (provided for in subheading 2924.29.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 9/30/90".

Sec. 373.4-AMINOACETANILIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.67	4-Aminoacetanilide (CAS No. 122-80-5) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.45)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 374. D-CARBOXAMIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.68	2,2-Dimethylcyclo-propylcarboxamide (CAS No. 75885-58-4) (provided for in subheading 2924.29.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 375. 2,6-DICHLOROBENZONITRILE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.69	Mixtures of 2,6-dichlorobenzonitrile and inert substances (provided for in subheading 2926.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 376. OCTADECYL ISOCYANATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.70	Octadecyl isocyanate (provided for in subheading 2929.10.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 377. 1,6-HEXAMETHYLENE DIISOCYANATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.71	1,6-Hexamethylene diisocyanate (provided for in subheading 2929.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 378. 1,1-ETHYLIDENEBIS-(PHENYL-4-CYANATE).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.72	1,1-Ethylidenebis-(phenyl-4-cyanate) (provided for in subheading 2929.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 379. 2,2',BIS(4-CYANATOPHENYL)-1,1,1,3,3,3-HEXAFLUOROPROPANE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.73	2,2'-Bis(4-cyanatophenyl)-1,1,1,3,3,3-hexafluoropropane (CAS No. 32728-27-1) (provided for in subheading 2929.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 380. 4,4'-THIODIPHENYL CYANATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.74	4,4'-Thiodiphenyl cyanate (CAS No. 101657-79-8) (provided for in subheading 2930.90.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 381. 2[(4-AMINOPHENYL) SULFONYL]ETHANOL, HYDROGEN SULFATE ESTER.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.75	2-[(4-Aminophenyl) sulfonyl]ethanol, hydrogen sulfate ester (CAS No. 2494-89-5) (provided for in subheading 2930.90.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 382. DIMETHOATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.76	0,0-Dimethyl-S-methylcarbamoyl-methyl phosphorodithioate (provided for in subheading 2930.90.40	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 383. DIPHENYLDICHLOROSILANE AND PHENYLTRICHLOROSILANE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.77	Diphenyldichlorosilane and phenyltrichlorosilane (provided for in subheading 2931.00.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 384. BENDIOCARB.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.78	2,2-Dimethyl-1,3-benzo-dioxol-4-yl methylcarbamate (Bendiocarb) (provided for in subheading 2932.90.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 385. RHODAMINE 2C BASE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.79	Rhodamine 2C base (CAS No. 41382-37-0) (provided for in subheading 2932.90.45)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 386. 2,5-DICHLORO-4-(3-METHYL-5-OXO-2-PYRAZOLIN-1-YL) BENZENESULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.80	2,5-Dichloro-4-(3-methyl-5-oxo-2-pyrazolin-1-yl) benzenesulfonic acid (CAS No. 84-57-1) (provided for in subheading 2933.19.42)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 387. NIMODIPINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.81	Nimodipine (provided for in subheading 2933.39.35)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 388. BPIP.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.82	Hexamethylenebistriacetonediamine (provided for in subheading 2933.39.47)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 389. 2,2,6,6-TETRAMETHYL-4-PIPERIDINON AND AMINO HYDROXY- AND IMIDO DERIVATIVES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.83	2,2,6,6-Tetramethyl-4-piperidinone (CAS No. 61260-55-7); 2,2,6,6-Tetramethyl-4-piperidylamine (CAS No. 36768-62-4); 2,2,6,6-Tetramethyl-4-piperidinol (CAS No. 2403-88-5); 3-Dodecyl-1-(2,2,6,6-tetramethyl-4-piperidyl)-pyrrolidin-2,5-dione (CAS No. 79720-19-7); 3-Dodecyl-1-(1,2,2,6,6-pentamethyl-4-piperidyl)-pyrrolidin-2,5-dione (CAS No. 106917-30-0); and 3-Dodecyl-1-[1-acetyl-(2,2,6,6-tetramethyl-4-piperidyl)-pyrrolidin-2,5-dione (CAS No. 106917-31-1) (the foregoing provided for in subheading 2933.39.47)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 390. NORFLOXACIN.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.84	(1)3-Quinolinecar-boxylic acid, 1-ethyl-6-fluoro-1,4-dihydro-4-oxo-7-(1-piperazinyl) (provided for in subheading 2933.59.27)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 391. CIPROFLOXACIN AND CIPROFLOXACIN HYDROCHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.85	Ciprofloxacin and ciprofloxacin hydrochloride (provided for in subheading 2933.59.27)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 392. 6-METHYLURACIL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.86	6-Methyluracil (CAS No. 626-48-2) (provided for in subheading 2933.59.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 393. 2,4-DIAMINO-6-PHENYL-1,3,5-TRIAZINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.87	2,4-Diamino-6-phenyl-1,3,5-triazine (CAS No. 91-76-9) (provided for in subheading 2933.69.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 394. AMILORIDE HYDROCHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.88	N-amidino 3,5-diamino-6-chloropyrazine-carboxamide monohydrochloride dihydrate (provided for in subheading 2933.90.36)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 395. TRIMETHYL BASE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.89	(1,3,3-Trimethylindolin-2-ylidene)-acetylaldehyde (CAS No. 118-12-7) (provided for in subheading 2933.90.39)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 396. ALA PRO.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.90	L-Alanyl-L-proline (CAS No. 13485-59-1) (provided for in subheading 2933.90.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 397. THIOTHIAMINE HYDROCHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.91	Thiothiamine hydrochloride (CAS No. 2443-50-7) (provided for in subheading 2934.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 398. ETHYL 2-(2-AMINOTHIAZOL-4-YL)-2-HYDROXYIMINOCETATE (ATHAET).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.92	Ethyi 2-(2-aminothiazol-4-yl)-2-hydroxyiminoacetate (ATHAET) (CAS No. 64485-82-1) (provided for in subheading 2934.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 399. ETHYL 2-(2-AMINOTHIAZOL-4-YL)-2-METHOXYIMINOACETATE (ATMAET).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.93	Ethyl 2-(2-aminothiazol-4-yl)-2-methoxyiminoacetate (ATMAET) (CAS No. 64485-88-7) (provided for in subheading 2934.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 400. 7-NITRONAPHTH[1,2]-OXADIAZOLE-5-SULFONIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.94	7-Nitronaphth[1,2]-oxadiazole-5-sulfonic acid (CAS No. 84-91-3) (provided for in subheading 2934.90.06)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 401. CEFTAZIDIME TERTIARY BUTYL ESTER.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

"9902.30.95	(6R,7R)-7-[(Z)-2-(2-Aminothiazol-4-yl)-2-[(2-tert.-butoxycarbonyl) prop-2-oxyiminol acetamido]-3-(1-pyridimium-methyl)ceph-3-em-4-carboxylate (provided for in subheading 2934.90.25)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 402. CHEMICAL INTERMEDIATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.96	(6R, 7R)-7-amino-3-chloro-8-oxa-5-thal-1-azabicyclo[4-2-0]oct-2-ene-2-carboxylic acid, (4-nitrophenyl) methyl ester (provided for in subheading 2934.90.40)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 403. SULFACHLOROPYRIDAZINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

"9902.30.97	Sulfachloropyridazine (provided for in subheading 2935.00.39)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 404. MIXED ORTHO/PARA TOLUENE SULFONOMIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.30.98	Mixed ortho/para toluenesulfanomide (provided for in subheading 2935.00.47)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 405. HERBICIDE INTERMEDIATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

"9902.30.99	N-(2,6-Dichloro-3-methylphenyl)-5-amino-1,3,4-triazole-2-sulfonamide (provided for in subheading 2935.00.47)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 406. N-[4-[[(2-AMINO-5-FORMYL-1,4,5,6,7,8-HEXAHYDRO-4-OXO-6-PTERIDINYL)METHYL]AMINO]BENZOYL]-L-GLUTAMIC ACID.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.31.00	N-[4-]](2-Amino-5-formyl-1,4,5,6,7,8-hexahydro-4-oxo-6-pteridinyl)-methyl]amino]benzoyl]-L-glutamic acid (provided for in subheading 2936.29.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 407. THEOBROMINE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.31.01	Theobromine (provided for in subheading 2939.90.10 or 2939.90.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 408. (6R-(6a,7B(Z)))-7-((2-AMINO-4-THIAZOLYL) ((CARBOXYMETHOXY)IMINO) ACETYL)AMINO)-3-ETHENYL-8-OXO-5-THIA-1-AZABICYCLO(4.2.0) OCT-2-ENE-2-CARBOXYLIC ACID (CEFIXIME).

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.31.02	(6R-(6a,7B(Z)))-7-(((2-amino-4-thiazolyl)((carboxymethoxy)imino) acetyl)amino)-3-ethenyl-8-oxo-5-thia-1-azabicyclo(4.2.0) oct-2-ene-2-carboxylic acid (cefixime) (provided for in subheading 2941.90.50).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 409. TEICOPLANIN.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.31.03	Teicoplanin (provided for in subheading 3004.20.00).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92."

SEC. 410. CARFENTANIL CITRATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.31.04	Carfentanil citrate (provided for in subheading 3004.90.60)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92."

SEC. 411. CALCIUM ACETYLSALICYLATE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.31.05	Calcium acetylsalicylate, put up in measured doses or in forms or packings for retail sale (provided for in subheading 3004.90.60)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92."

SEC. 412. RESOLIN RED F3BS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.32.05	N-[2-[2,6-dicyano-4-methylphenyl]azo]-5-(diethylamino)phenyl]methanesulfonamide and N-[2-[(2,6-dicyano-4-methylphenyl)azo[-5-(di-1-propylamino)- phenyl]-methanesulfonamide (provided for in subheading 3204.11.20)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92."

SEC. 413. CERTAIN ACID BLACK POWDER AND PRESSCAKE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.32.06	Acid black 210 powder and acid black 210 presscake (CAS No. 112484-44-3) (provided for in subheading 3204.12.40).....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 414. PIGMENT RED 178.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.32.07	Pigment red 178 (CAS No. 3049-71-6) (provided for in subheading 3204.17.10.....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/90".

SEC. 415. PIGMENT RED 149 DRY AND PRESSCAKE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.32.08	Pigment red 149 dry and pigment red 149 presscake (CAS No. 4948-15-6) (provided for in subheading 3204.17.50.....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/90".

SEC. 416. SOLVENT YELLOW 43.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.32.09	Solvent yellow 43 (CAS No. 19125-99-6) (provided for in subheading 3204.19.15.....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 417. SOLVENT YELLOW 44.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.32.10	Solvent yellow 44 (CAS No. 2478-20-8) (provided for in subheading 3204.19.19.....	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 418. MODELING PASTES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.34.07	Modeling pastes (provided for in heading 3407.00.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 419. MONO- AND DIBENZYL TOLUENES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.38.24	Mono- and dibenzyl toluenes (provided for in subheading 3823.90.29 ..	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 420. CHEMICAL LIGHT ACTIVATOR BLENDS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.38.25	Mixtures of dimethyl phthalate, t-butanol, hydrogen peroxide, and sodium salicylate (provided for in subheading 3823.90.29	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 421. POLYMIN P AND POLYMIN P HYDROCHLORIDE, AND POLYMIN SNA 60.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new headings:

"9902.39.08	Polymin SNA 60 (CAS No. 28825-79-8) (provided for in subheading 3908.90.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92". and
"9902.39.10	Polymin P and polymin P hydrochloride (CAS Nos. 9002-98-6 and 26338-45-4) (provided for in subheading 3911.90.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 422. SPECIALTY THERMOSET RESIN.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.39.11	Hydrocarbon cyanate ester (provided for in 3911.90.30)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 423. HYDROCARBON NOVOLAC CYANATE ESTER.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.39.12	Hydrocarbon Novolac Cyanate ester (provided for in subheading 3911.90.30	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 424. CHLORINATED SYNTHETIC RUBBER.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.39.13	Chlorinated synthetic rubber (provided for in subheading 3913.90.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 425. WICKER PRODUCTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.46.02	Wicker products (provided for in subheading 4602.10.11, 4602.10.13, 4602.10.19, 4602.10.40, or 4602.10.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 426. CERTAIN PLASTIC WEB SHEETING.

(1) by adding at the end of the U.S. notes thereto the following new note:

"11. For purposes of heading 9902.56.01, the term 'nonwoven fiber sheet' means sheet comprising a highly uniform and random array of polyester fibers 1.5 to 3.0 denier, thermally bonded and calendered into a smooth surface web having—

"(a) a thickness of 3.7 to 4.0 mils;
"(b) a basis weight of 2.5 oz. per sq. yd.;
"(c) a machine tensile strength of 30 lb. per sq. in. or greater,
"(d) low cross-direction tensile (approximately ⅓ of MD tensile strength); and
"(e) a Frazier air permeability of 1.0 to 1.5 cfm per sq. ft."; and

(2) by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.56.01	Nonwoven fiber sheet (provided for in subheading 5603.00.90)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 427. PROTECTIVE SPORTS APPAREL.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of the U.S. notes thereto the following:

"12. The general column 1 rate of duty for goods provided for under heading 9902.62.01 is a rate equal to the column 1 rate of duty that would have applied to such goods under the Tariff Schedules of the United States on the day before the effective date of this schedule."; and

(2) by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.61.10	Goods provided for under subheading 6201.93 or 6203.43 which because of their design, fabric, construction and special features provide protection to athlete participants against the hazards of a sport such as injury from blows, falls, flying objects, road burns, or fire	The rates of duty prescribed in U.S. note 12 to the subchapter	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 428. GARMENTS SPECIALLY DESIGNED FOR HANDICAPPED PERSONS WHO ARE NOT AMBULATORY.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new headings:

	"Garments, however provided for under heading 6203. 6204, or 6205, of cotton or of man-made fibers, specially designed for use by handcapped persons who are not ambulatory:.
"9902.62.10	Dresses that open at the back, have hook and loop closings, and are cut so there is no fabric beneath the seated wearer	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92
9902.62.15	Pants designed with a 60 angle at the hip area to provide for comfortable seating and— (i) are too low in front, too high in back, and too full in seat to be worn by the ambulatory, or (ii) have no seat and are designed to be put on a seated individual without lifting	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92
9902.62.20	Blouses or shirts that open at the back, have hook and loop closings, and have large side gussets for comfortable sitting	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 429. GRIPPING NARROW FABRICS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.58.06	Fastener fabric tapes of man made fibers (provided for in subheading 5806.10.20)	7%	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 430. IN-LINE ROLLER SKATE BOOTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.64.02	Skating boots actually used in the manufacture of inline roller skates (provided for in subheading 6402.19.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 431. SELF-FOLDING COLLAPSIBLE UMBRELLAS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.66.01	Self-folding telescopic shaft collapsible umbrellas chiefly used for protection against rain (provided for in subheading 6601.91.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 432. GLASS BULBS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.70.11	Monochrome glass envelopes with both (1) gray, tinted skirted faceplates, and (2) either a video display diagonal of 14 inches and under or a transmission level of 37% or less (provided for in subheading 7011.20.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 433. DRINKING GLASSES WITH SPECIAL EFFECTS IN THE GLASS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.70.14	Drinking glasses decorated with metal flecking, glass pictorial scenes, or glass thread-like or ribbon-like effects, any of the foregoing embedded or introduced into the body of the glassware prior to its solidification; millefiori glassware (provided for in subheading 7013.29.10 or 7013.29.20)	6.6%	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".
9902.70.15	Drinking glasses colored prior to solidification, and characterized by random distribution of numerous bubbles, seeds, or stones, throughout the mass of the glass (provided for in subheading 7013.29.10 or 7013.29.20)	20%	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 434. CERTAIN GLASS FIBERS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.70.19	Cord, yarn or woven fabric, all the foregoing of electrically nonconductive continuous glass fiber filaments measuring 9 or 10 microns in diameter, impregnated, coated or covered with resorcinol formaldehyde latex (provided for in subheadings 7019.10.10, 7019.10.20, 7019.10.60, 7019.20.10, 7019.20.20, or 7019.20.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 435. ARTICLES OF SEMIPRECIOUS STONES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.71.16	Graded semiprecious stones (except rock crystal) strung temporarily for convenience of transport (provided for in subheading 7116.20.20)	21%	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 436. LUGGAGE FRAMES OF ALUMINUM.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.76.16	Luggage frames of aluminum (provided for in subheading 7616.90.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 437. MOLTEN-SALT-COOLED ACRYLIC ACID REACTORS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.84.19	Molten-salt-cooled acrylic acid reactors and their associated parts, accessories, and equipment (provided for in subheadings 8419.89.50, 8419.90.30 or 8419.90.90), when imported as an entirety	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 438. ZINC PRINTING TYPE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.84.30	Zinc printing type (provided for in subheading 8442.50.90)	3.7%	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 439. IMPACT LINE PRINTERS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.84.65	Impact line printers using band drive mechanisms and which are capable of printing speeds of not less than 1,300 lines per minute (provided for in subheading 8471.92.65)	No change	No change	3.75%	On or before 12/31/92".

SECTION 440. MACHINES USED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF BICYCLE PARTS; CERTAIN BICYCLE PARTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.84.79	Wheelbuilding, wheelturning, rim punching, tire fitting and similar machines suitable for use in the manufacture of wheels for bicycles (provided for in subheading 8479.89.90)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92"; and
"9902.87.15	Bicycle handlebar stems wholly of aluminum alloy (including their hardware of any material), valued over $2.15 each (provided for in subheading 8714.99.90)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".
"990287.16	Bicycle handlebar stem rotor assemblies (provided for in subheading 8714.99.90)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 441. MOTOR VEHICLE PARTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.84.83	Motor vehicle parts, however provided for in heading 8483 and subheading 7014.00.20	Free	No change	No change	On or before the effective date of a Presidential proclamation extending duty free treatment under general column 1 to such motor vehicle parts".

SEC. 442. PARTS OF GENERATORS FOR USE ON AIRCRAFT.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.85.03	Parts of generators suitable for use on aircraft (provided for in subheading 8503.00.60)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 443. MAGNETIC VIDEO TAPE RECORDINGS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.85.24	Video tape recordings of a width exceeding 6.5mm but not exceeding 16mm, in cassettes of United States origin as certified by the importers, and valued at not over $7.00 per pre-recorded cassette unit (provided for in subheading 8524.23.10)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 444. CERTAIN INFANT NURSERY MONITORS AND INTERCOMS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new headings:

"9902.85.25	Infant nursery monitor systems, each consisting in the same package of a radio transmitter, an electrical adapter, and a radio receiver (provided for in subheading 8504.40.00, 8525.10.60, or 8527.39.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".
"9902.85.26	Infant nursery intercommunication systems, each consisting in the same package of a pair of transceivers operating on frequencies from 49.82 to 49.90 mHz and an electrical adapter (provided for in subheading 8504.40.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 445. CERTAIN MACHINED ELECTRONIC CONNECTOR CONTACT PARTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.85.35	Machined electronic connector contact parts, ½ inch or less in diameter suitable for use in aerospace or military equipment applications (provided for in subheading 8538.90.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 446. CERTAIN PISTON ENGINES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.84.07	Internal combustion piston-type engines, of a cylinder capacity exceeding 50 cc but not exceeding 1,000 cc (provided for in heading 8407.32.20 or 8407.33.20), to be installed in vehicles specially designed for traveling on snow, golf carts, non-amphibious all-terrain vehicles, and burden carriers, (provided for in subheading 8703.10.00, 8703.21.00 or 8704.31.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 447. TIMING APPARATUS WITH OPTO-ELECTRONIC DISPLAY ONLY.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.91.06	Apparatus for measuring, recording or otherwise indicating intervals of time, with clock or watch movements, battery or AC powered and with opto-electronic display only (provided for in subheading 9106.90.80)	3.9% on the apparatus + 5.3% on the battery.	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 448. FURNITURE AND SEATS OF UNSPUN FIBROUS VEGETABLE MATERIALS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.94.01	Furniture seats and parts thereof, of cane, other, bamboo or other similar materials, including rattan (provided for in subheading 9401.50.00, 9401.90.25, 9403.80.30, or 9403.90.25	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 449. CHRISTMAS ORNAMENTS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.95.05	Christmas ornaments other than ornaments of glass or wood (provided for in subheading 9505.10.25)	Free	No change	No change	on or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 450. 3-DIMENSIONAL CAMERAS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.90.06	Cameras incorporating 4 fixed lenses which together are capable of producing a 3-dimensional effect (provided for in subheading 9006.53.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 451. OPERATIC SCENERY, PROPERTIES, INCLUDING SETS.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.44.21	Operatic scenery and properties, including operatic sets (provided for in subheading 4421.90.90, 5907.00.10, 5907.00.90, 9701.10.00, 9706.00.00, or 9813.00.65	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

PART 2—EXISTING TEMPORARY DUTY SUSPENSIONS

SEC. 461. EXTENSION OF CERTAIN EXISTING SUSPENSIONS OF DUTY.

(a) EXTENSIONS UNTIL JANUARY 1, 1993.—Each of the following subheadings or headings is amended by striking out the date in the effective date column and inserting "12/31/92":

(1) Subheadings 9902.06.10 and 9902.05.11 (relating to crude feathers and down).
(2) Heading 9902.08.07 (relating to fresh cantaloupes).
(3) Heading 9902.09.04 (relating to mixtures of hot red peppers and salt).
(4) Heading 9902.29.04 (relating to p-Toluene-sul-foynl chloride).
(5) Heading 9902.29.05 (relating to certain menthol feedstocks).
(6) Heading 9902.29.06 (relating to Dicofol).
(7) Heading 9902.29.11 (relating to triethylene glycol dichloride).
(8) Heading 9902.29.13 (relating to 2,6-Dichlor-obenzaldehyde).
(9) Heading 9902.29.14 (relating to Dinocap).
(10) Heading 9902.29.21 (relating to m-Hydroxy-benzoic acid).
(11) Heading 9902.29.22 (relating to d-6-Meth-oxy-a-methyl-2 napthaleneacetic acid and its sodium salt).
(12) Heading 9902.29.24 (relating to 3-amino-3-methyl-l-butyne).
(13) Heading 9902.29.30 (relating to 8-Amino-1-naphthalenesulfonic aid and its salts).
(14) Heading 9902.29.31 (relating to 5-Amino-2 (p-aminoarrilino) benzenesulfonic acid).
(15) Heading 9902.29.33 (relating to 1-Amino-8-hydroxy-3,6-naphthalenedisulfonic acid; and 4-Amino-5-hydroxy-2.7-naphthalenedisulfonic acid, monosodium salt (H acid, monosodium salt).
(16) Heading 9902.29.43 (relating to 1-Amino-2,4-dibromoanthraquinone).
(17) Heading 9902.29.44 (relating to Broma-mine acid).
(18) Heading 9902.29.51 (relating to N-(7-Hydroxy-1-naphthyl)acetamide).
(19) Heading 9902.29.57 (relating to N,N-Bis(2-cyanothyl)aniline).
(20) Heading 9902.29.60 (relating to triallate).
(21) Heading 9902.29.64 (relating to 6-(3-Methyl-5-oxo-1-pyrazolyl-1,3-naphthalenedisulfonic acid (Amino-J-pyrazolone) CAS No. 7277-87-4); and 3-Methyl-1-phenyl-5-pyrazolone (Methylphenyl-pyrazo-lone)).
(22) Heading 9902.29.66 (relating to m-Sulfa-minopyrazolone (m-Sulfamidophenyl-methylpyrazo-lone)).
(23) Heading 9902.29.76 (relating to suspension of the day on 2-n-octyl-4-isothiazolin-3-one, and mixtures of 2-n-octyl-4-isothiazolin-3-one and application adjuvants).
(24) Heading 9902.29.79 (relating to 2-Amino-N-ethylbenzenesulfonanilide).
(25) Heading 9902.32.04 (relating to methylene blue).
(26) Heading 9902.38.06 (relating to mixtures of dinocap with application adjuvants).
(27) Heading 9902.38.07 (relating to mixtures of mancozeb and dinocap).
(28) Heading 9902.38.08 (relating to mixtures of maneb, zineb, mancozeb, and metiram).
(29) Heading 9902.38.10 (relating to mixtures of 5-chloro-2-methyl-4-isothiazolin-3-one,2-methyl-4-isothiazoline-3-one, magnesium chloride and stabilizers, whether or not containing application adjuvants).
(30) Heading 9902.38.11 (relating to mixtures of dicofol and application adjuvant).
(31) Heading 9902.39.14 (relating to Cholestyramine resin USP).
(32) Heading 9902.40.11, 9902.73.12, 9902.73.15, 9902.85.12, and 9902.87.14 (relating to certain bicycle parts).
(33) Heading 9902.51.11 (relating to certain wools).
(34) Heading 9902.62.10 (relating to disposable surgical gowns and drapes).
(35) Heading 9902.84.42 (relating to certain narrow weaving machines).
(36) Heading 9902.84.45 (relating to certain wool carding and spinning machinery).
(37) Heading 9902.84.48 (relating to certain knitting machines designed for sweater strip or garment length knitting).
(38) Heading 9902.84.50 (relating to certain lace braiding machines).
(39) Heading 9902.95.01 (relating to stuffed dolls and doll skins).

(b) EXTENSION UNTIL DATE OTHER THAN JANUARY 1, 1993.—Heading 9902.61.00 (relating to certain knitwear fabricated in Guam) is amended by striking out "10/31/92" and inserting "10/31/96".

SEC. 462. EXTENSION OF, AND OTHER MODIFICATIONS TO, CERTAIN EXISTING SUSPENSIONS OF DUTY.

(a) CORNED BEEF IN AIRTIGHT CONTAINERS.—Heading 9902.16.02 is amended—

(1) by striking out "3%" and inserting "Free"; and

(2) by striking out "12/31/89" and inserting "12/31/92".

(b) CERTAIN JEWELRY.—Heading 9902.71.13 is amended—

(1) by amending the article description to read as follows: "Toy jewelry provided for in subheading 7117.19.10, 7117.19.50, 7117.90.40 (except parts) or 7117.90.50 (except parts) valued not over 5¢ per piece; and articles (except parts) provided for in heading 9502, 9503, or 9504 or subheading 9505.90 (except balloons, marbles, dice, and diecast vehicles), valued not over 5¢ per unit"; and

(2) by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting "12/31/92".

(c) ELECTROSTATIC COPYING MACHINES.—Heading 9902.90.90 is amended—

(1) by inserting "and accessories," after "Parts,"; and

(2) by striking out "12/31/89" and inserting "12/31/92".

(d) TOY FIGURES.—

(1) Heading 9902.95.02 is amended—

(A) by striking out "toy figures of animate objects (except dolls)" and inserting "toys representing animals or nonhuman creatures,"; and

(B) by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting "12/31/92".

(2) Heading 9902.95.03 is repealed.

(3) Heading 9902.95.04 is amended—

(A) by striking out "toy figures of animate or inanimate objects" and inserting "toys representing animals or nonhuman creatures"; and

(B) by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting "12/31/92".

SEC. 463. TERMINATION OF EXISTING SUSPENSION OF DUTY ON C-AMINES.

Heading 9902.29.29 is repealed.

Subtitle B—Other Tariff and Miscellaneous Provisions

PART 1—TARIFF CLASSIFICATION AND OTHER TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 471. CERTAIN EDIBLE MOLASSES.

Additional U.S. notes 2, 3, and 4 of chapter 17 are each amended by striking out "170.90.40," each place it appears therein.

SEC. 472. CERTAIN WOVEN FABRICS AND GAUZE.

(a) WOVEN FABRICS OF CARDED WOOL OR CARDED FINE ANIMAL HAIR.—Heading 5111 of chapter 51 is amended—

(1) by inserting after subheading 5111.11.10 the following new subheading with the article description having the same degree of indentation as the article description in subheading 5111.11.10:

"5111.11.20	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%"

(2) by inserting after subheading 5111.20.05 the following new subheading with the article description having the same degree of indentation as the article description in subheading 5111.20.05:

"5111.20.10	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%"

(3) by inserting after subheading 5111.30.05 the following new subheading with the article description having the same degree of indentation as the article description in subheading 5111.30.05:

"5111.20.10	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%" and

(4) by inserting after subheading 5111.90.30 the following new subheadings with the article descriptions having the same degree of indentation as the article description in subheading 5111.90.30:

"5111.90.40	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 300 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
"5111.90.50	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%"

(b) WOVEN FABRICS OF COMBED WOOL OR OF COMBED FINE ANIMAL HAIR.—Heading 5112 of chapter 51 is amended by striking out subheadings 5112.11.00 through 5112.90.60, inclusive, and inserting the following with the article descriptions for subheadings 5112.11 and 5112.19 having the same degree of indentation as the article description in subheading 5111.90.60 and with the article descriptions for subheadings 5112.20, 5112.30, and 5112.90 having the same degree of indentation as the article description in subheading 5111.90:

"5112.11	Of a weight not exceeding 200g/m²:
5112.11.10	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5112.11.20	Other	36.1%	13.2% (IL) 32.4% (CA)	68.5%
5112.19	Other:
5112.19.10	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5112.19.60	Other	36.1%	13.2 (IL) 32.4% (CA)	68.5%
5112.20	Other, mixed mainly or solely with man-made filaments:
5112.20.10	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of weight exceeding 300 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5112.20.20	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% 6.3% (CA)	68.5%

5112.20.30	Other	48.4¢/kg+38%	19.2¢/kg+15.2% (IL) 43.6¢/kg+34.2% (CA)	48.5¢/kg+68.5%
5112.30	Other mixed mainly or solely with man-made staple fibers:
5112.30.10	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight exceeding 300g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5112.30.20	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5112.30.30	Other	48.5¢/kg+38%	19.2¢/kg+15.2 (IL) 43.6¢/kg+34.2% (CA)	48.5¢/kg+68.5%
5112.90	Other:
5112.90.30	Containing 30 percent or more by weight of silk or silk waste, valued over $33/kg	7.8%	3.1% (IL) 7% (CA)	80%
5112.90.40	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight exceeding 300 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5112.90.50	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5112.90.60	Other	33%	3.4% (IL) 29.7% (CA)	68.5%

(c) GAUZE.—Chapter 58 is amended by striking out subheading 5803.90.10 and inserting the following with the superior heading to subheadings 5803.90.20:

	.....
"5808.90.11	Tapestry fabrics and upholstery fabrics of a weight not exceeding 140 g/m²	7%	2.8% (IL) 6.3% (CA)	68.5%
5803.90.12	Other	33%	13.2% (IL) 24.7% (CA)	68.5%

SEC. 473. CLASSIFICATION OF CERTAIN ARTICLES IN WHOLE OR PART OF FABRICS COATED, COVERED, OR LAMINATED WITH OPAQUE RUBBER OR PLASTICS.

Chapter 42 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Additional U.S. Note" and inserting "Additional U.S. Notes"; and

(2) by inserting after additional U.S. note 1 the following:

"2. For purposes of classifying articles under subheadings 4202.12, 4202.22, 4202.32, and 4202.92, articles of textile fabric impregnated, coated, covered or laminated with plastics (whether compact or cellular) shall be regarded as having an outer surface of textile material or of plastic sheeting, depending upon whether and to the extent the textile constituent or the plastic constituent comprises the exterior surface of the article.".

SEC. 474. GLOVES, MITTENS AND MITTS.

The article description in subheading 6116.10.10 6116.92.10, 6116.93.10, 6116.99.30, 6216.00.10, 6216.00.34 or 6216.00.44 is amended to read as follows: "Gloves principally designed for sports use, including ski and snowmobile gloves, mittens and mitts".

SEC. 475. CHIPPER KNIFE STEEL.

Subchapter XV of chapter 72 is amended by striking out subheadings 7226.91.10 and 7226.91.30 and inserting the following with the article description for subheading 7226.91.05 having the same degree of indentation as subheading 7226.91.50:

"7226.91.05	Of chipper knife steel	Free		34%
	Other:
"7226.91.15	Of a width of 300mm or more	9.6%	Free (E, IL) 8.6%(CA)	29%
"7226.91.25	Of a width of less than 300mm	11.6%	Free (E, IL) 10.4% (CA)	34%	".

SEC. 476. ELIMINATION OF INVERTED TARIFF ON CANTILEVER BRAKES AND BRAKE PARTS FOR BICYCLES.

The following provisions are amended as follows:

(1) Subheading 8714.94.20 is amended by striking out "Caliper brakes" and inserting "Caliper and cantilever brakes and parts thereof".

(2) Heading 9902.73.12 is amended by inserting "and Cantilever" immediately after "caliper".

(3) Heading 9902.87.14 is amended by inserting "cantilever brakes," immediately after "caliper brakes,".

SEC. 477. BICYCLES HAVING 26-INCH WHEELS.

Chapter 87 is amended—

(1) by striking out "65 cm" in subheadings 8712.00.10 and 8712.00.20 and inserting "63.5 cm"; and

(2) by striking out "4 cm" in subheading 8712.00.20 and inserting "4.13 cm".

SEC. 478. PROCESSING OF CERTAIN BLENDED SYRUPS.

U.S. note 2 to subchapter IV of chapter 99 is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(e) Blended syrups of heading 9904.50.20, if entered by a foreign trade zone user, to the extent that the annual quantity entered into the customs territory does not contain an amount of sugar of nondomestic origin greater than that authorized by the Foreign Trade Zones Board for processing by such user during calendar year 1985.".

PART 2—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 481. RENEWAL OF EXISTING CUSTOMS EXEMPTION APPLICABLE TO BICYCLE PARTS IN FOREIGN TRADE ZONES.

Section 3(b) of the Act of June 18, 1934 (commonly known as the Foreign Trade Zones Act, 19 U.S.C. 81c(b)), is amended by striking out "before January 1, 1991" and inserting in lieu thereof "on or before December 31, 1992".

SEC. 482. RAIL CARS FOR THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514) or any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall admit free of duty each bi-level rail passenger car that was—

(1) entered after March 14, 1988, and before January 1, 1989, and classified under item 690.15 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202); and

(2) designed for, and is for the use of, the Department of Transportation of the State of Florida.

If the liquidation of the entry of any such rail car has become final before the date of the enactment of this Act, the entry shall, notwithstanding any other provision of law, be reliquidated in accordance with the provisions of this Act and the appropriate refund of duty made.

SEC. 483. RELIQUIDATION OF CERTAIN ENTRIES.

(a) CERTAIN ANTIDUMPING DUTIES.—(1) Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514) or any other provision of law and subject to paragraph (2), the entries listed in paragraph (3) shall be reliquidated, without liability of the importer of record for antidumping duties, and if any such duty has been paid, either through liquidation or compromise under section 617 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1617), refund thereof shall be made within 90 days after reliquidation.

(2) reliquidation may be made under paragraph (1) with respect to an entry only if a request therefor is filed with the appropriate customs officer within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act that contains sufficient information to enable the Customs Service—

(A) to locate the entry; or

(B) to reconstruct the entry if it cannot be located.

(3) The entries referred to in paragraph (1) are as follows:

Entry number	Date of entry
74-222089	May 7, 1974.
74-225275	June 17, 1974.
76-237223	July 9, 1976.
76-247178	October 1, 1976.
79-251251	September 11, 1979.
80-223851	October 9, 1979.
80-224447	November 27, 1979.
80-224448	November 27, 1979.
80-225842	April 29, 1980.
80-225843	April 29, 1980.
80-225844	April 29, 1980.
80-225845	April 29, 1980.
80-226742	August 13, 1980.
80-226748	August 13, 1980.

(b) DIGITAL PROCESSING UNITS.—(1) Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officer within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, any entry of a processing unit that—

(A) was classified under item 676.15, 676.54, 945.83, or 945.84 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202);

(B) occurred after January 16, 1986, and before July 2, 1987; and

(C) was unliquidated as of December 31, 1987; shall be liquidated as free of duty.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "processing unit" means a digital processing unit for an automated data processing machine, unhoused, consisting of a printed circuit (single or multiple) with one or more electronic integrated circuits or other semiconductor devices mounted directly thereon.

(c) CERTAIN OTHER ENTRIES.—Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officer within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(1) any entry of 1-(3)-Sulfopropyl pyridinium hydroxide (provided for in item 406.39 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202)) that occurred after September 30, 1988, and before January 1, 1989, shall be reliquidated as free of duty;

(2) any entry of brussels sprouts (provided for in item 903.29 of such Schedules (19 U.S.C. 1202)) that occurred after December 31, 1987, and before November 11, 1988, shall be liquidated at the rate of 12.5 percent ad valorem; and

(3) any entry of 1,6-Hexamethylene diisocyanate (provided for in subheading 2929.10.50 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States) that occurred after December 31, 1988, and before the effective date defined in section 10686(a)(1) shall be liquidated or reliquidated at the rate of 7.9 percent ad valorem.

SEC. 484. PROTEST RELATING TO CERTAIN ENTRIES.

For purposes of section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1514), and notwithstanding any other provision of law, Protest Numbered 1801-000027 shall be deemed to have been filed with the appropriate customs officer within 90 days of the liquidation of entries 81-103533-2 and 81-103789-3.

SEC. 485. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) The term "effective date" means the 15th day after the later of—

(A) October 1, 1989; or

(B) the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The term "entered" means entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in the customs territory of the United States.

(3) The term "entry" includes any withdrawal from warehouse.

(b) IN GENERAL.—

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amendments made by this Act apply with respect to goods entered on or after the effective date.

(2) The amendments made by sections 461(a) and 462 (a)(2), (b)(2), and (c)(2) apply with respect to goods entered after December 31, 1990.

(3) The amendment made by section 461(b) applies with respect to goods entered after October 31, 1992.

(4) The amendment made by section 478 applies with respect to goods entered after December 31, 1988.

(c) RETROACTIVE APPLICATION OF CERTAIN AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Notwithstanding section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law, upon proper request filed with the appropriate customs officers on or before the 90th day after the effective date of entry of any good described in paragraph (2) shall be treated as provided in such paragraph.

(2)(A) In the case of the application of any amendment made by section 311, 312, 401, 427, 429, 433, 435, 437, 438, 439, 441, 442, 443, 446, 447, 462(c)(1), 472, 474, 475, or 477 to any entry—

(i) which was made after the applicable date and before the effective date; and

(ii) with respect to which there would have been no duty or a lesser duty if the amendment made by such section applies to such entry; such entry shall be liquidated or reliquidated as though such entry had been made on the effective date.

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term "applicable date" means—
(i) in the case of sections 401 and 443, January 1, 1988;
(ii) in the case of section 439, October 1, 1988;
(iii) in the case of sections 311, 312, 427, 429, 433, 435, 438, 441, 442, 446, 447, 462(c)(1), 472, 474, 475, and 477, January 1, 1989; and
(iv) in the case of section 437, July 1, 1989.
(d) STAGED RATE REDUCTIONS FOR CERTAIN GOODS.—
(1) Any staged rate reduction of a rate of duty set forth in subheading 5111.19.10 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States that was proclaimed by the President before the effective date and takes effect after the effective date also applies to the corresponding rates of duty set forth in subheadings 5111.11.20, 5111.20.10, 5111.30.10, 5111.90.40, 5111.90.50, 5112.11.10, 5112.20.10, 5112.20.20, 5112.30.10, 5112.30.20, 5112.90.40, 5223.90.50, and 5803.90.11 (relating to certain woven fabrics and gauze) of such Schedule (as added by section 472).
Any staged rate reduction proclaimed by the President before the effective date that would—
(A) take effect after the effective date; and
(B) apply, but for any amendment made by section 472 (relating to certain woven fabrics) or 475 (relating to chipper knife steel), to a rate of duty set forth in any subheading of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States that is listed in column A;
applies to the corresponding rate of duty set forth in the subheading of such Schedule that is listed in column B opposite such column A subheading:

Column A	Column B	Column A	Column B	Column A	Column B
5112.11.00	5112.11.20	5112.91.10	5112.90.12	7226.91.30	7226.91.25
5112.20.00	5112.20.30	7226.91.10	7226.91.15
5112.31.00	5112.30.30

(3) The amendments made by section 472 shall not affect any staged rate reduction of a rate of duty set forth in subheadings 5112.19.10, 5112.19.60, 5112.90.30, 5112.90.60 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States that was proclaimed by the President before the effective date.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment and agree to the conference requested by the House and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. HEFLIN) appointed Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. PACKWOOD, and Mr. DOLE conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican has no further business, and if no Senator is seeking recognition, I now ask unanimous consent that I be recognized to address the Senate and, that upon the completion of my remarks, the Senate stand in recess under the order until 9:30 a.m. tomorrow, Tuesday, May 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE ENDANGERED SPECIES ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the Denver Post reported on Friday that Secretary of the Interior Manuel Lujan called on Congress to consider taking some of the teeth out of the Endangered Species Act because it "frequently is used to block development or threaten jobs."

According the person who is supposed to be the Nation's top conservation officer, "It is just too tough an act, I think * * * We've got to change it."

But any objective reading of the Endangered Species Act and any analysis of its implementation demonstrates that Secretary Lujan's premise and his conclusions are wrong.

Secretary Lujan complains, for instance, that under the law "one may only consider biological facts, not economic facts" when determining whether to place a species on the list.

Listing decisions and biological opinions are, of necessity, solely biological in nature. It is essential to the credibility of the Endangered Species Program that listing decisions and biological opinions be based on scientific evaluation of the status of species, not on consideration of economic interests.

There is nothing new in the suggestion to consider economic impacts in biological decisions about the status of a species. In 1978, Congress tried requiring economic assessments at the time of listing, but Congress repealed that requirement in 1982 because it nearly halted the listing process in the intervening years, undermined the scientific credibility of the Endangered Species Program, and opened the program to charges of political manipulation.

But the Endangered Species Act does not preclude consideration of economic effects. Instead, it properly segregates such considerations from scientific, biological decisions.

The act requires, for example, that an effort be made to identify "reasonable and prudent alternatives" in the way projects are carried out that would allow them to go forward while ensuring the continued existence and recovery of endangered species. Such alternatives have nearly always been found.

As a result, less than 1 percent of the 48,538 biological opinions issued from 1979 through 1986 concluded that a project would be likely to jeopardize a species' continued existence. Only about 3 projects in every 10,000 were withdrawn or canceled because of jeopardy opinions issued under the Endangered Species Act during that 8-year period.

Let me repeat that, Mr. President: Only 3 in 10,000 were withdrawn or canceled because of jeopardy opinions under the act during that period. In 1987, the General Accounting Office reviewed over 3,000 consultations on water projects in the West and found that only about 2 percent actually had any effect on the project. "Most importantly," the GAO concluded, "no water project was terminated as a result of a consultation, and cost increases caused by consultation requirements generally represented a small percentage of total project costs."

I repeat and emphasize that no project was terminated as a result of the consultation, that is, of the 3,000 water projects reviewed by the General Accounting Office in 1987.

The Endangered Species Act also provides an exemption process to balance economic and conservation interests when an irreconcilable conflict exists between the needs of a listed species and a necessary Federal action; that this process has been used only twice is testimony to the act's effectiveness in avoiding such conflicts.

In short, Secretary Lujan has his facts wrong when he claims that the Endangered Species Act frequently is used to block development or threaten jobs.

According to the Denver Post, Secretary Lujan asked Congress to consider "Do we have to save—an endangered species—in every locality where it exists?"

I would remind Secretary Lujan that under the law he is not required to save species in every locality where they exist. He is required to protect species in enough localities to ensure that they continue to exist and recover to the point where they no longer are in need of protection under the Endangered Species Act. That does not seem too much to ask.

Secretary Lujan also asked "Do we need to save every subspecies?"

I would ask Secretary Lujan, in turn, whether he wants to save the bald eagle, peregrine falcon, gray wolf, grizzly bear, and southern sea otter in the 48 coterminous States?

These animals are coming back in California, Montana, Minnesota, and Maine precisely because the Endangered Species Act protects subspecies and populations of these species.

The approach Secretary Lujan appears to be suggesting is to abandon these efforts because they involve only subspecies or populations of species that exist in Alaska and Canada.

I reject that suggestion, and I think the overwhelming majority of the American people would reject it as well.

Secretary Lujan would do well to remember that extinction of species and subspecies is irrevocable. Nothing we can do, no human act, no computer, no mechanical ingenuity can ever duplicate even one of the simplest forms of life that is being wiped from the face of the Earth.

Some now estimate that by the end of this century, 1 million species will have been permanently eliminated from the Earth. This is an unforgivable dereliction of our duty to the natural Earth and to our descendants.

Although many believe and argue that human needs, human comfort and human development should take precedence over all other concerns, the fact of the matter is that mankind is part of the natural order of the world. And if one only looks at human interest, he should be aware that mankind benefits from the enormous diversity of plant and animal life on our planet.

To take but one example, the active ingredients of 40 percent of all medical prescriptions written in the United States are derived from planets. A periwinkle flower from Madagascar yields compounds that are effective against leukemia. The miracle drug of penicillin, from the Second World War, derives from a mold, a lowly kind of fungus. The active ingredient in the common aspirin was originally derived from an Aspen tree.

Who among us, Secretary Lujan or anyone else, can now predict which of the obscure plants and insects or animals now being decimated may hold the genetic key to the next medical miracle? Who among us has the knowledge to predict what species or subspecies will never be needed?

We are losing forever the priceless genetic heritage of our world. Our efforts should be directed at doing our utmost to combat that loss. To that end, I call upon Secretary Lujan to support and enforce the law.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M.; MORNING BUSINESS; RECESS FROM 12:30 P.M. TO 2:15 P.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, May 15; and that following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

I further ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess from 12:30 to 2:15 p.m. tomorrow in order to accommodate the party conference luncheons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning there will be a cloture vote on the motion to proceed to S. 2240, the AIDS care bill.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 9:30 A.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, May 15, 1990.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 4:54 p.m., recessed until Tuesday, May 15, 1990, at 9:30 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 14, 1990:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

STEVEN D. DILLINGHAM, OF SOUTH CAROLINA, TO BE DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS, VICE STEVEN ROGER SCHLESINGER, RESIGNED.

JIMMY GURULE, OF UTAH, TO BE AN ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, VICE RICHARD BENDER ABELL, RESIGNED.

CHARLES M. HOUSE, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE DIRECTOR OF THE OFFICE FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME (NEW POSITION).

LOURDES G. BAIRD, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE U.S. ATTORNEY FOR THE CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA FOR THE TERM OF 4 YEARS, VICE ROBERT C. BONNER, RESIGNED.

IN THE ARMY

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER TO BE PLACED ON THE RETIRED LIST IN THE GRADE INDICATED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 1370:

To be general

GEN. LOUIS C. MENETREY, [redacted], U.S. ARMY.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER FOR APPOINTMENT AS ASSISTANT COMMANDANT OF THE MARINE CORPS AND CHIEF OF STAFF, HEADQUARTERS, MARINE CORPS, AND APPOINTMENT TO THE GRADE OF GENERAL WHILE SERVING IN THAT POSITION UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTIONS 601 AND 5044:

To be general

LT. GEN. JOHN B. DAILEY, [redacted] U.S. MARINE CORPS.

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER TO BE PLACED ON THE RETIRED LIST UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 1370:

To be lieutenant general

LT. GEN. WILLIAM R. ETNYRE, [redacted] U.S. MARINE CORPS.

IN THE NAVY

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER FOR REAPPOINTMENT TO THE GRADE OF VICE ADMIRAL WHILE ASSIGNED TO A POSITION OF IMPORTANCE AND RESPONSIBILITY UNDER TITLE 20, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 601:

To be vice admiral

VICE ADM. STANLEY R. ARTHUR, [redacted] U.S. NAVY.

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER FOR APPOINTMENT TO THE GRADE OF VICE ADMIRAL WHILE ASSIGNED TO A POSITION OF IMPORTANCE AND RESPONSIBILITY UNDER TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 601:

To be vice admiral

VICE ADM. ROBERT K.U. KIHUNE, [redacted] U.S. NAVY.

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER FOR APPOINTMENT TO THE GRADE OF VICE ADMIRAL WHILE ASSIGNED TO A POSITION OF IMPORTANCE AND RESPONSIBILITY UNDER TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 601:

To be vice admiral

REAR ADM. EDWIN R. KOHN, JR. [redacted] U.S. NAVY.

THE FOLLOWING-NAMED OFFICER FOR APPOINTMENT TO THE GRADE OF VICE ADMIRAL WHILE ASSIGNED TO A POSITION OF IMPORTANCE AND RESPONSIBILITY UNDER TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 601:

To be vice admiral

REAR ADM. JOSEPH P. REASON, [redacted] U.S. NAVY.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

FAMILY LEAVE PRO-FAMILY AND PRO-ECONOMIC GROWTH

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, the Denver Post today and the Los Angeles Times yesterday published insightful essays on the changing American economy, global competitiveness, and the family leave legislation., H.R. 770, just passed by the House.

The Denver Post concludes that President Bush's "threatened veto of the measure simply is anti-family and anti-economic growth."

I commend both essays to my colleagues' attention:

[From the Denver Post, May 14, 1990]

FAMILY LEAVE BILL MAKES SENSE

Americans harbor an idealized myth about the family—built from the images of paintings by Norman Rockwell and reruns of Leave It to Beaver—and that fantasy may cripple this country as an economic power.

The family where Dad goes to work and Mom stays home to care for the kids now describes less than 10 percent of all American households.

Economic pressures and increased global competition are forcing more parents into the workplace; the notion that mothers in large numbers will ever again stay home with the kids is an unrealistic pipe dream.

Yet American businesses and U.S. law have ignored this radical transformation of the American family.

There are five countries on Earth that don't require employers to grant workers a leave of absence for family emergencies: the Third World lands of Sudan, Guyana, and Burkina Faso, and the industrialized nations of South Africa and the United States.

West Germany, Japan, Singapore and other thriving economic powers have dedicated, efficient workforces partly because they recognize that employees are human beings who cannot separate their home lives from their workplace performance.

But as technology continues to shrink the globe, corporations will locate their operations wherever they please—and they won't chose countries with high drug abuse, crime or illiteracy rates. The United States has trouble with all three social ills, and each of them can be traced to weak family ties.

It just makes economic sense to let American workers take good care of their families.

That's why it is so appalling that President George Bush and a few other high-ranking Republicans oppose a reasonable measure that would require U.S. employers to give their workers unpaid leaves of a absences for familly emergencies.

Co-sponsored by U.S. Rep. Pat Schroeder of Colorado, the proposal would cover 60 percent of the American workforce. It passed the House by a large margin last week, and soon will come up for a vote in the Senate.

Bush's threatened veto of the measure simply is anti-family and anti-economic growth.

No doubt the business groups pressuring Bush to oppose the measure also would have objected to the eight-hour workday and prohibitions against child labor.

But both of Colorado's U.S. senators should support the family leave proposal.

Sen. Tim Wirth regularly has supported progressive measures on issues such as child care, and this measure complements those other efforts.

Sen. Bill Armstrong long has advocated moves to strengthen the family—and there is no more important support the government could offer than a measure to let family members take the time to care for a loved one. That's all this measure really asks employers to do.

Bush and his advisers—one of whom flippantly told women who don't like their employers' maternity leave policies to find other jobs—simply are out out of touch with the daily troubles that confront American families.

The president should ponder, for a moment, what it would be like to be a single parent and sole breadwinner, who has an ill child but no money to hire a full-time babysitter. The economic toll would be exceeded only by the emotional agony.

It is time to ready the American workplace for the 21st Century. The alternative is to let the United States languish while it watches the rest of the industrialized world continue to soar toward economic victory.

[From the LA Times, May 13, 1990]

THE POWER OF THE CHANGING WORK FORCE

(By James Flanigan)

Just in time for Mother's Day the House of Representatives last week passed a Family and Medical Leave bill that would allow employees to take 12 weeks unpaid time off to care for a newborn or adopted child, or a parent or spouse, without endangering their jobs.

But the White House said President Bush would veto the bill if it gets through the Senate and comes before him.

What's going on? A big trend for the '90s—the importance of work and family issues—that is being obscured by politics.

The House bill is opposed by small-business groups, which don't like Congress mandating benefits that big companies can afford more easily than small firms. But the bill is supported by big firms—the so-called Fortune 1,000—because they would rather cope with a uniform federal law that would apply to all competitors equally in every state.

So the House bill would exempt 95% of the nation's 8 million businesses, but still would apply to more than half the work force by covering companies with 50 or more employees and all federal, state and local governments.

But even if Bush vetoes the bill, companies large and small are going to have to offer family leave and other new and varied benefits if they want to keep employees in the '90s. Because the forces driving the legislation are those that will preoccupy business throughout the decade: change, diversity and looming labor shortages in the U.S. work force.

Women will comprise 12 million of the 19 million new entrants to the U.S. labor force in this decade, rising from 45% of the total at present to 47%.

And the proportion of black, Hispanic and Asian workers will rise to 26% of the work force, from 21%.

But the most important change will be scarcity of new workers as the labor force grows much more slowly in the '90s than in the past two decades.

Faced with change and shortages, many companies are already offering help with family issues. American Telephone & Telegraph allows up to six months unpaid leave. IBM offers a personal leave of up to three years, during which health benefits remain in force, employees can work part time and are guaranteed a full-time job upon return.

Marriott, the chain that employs 230,000 people in hotels and food service outlets, asked employees two years ago what they wanted. In response, it now offers a pretax savings plan to finance parental leave—unpaid leave being to luxury to many people—as well as discounts on child care and seminars on parenting. Like most large companies, Marriott offers extended unpaid time off—with continued health benefits—beyond the required maternity leave.

US Sprint, the telephone network with 16,000 staffers, allows employees to share jobs—splitting duties and days at work—or to work flexible hours for many reasons, not necessarily child rearing.

Such benefits are called women's issues, but "family" is a more accurate term because the common concern is modern family life—two-earner couples or single parents raising children and caring for aging relatives. Recognition of such needs is new, even if the problems aren't. And work and family issues are often subject to rhetoric and misunderstanding. There's a fond belief, repeated even by experts, that in past centuries women stayed home and men worked.

But that's not true. In past centuries, both men and women worked on farms—and worked until they dropped. It is only for a historically brief period in this century that the idea of keeping women in the home took hold—and it's doubtful that anybody asked the woman for her opinion. Women at the higher end of the social scale worked: Frances Perkins in 1933 was the first Secretary of Labor. And at the lower end, domestic servants were a constant 5% to 6% of the U.S. work force until World War II, (Domestics are 1% of today's work force.)

In any event, that war brought women back into the general work force and they never really left, even though television in the 1950s portrayed the American woman as a homebound spouse—June Cleaver of "Leave It to Beaver," Alice Kramden of "The Honeymooners" and Lucy Ricardo of "I Love Lucy."

By contrast, today's TV mothers go out to work—Claire Huxtable on "The Cosby

---

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Show" and Roseanne Conner on "Roseanne."

Yet despite their years in the work force, women still get short pay. Median weekly earnings for retail sales workers, for example, are $304 for men, $208 for women. Among editors and reporters, men make $589 a week and women $442. Women do better in light manufacturing—earning $254 a week to $287 for men. And among lawyers and MBAs, women earn 82 cents for every $1 of male wages—the differences in part reflecting seniority in the profession but also the big money that men haul down from top partnerships and executive positions.

Trends for the '90s? A sure bet is that those wage gaps will close-and those executive positions will open up. Or else talented employees will go elsewhere. Recent surveys by Opinion Research and Wick & Co., a management consultancy, show women leaving corporations faster than men—not for family reasons but to seek opportunity—or out of frustration with the lack of it.

In the new decade, companies that let talented people get away will decline, and those that motivate and keep employees will prosper. The equation is that simple, which is not to say that solving it will be easy.

Catering to a diverse work force takes time and money—there is no one program to suit all of today's workers. Hiring temporary replacements for workers on leave will be a boon to firms such as Manpower Inc., but an added cost for companies pressed to economize. And family issues promise new demands for medical benefits, just when all of business is determined to cut medical costs.

So there will be tension—which is not to say it might not be creative. Thanks to labor shortages, employees may finally be judged on competence and not gender or race. It can happen.

Recall that when the Hubble Telescope was in trouble, two skilled mission specialists were alerted to go out in a spacewalk and fix it. Kathryn D. Sullivan and Bruce McCandless.

No big deal: When jobs need doing, you get people who can do them.

SALVATORE C. BATTISTI, CELEBRATES 70 YEARS OF SERVICE TO THE WYOMING VALLEY

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Salvatore C. Battisti, of Pittston, PA, who has just reached a milestone of service to the people of the Wyoming Valley that no other individual has ever attained. Mr. Battisti, a senior vice president of the First Eastern Bank of Wilkes-Barre, has just celebrated his 70th year as a community banker.

The life of Salvatore Battisti is a classic American success story. An immigrant from Sicily just after the turn of the century, he attended Pennsylvania public schools and graduated in the mid-1920s from the distinguished Wharton School of Business.

Mr. Battisti's fluency in Italian won him an entry level job at the Miners Savings Bank where he survived the Great Depression, the passage of the Glass-Steagall Act, the National Banking Act, and numerous other recessions and new laws. Eventually he rose all the way to the top and became president of Miners Savings Bank, orchestrating its merger with First Eastern Bank in 1986.

At age 87 Mr. Battisti remains active with First Eastern Bank even though most of his colleagues had not even been born when he started work. He is a wealth of information about financial history and traditions, and remembers the days of ink wells and evening hours, as well as the days of direct deposit and automated teller machines.

Mr. Battisti's career is a testament to the importance of hard work and personal service in the banking industry. While other individuals and institutions have failed to weather the financial storms of the last seven decades, Salvatore Battisti, the institutions he has served, and the people he has served, have persevered and prospered.

Over the last 70 years Salvatore Battisti has touched the lives of tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of Wyoming Valley families—providing them with home mortgages, safe savings accounts, and business loans. I want to join all those families in thanking Salvatore Battisti for his contribution to our community, and in wishing him continued success and good health.

I would also like to share with my colleagues in the House the excellent profile to Mr. Battisti which appears in the May 11, 1990, "People in the News" column of the American Banker.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS—A BANKER IN COAL COUNTRY MARKS 70 YEARS IN BUSINESS

(By Franklin Smith)

No one keeps comparative data on the length of banking careers, but even so, Salvatore C. Battisti has a legitimate claim on the record for longevity.

On Thursday, the 87-year-old Pittston, Pa., resident celebrated the 70th anniversary of his entry into banking. He is still active as senior vice president and honorary director of First Eastern Bank, Wilkes-Barre, the principal subsidiary of the $2.7 billion-asset First Eastern Corp.

Mr. Battisti got his start less than 10 years after immigrating from Sicily. While he was working at a drugstore next to the former Miners Savings Bank of Pittston, "the cashier of the bank used to come in every day for a soda," Mr. Battisti recalled. "And one day he offered me a job at the bank."

The banker viewed Mr. Battisti's fluency in Italian as an asset: He would be able to communicate with the many Italian-speaking bank customers who worked in nearby mines.

Mr. Battisti worked in the Miners Savings note and mortage department through the stock market crash of 1929 and the Depression of the 1930s. He rose to treasurer and trust officer on Aug. 1, 1954; trustee on Aug. 9, 1961; and vice president on Jan. 8, 1963. He served as president of Miners Savings Bank from 1971 to 1986, when the $70 million-deposit institution was merged into First Eastern.

Now he is a senior executive in one of First Eastern Bank's retail banking regions.

"Banking today is like day and night compared with when I started—moving with great strides in areas such as technology," Mr. Battisti said. "The changes in the industry are so great and so many. We used ink wells, and we had to fill them ourselves."

The banking hours have also changed, he said. "Today you have 24-hour banking and automated banking machines.

"I used to work on Saturday until noon, and then I would go back to work in the evening from 7 to 9. Many of the breadwinners were miners, and we had to accommodate their schedule."

YOU NEED A LOT OF PATIENCE

He remembers the Glass-Steagall Act of 1933, which prohibited commercial banks from issuing corporate bonds or serving as investment banks. "But now the banks are sliding into everything," Mr. Battisti said.

"Banking has always been a challenge for me, and I look forward to going to work every day. I feel you need a lot of patience because you are dealing with people on a daily basis. They will try your patience."

Mr. Battisti said he is in good health and goes to his doctor for regular checkups. "I eat the right food, and I don't drink any alcoholic beverage or junk food."

Last week, colleagues and friends threw him a 70th-anniversary party, where he received gifts and a plaque. The Pennsylvania Senate passed a resolution in his honor, and President Bush and Gov. Robert Casey sent congratulatory messages.

"I am lucky I made it to work after the two ginger ales I drank at the party," Mr. Battisti quipped.

He completed the first 2½ grades of school in his native Sicily, attended public schools in Pennsylvania, and was graduated in the mid-1920's from the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Business.

He was married in 1927 to the former Mamie Rosati of Scranton, who died in 1989. They had three children.

Mr. Battisti is a member of the Pennsylvania Bankers Association and past president of the Northern Anthracite Bankers Association. He is also a member and past president of the Wyoming Valley Chapter, American Institute of Banking.

Mr. Battisti said he likes opera and classical music, reads a lot, and walks to work most days.

He does not want to retire just yet. "It's pretty hard to say what's going to happen today, tomorrow, or the next day," Mr. Battisti said. "I've always been the type that wants to learn about everything."

TRIBUTE TO CHIEF M. SGT. BUD SEXTON

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of his retirement from the U.S. Air Force, I want to recognize Chief M. Sgt. Bud Sexton, for his 20 years of dedicated service to our country. In his most recent assignment as Chief, Correspondence Control, Congressional Inquiry Division, Office of Legislative Liaison, Chief Sexton provided invaluable service to every Member of Congress. Having demonstrated superior leadership, initiative, and strong management abilities, he was personally selected to manage the overall operation of the Correspondence Control Center which processes all Presidential, Vice Presidential and congressional correspondence for the Secretary of the Air Force and the Chief of Staff, USAF. Chief Sexton personally developed an extensive and timely training program which successfully indoctrinated new personnel to all facets of correspondence control. His dedicated efforts averted a potentially devastating breakdown in operations, an improved management of correspondence flow and a well trained staff capable of performing any function within the branch. Additionally, he initiated a long overdue study to evaluate and acquire a replacement for outdated datafax and microfiche data storage and retrieval systems. His contributions during this tour have been enormous and far beyond that expected. They culminate a long and distinguished career in the service of his country.

Born on March 4, 1949, in Johnson City, TN, Chief Sexton graduated from Lima Senior High School, Lima, OH, in 1967. He is also a graduate of the Community College of the Air Force, Maxwell AFB, AL; Air Training Command Noncommissioned Officer's Academy, Lackland AFB, TX, and the U.S. Air Force Senior Noncommissioned Officer Academy, Gunter AFB, AL.

Chief Sexton began his military career as a member of the U.S. Army. He completed Basic Infantry Training at Fort Knox, KY, followed by Advanced Infantry Training at Fort Ord, CA. En route to South East Asia, the chief attended jungle training in Hawaii. He served a 1-year combat tour in Vietnam, and earned the Army Commendation Medal.

After a 3-year break in service, Chief Sexton entered the Air Force in 1972, attended Administrative Specialists School at Keesler AFB, MS, and was subsequently assigned to Scott AFB, IL. He performed duties as NCOIC Essex House, Billeting, and orderly room administrative specialists. His other assignments include: assistant chief, enlisted career matters, directorate of information management and administration, Secretary of the Air Force, the Pentagon, Washington, DC; Air Force Academy group sergeant major, and chief, Air Force Academy Command Section Administration, U.S. Air Force Academy, Colorado Springs, CO; Unit, NCOIC Maintenance Administration, 57th Fighter Interceptor Squadron, Keflavik, Iceland; group professional development instructor, instructor training branch, Lackland AFB, TX; squadron military training instructor, 3726 Basic Military Training Squadron, Lackland AFB, TX; and orderly room clerk and chief clerk, 5010 Combat Support Group, Eielson AFB, AK.

Chief Sexton's military awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters; Army Commendation Medal; Presidential Unit Citation; Air Force Outstanding Unit Award with three oak lead clusters; Air Force Organizational Excellence Award; Navy Meritorious Unit Citation; Air Force Good Conduct Medal and one silver cluster; Army Good Conduct Medal; National Defense Service Medal; Air Force Overseas Short Tour Ribbon; Air Force Overseas Long Tour Ribbon with one oak leaf cluster; Air Force Longevity Ribbon with four oak leaf clusters; Noncommissioned Officer Professional Military Education Graduate Ribbon with two oak leaf clusters; Air Force Basic Training Ribbon; Republic of Vietnam Gallantry Cross with Palm; and the Republic of Vietnam Campaign Medal. Chief Sexton also wears the Army Combat Infantry Badge and the Air Force Information Manager's Badge.

Chief Sexton is married to the former Nancy E. Slate from Virginia Beach, VA; and has one son, Todd.

I want to join others in commending Chief Sexton on a full and productive service career and wish him every success in civilian life.

A TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSWOMAN COYA KNUTSON

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, Friday, May 18 marks the release date of a book about a remarkable American. "Coya, Come Home" is the biography of Coya Knutson, Minnesota's first woman to be elected to a full term in Congress.

The title of the book refers to a letter from Coya's husband, asking her to give up her congressional career after 4 years and return to Minnesota. The letter was leaked to the press and grabbed the attention of the voters in Coya's rural district. It also brought on her defeat in the next election.

In her short tenure in Washington, from 1955 through 1959, Coya Knutson's career is studded with remarkable accomplishments:

She was the first woman appointed to the House Agriculture Committee. Acting on the counsel of my predecessor, Congressman John Blatnik, Coya wrote to Speaker Sam Rayburn and Majority Leader John McCormack asking for the appointment.

Rayburn appointed her to the committee over the protests of its chairman, Representative Harold Cooley. The Speaker responded to Cooley's objections by telling the chairman, "Coya Knutson did the impossible by getting elected and she's going to get her pick of committees." Knutson and Cooley later became good friends.

As a member of the Agriculture Committee, Coya was a champion of the family farm. She was instrumental in establishing credit programs for farm improvement and expansion. She worked for price supports for sugar beet farmers and supported soil conservation programs. She helped enlarge the Federal school lunch program as a solution to farm surplus problems. Her first speech on the House floor pleaded for maintaining farm price supports, declaring that "adequate farm income is a task we must achieve for the economic health and welfare of the country."

In 1957, Americans looked upward and saw the Soviet Sputnik orbiting the Earth. Our post-war bubble of euphoria burst and new initiatives in education were needed. Coya Knutson introduced the "Dollars for Scholars" Program to help worthy students afford a college education. "Even though education is a right in a democracy," she told her House colleagues, "we have seen destitute students go by unnoticed. The opportunity for capable students to go to college is the latest horizon to be faced." Her program was written into title II of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 and enabled a generation of young people to receive college degrees.

She proposed an omnibus education bill that would channel one-fourth of the defense budget into elementary and secondary education. Although this bill—nicknamed the Paul Bunyan bill, after the north country lumberjack who accomplished great things—did not pass during her term in office, a modified version of it passed during the Kennedy administration and became the first large-scale Federal Education Program.

The first Federal grant to support cystic fibrosis research was the result of Coya's work. H.R. 12331, passed May 5, 1958, appropriated $1 million to fight this disease, at that time the third leading killer of children. A major portion of the funds was awarded to the University of Minnesota, and Coya was honored for her efforts by the Minneapolis-St. Paul chapter of the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

It was Coya Knutson who proposed a Federal income tax checkoff to support public funding for Presidential campaigns. Like the Paul Bunyan bill, this legislation did not become law until after Coya had left Congress.

These accomplishments are chronicled in "Coya Come Home," the biography of Coya Knutson by Gretchen Urnes Beito. I recommend this book to my colleagues in the House.

Coya Knutson was a dedicated and able legislator. She was a champion of working people and family farmers. She worked to educate our children and keep them healthy. She was cut from the same cloth as Senator Hubert Humphrey, with whom she worked very closely. Her accomplishments and the spirit with which she achieved them make me proud to continue the tradition of service to the people of Minnesota in Congress.

Coya Knutson is now a 77-years-young grandmother, living in Bloomington, MN. She will be the guest of honor at a special reception hosted by Governor and Mrs. Rudy Perpich at the Governor's residence on May 18, to celebrate the release of her biography.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, please join me in paying tribute to a very special lady, Congresswoman Coya Knutson.

INTRODUCING LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE FAIRNESS TO MERCER COUNTY, NJ, FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to address the pay disparity endured by those Federal employees working in Mercer County, NJ. My new legislation would include the public servants of Mercer County in the 8 percent pay hike proposed for those Government workers from the New York Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Area.

I commend President Bush for recognizing the acute retention and recruitment problems that the Federal Government is experiencing in various high cost-of-living cities across the United States. These difficulties, while obvious in the larger cities of New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, exist in other cities as well. Therefore, I have drafted legislation to provide this necessary 8 percent pay raise for the Federal employees in the city of Trenton and the surrounding Mercer County, NJ.

While the Federal Government suffers due to the recruitment and retention problems, the individual workers suffer due to the high cost of living. Market forces have driven the salaries of non-Federal workers in New Jersey high above the pay of our Government employees. The size of the private-public pay gap is debatable. My bill calls for an immediate 8 percent raise; identical to the President's proposal contained in his budget recommendation. Yet, in the 1989 annual report by the Advisory Committee on Federal Pay, they cite a need for a 25-percent raise for northern New Jersey's Federal employees from "A Report on the Decline of Federal Service in New Jersey." Clearly, with renumeration for work done in a private sector enterprise is vastly higher than the pay for similar services in a public work setting.

Mercer County's high cost of living is seen in the median home prices. How can Federal workers expect to be home owners in Mercer County where the median home prices in one municipality are over $332,000. In the entire county, only one municipality has home prices averaging below $122,000. The present general schedule is obviously insufficient to meet these housing costs.

There is compelling evidence to suggest that Mercer County's need for a pay differential is equal to that of the other counties included in the Presidential pay reform bill. For instance, under the Federal Governments own per diem rates, Mercer County has a higher daily reimbursement rate than Somerset, Morris, Monmouth, Middlesex, and Ocean Counties, all of which are included in the 8 percent pay incease with New York. The rate for Mercer County is $114 per day, neighboring Monmouth County is $84 per day, while the standard rate for the Continental United States is only $66 per day. The Federal Government recognizes the high costs in Mercer County, so should the Congress by including my bill in any legislation to increase Government salaries by 8 percent.

I look forward to the swift committee consideration of the pay reform legislation and hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting this effort to provide equality to Mercer County's Federal workers.

TRIBUTE TO BISHOP ARTHUR H. KRAWCZAK

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a dedicated individual, Bishop Arthur H. Krawczak. Bishop Krawczak is celebrating his 50th year as a priest.

Arthur Krawczak was born February 2, 1913, in Detroit, MI. He received a bachelor's degree in philosophy at Sacred Heart Seminary and obtained his theological training at Orchard Lake Seminary. He later received a master's degree in social work from the Catholic University of America in Washington, DC.

Arthur Krawczak was ordained May 18, 1940 at Blessed Sacrament Cathedral by then Archbishop Edward Mooney. Father Krawczak offered his first mass at his home parish of St. Florian in Hamtramck.

On April 3, 1973, Father Krawczak was ordained an auxiliary bishop of the Archdiocese of Detroit by John Cardinal Dearden at Blessed Sacrament Cathedral in Detroit. He is titular bishop of subbar with the episcopal motto, "serve with gladness."

Bishop Krawczak became the regional bishop for the northeast region of the archdiocese of Detroit in the July, 1977, establishment of the four regions. He served in this capacity until the summer of 1981 when the newly installed archbishop, Edmund C. Szoka, appointed him director of the department of education.

The Holy Father Pope John Paul II accepted the resignation of Bishop Krawczak for reasons of health on August 17, 1982.

I commend Bishop Krawczak on his inspirational leadership. He is a touchstone in our community and will long be remembered as a true friend.

DR. JAMES H. RYAN, PRESIDENT OF PENN STATE WILKES-BARRE CAMPUS PROMOTED TO MAIN CAMPUS

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. James H. Ryan, president of the Pennsylvania State University's Wilkes-Barre campus. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Dr. Ryan as he assumes the role of vice president of continuing education at the Pennsylvania State University main campus in State College, PA. Dr. Ryan will be greatly missed throughout the entire region of northeastern Pennsylvania, where he has devoted so much energy these past 9 years.

In 1981, Dr. Ryan was named campus executive officer of the Penn State Wilkes-Barre campus, one of 17 Commonwealth campuses in the Penn State University system. Prior to joining Penn State, Dr. Ryan served as dean of continuing education at Indiana University, South Bend, as well as various positions at the State University of New York at Buffalo, where he also received three degrees including a doctorate in the sociology of higher education and higher education administration.

He has taught, written, and lectured widely on leadership, managerial decisonmaking, and organizational development. He has served as a widely respected consultant to government, education, and business and industry on organizational change, strategic planning, program budgeting, training and development, and time and stress management.

His work with the American Association of University Administrators, of which he is a former vice president, earned him nomination as an "Emerging Young Leader in Higher Education" in a national survey conducted by the American Council on Education and Change magazine in 1979. He has recently been appointed to the National Labor/Higher Education Council by the American Council on Education.

In northeastern Pennsylvania Dr. Ryan is especially well-known for his leadership in economic development and has helped transform the region into a thriving, diversified economy. Dr. Ryan has served on the board and as an officer of the Greater Wilkes-Barre Chamber of Commerce and Industrial Fund. He was also a founding member of the Committee for Economic Development [CEG] and served as vice chairman for 6 years and is a member of the Greater Wilkes-Barre Partnership, Inc., board of directors.

In addition, he is past chairman of Leadership Wilkes-Barre, a community-based organization which provides leadership training to select young community leaders in order to enrich regional development.

Dr. Ryan has long championed the idea of transferring and exchanging technology with other countries, particularly Japan, to encourage economic growth in our area. I have had the distinct pleasure of experiencing Dr. Ryan's enthusiasm for community development first hand. In 1987, Dr. Ryan accompanied me on a visit to Japan. His interest in technology exchange and the belief that this exchange is necessary in today's communication-oriented society led him to work diligently to bring companies into Pennsylvania—companies which would create new jobs and improve the standard of living in all regions of Pennsylvania. Recently, Sony Corp. has brought one of their plants to Pennsylvania, opening new channels of exchange and communication. This development and technological dialog is precisely Dr. Ryan's goal for our region.

Dr. Ryan understands the critical role academic institutions can play in the development of their host communities and has worked hard to make Penn State's Wilkes-Barre campus responsive to the needs of northeastern Pennsylvania. He will be missed by our area as his accomplishments will not be easily matched. The Wyoming Valley is economically stronger today than it was when Dr. Ryan began his effort to unite community leaders to encourage them to work together for economic and technological advancement. It is with great admiration that I congratulate Dr. Ryan on his promotion and with great faith that I wish him much success as vice president of continuing education at Penn State University.

A TRIBUTE TO NORMAN HECHT

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, Orange County, NY, is blessed with an individual who loves his community and has done his best to make it as good as it can be.

Norman Hecht is an entrepreneur who, after graduating from Cornell University, went into the poultry business by founding Hecht's Hatchery in Montgomery, NY. The company later moved to the village of Walden, where it became one of the largest operations of its kind in the East. His commitment to the poultry industry was further demonstrated through his roles as director of the State Poultry Industry and secretary for the American Egg Board.

Hecht also has devoted his time to his community, working with regional service associations such as the Rotary Club and the Newburgh YMCA, where he was on the board of directors.

But it is his work on behalf of the Jewish community that has earned Mr. Hecht his greatest distinction. The list of Jewish organizations of which he has been president is amazing: the Walden Jewish Community Center, Congregation Beth Hillel; the Walkill Valley Lodge; the Hudson Valley Council of B'nai B'rith; and the Jewish Federation of Orange County.

Other positions include chairman of the Israel bond campaign in Newburgh and co-chairman of the Walden Jewish Charities and the United Jewish Appeal. Today, he sits on the board of trustees of the Hebrew Day School of Orange County and the Jewish Federation of Orange County.

In recognition of his exhaustive efforts at improving the quality of life for his fellow members of the religious community and in improving the lives of all county residents, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith will present its Americanism Award to Mr. Hecht on May 17.

Norman Hecht is to be commended for receiving such a distinguished honor. People like him represent what is best about America.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 4808, THE SOLAR, WIND AND GEOTHERMAL POWER PRODUCTION INCENTIVES ACT OF 1990

HON. PHILIP R. SHARP

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to introduce today a bill to lift the size limitation on solar, wind, and geothermal small power production facilities subject to the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 [PURPA]. This is an amendment whose time has come, both because of the giant leaps forward in those technologies since 1978, and because of the enormous environmental benefits these power sources promise for the next generation of electric powerplants.

Last Congress, I sponsored legislation to raise from 30 to 80 megawatts the size limitation of solar small power production facilities. The reason for the legislation was that the 30-megawatt ceiling, thought to be enormous in 1978, had been superseded by breakthroughs in solar parabolic trough reflector technology. That bill, H.R. 2818, passed the House of Representatives in 1987. Although we lifted the size limits in our legislation, concerns in the Senate caused the final legislation to be framed as a 2-year experiment only, with the ceiling lapsing back to 30 megawatts in December 1989.

Mr. Speaker, this noteworthy initiative is back. And the initiative has a special timeliness this year, with the Congress at last nearing resolution of the Clean Air Act amendments. That effort addresses the severe environmental problems that came from our fuel choices of the past; today's bill is a down payment on some positive fuel choices for the future, at a time when those choices are increasingly difficult and increasingly crucial for the Nation's health. The breadth of the sponsorship on this bill testifies to our agreement on the benefits of this path.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation and to support our efforts to encourage the utilization of these clean electric power sources for the Nation's next generation of powerplants.

KANSAS CITY, KS, SCHOOL DESIGNATED A NEXT CENTURY SCHOOL

HON. JAN MEYERS

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay tribute to Stanley Elementary School, in Kansas City, KS.

Stanley Elementary School was one of 15 schools recognized by RJR Nabisco Foundation's Next Century Schools for risk taking and enterpreneurship in education. These schools will share $8.5 million in grants that fund school-based management, special interventions for disadvantaged students, and efforts to promote community and parent involvement, teacher development, technological literacy and curriculum change.

Nearly 1,000 schools applied last November for this year's awards. The fund will provide $30 million in capital to the winning schools during the next 5 years, promoting grassroots efforts to increase student attainment in kindergarten through 12th grade in public schools.

I commend Stanley Elementary for the innovative and creative steps they are taking to implement new ideas in the classroom. The school will group teachers with the same students over a 3-year period and will extend the length of each school year. Teachers will work together to help students learn to read, write, and compute effectively so that all students leave fifth grade performing at or above grade level.

I congratulate the children at Stanley Elementary, the teachers, and principal Donna Hardy for this well-deserved recognition.

COMMENDING ZAIRE

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge the Government of Zaire, under the leadership of President Mobutu Sese Seko, for improvements in respect to the environment. In addition to Zaire's public concern at the recent White House Conference on the Global Warming, Zaire is continuing its efforts in the preservation of endangered elephants and the protection of the white rhinoceros.

Zaire currently, is home to 10 percent of the world's forest resources. Zaire has been targeted as one of the top 10 countries to receive increased attention from United States AID in its global climatic change initiative. This recognition marks an effort unprecedented in Zaire's long history of environmental concerns. To further emphasize Zaire's commitment, Zaire has created an armed force to defend the national wildlife on game reserves and to this date over 30 guards have been killed in defense of these endangered animals.

According to the World Wildlife Foundation, Zaire is home to several of the world's threatened species including, the okapi, the mountain gorilla, the white rhinoceros, and the African elephant. In addition to the large number of threatened animal species in Zaire, the tropical forests of Zaire are also home to the Strophanthus kombe a medicinal plant utilized by the American pharmaceutical industry in the production of heart medicines and to quote the World Wildlife Foundation, "if the tropical forests disappear, thus will the extremely precious medicinal substances".

Mr. Speaker, now is the time to commend Zaire's efforts for their noble effort and to work with our neighbors in Central Africa to see that the world's global resources are protected.

A TRIBUTE TO JEWEL AND KING FISHER

HON. GREG LAUGHLIN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 14, 1990

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues the recognition of King and Jewel Fisher. This year, King and Jewel Fisher will celebrate the 50th anniversary of King Fisher Marine Service Inc., a company that has provided excellent service to its customers along the Texas gulf coast. Founded in 1940 by King and Jewel Fisher, the company has steadily expanded its operations. After filing their company's first Social Security reports in the second quarter of 1940, the Fishers developed their business into one of the most respectable marine and dredging service companies in Texas. King and Jewel Fisher's success motto was simple, "we only bought what we could pay for." King and Jewel Fisher have kept that motto, and today they operate a company of approximately 300 employees and have a payroll exceeding $5 million.

The Fishers have contributed immensely to the economic development in Port Lavaca, TX by their commitment to King Fisher Marine Service and to the hard working men and women of Port Lavaca. Mr. Speaker, the Fishers have also been very active in community affairs. They have been supportive of youth programs in Calhoun County and have bought the grand champion steer at the local county fair for 10 consecutive years.

King and Jewel Fisher have encouraged many young people to go to college and further their educational and career opportunities.

I am proud to have people like King and Jewel Fisher in my district. The Fishers are people who started from a small foundation and built the largest dredging and marine construction company based in Texas. I wish King and Jewel Fisher many more years of happiness and success with their company and future endeavors.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, May 15, 1990, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

MEETINGS SCHEDULED

MAY 16

8:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Business meeting, to resume consideration of proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs.
SR-332

9:00 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SD-430

9:30 a.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
Consumer and Regulatory Affairs Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on mortgage discrimination.
SD-538

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Consumer Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine environmental labeling of consumer products.
SR-253

Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SD-366

Governmental Affairs
To hold hearings on S. 1235, to revise the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to permit States and political subdivisions to establish minority set-asides for contracts with firms striving to remedy discrimination by private contractors in employment and subcontracting.
SD-342

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
District of Columbia Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine the District of Columbia's drug programs, focusing on the use of fiscal year 1990 appropriated funds and funds to be appropriated in upcoming fiscal years.
SD-124

Appropriations
VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Subcommittee
To continue hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Housing and Urban Development, and independent agencies.
SD-138

Appropriations
Transportation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Federal Highway Administration of the Department of Transportation, and the National Transportation Safety Board.
SD-192

Environment and Public Works
Water Resources, Transportation, and Infrastructure Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine the maintenance of Hell Gate Bridge in Queens, New York.
SD-406

Joint Economic
Technology and National Security Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine the economic conditions in eastern Europe, focusing on the CIA report "Eastern Europe: Long Road Ahead to Economic Well-Being."
SH-216

10:30 a.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
HUD/Moderate Rehabilitation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the rebuilding of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).
SD-562

11:00 a.m.
Foreign Relations
Western Hemisphere and Peace Corps Affairs Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed U.S. military training for Peru.
S-116, Capitol

2:00 p.m.
Armed Services
Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence Subcommittee
To hold closed hearings on S. 2171, authorizing funds for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, focusing on the space launch and command, control, communications and intelligence programs.
S-407, Capitol

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Merchant Marine Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2170, to prescribe the conditions under which contractors receiving operating-differential subsidy of their affiliates may engage in coastwise or intercoastal trade.
SR-253

Small Business
To resume hearings to examine the Small Business Administration's small business investment companies program.
SR-428A

Select on Intelligence
To hold closed hearings on intelligence matters.
SH-219

MAY 17

8:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Business meeting, to continue consideration of proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs.
SR-332

9:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Defense, focusing on space programs.
S-407, Capitol

Armed Services
To hold hearings on S. 2171, authorizing funds for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, focusing on concurrency in the Department of Defense acquisition process and programs.
SR-222

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Science, Technology, and Space Subcommittee
To hold hearings on semi-conductors and the future of the U.S. electronics industry.
SR-253

Energy and Natural Resources
To hold hearings on S. 2362, authorizing funds for the construction of facilities to protect public health and safety and for the enhancement of infrastructure in the event of disasters in insular areas.
SD-366

Environment and Public Works
To hold hearings on S. 1462, to create a Federal nuclear facility environmental response fund, and to create an Office of Environmental Management and Remedial Action within the Department of Energy.
SD-406

Judiciary
To hold hearings on the nominations of Robert H. Clehand, of Michigan, to be United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Michigan, and Richard J. Hankinson, of Virginia, to be Inspector General, Department of Justice.
SD-226

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Subcommittee
To continue hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Housing and Urban Development, and independent agencies.
SD-138

Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold hearings to examine the reform of federal deposit insurance.
SD-538

Foreign Relations
Business meeting, to consider S. 2296, to provide supplemental authorization of appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of State, S. Con. Res. 124, expressing the sense of the Congress regarding human rights violations against the Albanian ethnic minority in southern Yugoslavia, and pending nominations.
SD-419

Joint Economic
To hold hearings to examine how U.S. productivity may be improved by using the abilities of the nation's blue-collar workers more effectively.
SD-628

2:00 p.m.
Armed Services
Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2171, to authorize funds for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, focusing on the Strategic Defense Initiative.
SD-628

Energy and Natural Resources
Public Lands, National Parks and Forests Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1852 and H.R. 3545, to revise the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Development Act to make certain changes relating to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park Commission, S. 1990, to establish the Cliff Walk National Historic Site, S. 2011 and H.R. 2843, to authorize the expansion of the Tumacacori National Monument, S. 2067 and H.R. 3834, to designate the route from Selma to Montgomery for study for potential addition to the National Trails System, S. 2072, to authorize a study of nationally significant places in American history, S. 2262, to designate segments of the Sudbury, Assabet, and Concord Rivers as a study area for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, S. 2437, to authorize the acquisition of certain lands in Louisiana for inclusion in the Vicksbury National Military Park, and S. 2566, to redesignate the Sunset Crater National Monument as the Sunset Crater Volcano National Monument.
SD-366

Judiciary
Courts and Administrative Practice Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine the use of secrecy and confidentiality of documents by courts in civil litigation, focusing on under what circumstances the sealing of cases may adversely affect public health and safety.
SD-226

MAY 18

8:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Business meeting, to continue consideration of proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs.
SR-332

9:30 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Superfund, Ocean and Water Protection Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1697, to require local educational agencies to conduct testing for radon contamination in schools.
SD-406

Finance
Medicare and Long-Term Care Subcommittee
To hold hearings on recommendations for the Medicare Volume Performance Standards (MVPS) for fiscal year 1991, which is the rate of growth in spending for physician services reimbursed by the Medicare program.
SD-215

Veterans' Affairs
To hold hearings on titles I and III of S. 2100, Veterans Compensation Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act, S. 1887, to allow for Kentucky Vietnam veterans to receive a one-time bonus from the Commonwealth, S. 2454, Veterans Programs Improvement Act, S. 2482, to clarify the eligibility of certain minors for burial in national cemeteries, S. 2102, to modify certain congressional reporting requirements of the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, S. 2556, Radiation Exposed Veterans Compensation Amendments, S. 2499, to limit the amount of funds held by fiduciaries of incompetent veterans subject to inheritance by nondependent heirs, S. 2485, to authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to provide financial assistance for the operation and maintenance of State veterans' cemeteries, and proposed legislation to expand radiation presumptions for veterans.
SR-418

Special on Aging
To hold hearings to examine service delivery problems at the Social Security Administration.
SD-628

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Interior Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Office of Surface Mining, Department of the Interior.
S-128, Capitol

Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold hearings on proposed money laundering legislation, including S. 2327 and H.R. 3848, to authorize Federal depository institution regulatory agencies to revoke charters, terminate deposit insurance, and remove or suspend officers and directors of depository institutions involved in money laundering.
SD-538

Labor and Human Resources
To resume hearings on S. 2114, to promote excellence in American mathematics, science, and engineering education.
SD-430

MAY 21

1:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Interior Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of the Interior and related agencies.
S-128, Capitol

Select on Indian Affairs
To hold hearings on the nomination of Carl J. Kunasek, of Arizona, to be Commissioner on the Navajo and Hopi Relocation.
SR-485

MAY 22

9:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To hold closed hearings on proposed budget estimates for the Department of Defense, focusing on classified programs.
S-407, Capitol

9:30 a.m.
Armed Services
Projection Forces and Regional Defense Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2171, to authorize funds for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, focusing on the Navy shipbuilding and conversion program.
SR-222

10:00 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SR-253

2:00 p.m.
Armed Services
To hold hearings on the nomination of Lt. Gen. Carl W. Stiner, USA, to be General and Commander-in-Chief, U.S. Special Operations Command, Department of the Army.
SR-222

2:30 p.m.
Appropriations
Foreign Operations Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for foreign assistance, focusing on the global environment.
SD-138

MAY 23

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings to review the Administration's technology policy and priorities.
SR-253

1:30 p.m.
Appropriations
VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Resolution Trust Corporation, and the Office of Inspector General.
SD-138

2:00 p.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Public Lands, National Parks and Forests Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the "Report of the Interagency Scientific Committee to Address the Conservation of the Northern Spotted Owl."

SD-366

2:30 p.m.
Armed Services
Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the Department of Energy national security budget request for fiscal year 1991.
SR-253

MAY 24

9:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To resume hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for defense programs.
SD-192

9:15 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings in conjunction with the National Ocean Policy Study on S. 2228, to develop a comprehensive program to ensure the wholesomeness of fish products intended for human consumption and sold in interstate commerce.
SR-253

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Foreign Commerce and Tourism Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine ways to expand U.S. exports abroad.
SR-253

10:00 a.m.
Finance
To hold hearings to examine the costs and health impact of cigarette smoking, focusing on how it affects children.
SD-215

JUNE 5

9:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Defense.
SD-192

2:30 p.m.
Appropriations
Foreign Operations Subcommittee
To resume hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for foreign assistance, focusing on organization and accountability.
SD-138

JUNE 6

9:00 a.m.
Armed Services
Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence Subcommittee
To resume hearings on S. 2171, authorizing funds for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, focusing on the B-2 program.
SR-253

JUNE 7

9:30 a.m.
Judiciary
To hold hearings to examine the effects on judicial nominees belonging to private clubs that discriminate.
SD-226

Veterans' Affairs
To hold oversight hearings on veterans prosthetics and special-disabilities programs.
SR-418

2:00 p.m.
Select on Indian Affairs
To hold oversight hearings to examine the Indian health service nurse shortage.
SR-485

JUNE 12

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings in conjunction with the National Ocean Policy Study on proposed legislation authorizing funds for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's satellite programs.
SR-253

Select on Ethics
To hold hearings on matters relating to the investigation involving Sen. Durenberger.
SH-216

2:30 p.m.
Appropriations
Foreign Operations Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for foreign assistance, focusing on eastern Europe.
SD-138

JUNE 13

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Communications Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2358, providing U.S. consumers the opportunity to enjoy the technological advancement in sound recording by use of digital audio tape recorders.
SR-253

Rules and Administration
Business meeting, to consider proposed legislation authorizing funds for fiscal year 1991 for the Federal Election Commission, proposed legislation providing for the management of Senate official mail, proposed legislation authorizing the purchase of 1991 "We the People" calendars for the use of the Senate, and other pending calendar business.
SR-301

JUNE 14

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings in conjunction with the National Ocean Policy Study on proposed legislation authorizing funds for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's ocean and coastal programs.
SR-253

Veterans' Affairs
To hold hearings on title II and section 402 of S. 2100, relating to veterans physician pay and health issues, S. 1860, to require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to furnish outpatient medical services for any disability of a former prisoner of war, S. 2455, to provide for recovery by the U.S. of the cost of medical care and services furnished for a nonservice-connected disability, S. 2456, to extend expiring laws authorizing the Department of Veterans Affairs to contract for needed care and to revise authority to furnish outpatient dental care, and other proposed legislation.
SR-418

JUNE 19

2:30 p.m.
Appropriations
Foreign Operations Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for foreign assistance, focusing on U.S. military assistance.
SD-138

JUNE 20

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Communications Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1974, to require new televisions to have built in decoder circuitry designed to display closed-captioned television transmissions.
SR-253

JUNE 26

9:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Foreign Operations Subcommittee
To resume hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for foreign assistance programs.
Room to be announced

2:00 p.m.
Judiciary
Patents, Copyrights and Trademarks Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1772, to prohibit State lotteries from misappropriating professional sports service marks.
SD-226

2:30 p.m.
Appropriations
Foreign Operations Subcommittee
To continue hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for foreign assistance programs.
Room to be announced

JUNE 28

9:30 a.m.
Veterans' Affairs
Business meeting, to consider pending legislation relating to veterans compensation and health-care benefits.
SR-418

JULY 12

9:30 a.m.
Select on Indian Affairs
To hold hearings to examine protective services for Indian children, focusing on alcohol and substance abuse programs.
SR-485

CANCELLATIONS

MAY 15

10:00 a.m.
Armed Services
Projection Forces and Regional Defense Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 2171, to authorize funds for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Defense and to prescribe personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, focusing on the state and capabilities of the U.S. Marine Corps for special operations and low intensity conflict.

SR-222

MAY 16

10:00 a.m.
Judiciary
To hold hearings in conjunction with the Caucus on International Narcotics Control to examine the U.S. anti-drug policy in Peru.

SD-226

SENATE—Tuesday, May 15, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

The prayer this morning was offered by Shirley Metzenbaum at the Senate wives' luncheon honoring the First Lady.

"Dear Lord:

"Please bless all of us who are gathered here this day.

"Grant us peace, Your most precious gift and help us to share our blessings with others.

"We ask that You give our First Lady, Barbara Bush, the health and strength to continue on with her good works, and especially, her leadership in the field of literacy, and help her continue as an inspiration for American family values.

"Be with and help guide our husbands and others who lead throughout the world.

"Dear Lord, we thank You for the blessings You have given us and ask that You help us all to lie down each night in peace and awaken each morning with renewed life and strength.

"Amen."

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, May 15, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KOHL thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this morning following the time for the two leaders, there will be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

At 10 this morning, the Senate will vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to the AIDS CARE bill, S. 2240.

It is my hope that if cloture is invoked on that motion, we will be in a position to adopt the motion and begin the consideration of the bill itself, and we will proceed to consider amendments that may be offered to the bill.

Senators should be on notice that, following the vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed, there may well be, and I expect that there will be, other rollcall votes today on amendments to the bill.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time and I reserve all the leader time of the distinguished Republican leader.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I express my support for the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990.

There will be a cloture vote at 10 o'clock and I urge all Senators to vote for that cloture motion.

This legislation will provide desperately needed support for cities and towns all across America struggling to provide care to persons with AIDS.

The AIDS epidemic has placed an enormous strain on the health care system in the Nation's largest cities. Over half of all persons with AIDS are being treated in only 4 percent of the Nation's hospitals.

This crisis in our largest cities is threatening access to health care for all citizens who rely upon hospitals in New York City, San Francisco, Chicago, and 10 other large American cities. Of the Nation's 120,000 citizens with AIDS, 2 out of 3 live in the 13 cities which are targeted for assistance under this legislation.

These cities are struggling to care for the ever increasing AIDS caseload. These cities have led a valient effort to provide access to quality care for AIDS patients. They need the help of the Federal Government if they are to continue to serve these patients.

These cities need the help of the Federal Government if they are to continue to provide health care to all of their citizens who rely on those hospitals now are the breaking point because of the AIDS crisis. When hospital beds in New York are filled with AIDS patients, those beds are not available for persons with other illnesses who also need hospital services.

Funding in this bill targeted to the 13 cities will be added to the millions of dollars already being spent from municipal and State funds for the care of AIDS patients.

But AIDS is no longer a disease that affects persons in large cities alone, as we all know. The rate of increase in new cases is now greatest in small cities and towns. By 1991, 80 percent of new AIDS cases will be diagnosed outside of the States of New York and California.

While my home State of Maine ranks 43 in the Nation in the rate of AIDS cases in the population, the rate of increase in diagnosis is significant. Fifty-nine percent of Maine's AIDS cases have been reported in the last 2 years. The rate of AIDS cases in the population in Maine has increased from 2.3 per 100,000 population in 1988 to 5.8 per 100,000 in 1989—an increase of 152 percent in percentage change in just 1 year.

Under the AIDS CARE bill all States, including rural States like Maine with a relatively small share of the overall AIDS caseload, will receive Federal funding to help treat AIDS patients.

This legislation will provide funding to develop alternative treatments for AIDS patients. Too many AIDS patients are being cared for in acute care settings rather than in long-term care or home care settings—where most would prefer to be—and where care is most often less expensive. This legislation will allow persons with AIDS to be treated in the least restrictive environment possible. It will allow many persons with AIDS to remain at home with their families.

I believe that decisions about health care treatments should be made based on what is best for the patient. This legislation will encourage States to develop Health Care Delivery Programs for AIDS patients based on the best medical decisions for that patient—not based upon which services will or will not be reimbursed.

There has been a great deal of discussion about the AIDS population. AIDS affects persons from every part of our Nation—large cities, small cities, and small towns. The disease affects men, women, and children. As a Nation we must search for the best way to care for persons with AIDS—regardless of where they live or how they contracted the disease.

When young men become paralyzed because of reckless motorcycle driving or diving accidents we do not refuse to treat them because the behavior leading to their need for health care may have been careless or even reckless. We act with compassion to give them the best care our health system has to offer. We can do no less for persons with AIDS.

When medicare spends millions to care for persons with heart disease or lung cancer who were lifelong smokers, the Congress does not refuse to care for these persons because their behavior may have led to their disease. Medicare provides care for all beneficiaries who are ill—regardless of how they may have contracted that disease or how they may have become ill even if as a result of their own behavior, as is the case of smoking and lung cancer.

We can do no less for those American men, women, and children with AIDS. We must act now to provide emergency support to our Nation's cities and towns who continue to struggle to meet the overwhelming needs of AIDS patients.

I urge all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this necessary and vital effort.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. McCAIN pertaining to the introduction of S. 2627 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

THE VOTE ON THE CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in just a few moments, at 10 o'clock, the Senate will vote on a cloture motion to permit us to address the issue—which is cosponsored by 65 Members of the U.S. Senate—and that is the emergency measures to try to deal more effectively with the care and treatment of those individuals in our society who have been affected by the AIDS virus.

This is an emergency measure, Mr. President. We will have a good opportunity to debate the measure itself, but I think it is important for Members to understand this legislation is bipartisan in nature, reported out of our committee unanimously, 16 to 0; it is strongly supported by all the members of the committee.

This legislation really reflects the best judgment of the two commissions that have been established, one by President Reagan—of which Admiral Watkins was appointed Chair. That commission made a series of recommendations. A great percentage of those recommendations, not all but most, have been included in this legislation.

The second commission was established by the Congress, and June Osborn is the chairperson of that commission. That whole commission has virtually unanimously supported the recommendation that we have included in this legislation.

We believe with the strong support of those two commissions that have done very extensive work, have held hearings all across the country and heard really from the best health experts around the Nation, we have legislation which, by its nature, is a response to the emergency, and has been well considered.

We will have a chance, as I said, to debate the various provisions, but I hope Members will give us an opportunity to proceed with this legislation so we can move forward with the debate. That is what this vote is all about.

So on behalf of my colleague, Senator HATCH, myself, and the other members of the committee, I hope Members will give us an opportunity to move to address the substance of the issue. That is what this question is really about. We were unable to do so last Friday or yesterday.

I hope now we can gain the support of the Members to move ahead with the substance of the legislation. I am grateful to the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, as well as to Senator DOLE, for their support in bringing this measure to where we are at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON].

THE CLOTURE VOTE

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I join with my friend from Massachusetts in calling for cloture on the motion to proceed. We should get to the substance. I commend him and Senator HATCH, Senators MITCHELL and DOLE, and others who have brought this to the floor.

As one of the original six cosponsors, I am gratified that almost 60 of our colleagues have seen fit to join in cosponsorship of this effort. It is truly, as Senator KENNEDY has pointed out, a bipartisan effort in recognition of an urgent need in America.

So, I rise today in strong support of the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act [CARE] of 1990. With this legislation, Congress will open up an urgently needed new front in its multifaceted attack on the AIDS epidemic.

I recognize, Mr. President, that the word "crisis" is used regularly in this city—perhaps so often and so lightly as to be all but devalued of its meaning. But on the subject of AIDS, as I have often said, the word "crisis" is barely adequate to describe today's problem and tomorrow's potential nightmare, a nightmare with the potential of growing even worse.

We have seen the tragedy of AIDS spread beyond men of the gay community and intravenous drug users. To the ranks of suffering victims we now add an increasing number of heterosexuals, women and—most tragically—children.

We have seen the devastation of AIDS touch every State in the Union, reaching more and more of our communities. AIDS is no longer a problem confined to our urban areas. It is a problem that extends throughout the country. AIDS is a problem literally, for all of America.

While strides have been made, Mr. President, in our national effort to understand the AIDS virus, the manner in which it is transmitted, and how to protect ourselves against infection, much more remains to be done. As the National Commission on AIDS warned in its December 1989 report:

> There is a dangerous, perhaps even growing complacency in our country toward an epidemic that many people want to believe is over. Far from over, the epidemic is reaching crisis proportions among the young, the poor, women and many minority communities. In fact, the 1990's will be much worse than the 1980's. There is no national plan for helping an already faltering health care delivery system deal with the impact of the HIV epidemic.

Mr. President, the Commission unhappily is correct. No such national plan is in place and, indeed, our medical facilities, our health care system, our care givers are strained to the breaking point—particularly in those parts of the country hit hardest by the AIDS epidemic.

My home State of California, Mr. President, has been severely affected by AIDS, consistently accounting for over 20 percent of all AIDS cases in the Nation. While the incidence of HIV infection has been concentrated in San Francisco and Los Angeles, it is accelerating in San Diego, Oakland, Sacramento, and other areas throughout the State.

Californians have struggled heroically to meet the diverse medical and social service needs of people with AIDS and HIV infection and their families. I applaud the cities, volunteers, community-based groups, and other providers that have worked together to develop creative and innovative approaches to the delivery of AIDS-related care.

Yet only so much can be done in the face of mounting demands and limited resources in what is truly an epidemic of truly national proportions.

The legislation we consider today, Mr. President, responds to the compelling realities of the AIDS epidemic. It recognizes that while all of our cities and States have been touched by the Nation's AIDS epidemic, a relatively small number of cities have been disproportionately affected, straining city human and economic resources. It responds to the concentration of health care resources in costly acute hospital services and the limited availability of services to HIV-infected persons in need not of acute care but of counseling, early intervention, outpatient, and social services.

It recognizes the need to shift our orientation from inpatient care to coordinated, integrated networks of community-based care, guiding HIV-infected persons along a continuum of the most appropriate and cost-effective services.

Title I of the care bill targets emergency assistance to those areas where the AIDS epidemic is most heavily concentrated—localities with 2,000 or more AIDS cases.

I recognize, Mr. President, that some areas are troubled by the criteria established for title I eligibility. Indeed, the reported AIDS caseloads of two major cities in my own State of California placed them just short of the 2,000 eligibility cut-off for title I funds.

While I can appreciate the importance of focusing limited resources on areas with the highest concentration of persons with AIDS, these high incidence areas not eligible for title I funds are challenged each day to provide services with limited resources.

Tragically, most of these high incidence areas will shortly reach the 2,000 case threshold and qualify for title I funds. In the interim, I believe the committee has provided appropriate direction to States to give priority to localities with between 1,000 and 2,000 AIDS cases in the distribution of title II funds.

The AIDS epidemic is an extraordinary disease which demands extraordinary measures to overcome. The magnitude of the problem suggests the difficulty of any one State or city carrying the burden unassisted; the magnitude of the problem emphasizes the need for a comprehensive, national program for combating this disease.

Mr. President, it is fitting and proper that we dedicate this CARE bill to the courageous Ryan White and to the memory of that valiant young American whose fight became a symbol for all of those who, if not directly affected themselves, could not help but be involved in watching the heroism of this young man as he did battle with great dignity, of the kind that evoked admiration in all quarters.

It is a proper dedication that this CARE bill should be acted on by this Congress now in the memory of Ryan White, and of the many other courageous AIDS sufferers whom his courage has symbolized for America.

His battle against the AIDS virus and discrimination, his courageous stand, has helped educate the Nation and the world about the realities of AIDS.

So, let us move forward with CARE—not complacency, Mr. President, but with CARE. Let us affirm our commitment to meet the needs generated by the AIDS epidemic with compassion, with understanding, and, with this bill, with CARE.

I yield the floor.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in enthusiastic support of S. 2240, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990 [CARE]. I commend my colleagues, Senators KENNEDY and HATCH, for their leadership in bringing this legislation to the floor within only a few short weeks of its introduction.

The CARE bill has two goals. First, it will provide $300 million in emergency disaster relief to the U.S. cities hit hardest by the AIDS epidemic. And second, it will provide an additional $300 million to help smaller communities—where the growth of new cases is greatest—to develop comprehensive systems of care for persons with AIDS.

Both goals are vital. Emergency relief is desperately needed in our largest urban areas, where AIDS has been raging for nearly a decade. In New York alone, AIDS has already taken over 15,000 lives, while bringing the city's municipal hospital system to the brink of disaster.

The combined epidemics of AIDS, drug abuse, homelessness, and mental illness are overwhelming the city's public hospitals to the point that patients admitted through the emergency departments are forced to lie in the hallways for days, and sometimes more than a week, waiting for a room.

The situation is intolerable in New York, and it's intolerable in Boston, Dallas, Los Angeles, and every other city where AIDS is threatening health care systems with collapse. It is vital that we help these cities pull back from the brink of disaster with the assistance provided by this bill.

At the same time, we cannot ignore our Nation's smaller urban and rural areas—areas like Albany, Monroe, and Onondaga Counties in New York—where the growth of new AIDS cases will be greatest in the future.

The per capita incidence of AIDS in many small urban areas already matches that of New York City in 1982. And while the Centers for Disease Control reported a 5-percent increase in diagnosed AIDS cases in cities with populations of 500,000 or more in 1989, the increase in rural areas was greater than 37 percent.

There is no question that these areas need our assistance in developing systems of care to address a growing population of persons with AIDS. Title II of this bill, by targeting funds for the development of AIDS services to all 50 States, will help our smaller communities prepare for the challenge that lies ahead.

Mr. President, let me conclude by commending my colleagues on the Labor and Human Resources Committee for dedicating this bill to the memory of Ryan White, whose death on April 8 concluded a valiant 6-year fight against the AIDS virus.

The memory of Ryan's courage and hope in the face of this dreaded disease will remain with all of us. I hope it will particularly inspire those of us in this body, and our colleagues in the House, to move swiftly in passing this bill so that all persons with AIDS may receive the care and compassion they need and deserve.

Thank you, Mr. President.

TRIBUTE TO JAMES C. McALLISTER III

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to note North Carolinians who have achieved recognition among their peers, particularly in the health-care field. One such individual deserving of special commendation is James C. McAllister III, who will assume the presidency of the American Society of Hospital Pharmacists during the society's 47th annual meeting in Boston early next month.

Founded in 1942, American Society of Hospital Pharmacists is the national professional association that represents pharmacists in organized healthcare settings. The society has more than 24,000 members, extensive publishing and educational programs for its members, and is a national accrediting organization for pharmacy residency and pharmacy technician training programs.

Jim McAllister has undergraduate and graduate degrees in pharmacy from the University of North Carolina and is the director of pharmacy at the Duke University Medical Center. He is also a lecturer in the Masters of Hospital Administration Program at Duke and adjunct associate professor of pharmacy at both UNC and Campbell University.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Jim McAllister on his new position with American Society of Hospital Pharmacists. We look forward to his leadership.

CREATING NEW SECRETS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the Information Security Oversight Office, located in the General Services Administration, has just reported that in 1989 the Government created 6,796,501 new secrets. Half again the number of new babies. Is it not likely that the present system of classification actually calls attention to things we would closely hold? If an envelope is marked "Top Secret"—one of the lower classifications by the way—does that make a spy's work easier?

I issued a challenge in my April 20, 1990, Letter to New York. Would any amateur mathematician or cryptographer care to demonstrate that real secrets—I would judge there are maybe 100 new ones every year—would be safer if not classified?

I promised to insert selected replies in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that they might be available to interested Government agencies, including perhaps the Information Security Oversight Office.

Accordingly I ask unanimous consent that two ingenious and thought-provoking replies be printed in the RECORD at this point. They are from Mr. John McNally, of Fairport, and Ms. Marcia Lemmon, of Flushing.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 26, 1990.

DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: Your newsletter dated 20 April 1990 arrived today and is interesting as usual.

Your remarks relative to "Top Secret" appealed to me very much. It so happens I was a "cryptographer" in England and on the continent during my stay in the "E.T.O." from late '43 to late '45, along with other duties.

The choice was not mine. After I became familiar with the American code I was trained for the British code. They are "security happy" in my opinion and my story will prove it!

Whenever I decoded a message, I was locked in a small, windowless room with an armed guard at the door. When finished, I would lock the equipment in the safe and return to the main room. Then I would deliver the "decoded message" and wait for a reply, in many cases.

Whether I had a reply or not, I would return to the area called "The Message Center" via my own means of transportation—a bicycle! When headquarters found out they were very unhappy because I was carrying "top secret" decoded messages. My response was that "no one would ever think it to be important if delivered that way". You know what happened, so I will not bore you with conclusion.

Keep up the good work and reduce the number of "secrets" as much as you can. It costs more money to maintain them when they are so coded.

Very truly yours,

YLLANCM. E NHOJ
(Top secret reversed).

FLUSHING, NY,
May 2, 1990.

Senator DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I accept your challenge printed in your last newsletter (April 20, 1990) to demonstrate that real secrets would be safer if they were not classified.

I am neither an amateur mathematician or cryptographer!

During the second World War, specifically during the Manhattan Project to develop the Atomic Bomb, the Soviets were "tipped off" as to the avenues and discoveries American scientists were exploring and making because these same scientists were forbidden from publishing their discoveries in the scientific journals of the day! See Richard Rhodes' book The Making of the Atomic Bomb.

The Soviet government, as well as Soviet nuclear physicists guessed, rightly so, that their American counterparts were making rapid advances in nuclear physics, electronics, explosives, etc., by the omission of articles in scientific journals relating to same.

Not only that, but Soviet citizens believe—then as now—if anything is published openly it must be a trick because they have no conception of openness.

These are just two examples of why everything that is now considered "classified" should be public knowledge—this way the K.G.B. and others in the Soviet government will never be able to figure out what is truly important!

Thanks for your time, and I enjoyed the challenge.

Cordially,

MARCIA H. LEMMON.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,886th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

SOVIET PROVOCATION IN LATVIA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have noted with great concern press reports of the strong Soviet reaction against the recent declarations of independence by the Baltic States of Latvia and Estonia.

Yesterday, President Gorbachev issued a harshly worded statement rejecting the right of Latvia and Estonia to decide their own political fate.

Almost simultaneously, in a clear act of provocation, Soviet helicopters dropped thousands of leaflets over the Latvian capital of Riga, urging the Russian population to go from words to deeds, stage a general strike, and "let the handful of traitors (that is, Latvia's democratic government) * * * hear the voice of the working people."

I ask unanimous consent to have the full text of the leaflets—as translated into English—included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Leaflet scattered from helicopters over Riga on May 14]

COMRADES

Let us rise up in defense of Soviet power in Latvia. The time for orators has passed, it is time to go over from words to deeds.

Our fate is being decided today. The honors and self-respect of the Soviet person does not give us the right to hide behind the backs of those who are fighting for our future. Let disdain and shame cover the descendents of those who in this decisive hour do not come out against counter-revolution. Men—look into the eyes of your children, mothers and wives. Can you leave them defenseless?

At 10 o'clock, May 15, 1990, stop the factories and plants and come out onto the streets of the city. All together we will go to the building of the Supreme Soviet with the demand for the reestablishment of Soviet power in the Republic. Let the handful of traitors and political adventurers who are making decisions for us hear the voice of the working people.

Long live the Latvian Soviet Socialist Republic.

The Republican Soviet of Interfront.

Mr. DOLE. This afternoon, CNN and other news reports are graphically showing the results—mobs trying to storm the Latvian parliament, and dangerous confrontations between demonstrators and security forces.

The whole situation is a tinder box, waiting for one small match.

As the world is all too well aware, the Soviets have responded to a Lithuanian declaration of indpendence with a campaign of economic pressure, political vilification, physical intimidation and various forms of harassment.

At the same time, the Soviets have claimed they want a negotiated settlement, which would have Lithuania stop short of its declaration of immediate independence.

Obviously partly in response to the Soviets' position, the Latvians and Es-tonians—while declaring their own independence—have laid out a more deliberate path toward implementing their declarations. They have held out the hand of good faith negotiations. They have "gone the extra mile," to meet any legitimate Soviet concerns.

I ask to include in the RECORD the text of a letter I recently sent to the new Latvian Government leadership, commending both their courage and their restraint.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER,
Washington, DC, May 9, 1990.

His Excellency Ivars Godmanis, Prime Minister,
His Excellency Anatolijs, Gorbunovs, President, Supreme Council, Republic of Latvia, Riga.

YOUR EXCELLENCIES: I would like to extend my warm personal congratulations to you and the members of your Government, as you assume leadership of the Republic of Latvia.

Your declaration of May 4 to restore Latvia's independence was a moment of great hope and joy to me and the tens of millions of other Americans who have long endorsed your aspirations for true independence and freedom for the Latvian people.

You and the Latvian people have demonstrated great courage, determination and wisdom in the clear and responsible course you have chosen. I will continue to do everything I can to support your peaceful quest for democracy in the challenging days ahead.

Once again, my congratulations and best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

BOB DOLE,
U.S. Senate.

Mr. DOLE. It is because the Latvians and Estonians have acted so responsibly, that the Soviet reaction appears so provocative.

Mr. President, the Bush-Gorbachev summit is now 2 weeks away. Every American wants that summit to be successful—to move us closer to very important arms control agreements; to achieve progress on regional conflicts; to advance the cause of human rights in the Soviet Union; and to expand mutually beneficial economic and cultural relations.

Every American wants that summit to take place, in the kind of atmosphere that will permit that kind of progress to be made.

But as I said in a speech here in Washington 10 days ago:

President Bush is doing everything he can not to complicate life for President Gorbachev. He is taking some heat for the restraint, the patience, he has shown. But President Bush can only do so much. The rest—equal restraint, equal good common sense—the rest must come from Moscow.

The point is even more relevant today, in light of these new and provocative moves over Latvia and Estonia. The responsibility to achieve and sustain a cooperative bilateral relationship rests with both sides—not just our side.

Mr. President, I hope President Gorbachev and the Soviet leadership have not underestimated how seriously we view developments in the Baltics, and have not overestimated our tolerance and patience.

Too much is at stake, for both countries.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL SHOWS NEED FOR DOD TRANSITION PLAN

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, H.R. 4404, the fiscal year 1990 Supplemental Appropriations Act, dramatizes the need for a comprehensive DOD transition plan.

The Senate version, for example, cut Air Force operations and maintenance accounts by nearly $445 million. These are unplanned cuts, Mr. President, against a commitment to the current DOD appropriations bill that has already been in place for 8 months.

RECKLESS CUTS WILL HAVE A HIGH PRICE

Contrary to expectations of the Congress, these cuts will carry a high cost. Morale in the Armed Forces and among civilians working in DOD is at the lowest point since the massive demobilization in 1948, after World War II. My good friend and colleague from Arizona, Senator JOHN MCCAIN, amply presented the widespread concerns among our service people in his floor statement last Friday.

But the Senate version of the bill worsens the situation further by cutting O&M, the single greatest source of DOD civilian pay, at a rate 20 times greater than that of the House version. This action is reckless and unnecessary. It promises to destroy prematurely one of the finest, best-skilled, and most dedicated work forces this country has ever produced. I refer to the men and women who work in the logistics and maintenance centers in DOD.

DOD CIVILIANS ALSO WELCOME DÉTENTE

In the State of Utah, we have two such facilities: Tooele Army Depot and the combined DLA and Air Force Air Logistics Centers at Hill Air Force Base. Together they employ more than 27,000 civilians.

I have spent much time at these facilities. I want to tell you that these people are no less enthusiastic about détente than the rest of us. They are willing to pay the costs of peace with the same sense of sacrifice and purpose to which they committed their careers for ensuring our military strength.

When we deny them fair advance notice of deep cuts, we betray their trust. It is ironic that this body has such a substantial stake in employment equity in the private sector. Yet, when it comes to the group of employees for which we are most responsible, we treat them with an air of disdain and neglect that is reprehensible.

CUTS CARRY A MATERIAL AS WELL AS MORALE COST

It is bad enough to force this group onto the streets without notice. But we are doing even more damage to ourselves. Before the CFE Treaty has been out in final form, before we have a clear picture of the military threat, and before we figure out what our future strategy is, we in Congress have decided to gut the foundation of military readiness.

Let me recite some of the damage that this bill will produce, besides forcing a civilian work force furlough on the Air Force.

Our Civilian Hospitalization and Medical Plan for the Uniformed Services, the insurance policy for dependents and retirees, already underfunded in fiscal year 1990, will be cut back further—without the advance notice that allows for families to seek alternatives.

Real property maintenance overseas will cease, except for the most extreme emergencies. Think of it: we require our Armed Forces to remain in Europe, along with their families, but now tell them that, during the coming winter, broken windows will go unrepaired, sewage and other environmental programs will become practically nonexistent, insect control problems will become their problems, and other day-to-day housing amenities will not be provided.

The readiness damage troubles me no less. There will be less training in high performance aircraft—that means we could have more accidents. And there will be much, much less maintenance; in other words, we will have less-trained crews operating with marginally reliable aircraft.

Mr. President, I am beginning to wonder who won the cold war. The military volunteer force and the civilians of DOD who committed their careers to bearing the brunt of our cold war effort must now pay the price of victory. Our priorities need realignment. We in Congress must make a commitment that we will undertake no frenzied assaults on the defense budget until a comprehensive defense plan has been drafted.

THE HOMELESSNESS PREVENTION AND COMMUNITY REVITALIZATION ACT OF 1990

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Homelessness Prevention and Community Revitalization Act of 1990.

This legislation on behalf of the homeless is desperately needed. It will supplement existing programs such as emergency rent assistance and the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program. Specifically, it will provide an array of on-site social services such as counseling and health care to those segments of the population who are most prone to homelessness. It will restore the discretionary grant program for domestic development banks. And it will ensure against turf wars among the Federal agencies responsible for prevention programs established by this and other acts.

It is hard to say how many people in my State are homeless, but best estimates place the figure near 11,000. In New Orleans alone, more than 10,000 individuals have no roofs over their heads. What is even more troubling are the reports from local and State officials that the most rapidly increasing segments of this population are families and children. It is even harder to determine how many Louisianians are on the edge of becoming homeless, who put in an honest day's work but still have trouble making, their rent or mortgage payments. I would hazard a guess that there are tens of thousands of such people.

In Louisiana, we have been fighting an economic recession which has cost many hard-working people their jobs and their homes. This downturn undoubtedly has caused an increase in the numbers of homeless among the working poor. Evictions and mortgage foreclosures have skyrocketed.

For instance, in New Orleans 1,204 mortgage foreclosure suits were filed in 1985. In 1988, the figure was 2,298. The Housing Authority of New Orleans filed 1,252 eviction suits in 1987. The next year that figure was 3,983. And this is only the tip of the eviction iceberg, as in 1989 alone more than 25,000 eviction lawsuits were filed in Eastbank New Orleans.

The reality is that Louisiana needs homelessness prevention services, not just shelters for those already homeless. Many evictions concern properties with negligible rents, and services such as counseling and emergency rent assistance are effective—and relatively inexpensive—solutions. The alternative to offering individuals and families such services is to provide them with expensive, inefficient Band-aid cures once they are out on the streets. This is what we mainly do now.

The need for prevention assistance is not limited to Louisiana. In fact, a recent GAO report on homelessness prevention programs in 10 States found that the demand for such assistance is greater than the available resources. During the month of January 1988, the GAO found that for every 100 requests for energy assistance, 24 requests were turned away. For every 130 requests for rent or mortgage assistance, 100 requests were referred elsewhere.

Mr. President, this act is just the sort of legislative initiative we need more of in the Senate. Not merely because it will keep many people off the streets, although it will. And not merely because it will spur economic development in the poorest areas, although it will.

I could support this legislation for these reasons alone, but what is most right about this measure is its basic philosophy—it recognizes that our Nation's most valuable resource is our people.

Many times, it seems, we forget this most essential tenet of government. To understand it is to realize the importance of truly investing in our people. Thus government is called upon not merely to provide the most basic services—although this rightly is one of the functions of government—but to provide individuals with the means to better themselves, and by doing so enrich all society.

There are numerous governmental examples of this philosophy; the student loan program comes to mind. But when it comes to the homeless, we have fallen short. It is true that we have provided many of them with food and shelter, and I wholeheartedly support these efforts, but more must be done if they are to become productive members of our society.

I believe that, given the chance, most individuals would rather work than sit, would rather produce than be idle. Many Louisianians have made my point with their feet: they have left Louisiana for places where they had a better chance of finding a job.

To give people the basic necessities and nothing more is to say that society believes you to be capable of more but is not willing to invest in your potential. To invest in individuals, as this legislation will do, is to say that we know you can do more and we expect you to do more. We will be providing the means by which many who otherwise would be homeless can remain producing members of my State and our Nation.

That is why I am particularly supportive of title IV of this act, which would provide discretionary grants to community development corporations. These CDC's provide commercial banking services to so-called high-risk segments of the population; they make business loans that most commercial banks avoid.

There is much talk about the failure of the war on poverty programs that were initiated in the 1960's. Indeed, some of them were failures. But I'm sure here to tell you that CDC's are antipoverty programs that work. I know so, because there is one in my State.

The Southern Cooperative Development Fund in Lafayette has received no Government subsidies since the Reagan administration eliminated the grant assistance program in the early 1980's, yet it has continued to offer loans and technical assistance to enterprising businessmen in seven Southern States. Since its inception in 1972, it has made $40 million in loans. Before the Reagan cuts curtailed its operations, it was making a 1- to 3-percent return on its investments.

Considering that those profits came from loans made to individuals to whom established commercial banks would not lend, this is very impressive indeed. But most importantly it proves that there are many capable, hard-working, enterprising people out there who if given a fair chance can contribute to the expansion of our economy.

This legislation will restore the grant program that the Southern Cooperative Development Fund and other CDC's utilized for operating expenses. These grants will enable CDC's to operate on a larger, more productive scale, and will allow them to restore the technical assistance operations which ensure the ultimate success of the loans.

In addition these grants will give executives who run CDC's the ability to enhance their business skills. Finally, they will provide seed money for the establishment of new CDC's and for the expansion of available capital in existing CDC's.

In short, these grants will strengthen and expand community development corporations. They represent investments in entities that are investing—successfully—in some of our Nation's most depressed economic areas, from the barrios of Los Angeles to bayous of Louisiana.

And that is why I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Homelessness Prevention and Community Revitalization Act of 1990. Mr. President, we are confronted by millions who live in the shadows. As Hubert Humphrey said, a moral test of government is how it treats these people. This legislation will give light to those who sit in darkness. I urge my colleagues to join with me in support of this needed measure.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

CLOTURE MOTION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 10 a.m. having arrived, under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to S. 2240, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants to improve the quality and availability of care for individuals and families with HIV disease, and for other purposes.

George Mitchell, John Glenn, Herb Kohl, J. Lieberman, Jeff Bingaman, Patrick Leahy, Chris Dodd, Charles S. Robb, Bob Kerrey, Alan Cranston, John Heinz, Mark Hatfield, Bill Cohen, Bob Packwood, Joe R. Biden, John F. Kerry.

CALL OF THE ROLL

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the quorum call has been waived.

VOTE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 2240, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act, shall be brought to a close? The yeas and nays are required. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 95, nays 3, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 91 Leg.]

YEAS—95

Adams	Ford	McClure
Armstrong	Fowler	McConnell
Baucus	Garn	Metzenbaum
Bentsen	Glenn	Mikulski
Biden	Gore	Mitchell
Bingaman	Gorton	Moynihan
Bond	Graham	Murkowski
Boren	Gramm	Nickles
Boschwitz	Grassley	Nunn
Bradley	Harkin	Packwood
Breaux	Hatch	Pell
Bryan	Hatfield	Pressler
Bumpers	Heflin	Pryor
Burdick	Heinz	Reid
Burns	Hollings	Riegle
Byrd	Inouye	Robb
Chafee	Jeffords	Rockefeller
Coats	Johnston	Roth
Cochran	Kassebaum	Rudman
Cohen	Kasten	Sanford
Conrad	Kennedy	Sarbanes
Cranston	Kerrey	Sasser
D'Amato	Kerry	Shelby
Danforth	Kohl	Simon
Daschle	Lautenberg	Simpson
DeConcini	Leahy	Specter
Dixon	Levin	Stevens
Dodd	Lieberman	Thurmond
Dole	Lott	Wallop
Domenici	Lugar	Warner
Durenberger	Mack	Wilson
Exon	McCain

NAYS—3

Helms	Humphrey	Symms

NOT VOTING—1

Wirth

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 95, the nays are 3.

Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, first of all, I express our appreciation to our colleagues in supporting the leadership's motion to proceed to this legislation. It is very clear from the outcome that this body wants to move ahead and give consideration to this extremely important worthwhile emergency legislation that has over 65 cosponsors.

We have had an opportunity to examine some of the amendments, and we are prepared to deal with them. We know that there is a full calendar for this institution, and we are very hopeful that we can move this process along very expeditiously. I hope that those who have amendments will come to the floor so we can begin this debate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I want to compliment my colleague from Massachusetts for being such a staunch advocate for this legislation. I am pleased that we are now moving to consideration of S. 2240, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the Senator is entitled to be heard. May we have order in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFFICER. If the Senator will withhold, the Senate will be in order. Will the Senators please clear the aisles so the Senator from Utah can be heard. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the Senate is still not in order. This is an important issue, and we would like the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senators standing in the aisles please return to their seats.

The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Than you, Mr. President. Mr. President, this bill is called the CARE bill. I think this vote on cloture shows how much we all care about this. It was 95 to 3. I hope there will be no further delays in pursuing this legislation.

This is important legislation. It is public health legislation. I think nobody should miss that particular point. I do not care what the underlying cause of AIDS is. All I know is there is a problem out there that needs to be addressed. We cannot address it by sitting back and ignoring it.

We are going to have to approach this problem in a caring, intelligent, compassionate, and decent way. That is what this bill does.

As a conservative, I hate to add any more spending to our Federal Government. We have enough, and I would like us instead to make priority choices among different competing programs. But if I had to make a priority choice, this would be one of the priorities I would choose, because it means a lot to this country; it means a lot to everybody in this country.

We simply have to alleviate pain, suffering and difficulty, not just for those who have AIDS, but also for those who are surrounded by people with AIDS—the families of those who have AIDS, and the health care professionals who work with this condition all the time. This includes the doctors, the nurses, and other health care practitioners in the hospitals, particularly in the 13 large cities that are targeted in title I of this bill. We cannot ignore this need and act like it is going to go away if we don't do something about it.

Mr. President, most of us have heard the stories of family members whose loved ones are suffering from AIDS. We have seen babies with AIDS, babies abandoned in hospital wards. We have seen both our rural and urban health care systems strained to the very limit.

We have to respond to this crisis and this call for help. This legislation responds to the diverse treatment needs of those who have AIDS, including children and families. It provides relief for hospitals and other community-based programs straining under the economic burden of providing compassionate care to those with AIDS. It sends the necessary financial support to our research community to help them find effective therapies.

Today, in considering the CARE bill that will fill in the cracks in our health care system, we have the opportunity to show compassion for those who are infected with HIV. This bill sends a strong message. It sends a message of hope, of care, of charity. It sends a message to the families who have a child infected with the HIV virus that they are not forgotten and that we all want to help.

Let us not get trapped into inaction because of how or why people became infected. Let us instead follow President Bush's wise counsel when he said.

In this Nation, in this decade, there is only one way to deal with an individual who is sick. With dignity, compassion, care, confidentiality and without discrimination. Once disease strikes—we don't blame those who are suffering. We don't spurn the accident victim who didn't wear a seatbelt. We don't reject the cancer patient who didn't quit smoking. We try to love them and care for them and comfort them. We do not fire them, or evict them, or cancel their insurance.

Those are good words by President Bush. Today, let us give every person who has AIDS hope. Let us care for them as no society has every cared before. Let us not condemn them to death.

Some have called AIDS the No. 1 threat to our national and, possibly, international health. As of the end of March 1990, over 125,000 American men, women, and children have developed AIDS. Over 78,000 of them have already died. The tragedy does not end there. It is estimated that as many as 1 to 1.5 million Americans may be infected with the AIDS virus. Mr. President, we cannot ignore the statistics that show the increasing number of AIDS cases, especially among heterosexuals and children.

Yesterday my distinguished colleague from North Carolina raised important questions about who has AIDS and why.

Today, I have a new chart which describes the most recently reported numbers of AIDS cases and the rate of increase based on how the disease was reported to be transmitted. These figures have been updated to show what was reported between 1989 and 1990.

This is the increase in the number of AIDS cases.

The chart shows that in 1989 there were 18,804 reported cases of AIDS among homosexual and bisexual men. This number increased by 13 percent in 1990 to 21,256.

The new cases attributed to heterosexual contacts rose by 31 percent during this same time. In 1989, there were 1,725 reported cases, and in 1990 there were 2,261 reported cases.

For cases of AIDS transmitted from mothers to newborns—where there was absolutely no choice and they absolutely could not prevent it because the mothers had AIDS either from a blood transfusion or from IV drug abuse—the number rose from 494 in 1989 to 597 in 1990. This represents a 21-percent increase.

And, the number of reported cases among women has also risen by 21 percent, 3,387 in 1989 to 4,092 in 1990.

Mr. President, these numbers show that the total number of reported AIDS cases is still primarily found among homosexual and bisexual men. However, AIDS is striking women, children, and heterosexuals at a growing rate. These numbers only represented the cases that are reported. Tomorrow's numbers may show differing numbers, especially as the rates continue their current upward trend, and I believe they will continue to go up exponentially unless we pass legislation like this.

CONCLUSION

Today, we can pass a bill to fight a common enemy—the AIDS epidemic and the pain and suffering it causes. We in Congress realize it is hard and emotionally draining work to care for people who are severely ill. For instance, we know that AIDS patients require an unusually intensive level of care when hospitalized. This Nation owes a debt of thanks to those health care institutions and health care professionals that have reached out to help poor patients with this terrible affliction or disease.

But they need more than our thanks. This legislation supports hospitals and care facilities that have been serving the largest number of low-income AIDS patients. The bill not only helps these facilities directly, but it also supports better, more appropriate, and less costly care by providing funds to expand the availability of alternatives to hospital care. Community-based outpatient services, such as home care, offer patients and their families more compassionate, dignified, and cost-effective care. Such services are necessary in both urban and rural areas.

Mr. President, over one-half of the U.S. Senate has endorsed this measure. The list of cosponsors is genuinely bipartisan, demonstrating, Mr. President, that Republicans and Democrats have put aside their differences to address the No. 1 public health epidemic—AIDS.

I wish to add to those cosponsors the distinguished minority whip of the Senate, Senator ALAN SIMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that he be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, none of us believes that this bill will end the debate over the causes of this disease or the methods of its prevention. But, through this bill, we show our compassion for its victims and their families and demonstrate to those who feel abandoned that we care. This bill merely provides services to those Americans who are infected with HIV. No more, no less.

This bill helps people like Ryan White, like Elizabeth Glaser, and a boy, in Utah, named Tyler. Let me share this story with my colleagues.

Tyler Spriggs is an active and relatively healthy 4-year-old that was diagnosed with AIDS at 18 months of age. He contracted it from his mother before birth. He is currently living with his aunt, Carolyn, and her family. He receives gamma globulin and AZT.

Aunt Carolyn has been his advocate for it is impossible for these young children to stand up and say what they need. She has worked to get AZT treatments for him when there was not a drug protocol for children. Carolyn said that she is working to decrease the stigma that is associated with those like Tyler who have AIDS. She also works to get services for families who have a member with AIDS. Currently, these services are limited. Tyler's family is at least grateful that Tyler is the only one in his immediate family who has AIDS.

Life is more difficult for families where the caregiver is affected, as well as the children. Additional services are desperately needed so that children, like Tyler, can live as normal a life as possible. Tyler deserves our help. Tyler deserves my help.

I want S. 2240 for Tyler, for Belinda Mason, for Elizabeth Glaser, and her young son and for countless others, because I do not want to condemn them or any like them, regardless of who they are or what their personal lifestyles are to death. I do not care how Tyler got the disease. All I know is that he has it. I care that he get treatment.

In closing, I thank my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. His vision in this area is a compassionate nonpolitical approach to this health issue and his vision is what made it possible for us to be here today on the bill.

I also commend his staff for the work they put into this substitute bill and before it is over I intend to name them.

I think it is worth our effort to see that this legislation is passed, and I thank all the Senators who voted to invoke cloture today for their support. I think this is an important bill. I hope we will move forward to passing it. If there are amendments I hope the Senators will come to the floor and present those amendments for our consideration. Finally, I hope before it is all over that this will be a fitting tribute to Ryan White and his mother and family; a tribute to the courage Ryan had shown and to the courage that he represents to all of us.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN].

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold, we are on the motion to proceed, and amendments are, therefore, not in order at this time.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be considered at this time and that it is agreed to by the majority and minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I would feel compelled to do so without casting any aspersions on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona since we are in the parliamentary situation where the bill is not before us—as the floor manager just following the rules of the Senate, I reluctantly feel obligated to object.

The amendment will be offered when we get to the bill, and I am very hopeful we will be able to get to the bill very shortly. It is a very worthwhile and commendable amendment and one that I am going to support and, as soon as we get to the bill, I will advise the Senator from Arizona, or I will be glad to offer the amendment for the Senator from Arizona at the appropriate time.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I withhold my unanimous-consent request.

Let me just say I just heard my colleague and dear friend from Utah urge Senators to come over with amendments. I am here with an amendment. I say to my friend from Utah, I heeded his call perhaps in a premature fashion. I hope both my friends from Massachusetts and Utah will allow me to propose the amendment at the appropriate time and I be notified at such time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I suppose in my exuberance I bypassed the parliamentary situation. I hope we can. I hope that those who feel strongly the other way with the vote of 95 to 3 will come in and allow this bill to proceed at this time without going through the necessary 30 hours that the procedures would require. If they will, we will be very grateful so we can proceed on this bill and any amendments that our colleagues would like to bring to the floor, we would be grateful at that particular point.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Utah would delay the quorum request, I would appreciate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, if I may ask the distinguished managers of the bill if they have further discussion or statements they would like to make. I have a very short statement.

Mr. KENNEDY. We welcome any comment the Senator from Arkansas; we always welcome his comments.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the very distinguished Senators.

Mr. President, I have two stories to tell this morning, and I think in real terms these stories tell a great deal. They sort of humanize the chart that the distinguished Senator from Utah showed to the U.S. Senate a few moments ago.

If I might, I would like to respectfully ask the attention of the Senator from Utah because I am trying to point out and bring to bear two human interest stories that he had on his chart.

I would like to say, Mr. President, that a few weeks ago I was in a grocery market in my community. It was late in the afternoon. I was pushing my grocery cart. I got back to the dairy counter and I was there looking at what I was going to pick up or not pick up. I recognized a young lady. I knew here and I had known her sister.

I said, "Well how are you doing?" She said, "Well, just fine." I said, "How is your sister?" She said, "We buried her last week."

I had known her sister as a brilliant surgeon in her midthirties. I said tell me about it. She said, well, she and her husband took a second honeymoon. They went to Puerto Rico for 5 or 6 days. One evening late on the beach they were walking barefooting through the sand and all of a sudden a gang attacked both of them with knives and icepicks. They stabbed her multiple times. She lost a tremendous quantity of blood. Her husband was beaten unconscious.

They took the young lady, who was in her own right a very splendid surgeon, to the hospital. In that emergency room, evidently through bad blood or a bad needle or whatever, she contracted AIDS. Within a year, she was dead. A life was lost. She did not live in the so-called homosexual community of San Francisco or of New York. She was a surgeon in Little Rock, AR, a splendid surgeon, and that life is lost.

There is another case, Mr. President. Last year, in a fine Methodist church in my community, the 70-year-old associate minister of that church rose after the Sunday sermon. He asked those in attendance to remain for a few moments. He got up in a very dramatic moment.

He said, this 70-year-old associate pastor, "I would like to tell all of you as my friends that I have AIDS." He said, "You will remember a few weeks ago or a few months ago that I had surgery. Many of you came to my hospital room. Many of you sent flowers and telegrams and letters, and your support and warmth pulled me through some very dark hours. But because of a syringe, bad blood, whatever, I now have AIDS."

I am humanizing the statistics that the Senator from Utah just pointed out in his chart that shows us what an overwhelming and awesome duty that this Senate is facing today in dealing with this piece of legislation.

Some who are listening might say to themselves, "Oh, I bet when they heard their associate minister say that he had AIDS through no fault of his own they all ran out the back door." Just the opposite, Mr. President. They rallied to his side. They took him to their bosom and they cared. They said, "We want to help."

The third experience that I have had, Mr. President, was last night. I had the privilege of attending one of the most special dinners I think I have every attended in Washington, DC. It was a dinner sponsored by the Institute of AIDS Studies in Immunology and Aging. The proceeds for this dinner went to AIDS immunology research at George Washington University Medical Center. One of the honorees of the lifetime science award was Dr. Jonas Salk.

I am older than the Senator from Utah. But I can remember when I was growing up in my small hometown of Camden in south Arkansas in the 1940's, we had two fears: one fear was the Nazis invading Camden, AR, and the second fear was getting polio. Dr. Jonas Salk saw to it that second fear was alleviated. And today Dr. Jonas Salk is devoting not only his lifetime but the resources at his command to trying to deal with the question of AIDS, how to solve it in our lifetime.

In his short acceptance speech last night, Mr. President, he talked and pled with all of us there about the need for research dollars and how awesome this disease, worldwide, not just in San Francisco or New York, can be on this civilization.

I know that any time there is a bill like this that has anything to do with AIDS, we know what happens. We know that oftentimes, even though the meaning is good, questioning no motive, that some individual seems to think that we might have to attempt once again to appeal to the fear and not the reason of this body.

This is a time that I believe that we can appeal to the reason, that we can accept the fear but appeal to the reason, because we are truly in an area of the unknown. It will be people like Dr. Jonas Salk. It will be people like those honored last night receiving those lifetime science awards. But, we will not have people like those who received awards last night unless we structure programs to fund their research, and unless we structure those programs in such a way that the scientists can spend the research dollars in the best way.

Mr. President, we have spent some $20 billion on SDI, the strategic defense initiative—$20 billion. Can anyone in this Chamber tell us what good we have received from that $20 billion expenditure?

This year, in this legislation, do you know what the request for AIDS research in our country is going to be? One billion dollars.

I heard a speaker just the other day say that within 10 years one out of every four hospital beds in America could be occupied by an AIDS victim. Mr. President, they are not necessarily homosexuals and once again they are not from San Francisco or just New York. They are children whose only sin it was is to be born. They are men like I just talked about, the associate pastor in Little Rock, AR. They are like the surgeon, the young lady, who lies in her grave today because we did not know, we did not have the cure or the answer for this disease, which is the disease not only of our country but the entirety of the world.

I wish I knew everything that was in this bill, but I do not. I can tell you, though, that I am going to support it. I am going to support it because I think it makes a statement that this country is going to reemphasize the priority of finding a cause for this disease.

Mr. President, we have a duty in the Senate. I hope we not only see that duty but, most importantly, I hope we meet that duty.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I wish to express appreciation for the comments and the absolute excellent statement of the Senator from Arkansas. He has, over the time of his service, taken special interests in a variety of the health care issues. He takes them seriously. I think any of our colleagues who just heard him know how strong he is personally committed to extending the hand of compassion to our fellow citizens. I thank him for an excellent statement.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, yesterday I made a few comments on the floor. It was Monday. It has been announced the previous Thursday that there would be no votes on Monday. There were only four Senators on the floor: the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH]; the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON]; and the Presiding Officer, who for a substantial amount of the time was the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBB]. At the pain of being repetitious, I want to say a few things today that I said yesterday. I will try to be brief.

First of all, let it be understood that the bill we are about to proceed to is going to pass the very same U.S. Senate that allowed the Labor-HHS appropriations conference to strip out an amendment previously approved which would have let the wife of an AIDS infected husband—who was a homosexual—know that her husband had AIDS. I mentioned this a number of times on the floor of the Senate, and I think it bears repeating from time to time, particularly, when we begin the process of trying to solve another problem by throwing money at it.

About 2 years ago, Mr. President, I received a telephone call from a young woman who was employed at that time in the House of Representatives. I took the call because Mrs. Devine, my secretary, said "Senator, this young lady has a problem, and she needs to discuss it with you."

So I picked up the phone and I said, "Yes, how can I help you?" The young lady said, "Senator, I need to talk with you, and I need to bring my mother with me to talk with you." I could tell by the tone of her voice that she was quite upset. So I said to her, "Of course, when can you come?" And she said, "We can come now." And they did.

I had never met the young woman, let alone her mother, until they walked into my office, and I recall they were two lovey ladies sitting there. We engaged in the customary pleasantries for a minute or so, and then I asked the young woman, "How can I help you?" And she said, "I am going to let Mama tell you."

Well, the mother sat speechless for perhaps as long as a minute; tears came in her eyes, and she said, "I do not know where to begin." So we just began somewhere. She said, "Well, Senator to be honest about it, I have AIDS."

Of course, that jolted me a little bit. Then she began to recite the circumstances by which she had caught this dreaded disease. Her husband who was a prominent attorney in a city in the State of Michigan, she said, turned out to be a homosexual. She did not know that. And he had developed AIDS and she did not know that. Her husband's doctor had told the man that he had AIDS, but the husband refused to permit the doctor to inform the man's wife that he had the disease. And that is how she became a victim of AIDS.

A few months ago, ABC news did a report on this young lady and her mother. Sam Donaldson interviewed her. As the interview progressed, it was apparent that Sam Donaldson became increasingly amazed that any government could permit this type of horror to go on in the name of civil rights. I do not think Sam Donaldson is easily shocked. He has been around this town for a long time. He has seen a lot and done a lot. But he was horrified that this state of affairs exists where an innocent wife is not even permitted to know that her husband has AIDS.

What goes on, Mr. President? What goes on is what this Senate allowed to go on and what this Senate is doing right now with this bill which is going to pass overwhelmingly. I said that yesterday and I repeat it today. There is not a chance that this bill will be stopped because there is a powerful lobby out there in the media and in the homosexual community, and Senators are scrambling to put their names on anything that even has the characterization of doing something about AIDS. In other words, throw the taxpayers' money at it, far in excess of what we are doing for any other disease.

Yes, this bill will pass, no question about it. And I imagine that the editorial writers have cranked up their little machines already to describe that ogre from North Carolina who dares to say wait a minute. Well, I do say wait a minute. So, here we go again.

We are in the process of beginning to consider another AIDS spending bill. This one is numbered S. 2240 if anybody wants to write it down. It has one of those fancy names which includes the word "emergency." Anything the liberals want, they put the word emergency on it and it goes zipping through. But this has the title the Comprehensive AIDS Resource Emergency Act. In other words, let us get this money real quick, the billions of dollars extra and spend it.

How it is spent, well, you will hear all sorts of platitudes. But it is a statistical exercise that is fascinating to say the least. The point is President Bush has already called for $3.5 billion in AIDS spending for next year—$3.5 billion.

And now we are facing consideration of a 5-year authorization for another $2.9 billion for more AIDS programs, $600 million next year in addition to the President's $3.5 billion.

Incidently, Mr. President, the Capitol Police called yesterday to my office and said we would like to have a couple of our people escort Senator HELMS around the Capitol for a day or so. I said I do not need any escort. I do not need any protection. I do not want it. I am not one of these Senators who run around with a bodyguard. A lot of Senators love it, but not this Senator.

I said what is going on. They said, well, frankly, some members of the homosexual community have made some threats against Senator HELMS. Well, la-di-da. Let them threat. Let them threat.

So once again this homosexual community—and that is putting the nicest possible description on it—and that community's apologists in this Senate, in this Government, in the news media—has whipped up the AIDS hysteria. It borders on terror. There has been proclamation after proclamation that AIDS is everywhere and that we are on the verge of another bubonic plague.

Yesterday, my good friend from Utah, ORRIN HATCH, one of the nicest young men I have ever known, had quite a few charts on easels sitting right down there and every figure he had was in percentages. I see the young pages nodding. They remember.

He showed a 75-percent increase here and a 45-percent increase there. I began to ask questions. I said percentages are all right. But what about the numbers? I happen to know some of the increases in the several States. There is one State that had 7 cases of AIDS as I recall in the early eighties and by the end of last year, 1989, that caseload had increased to a level of about 9 or 10.

So I asked the Senator from Utah, I said how many cases? I know all about the percentages.

Think about it. If a State had one case of AIDS in early 1980 and had two in 1989, that is a 100-percent increase. Roll the presses. Get everybody terrified.

I still want somebody to put out the numbers. Do not talk in theoretical terms. Do not project, because when you project you find yourself sooner or later in the position of the Centers for Disease Control which just last week acknowledged that all of the projections they made a few short years ago had been exaggerated. So they are backtracking. They did the best they could in projecting; I am sure of that.

The saddest thing about all of this is an enormous amount of the American taxpayers' money will be used indirectly if not directly to proselytize a dangerous lifestyle.

I read not long ago that a distinguished scientist said that there was not one AIDS case on record, Mr. President, that did not have its origin in sodomy; not one.

In the meantime, while we are beating our breasts and throwing more billions or proposing to throw more billions at a problem, millions of other Americans gravely ill with Alzheimer's, cancer, diabetes, and so forth, are cast aside. Also being cast aside is common sense. But you will not see that in the vote this afternoon or tomorrow or whenever it occurs, because there is a headlong rush to feed the appetite of a movement which is not going to be satisfied until the moral and social fabric of this Nation has been irreparably changed.

Sure, I will get beat again on this. I know that. It is no novelty to Senator HELMS from North Carolina. But I want to be able to say that I tried.

Now this legislation—and I repeat the bill number so if anybody wants to write it down, S. 2240—has been orchestrated so that it will be perceived as having been dedicated to the memory of Ryan White, bless his heart, a courageous little fellow, who died of AIDS on Palm Sunday.

Now the tragedy suffered by this little boy and his family was and is very real. He was a young hemophiliac who contracted AIDS. How? There you go again. He contracted it because he was given a transfusion of tainted blood. And remember what the scientist said: there is not a single case of AIDS on record that cannot be traced in origin to sodomy.

Young Ryan White was immediately, I guess the word is ostracized in school because the people in his community were frightened. His community had been led to believe that AIDS is readily transmissible by even the smallest of children. And then that little boy spent 5½ years of his short life enlightening the public about his horrifying affliction.

Ryan White told the American people that you do not get AIDS by chewing on pencils or saying hello to somebody in school. He repeatedly said that children have been the unknowing victims in this scenario. And I think it could be agreed by all Senators—at least we can agree on this—that no compassionate American can fail to be moved by the story of Ryan White, and he deserves an honest remembrance.

But at the same time, the American people deserve an honest assessment of those who have so callously used the suffering of Ryan White to promote their political agenda.

I remember the days before Ryan White died, people from Hollywood, politicians, the news media, flocked, just like a covey of birds, to Ryan White's home. There were television cameras there, and you could almost see them looking for the television camera. They were bidding for the attention of television, helping to promote the type of ignorance and misinformation that has elevated AIDS into a political issue totally out of proportion to its medical impact on the people of this country. And you better believe that the so-called homosexual community understood that Ryan White's story was just too good to pass up, too great an opportunity.

Now let the record be clear: little Ryan White was not an IV drug user, nor was he a promiscuous homosexual. He was just a litte boy who undoubtedly had hopes that he would one day play baseball in the major leagues or be a scientist or a teacher or maybe President of the United States. Therefore, his struggle and death could be used to frighten the American people into believing that AIDS is waiting to happen to everybody, even if they do not engage in illegal and immoral activities.

But remember what I said when I quoted the scientist who said there is not a case of AIDS on record that cannot be traced back in its origin to sodomy.

And you know I was thinking yesterday, with the possible exception of this Senator and one or two others, I have never heard one Senator in all of the AIDS debates that we have had say to those who practice sodomy and shoot up with illegal drugs: "Stop what you are doing."

Now we could go further than that. We could say, "If you stop what you are doing, there will never be another new case of AIDS other than those already in progress." So let us put the shoe on the right foot.

I had Senators, on this very bill, as well as earlier AIDS bills say: I agree with you, JESSE, but I am not going to tackle that crowd out there because the newspaper editors will eat my lunch for me. They will castigate me back home.

I say: Well, what do you think they do to me?

But nobody wants to tackle it. There were three Senators who voted against cloture a while ago—three. Why? I will tell my colleagues why. The rules of debate for this particular public health issue are different from every other disease this Nation has ever encountered. Have my colleagues ever thought about that?

In the AIDS debate, Members of the U.S. Senate operate under a rule which says you had better not mention certain facts and better not bring up this issue or that one. It is better to leave them unmentioned; better to let a sleeping dog lie.

The trouble with that it has taken us farther down the road to nowhere. Count it up. Counting the President's plans for $3.5 billion for next year, here we come with $600 million this year and $600 million the next year, and whatever it may require after that for 5 years. That adds up pretty quickly to pretty close to $6 billion.

Somebody said: JESSE, you are going to be condemned as a homophobic. Let me say what I said yesterday. I am a Baptist. I was trained as a little boy, and still try to practice it, that it is OK to hate the sin but do not hate the sinner.

Some of the people who are engaging in certain tactics around this country make the second half of that a little bit difficult. But I do not hate them. I just disagree with them even when some of them cause a security officer to walk right behind me. That does not bother me.

The real tragedy of all of this is the public health system of America has been ripped apart, and the tragedy of Ryan White is being exploited to promote a political agenda, in this case a $3 billion political agenda. And it is going to put even more innocent children like Ryan White at risk.

I noticed a rather interesting commentary the other day in one of the Washington papers. The writer, named Tony Snow, said essentially the same thing I have just said. And then he added: "That's sick."

Before turning to the statistics of where we have been heading in this epidemic, let me make clear that if IV drug users and homosexuals—and homosexual men in particular—would just stop their activities, there would never be another new case of AIDS in America, because over 90 percent—and nobody challenges this—over 90 percent of all cases of AIDS are to be found in homosexual and bisexual men and/or drug users, IV drug users.

Mr. President, it is true that AIDS has killed 78,000 people since 1980. That is a terrible tragedy. Do my colleagues think that is the biggest killer? Think again. The Centers for Disease Control pointed out in its estimate of the impact of the disease that the extent of the problem is far less than was originally predicted in the early 1980's.

The Centers for Disease Control, in fact, have revealed estimates showing, despite all of the dire warnings, there has been no outbreak of AIDS among heterosexuals; that is to say, people who do not engage in sodomy.

And, in fact, Dr. Rand Stonebrunner, who is the director of AIDS research for the New York City Department of Health, in reporting the discovery of seven cases of AIDS among heterosexual men in New York City, added, and he did so emphatically, that he was convinced that six of those seven had lied about whether they had committed sodomy and/or IV drug use.

That means, obviously, only seven purported cases of heterosexual AIDS in all of New York City, and look at the money that is going to New York City. Seven cases of heterosexual AIDS have been found among the thousands upon thousands who have been infected with AIDS. And the doctor, Dr. Rand Stonebrunner, said six of those seven are in doubt.

I said yesterday, and I repeat today, I do not claim to be a research scientist, but I think I am smart enough to understand that the incidence of AIDS has gone down due to the fact that the people among whom this disease thrives have already been saturated by it.

As a side note, Mr. President, a young lawyer—a former member of the 82d Airborne Division, and a former staff member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights—named Michael Famento, has just written a book entitled, "The Myth of Heterosexual AIDS." It is an excellent, scholarly work, but you know what? The homosexual lobby—the same crowd that loves Mapplethorpe—is threatening book dealers and publishers who promote the book. They are trying to censor the truth because Michael Famento has said that this disease continues because of the activities not of heterosexuals or children, but promiscuous homosexuals and IV drug users. So much for free speech and self expression.

Nevertheless, the American taxpayers have been required to furnish $1.5 billion on AIDS research in fiscal year 1990, while overall AIDS spending was $3 billion. I repeat, for emphasis, President Bush has already asked for $3.5 billion more in AIDS spending for fiscal year 1991—fiscal year 1991—and the distinguished managers of this bill, Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. HATCH, now seek to authorize, as I have said earlier, $600 million extra for next year; $600 million the following year; $600 million, in all likelihood, the third year. But the way they put it is "Whatever it takes." Whatever may be necessary.

Let us look at a few other diseases which are of great concern to the American people. Heart disease, for example. This just happens to be the Nation's No. 1 killer. Between 760,000 and 950,000 lives will be taken by heart problems this year. Think about the $5 billion contemplated for this one disease. How much do my colleagues suppose Uncle Sugar is going to spend on heart disease research? Six hundred forty-nine million dollars.

Cancer will kill, it is projected, 518,000 this year. But cancer research has been funded at only $1.6 billion. Alzheimer's? I expect every Senator in this body knows someone, either in his family or his circle of friends, who has been stricken with Alzheimer's. It afflicts 4 million Americans and it is projected that it will kill 100,000 at a minimum in this year of 1990. Yet Alzheimer's funding stands at $148 million compared to the $5 billion for AIDS. As a matter of fact, that $148 million that will be spent trying to do something about Alzheimer's disease is less than is spent on AIDS educational material. And you know what I mean by that. That means to distribute information to the sodomy crowd to tell them how to do safe sex. We are going to spend more money on that than we are going to spend on Alzheimer's. Spending the taxpayers' money to promote safe sex is just an excuse for promoting, or at least recognizing as just another lifestyle, a tremendously dangerous and promiscuous activity.

Diabetes, 11 million Americans are afflicted with diabetes. My information is that it kills about 36,000 people each year. Yet diabetes research received Federal funding of precisely $267 million for 1990.

According to the Public Health Service, people with AIDS represent one-tenth of 1 percent of the patients, the sick people, in this country—one-tenth of 1 percent. It may be of interest that 86 percent of the patients in the Nation's hospitals and clinics are suffering from mental illness to one degree or another in one way or another.

The Center for Disease Control says that on average less than 10,000 people with AIDS have lost their lives each year since 1980—10,000—yet we are talking about programs to spend more than $4 billion on AIDS in fiscal year 1991.

Let us look at the statistical information, since it is so fashionable to use statistics. The Federal Government spends an average of $10,000 on research for every AIDS patient—one patient, $10,000 spent. Now about cancer patients? One hundred eighty-five dollars per patient; the mentally ill people of this country, $7 per patient. I am talking about federally sponsored research.

I am very interested, Mr. President, in the assessment of all this by Time magazine. I alluded to this yesterday and I think it is worth repeating. Time magazine is not recognized as a bastion of conservatism in the United States of America, but Time magazine pointed out the dangers of just throwing more and more money at the AIDS problem. I think it was the January 22 edition of Time magazine in which Time included a detailed report which it entitled "The AIDS Political Machine."

The magazine described the activities of a well-oiled, special interest lobby which has gone a long way toward altering the way the public health apparatus of the U.S. Government conducts its business. Time raised the legitimate question of whether or not AIDS activists have distorted the national medical response to this disease and as a consequence have Members of Congress jumping through hoops and HHS and all the rest throwing money at the problem.

The dollar figures used for AIDS research represent more than excessive Federal attention to the disease. Money and time are being diverted from other projects to AIDS. Because AIDS research is so singularly focused, the likelihood of a spinoff medical discovery is remote. Dr. David Korn, who is dean of the Stanford Medical School, was quoted in Time as having said, "When you target money too narrowly, you exclude other areas that may prove very fruitful."

Mr. President, what is going on? I raised the question yesterday; I raise it again. I have heard over the past 5 years, in vigorous and sometimes heated debate on this floor, Senators stand up and rail against my proposal or a proposal by another Senator that a wife be informed that her husband has AIDS. I can remember one Senator—he is no longer a Member of this body—who pranced up and down like an angry hornet, talking about civil rights. Well, how about the rights of that wife?

I happen to be the father of a registered nurse. They are not supposed to be informed, do you not see, that the patients to whom they are ministering have AIDS. If they have AIDS, it must be kept a secret. Every dentist in the land is now wearing rubber gloves, and a lot of people gripe about that.

Let me talk about a few troubling aspects of this legislation, and then I will continue. This bill has a section which says that no less than 15 percent of the funds authorized will go to the treatment of those with pediatric AIDS—that is children. Why only 15 percent? I thought that this bill was dedicated to Ryan White, dedicated to the proposition that we are going to look after children, who are certainly innocent. But 15 little old percent? But even so, if you read down a little further in the bill—I try to do my homework—you will find that S. 2240 allows the States to waive even the use of that 15 percent for pediatric-specific programs. So what goes on? Are we really memorializing Ryan White or are we just throwing money at a problem? Allowing the States to waive that 15 percent makes this dedication to Ryan White just a little bit disingenuous in my mind.

The only legislation, as a matter of fact, that the Senate should be considering, is a proposal to save those innocent children from AIDS. I will buy that; I will support it, and I will lead the parade if anybody wants me to.

The National Institutes of Health—and this ought to be included in the RECORD—spent precisely $139 million on pediatric AIDS last year— $139 million for the children. This bill, S. 2240, proposes to spend, as I have said before, $2.9 billion in the next 5 years, primarily in the 13 cities with the largest number of AIDS. They are talking about San Francisco and New York, Chicago, and so forth.

What are the tactics? One of the tactics to gain support for this bill was to encourage the States to declare that they are undergoing AIDS crisis. Word was sent to them, if you do that, there will be some Federal matching funds. This, of course, has promoted the AIDS hysteria.

Title II of S. 2240 mandates the formation of AIDS councils in every State with any rural outbreak of AIDS, and as an attempted justification, the bill emphasizes, for example, that the State of North Dakota has experienced a 75-percent increase in rural AIDS in the past 10 years. We are talking about that sort of situation. But it is necessary to look at the fine print. If you look at the fine print regarding North Dakota, you will find that North Dakota has had a total of 18 cases of AIDS, but the catch is that 13 of the 18 cases had been identified and reported in the early 1980's. But look at the percentage used in statistics. It is a shell game, and it is going to be played out in every State, and every rural area.

The bottom line is that Greensboro, NC, or Indianapolis, IN, or rural Texas will never have an AIDS outbreak like San Francisco. A lot of folks do not want the American people to know that.

As I conclude, Mr. President, I listened very carefully to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR]. He was very eloquent when he spoke in this Chamber an hour or so ago. He spoke about a young friend of his, a surgeon who was brutally attacked with knives and icepicks. This happened to be a young woman surgeon. She was rushed to a hospital in Puerto Rico where she tragically received a contaminated blood transfusion, just like Ryan White did and she later died. I could not be more in agreement with Senator PRYOR about the horrible waste of life caused by this disease. And I gathered that he was saying that the thrust of this legislation should be on helping people like his friend or little Ryan White, and DAVID PRYOR was absolutely correct. But that is not what this bill does. Fifteen percent for the Ryan Whites of America.

Senator PRYOR himself also said that many have used this issue to appeal to hysteria, and I already indicated that I agree with that. He made an effective case for aiding what amounts to 2 percent of the AIDS population, those who have been infected with contaminated blood. And he was right on the mark, that people like his young friend and like Ryan White had no choice.

My point has been that this legislation should focus on the 2 percent like Ryan White and like that young woman surgeon in Puerto Rico. It should focus on the women and children. But you read this legislation carefully—and I am saying this to Senators who may or may not be listening—and it says in the beginning that 15 percent of the funds must go to women, infant children, and families. And then, suddenly, it takes away the provision for women, infants, and families by saying to the States: You do not have to spend that 15 percent of the funds on the most vulnerable.

The citizens of America, Mr. President, are compassionate people, who have seen their Government make one concession after another to this what I call "special interest group." What originally began as a measured response to a public health emergency has become a weapon, frankly, for the deterioration if not the destruction of America's Judeo-Christian value system. I doubt very seriously that the majority of Americans would look with favor upon that, if there were any way for them to find out about what is really going on. I have to doubt that they would approve of S. 2240 if there were any way for them to understand and to know the implications of it, and all of the other AIDS specific legislation which comes through the Congress.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will take a brief moment to respond to the Senator from North Carolina. We would like to see, if there is no objection, and I direct my remarks to the Senator from North Carolina—does the Senator have objection to proceeding to the bill at this time?

Mr. HELMS. I think it would be just as well to wait until the Democrats and Republicans have had their respective caucuses. I will have no objection after that.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator from Arizona was here with an amendment dealing with the Indian Health Service Program that we were prepared to move forward on. Some of us have been here for the last 2 hours awaiting to deal with the Senate's business. We want to try to accommodate leadership of both sides of the aisle and also 95 Senators who have indicated that they would like to move to the measure.

Since the Senator is on the floor at this time—we did not want to make the motion in the Senator's absence—that is why I took the opportunity 1 hour and 20 minutes ago to call the Senator to see whether we might move ahead with this motion to proceed so other Members can have their amendments considered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I assume the leader is yielding the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was asking the Senator a question, if we could have that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts still has the floor. He has posed a question to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. If the Senator will yield, my understanding is that Senator DOLE wanted to use his leadership time at 12:20. I want to find out what the Republican leader desires before I make any decision.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will make the motion. As I understand, we will recess for the caucuses at 12:45; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator stands corrected. The recess occurs at the hour of 12:30.

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, Mr. President, it will be my intention to make that motion at the time when we come back in after the recess.

As I understand from what the Senator from North Carolina stated he will not object at that time. That is what my understanding is.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. No. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. HELMS. I have no question of the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would indicate to my colleague I hope if he is going to object he will on the floor, because I am going to make the motion at that particular time.

Mr. HELMS. I am not going to object. I thought I made that clear. But I want to protect Senator DOLE's right to use the leadership time. That is the point I make.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am delighted to protect him. As the floor manager of the bill, and one who has been here since 10 o'clock, the minority leader made no such representation to me. I am always glad to accede to his request if he does have it.

Mr. HELMS. Let me look at the appropriate staff member. Did Senator DOLE send a message to me he wished to use the leadership time to get here at 12:20?

I am advised he is on his way.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will make a brief comment and then I will be glad to yield to the minority leader.

Mr. President, as someone who has been here a fair number of years and been involved in various debates, we are used to a variety of different tactics. One of the tactics generally used around here is to misinterpret the legislation and then differ with it. What we have just seen for the last half-hour is a perfect example of that.

As the principal author with my good friend and ally the Senator from Utah, who were the architects of the litigation, I could not even follow the continuity of the arguments of the Senator from North Carolina or to take some personal offense at the request that had been made by the Senator from Utah and myself and the other members of this committee that this legislation be dedicated to a very courageous young Ryan White, that he was being used for cynical narrow special interest purposes.

The mother of Ryan White I think can speak with a good deal more credibility about what that extraordinary young man's life meant both for the family and what he believed, much better than any Member of this body can.

I think it is only appropriate at this time just to mention, although I will include in its entirety the letter that has been sent to the different Members from an extraordinary mother, Jeanne White, that many of us have had the good opportunity to visit with and commiserate with at the loss of her son.

I will print this extraordinary letter, Mr. President, but I will read just an excerpt. It is:

DEAR SENATOR: My son Ryan White, spent the last 5 years of his life not only fighting for his life, but also fighting for the lives of all people living with AIDS.

This bill will help ensure that all people with AIDS and HIV infection receive the health care they need and they deserve. I believe Ryan would be proud to know that his struggle may have passed a bill that will aid thousands of others in their fight against this dread disease.

I urge you with all my heart, knowing that Ryan would join me in this if he could, to give the CARE bill your urgent attention and to ensure that it swiftly passes through Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter from Jeanne White.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 26, 1990.

DEAR SENATOR: My son, Ryan White, spent the last five years of his life not only fighting for his life, but also fighting for the lives of all people living with AIDS. Although we have now lost Ryan, we cannot lose sight of his courage and his hope. Ryan always said that we must fight the disease of AIDS and not the people who have it. No one more than Ryan understood the fear, prejudice, and discrimination suffered by people with AIDS. This fear must be eliminated, and people with AIDS must be treated with the dignity and compassion that all our fellow citizens deserve.

I am therefore tremendously proud that the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee has chose to dedicate the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency (CARE) Act of 1990 to the memory of Ryan. This bill will help ensure that all people with AIDS and HIV infection receive the health care they need and deserve. I know that Ryan was always somewhat bewildered by the attention he received. At the same time he was determined to use this attention to ensure that all Americans learned more about how to help people with AIDS, rather than fear them. I believe Ryan would be proud to know that his struggle may help pass a bill that will aid thousands of others in their fight against this dreaded disease.

The CARE bill will accomplish two important goals. First, the bill will provide 300 million dollars in emergency assistance to our cities most severely affected by the AIDS epidemic. Second, the bill will provide another 300 million dollars to help smaller communities throughout the country develop comprehensive care programs for people with AIDS.

My own experience tells me how desperately this funding is needed. Shortly before Ryan died, we were in Los Angeles for an Academy Awards party. Ryan suddently fell ill and we desperately tried to find some medical attention for Ryan in L.A. We found that the AIDS care specialists in L.A. were overwhelmed by the ever-growing caseload and they were unable to see Ryan. If Rayn, perhaps one of the most well-known persons with AIDS in the United States, could not get medical attention, can you imagine what it must be like for those who are less privileged?

We then flew overnight back to Indiana where Ryan was immediately admitted to Riley Hospital. There, Ryan was fortunate enough to get outstanding medical care and Riley Hospital generously offered to pay for all of Ryan's medical costs. But what happens to those who are not so fortunate? What happens to the hospitals that are increasingly facing bankruptcy because they continue to provide free medical care to persons with AIDS who can't afford to pay? What happens to people with AIDS in the thousands of other rural communities across the country that are not equipped to meet their special needs?

Title II of the CARE bill will provide much needed funds to smaller communities throughout the country to enable them to plan comprehensive care programs for people with AIDS. As my experience has shown, rural America is desperately unprepared to meet this growing epidemic. Without careful planning, many smaller communities could find themselves in a position similar to that of our large urban cities today. The CARE bill will help ensure that rural America will be prepared for AIDS, and that no one will ever again have to experience the frustration and despair that Ryan and I had to face when trying to get him the health care he needed.

I urge you with all my heart, knowing that Ryan would join me in this if he could, to give the CARE bill your urgent attention and ensure that it swiftly passes through Congress.

Yours truly,

JEANNE WHITE.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, one thing that was extraordinary, and there are many things about this remarkable young man, was after he received that tainted blood transfusion, to the moment he drew his last breath here on Earth, he never condemned anyone. He was not looking for the scapegoats. He was not looking for those who may have lived in a different lifestyle. He was not looking for scapegoats among individuals in our society.

What he was doing was reaching out in the true spirit of the American character to recognize that there were people who were suffering, there were health professionals that were in need, and there were communities that were being impacted and that as fellow citizens, as we here recognized that there was a crisis in South Carolina with Hurricane Hugo, or there was an earthquake in California, that we responded to that, there really is a crisis in terms of our health care facilities and among many of our fellow citizens, and we ought to deal with that particular issue and question.

Mr. President, I see the minority leader here on the floor. I will take the opportunity of reviewing for the Senate and putting in some perspective what the nature of the whole challenge is in dealing with the whole HIV virus for our country, how it really developed here, what the real facts are about this, statistics that we have from the Centers for Disease Control which I will include in the RECORD at the appropriate time, and then to indicate exactly what this legislation does and how important and relevant it is for our fellow citizens.

But I understand we are going to adjourn at 12:30. The minority leader did desire to address the Senate, and so I will withhold until we come back after the recess.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank first of all my colleague from Massachusetts and join him in his praise of Ryan White and his mother, whom I have also met and had the privilege to discuss with her the AIDS problem.

Mr. President, I think leader time has been reserved; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. I would like to proceed for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senate is scheduled to recess at the 12:30.

The Senator may proceed without objection. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to talk about two subjects very quickly, and I think they are both highly important. One is aid to Nicaragua and Panama.

AID TO NICARAGUA AND PANAMA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it has been nearly 2 months now since the President made his request for aid to these two countries, both emerging new democracies and both countries where we have a special responsibility because we were part of the problem and are still part of the problem.

Yesterday President Violeta Chamorro sent a cable to President Bush urging him to speed up the $300 million in emergency aid now stuck in conference in the Congress. I think she is a little unhappy.

She was here. In fact many of us met with her. I met with her and with the distinguished majority leader in his office.

We have a special obligation, and I know some people think we probably should not help anybody around the world, but we have a special obligation in Nicaragua because we have been involved in the policy there a long time. We urged free elections, democratic elections, and they were held. Violeta Chamorro was elected. We promised her assistance if she were successful.

We hear a lot about freedom and democracy on both sides of the aisle. We were telling her before her election if she were elected she could count on us. We all congratulated her, and the final result is that Congress is still playing games and she does not have anything to show for it.

Now some, primarily the House, want to inject El Salvador into the process. We want to go back and try to reinvent the wheel on El Salvador, and limit aid to El Salvador, and make that part of the package because of the tragic death of the Jesuit priests and others in El Salvador.

I might add there have been tragic deaths in other parts of the world, children, men, women, old, young. If we are going to start an aid program based on what we consider to be justice then we may have to look at every country and everywhere American aid does and give our colleagues an opportunity to pass judgment on justice in every country. I do not believe we want to start down the road.

I certainly think we want to see justice done in El Salvador. But I am not quite certain why we are holding up aid to Panama and Nicaragua. They are still waiting for food, clothing, and housing, and all the basic necessities that Congress indicated they would be helped on.

So I do not think the need is any less pressing. It is more pressing now than it was when President Bush made his request on March 13, 2 months ago.

If we do not want to see the problems worsen in Nicaragua, and see a resurgence of Sandinista opposition, we need to end this disgraceful delay.

I do not know why the conference is deadlocked. What started off as a $700 million-and-some bill is now $3.6 billion. I do not know, and maybe everything in there is justified. But I think my colleagues on both sides would want us to move ahead on this particular aid package. It was a dire emergency supplemental.

Maybe there is some way we can separate out aid to Panama and aid to Nicaragua and let the conference then proceed on what may be left. There ought to be some way, if we can have the cooperation of both Democrats and Republicans, and I believe there are a number on both sides who certainly share the view the aid ought to have already been delivered, maybe there is some way that can be separated out, and we will not interfere with the other conference items.

Mr. President, I just urge we do that very quickly. I hope that President Bush before he does anything else at the 2 o'clock meeting on the budget summit reminds us again of our responsibility to those two countries.

THE BUDGET SUMMIT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on the budget summit we have our first meeting at 2 o'clock. It will last for about an hour and half. President Bush said, "No preconditions." I believe goodwill exists on all sides, Democrats and Republicans in Congress and the White House, and I am hopeful that something can be produced that will be worthwhile to the American people and will continue economic growth.

And I am relying on this side of the aisle, the primary leadership of Senator DOMENICI, the ranking Republican on the Budget Committee, in addition Senator HATFIELD, the ranking Republican on Appropriations, and Senator PACKWOOD, the ranking Republican on the Finance Committee, who will have a tough job if in fact there are revenues and also Senator GRAMM from Texas, who will be my liaison when I am not there personally in the negotiations.

So I would just say an hour and half before we sit down with President Bush, in my view I think most of us are ready for something meaningful to happen and we are prepared to make some hard choices, and we ask our colleagues' patience as we start these deliberations.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair and yield back the remainder of my time.

RECESS UNTIL 2:15 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the revised order the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:33 p.m. recessed until 2:14 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. SANFORD].

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY ACT OF 1990

MOTION TO PROCEED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to proceed.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. LIEBERMAN and Mr. REID pertaining to the introduction of S. 2625 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I had indicated prior to the time of the caucuses that we were prepared to move ahead to the consideration of the bill. I understand the Chair is prepared to put the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 2240?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY ACT OF 1990

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2240) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants and to improve the quality and availability of care for individuals and families with HIV disease, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to provide emergency assistance to localities that are disproportionately affected by the Human Immunodeficiency Virus epidemic and to make direct financial assistance available to States to provide for the development, organization, coordination and operation of more effective and cost efficient systems for the delivery of essential services to individuals and families with HIV disease in urban and rural areas.

TITLE I—HIV EMERGENCY RELIEF GRANT PROGRAM

SEC. 101. HIV EMERGENCY RELIEF GRANT PROGRAM.

Title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300ee et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART C—EMERGENCY RELIEF AND CARE ACCESS GRANTS

"Subpart 1—Emergency Relief Program

"SEC. 2531. GRANTS TO ELIGIBLE METROPOLITAN STATISTICAL AREAS.

"The Secretary shall award emergency relief grants to any metropolitan area as reported in the HIV/AIDS Surveillance Report of the Centers for Disease Control, that, as of March 31, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993 or 1994, has reported more than 2,000 AIDS cases (hereinafter referred to in this subpart as the "eligible area"), and that otherwise meets the requirements of this subpart.

"SEC. 2532. ADMINISTRATION AND PLANNING COUNCIL.

"(a) ADMINISTRATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Assistance made available under grants awarded under this subpart shall be directed to the chief elected official of the city or urban county that administers the public health agency serving the greatest number of individuals with AIDS, as reported to the Centers for Disease Control, in the eligible area that is awarded such a grant.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS.—To receive assistance under paragraph (1), the administering local political subdivision shall—

"(A) establish, through intergovernmental agreement with the chief elected officials of all local political subdivisions that have in excess of 10 percent of all individuals with AIDS, as reported to the Centers for Disease Control, in such subdivision within the eligible area, an administrative mechanism to allocate funds based on the number of AIDS cases and severity of need of such subdivisions; and

"(B) establish an HIV health services planning council.

"(b) HIV HEALTH SERVICES PLANNING COUNCIL.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—To be eligible for assistance under this subpart, the chief elected official described in subsection (a)(1) shall establish or designate an HIV health services planning council that shall include representatives of—

"(A) health care providers;

"(B) community based and AIDS service organizations;

"(C) social service providers;

"(D) mental health providers;

"(E) local public health agencies;

"(F) hospital or health care planning agencies;

"(G) affected communities;

"(H) non-elected community leaders; and

"(I) State government.

"(2) PRIORITY.—In designating a planning council under paragraph (1), priority shall be provided to any existing entity that has demonstrated experience in assessing and planning for HIV health care service needs within the eligible area, except that such existing entity shall include representatives of the full range of service providing agencies and institutions within such eligible area.

"(3) DUTIES.—The planning council established or designated under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) establish priorities for the allocation of funds within the eligible area; and

"(B) assess the efficiency of the administrative mechanism in rapidly allocating funds to the areas of greatest need within the eligible area.

"SEC. 2533. TYPE AND DISTRIBUTION OF GRANTS.

"(a) GRANTS BASED ON RELATIVE NEED OF AREA.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after an appropriation becomes available to carry out this subpart, the Secretary, acting through the Health Resources and Services Administration, shall use 50 percent of the amount appropriated under section 2536 for such fiscal year, to make grants to eligible areas under section 2531.

"(2) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—The Secretary shall make a grant to each eligible area under paragraph (1) in an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount available under paragraph (1) as the sum of—

"(i) the relative cases per area factor for such area as multiplied by three; and

"(ii) the relative cases per area factor for such area as multiplied by the relative per capita factor for such area; divided by

"(iii) four;

bears to 100.

"(B) RELATIVE CASES PER AREA FACTOR.—As used in this paragraph, the term 'relative cases per area factor' means the ratio of the number of individuals with AIDS in an eligible area, as reported to the Centers for Disease Control, to the number of such individuals in all eligible areas.

"(C) RELATIVE PER CAPITA FACTOR.—As used in this paragraph, the term 'relative per capita factor' means the ratio of the per capita incidence of individuals with AIDS in an eligible area, as reported to the Centers for Disease Control, to the per capita incidence of such individuals in all eligible areas.

"(D) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary shall make such proportionate adjustments in amounts allocated for grants to eligible areas as shall be necessary to ensure that total amount of such grants are neither more or less than the amount available for grants under this subsection.

"(b) SUPPLEMENTAL GRANTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 150 days after the first day of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall use the remainder of the amounts made available under section 2536 for such fiscal year, to make grants under section 2531 to eligible areas that submit an application to the Secretary that—

"(A) contains a report concerning the dissemination of emergency relief funds under section 2533(a) and the plan for utilization of such funds;

"(B) demonstrates the severe need in such area for supplemental financial assistance to combat the HIV epidemic;

"(C) demonstrates the commitment of the local resources of the area, both financial and in-kind, to combatting the HIV epidemic;

"(D) demonstrates the ability of the area to utilize such supplemental financial resources in a way that is immediately responsive and cost effective; and

"(E) demonstrates that resources will be allocated in accordance with the local demographic incidence of AIDS including funds for services for infants, children, women, and families with HIV disease.

"(2) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—The amount of each grant made by the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be determined by the Secretary based on the application submitted by the eligible area.

"SEC. 2534. USE OF AMOUNTS.

"(a) GRANTS TO INSTITUTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts received under a grant awarded under this subpart may be used by the grantee to provide direct financial assistance to any public or not-for-profit private hospital, clinic, nursing home, sub-acute care facility, or community health center, that demonstrates that such entity—

"(A) is providing care or services to a disproportionate share of low income individuals and families with HIV disease; and

"(B) is expending resources in the provision of services to such low income individuals and families which exceed reimbursement;

"(2) USE OF FUNDS BY INSTITUTIONS.—An institution that receives assistance under paragraph (1) shall use such amounts to—

"(A) enhance the quality of services, care, and treatment to low-income individuals and families with HIV disease; and

"(B) deliver outpatient and ambulatory care services including case management to such individuals and families, including comprehensive treatment and support services.

"(3) PRIORITY.—In allocating assistance received under a grant awarded under section 2531, the grantee shall give priority to those eligible institutions under paragraph (1) that—

"(A) have established a plan to evaluate the utilization of services provided in the care of individuals and families with HIV disease; and

"(B) have established a system designed to ensure that such individuals and families are referred or discharged to the most medically appropriate level of care as soon as such referral or discharge is medically indicated.

"(b) GRANTS TO AGENCIES.—Amounts received under a grant awarded under this subpart may be used by the grantee to provide direct financial assistance to any public or non-profit agency, clinic, community based organization, or community health center that has the capacity to provide case managed outpatient health and support services to individuals and families with HIV disease that are critical to—

"(1) prevent unnecessary in-patient hospitalization; and

"(2) expedite the discharge of the individual to the most medically appropriate level of service.

"(c) ADDITIONAL USES.—

"(1) RENOVATION OR REHABILITATION—In addition to the use specified in subsection (a), amounts received under a grant awarded under this subpart may be used by the grantee to renovate or rehabilitate congregate care housing units, long-term care facilities, transitional care facilities, and sub-acute care facilities for the treatment of individuals with HIV disease, if the grantee demonstrates that—

"(A) an adequate number of—

"(i) congregate care residential units; or

"(ii) long term care or sub acute care nursing beds are not available within the grantee eligible area for occupancy by individuals with HIV disease;

"(B) it has made a good faith effort to identify and eliminate local regulatory barriers that have impeded the creation, and utilization by individuals with HIV disease, of such facilities; and

"(C) it has exercised its authority to insure that individuals with HIV disease have access to such facilities.

"(2) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall not permit a grantee to use amounts received under a grant awarded under section 2531 for renovation or rehabilitation under paragraph (1) unless the local political subdivision with jurisdiction over the grantee area provides the grantee with local or State funds in an amount equal to the amount of the grant that is used under paragraph (1). Such local or State contribution to such renovation or rehabilitation program may be in the form of in kind services, goods or real property.

"(3) ADMINISTRATION AND PLANNING.—Not more than 5 percent of amounts received under a grant awarded under this subpart shall be utilized to carry out the administrative and planning activities described under section 2532.

"SEC. 2535. APPLICATION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this subpart, an eligible area shall prepare and submit, to the Secretary, an application at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require, including assurances adequate to ensure—

"(1) that funds received under a grant awarded under this subpart will be used to supplement not supplant State and local funds currently utilized to provide health and support services to individuals with HIV disease;

"(2) that the eligible area has an HIV planning council, pursuant to section 2532, and has developed or will develop a comprehensive plan for the organization and delivery of HIV services that is compatible with any existing State or local HIV care plans; and

"(3) that agencies and institutions within the eligible area that will receive funds under a grant provided under this subpart shall participate in any established HIV community based continuum of care.

"(b) ADDITIONAL APPLICATION.—An eligible area that desires to receive a grant under section 2533(b) shall prepare and submit, to the Secretary, an additional application at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require, including the information required under such subsection.

"SEC. 2536. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this subpart, $300,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992, and such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1993 through 1995.".

TITLE II—HIV CARE GRANTS

SEC. 201. HIV CARE GRANTS.

Part C of title XXV of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 101) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subpart:

"Subpart 2—Care Grant Program

"SEC. 2540. GRANTS.

"The Secretary shall make grants to States to enable such States to improve the quality, availability and organization of care, treatment and support services for individuals and families with HIV disease in urban and rural areas.

"SEC. 2541. GENERAL USE OF GRANTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A State shall use amounts provided under grants made under this subpart—

"(1) to establish and operate HIV care consortia within areas most affected by HIV disease that shall be designed to provide a comprehensive continuum of care to individuals and families with HIV disease in accordance with section 2542;

"(2) to provide home- and community-based care services for individuals with HIV disease in accordance with section 2543;

"(3) to develop and provide assistance to mechanisms that assure the continuity of health insurance coverage for individuals with HIV disease in accordance with section 2544;

"(4) to provide therapeutic treatments, that have been determined to prolong life or prevent serious deterioration of health, to low-income individuals with HIV disease in accordance with section 2545; and

"(5) to integrate early diagnosis and early intervention services for individuals with HIV disease with primary health care and support services provided in existing health care settings, in accordance with section 2546.

"(b) INFANTS AND WOMEN, ETC.—A State shall use not less than 15 percent of funds allocated under this subpart to provide health and support services to infants, children, women, and families with HIV disease.

"SEC. 2542. GRANTS TO ESTABLISH HIV CARE CONSORTIA.

"(a) CONSORTIA.—To be eligible to receive a grant under section 2541(1), an applicant shall—

"(1) be a consortia of public and nonprofit private health care and support service providers and community based organizations; and

"(2) agree to use funds received under such a grant for the planning, development and delivery of comprehensive outpatient and support services for individuals with HIV disease, including—

"(A) essential health services such as case management services, medical, nursing, and dental care, diagnostics, monitoring, and medical follow-up services, mental health, developmental, and rehabilitation services, home health and hospice care; and

"(B) essential support services such as transportation services, attendant care, homemaker services, day or respite care, nutrition services, child welfare and family services (including foster care and adoption services), housing services, benefits advocacy, and legal services.

"(b) ASSURANCES.—

"(1) REQUIREMENT.—To receive a grant under section 2541(1), an applicant consortium shall provide assurances that—

"(A) within any locality in which such applicant consortium is to operate, the specific populations and subpopulations of individuals and families with HIV disease have been identified;

"(B) the service plan developed by such applicant consortium addresses the special care and service needs of the populations and subpopulations identified under subparagraph (A); and

"(C) when practicable, within each locality served by such applicant consortium, a single coordinating entity will be established that shall be capable of integrating the delivery of services to the populations and subpopulations identified under subparagraph (A).

"(2) EXCEPTION.—Subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any applicant consortium that will operate in a community or locality in which it has been demonstrated by the State, by the locality, or by the applicant consortium that—

"(A) subpopulations exist within the community to be served that have unique service requirements; and

"(B) such unique service requirements cannot be adequately and efficiently addressed by a single consortium serving the entire community or locality.

"(c) APPLICATION.—To receive a grant from the State under section 2542(1), a consortium shall prepare and submit, to the State, an application that—

"(1) demonstrates that the consortium includes those agencies and community-based organizations—

"(A) with a record of service to populations and subpopulations with HIV disease requiring care within the community to be served; and

"(B) located in and representative of populations and subpopulations reflecting the local incidence of HIV;

"(2) demonstrates that the consortium has carried out an assessment of service needs within the geographic area to be served and has established a plan to insure the delivery of services to meet such identified needs, including—

"(A) assurances that service needs will be addressed through the coordination and expansion of existing services before new services are created;

"(B) assurances that, in metropolitan areas, the geographic area to be served by the consortium corresponds to the geographic boundaries of local health and support services delivery systems to the extent practicable;

"(C) assurances that, in the case of service for individuals residing in rural areas, the applicant consortium shall be capable of delivering case management services that link available community support services to specialized regional medical services; and

"(D) assurances that the assessment of service needs and the delivery of services will include participation by affected populations.

"(3) demonstrates that adequate planning has occurred to meet the special needs of families with AIDS, including family centered care for infants, children, women, and families;

"(4) demonstrates that the consortium has created a mechanism to periodically evaluate—

"(A) the success of the consortium in responding to such identified needs; and

"(B) the cost-effectiveness of the mechanisms employed by the consortium to deliver comprehensive care; and

"(5) demonstrates that the consortium will report to the state the results of the evaluations described in subsection (d).

"(d) DEFINITION.—As used in this subpart, the term 'family centered care' means the system of services described in section 2542 that is targeted specifically to the special needs of infants, children, women, and families. Family centered care shall be based on a partnership between parents, professionals, and the community designed to ensure an integrated, coordinated, culturally sensitive, and community-based continuum of care for children, women, and families with HIV diseases.

"(e) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under section 2541(1), the State shall give priority to existing HIV care consortia so that such consortia may build on existing systems and experience and avoid duplication of efforts.

"SEC. 2543. GRANTS FOR HOME- AND COMMUNITY-BASED CARE.

"(a) USES.—A State may use amounts provided under a grant awarded under this subpart to make grants under section 2541(2) to entities to—

"(1) provide home and community-based health services for individuals with HIV disease pursuant to written plans of care prepared by health care professionals in such State for providing such services to such individuals;

"(2) provide for the identification, location, and provision of outreach services to individuals with HIV disease, including those in rural areas;

"(3) provide for the coordination of the provision of services under this subpart with the provision of similar or related services provided by public and private entities; and

"(4) give priority to the provision of outreach and home and community-based services to individuals with HIV disease who are low-income individuals.

"(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this subpart, the term "home and community-based health services"—

"(1) means, with respect to an individual with HIV disease, skilled health services furnished to the individual in the individual's home pursuant to a written plan of care established by a health care professional for the provision of such services and items described in paragraph (2);

"(2) includes—

"(A) durable medical equipment;

"(B) homemaker or home health aide services and personal care services furnished in the home of the individual;

"(C) day treatment or other partial hospitalization services;

"(D) home intravenous and aerosolized drug therapy (including prescription drugs administered intravenously as part of such therapy);

"(E) routine diagnostic testing administered in the home of the individual; and

"(F) mental health, developmental, and rehabilitation services; and

"(3) does not include—

"(A) inpatient hospital services; and

"(B) nursing home and other long term care facilities.

"SEC. 2544. CONTINUUM OF HEALTH INSURANCE COVERAGE.

"A State may use amounts received under a grant awarded under this subpart to establish a program of financial assistance under section 2541(3) to assist eligible low income individuals with HIV disease in—

"(1) maintaining a continuity of private health insurance; or

"(2) receiving medical benefits under a health insurance program established by the State.

"SEC. 2545. PROVISION OF THERAPEUTICS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A State may use amounts provided under a grant awarded under this subpart to establish a program under section 2541(4) to provide therapeutic care that has been determined to prolong life or prevent the serious deterioration of health arising from AIDS or HIV disease in eligible individuals.

"(b) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL.—To be eligible to receive assistance from a State under this section an individual shall—

"(1) have a medical diagnosis of AIDS or HIV disease; and

"(2) be a low income individual, as defined by the State.

"(c) STATE DUTIES.—In providing assistance under this section the State shall—

"(1) determines, in accordance with guidelines issued by the Secretary, which therapies are eligible to be included under the program established under this section;

"(2) permit assistance to be made available under the program established under this section to purchase the therapies determined to be eligible under paragraph (1), and provide such ancillary devices that are essential to administer such therapies; and

"(3) provide outreach to individuals and families with HIV disease in rural areas and establish a distribution system that facilitates access to therapeutics for such individuals.

"SEC. 2546. PROGRAMS FOR EARLY INTERVENTION.

"A State may use amounts provided under a grant awarded under this subpart to establish a program under section 2541(5) to integrate early diagnosis and early intervention services with primary health care and support services, including drug treatment services, that are delivered in existing public health and medical care facilities for the purpose of—

"(1) providing outreach services to individuals with HIV disease and health care professionals who are unaware of the availability and potential benefits of early treatment of HIV infection, including those in rural areas;

"(2) offering clinical, diagnostic, and periodic medical monitoring services to such individuals; and

"(3) providing appropriate therapeutics that have been determined to prolong life or prevent serious deterioration of health in individuals with HIV disease.

"SEC. 2547. STATE APPLICATION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall not make a grant to a State under this subpart for a fiscal year unless the State prepares and submits, to the Secretary, an application at such time, in such form, and containing such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this subpart.

"(b) DESCRIPTION OF INTENDED USES AND AGREEMENTS.—The application submitted under subsection (a) shall contain—

"(1) a description of the purposes for which the State intends to use the assistance provided to the State under this subpart, including—

"(A) information relating to the services and activities to be provided;

"(B) a description of the manner in which such services and activities will be coordinated with other services and activities of public and private entities to provide a comprehensive continuum of care; and

"(C) information relating to the process for coordinating the various program options provided for in this subpart to maximize the effectiveness of the services provided; and

"(2) an assurance by the State that—

"(A) the legislature of the State will conduct public hearings concerning the proposed use and distribution of the assistance to be received under this subpart;

"(B) the State will, to the maximum extent practicable, ensure that services provided to an individual pursuant to a program established with assistance provided under this subpart will be provided without regard to the ability of the individual to pay for such services and without regard to the current or past health condition of the individual;

"(C) if any charges are imposed for the provision of services for which assistance is provided under this subpart, such charges—

"(i) will be pursuant to a public schedule of charges;

"(ii) will not be imposed on any eligible individual with an income that does not exceed 200 percent of the official poverty line as determined by the Secretary; and

"(iii) for an eligible individual with an income that exceeds 200 percent of the official poverty line, will be adjusted to reflect the income of such individual;

"(D) the State will provide for periodic independent peer review to assess the quality and appropriateness of health and support services provided by entities that receive funds from the State under this subpart;

"(E) the State will permit and cooperate with any Federal investigations undertaken under this subpart;

"(F) the State will maintain State expenditures for health and support services for individuals with AIDS or HIV disease at a level that is equal to not less than the average level of such expenditures maintained by the State for the 2-year period preceding the fiscal year for which the State is applying to receive a grant under this part;

"(G) the State will not make payments from assistance provided under this subpart for any item or service to the extent that payment has been made, or can reasonably be expected to be made, with respect to that item or service—

"(i) under any State compensation program, under an insurance policy, or under any Federal or State health benefits program; or

"(ii) by an entity that provides health services on a prepaid basis; and

"(H) the State shall establish a comprehensive plan for the organization and delivery of HIV health care and support services, in urban and rural areas, including provisions for the delivery of services to populations and subpopulations identified through the needs assessment required by section 2542.

"(c) WAIVER.—A State that demonstrates in its application submitted under subsection (a) that the number of cases of AIDS among infants, children, women and families is less than 15 percent of all cases of AIDS within the State shall be granted a waiver of the set-aside requirements described in section 2541(b). If a waiver is granted to a State, the State shall allocate resources in accordance with the local demographic incidence of AIDS within the State.

"SEC. 2548. DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.

"(a) SPECIAL PROJECTS OF A NATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Of the amount appropriated under section 2549, the Secretary shall use not to exceed 10 percent of such amount to—

"(A) provide technical assistance in administering and coordinating the activities authorized under section 2541; and

"(B) establish and administer a Special Projects of National Significance Program to award direct grants to States, localities, or community-based organizations to fund special programs for the care and treatment of individuals with HIV disease.

"(2) GRANTS.—The Secretary shall award grants under subsection (a) based on—

"(A) the need of the applicant to establish a demonstration project to assess the effectiveness of a particular model for the care and treatment of individuals with HIV disease;

"(B) the innovative nature of the proposed activity of the applicant; and

"(C) the potential replicability of the proposed activity in other similar localities or nationally.

"(3) SPECIAL PROGRAMS.—Special programs of a national significance may include those that are designed to—

"(A) deliver drug abuse treatment and HIV health care services at a single location, through either an outpatient or residential facility;

"(B) establish an incentive system designed to increase the number of health care facilities willing and able to serve low-income individuals and families with HIV disease;

"(C) create a structure for the support and respite of informal and family-based care networks in the minority community critical to the delivery of comprehensive care;

"(D) create the capacity to deliver health and support services to individuals and families with HIV disease located in rural areas and Indian Reservations;

"(E) deliver health care and support services to homeless individuals and families with HIV disease; and

"(F) deliver health and support care services to individuals with HIV disease who are incarcerated.

"(b) AMOUNT OF GRANT TO STATE.—

"(1) MINIMUM ALLOTMENT.—Subject to the extent of amounts made available under section 2549, the amount of a grant to be made under this subpart for—

"(A) each of the several States and the District of Columbia for a fiscal year shall be the greater of—

"(i) $100,000, and

"(ii) an amount determined under paragraph (2); and

"(B) each territory of the United States, as defined in paragraph 3, shall be an amount determined under paragraph (2).

"(2) DETERMINATION.—

"(A) FORMULA.—The amount referred to in paragraph (1)(A)(ii) for a State and paragraph (1)(B) for a territory of the United States shall be the product of—

"(i) an amount equal to the amount appropriated under section 2549 for the fiscal year involved; and

"(ii) the ratio of the distribution factor for the State or territory to the sum of the distribution factors for all the States or territories.

"(B) DISTRIBUTION FACTOR.—As used in subparagraph (A)(ii), the term 'distribution factor' means—

"(i) in the case of a State, the product of—

"(I) the number of additional cases of AIDS in the State, as indicated by the number of cases reported to and confirmed by the Secretary for the 2 most recent fiscal years for which such data is available; and

"(II) the cube root of the ratio (based on the most recent available data) of—

"(aa) the average per capita income of individuals in the United States (including the territories); to

"(bb) the average per capita income of individuals in the State; and

"(i) in the case of a territory of the United States the number of additional cases of AIDS in the specific territory, as indicated by the number of cases reported to and confirmed by the Secretary for the 2 most recent fiscal years for which such data is available.

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subsection, the term 'territory of the United States' means the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and Puerto Rico.

"(c) ALLOCATION OF ASSISTANCE BY STATES.—

"(1) CONSORTIA.—In a State that has reported 1 percent or more of all AIDS cases reported to the Centers for Disease Control in all States, not less than 50 percent of the amount received by the State under a grant awarded under this subpart shall be utilized for the creation and operation of community-based comprehensive care consortia under section 2542, in those areas, including rural areas, within the State in which the largest number of individuals with HIV disease reside.

"(2) ALLOWANCES.—In allocating assistance under this subsection, a State shall take into account which areas received financial assistance under subpart 1.

"(3) PLANNING AND EVALUATIONS.—A State shall not use in excess of 5 percent of amounts received under a grant awarded under this subpart for planning and evaluation activities.

"(4) ADMINISTRATION.—A State shall not use in excess of 5 percent of amounts received under a grant awarded under this subpart for administration, accounting, reporting, and program oversight functions.

"(d) EXPEDITED DISTRIBUTION.—Not less than 75 percent of the amounts received under a grant awarded to a State under this subpart shall be obligated to specific programs and projects and made available for expenditure not later than 120 days after the receipt of such amounts by the State. Within such 120 day period, the State shall invite and receive public comment concerning methods for utilizing such amounts.

(e) REALLOCATION.—Any amounts appropriated in any fiscal year and made available to a State under this subpart that have not been obligated as described in section 2548(d) shall be recaptured by the Secretary and reallotted to other States in proportion to the original grants made to such States.

"SEC. 2549. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this subpart, $300,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992, and such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1993 through 1995.

"SEC. 2550. DEFINITION.

"As used in this subpart except as otherwise specifically provided, the term 'State' means each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and Puerto Rico.".

TITLE III—HIV DISEASE HEALTH SERVICES RESEARCH, EVALUATION, AND ASSESSMENT

SEC. 301. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this section to develop, as rapidly as practicable, information concerning the organization, impact, efficacy, and cost effectiveness of various health care service delivery and financing systems for the care of individuals with HIV disease.

SEC. 302. RESEARCH, EVALUATION, AND ASSESSMENT PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research, shall establish a program to enable independent research to be conducted by individuals and organizations with appropriate expertise in the fields of health, health policy, and economics (particularly health care economics) to develop—

(1) a comparative assessment of the impact and cost-effectiveness of major models for organizing and delivering AIDS and HIV health care, mental health, early intervention, and support services, that shall include a report concerning patient outcomes, satisfaction, perceived quality of care, and total cumulative cost;

(2) a review of major health services financing mechanisms, including private health insurance policies, self pay options, health maintenance organization plans financed under the Social Security Act, and State and local government funding options, and the relative contribution of each of such payment options;

(3) an assessment of how point-of-entry procedures for obtaining HIV health care treatment and support services impacts the cost, quality, and outcome of the care and treatment of HIV individuals and families and the extent to which the overall quality, cost, and outcome of such care can be related to the source of payment for treatment;

(4) a comprehensive report of the significant financial, regulatory, organizational, and social barriers that serve to limit the delivery of high quality care services to individuals and families with HIV disease, with special emphasis being placed on the extent to which disadvantaged status impacts such service delivery; and

(5) a summary report concerning the major and continuing unmet needs in health care, mental health, early intervention, and support services for individuals and families with HIV disease in urban and rural areas.

(6) a review and assessment of models for the delivery of health and support services to infants, children, women, and families with HIV disease.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit, to the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, and Finance of the Senate, a report that contains the reports, evaluations and assessments required under subsection (a).

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we have been notified by, I think, four Senators that they have amendments to consider. We are quite prepared to move ahead and, in some instances, accept those amendments. In other cases, we will have opportunity to debate them, discuss them, or modify them and permit the Senate to accept them or reject them.

So I hope that those who do have some amendments will be forthcoming and will be prepared to respond so that the Senate can work its will.

Mr. President, I will take just a very brief moment to respond to what I think was a very clear distortion and misrepresentation about the nature of the health threat that this country is facing with this emergency which has been commented on by the two national commissions which have been established, one by President Reagan and one by Congress, commissions which have included top experts and investigated the question at hand in detail. Both reached similar conclusions. Both have made recommendations which have been incorporated in the legislation.

I just reference that for those Members of the Senate who question both the severity and the nature of the emergency that we are facing at this time. For those who are concerned about it, I hope they not only refer to our report but also examine those particular measures.

Beyond that, Mr. President, I will include in the RECORD the latest reports from the Centers for Disease Control about the nature of the growth of this particular disease.

We must remember, Mr. President, on this whole question of the HIV virus, that it was virtually unknown 10 years ago. It has come like a plague across the country like many of those diseases which are of continuing concern to all Americans and have affected so many families, such as cancer, heart disease, illness, sickness, stroke, many of which have affected my own family. Quite frankly, Mr. President, I too wish we could see expanded research resources devoted toward those particular difficult diseases.

We are down to funding only about 22, 23 percent of the various applications which are approved by the peer review process at the NIH today. There are extraordinary possibilities that we should be addressing. I certainly, for one, believe that we ought to be taking advantage of these potentials which can make a great deal of difference to the quality of lives of millions of our fellow citizens.

I hope, quite frankly, Mr. President, as we see a change in world conditions that some of those resources we are using now in terms of the research for the instruments of war would be directed more to the kind of health research which is so important for our people and, quite frankly, so important for people throughout the world.

But, Mr. President, we are not addressing the research programs here this afternoon. We find that the focus and attention on the battle of the HIV has been primarily in the areas of research, and there are some hopeful possibilities. But when you look at what is actually invested in research and what we are expending in other areas, I find it extremely difficult to try and say, if we only are spending a certain amount in terms of diabetics and a certain amount for those with cancer, to say that we are less concerned about diabetics than those who are afflicted by cancer, I find that quite appalling myself.

We have basic research, we have applied research, and directed research. We rely on peer review in order to be able to target that kind of research in certain instances. We can take a sense of pride that we have more Nobel laureates who have been associated with the National Institutes of Health because of the support that the American people have given to biomedical research. I believe we will find more hopeful paths in the areas of AIDS as a result of our research capability, which is unmatched in the world.

What we are attempting to do in the research area is to try and unlock the keys to this dreaded disease. We have seen progress that has been made, but we know so much more needs to be done. We, I believe, are on a path now for that research, and we want to develop a similar path in the areas of treatment. We must do it in a way which is compassionate, which is caring, which recognizes that there are fellow citizens in need. We want to be able to develop the kinds of caring for our fellow citizens and see to it that it is going to be done in a way that best suits them from a medical point of view and from a healing point of view. Quite frankly, I believe this savings measure of many resources will help us achieve an overall because we know that there are alternative ways of treating individuals, rather than just retaining them in high cost settings.

So, Mr. President, this scourge is still with us. The idea that somehow the Centers for Disease Control issued a report recently which changes their projection in terms of the numbers of cases is just blatantly, flagrantly wrong. It is that simple.

I will just read into the RECORD now, Mr. President, the language of the CDC report. This report was issued on February 23, 1990, updating the year previous. It indicates that the projections which were given over a year ago, frankly, are being realized in this country and what we are seeing is that the growth, in terms of the incidence of this disease is expanding dramatically in rural America—dramatically—and is expanding among the young people in this country—children and babies—in a dramatic and significant way.

What we are basically attempting to do is, on the one hand, develop a national strategy which includes both the research and, on the other hand, to have a national strategy that will provide for the caring and the treatment of those who have been afflicted with this disease and do it in a way which is decent, caring and compassionate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the NIH 1991 congressional justification; a paper on how Federal research on AIDS/HIV disease contributed to other fields; and the Public Health Service AIDS case projections which was updated in February 1990.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH 1991 CONGRESSIONAL JUSTIFICATION: SUMMARY BY APPROPRIATIONS

(Dollars in thousands)

	1989 actual budget authority	1990 estimate	1991 estimate
INCLUDES AIDS
NCI	$1,572,879	$1,634,294	$1,694,059
NHLBI	1,046,259	1,072,335	1,112,502
NIDR	131,026	135,744	140,520
NIDDK	559,886	581,466	605,349
NINDS	472,662	490,396	512,212
NIAID	743,870	832,960	886,875
NIGMS	683,920	712,030	745,494
NICHD	425,918	442,906	461,473
NEI	231,404	236,529	247,392
NIEHS	223,686	229,233	235,792
NIA	222,888	239,452	248,938
NIAMS	160,080	168,927	176,080
NIDCD	94,687	177,582	122,847
DRR	340,898	337,105	319,151
NCNR	29,195	33,513	35,127
NCHGR	28,230	59,538	108,029
FIC	14,164	15,656	16,355
Subtotal	6,981,652	7,339,666	7,668,195
NLM	77,883	85,728	89,916
OD	46,737	89,916	82,975
B&F	38,492	61,042	88,600
Total, NIH	7,144,764	7,576,352	7,929,686
AIDS	(602,294)	(743,532)	(800,164)
EXCLUDES AIDS
NCI	1,448,731	1,483,990	1,533,252
NHLBI	1,007,648	1,030,279	1,068,039
NIDR	126,885	131,082	135,518
NIDDK	556,210	576,146	599,558
NINDS	459,230	474,238	494,985
NIAID	430,982	439,002	463,468
NIGMS	673,019	697,416	730,007
NICHD	403,214	416,157	432,463
NEI	226,439	230,996	241,505
NIEHS	219,489	224,942	231,212
NIA	222,386	238,593	248,009
NIAMS	159,347	167,689	174,597
NIDCD	94,687	117,582	122,269
DRR	295,688	291,009	270,772
NCNR	28,434	32,526	33,979
NCHGR	28,230	59,538	108,029
FIC	9,510	10,758	11,148
Subtotal	6,390,129	6,621,943	6,898,810
NLM	77,804	85,235	89,384
OD	40,945	79,365	69,228
B&F	33,592	46,277	72,100
Total, NIH	6,542,470	6,832,820	7,129,522
AIDS ONLY
NCI	124,148	150,304	160,807
NHLBI	38,611	42,056	44,463
NIDR	4,141	4,662	5,002
NIDDK	3,676	5,320	5,791
NINDS	13,432	16,158	17,227
NIAID	312,888	393,958	423,407
NIGMS	10,901	14,614	15,487
NICHD	22,704	26,749	29,010
NEI	4,965	5,533	5,887
NIEHS	4,197	4,291	4,580
NIA	502	859	929
NIAMS	733	1,238	1,483
NIDCD			578
DRR	45,210	46,096	48,379
NCNR	761	987	1,148
FIC	4,654	4,898	5,207
Subtotal	591,523	717,723	769,385
NLM	79	493	532
OD	5,792	10,551	13,747
B&F	4,900	14,765	16,500
Total, NIH	602,294	743,532	800,164

Note.—1990 and 1991 estimates exclude $200 in permanent budget authority expected to be derived from Cooperative Research and Development Agreements.

[Congress of the United States, Office of Technology Assessment, April 1990]

AIDS-RELATED ISSUES: HOW HAS FEDERAL RESEARCH ON AIDS/HIV DISEASE CONTRIBUTED TO OTHER FIELDS?

As awareness of the enormity of the AIDS epidemic has grown, Federal funding targeted to AIDS and other HIV disease has increased accordingly. From $8 million in fiscal year 1982, the year after AIDS was first diagnosed in the United States, total Federal spending for medical care, public health activities, and research related to HIV disease has risen steadily and totals $2.9 billion for fiscal year 1990 (table 1). Over the same period, federally funded research on HIV disease rose from $3 million to $1.16 billion (table 2).

For fiscal year 1991, the President has requested a 7-percent increase in funding for HIV research, a somewhat smaller percentage and absolute increase than in previous years. Although the increase in total Federal funding for HIV disease would slow under the President's budget request for fiscal year 1991, spending for fields other than research would receive a larger share of the total allotment.

From divergent viewpoints, concern has been expressed that the Federal Government is spending too much and that it is spending too little on HIV research, compared with funding for other medical conditions (1,6,7,16). Critics of rising expenditures on HIV disease point out that HIV funding has exceeded funding for heart disease and rivals funding for cancer, despite the much greater number of deaths from these latter diseases. Although HIV funding makes up about 10 percent of the total budget of the National Institutes of Health in fiscal year 1990, it accounts for 47 percent of the budget of the National Institute for Allergy and Infectious Disease (table 3).

TABLE 1.—TOTAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES ON AIDS/HIV, FISCAL YEARS 1982–91

[In millions of dollars]

Year	AIDS/HIV expenditures	Percent increases
1982	$8
1983	44	450
1984	104	136
1985	208	100
1986	507	144
1987	926	83
1988	1,594	72
1989	2,227	40
1990	2,936	32
1991 [1]	3,463	18
Total	12,017

[1] Figures for 1990 are appropriations requested in the President's budget.

Source: U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service Budget Office (13).

TABLE 2.—FEDERAL SPENDING ON AIDS/HIV RESEARCH [1] BY AGENCY, FISCAL YEARS 1982–91

[In millions of dollars]

Agency/Department	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991 [2]
Department of Health and Human Services Public Health Service	3	22	57	83	164	317	607	942	1,115	1,209
Department of Veterans Affairs	0	0	2	3	3	6	8	11	14	14
Department of Defense	0	0	0	0	38	22	12	27	34	22
Other	0	0	0	0	0	1	1	0	0	0
Total [3]	3	22	59	86	204	354	626	980	1,163	1,245

[1] Methods used in the preparation of the 1982–1988 figures differ from those used for the 1989–1991 figures. If the 1989 figures were prepared using the same methods as were used for the prior years, the figures would be 815, 14, 27, and 0, for the Public Health Service, Department of Veterans Affairs, Department of Defense, and other, respectively.

[2] Figures for 1991 are amounts requested in the President's budget. All other figures are actual appropriations.

[3] Due to rounding, some columns may not add to totals.

Source: 1982–1988 data: Winkenwerder, W., Kessler, A.R., and Stolec, R.M. (16); 1989–1991 data: U.S. DHHS, Public Health Service Budget Office (13).

OPINIONS REGARDING FEDERAL SPENDING FOR AIDS/HIV RESEARCH

Current Level of Federal Funding for AIDS/HIV Research—Nearly one-half of survey respondents felt that the current level of federally funded AIDS/HIV research was about right. A greater proportion of respondents felt that funding was too low (31 percent), rather than too high (18 percent) (figure 3).[8] Scientists with some professional activity related to AIDS/HIV were more likely to perceive AIDS/HIV funding as too low or about right than those not engaged in AIDS/HIV activities (table 8).[9]

TABLE 8.—OTA SURVEY RESPONDENTS' OPINIONS ABOUT THE LEVEL OF FEDERALLY FUNDED AIDS/HIV RESEARCH BY WHETHER THEY ARE ENGAGED IN AIDS/HIV PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITIES [1]

Opinion about level fo Federal AIDS/HIV funding	Professional activities related to AIDS/HIV: No (n=49) (percent)	Professional activities related to AIDS/HIV: Yes (n=87) (percent)
Too low	26.5	33.3
About right	34.7	51.7
Too high	32.7	10.3
No opinion	6.1	4.6

[1] These differences in opinion are statistically significant as determined by the chi-square test ($p=.01$).

Source: Office of Technology Assessment, 1990.

Statistically significant differences in opinion about levels of Federal funding for AIDS/HIV research are evident according to whether respondents received external funding in 1989, and whether that funding was from the Federal Government for AIDS/HIV research. Of the respondents that received no external funding, more than one-half felt that federal AIDS/HIV funding was about right, nearly one-third indicated that it was too low. Of those who received Federal funds for AIDS/HIV research, one-half felt that funding levels were too low, and the other one-half felt that funding was about right. By contrast, 38 percent of respondents who had received external funding for non-AIDS/HIV research felt that AIDS/HIV funding was too high (table 9).

TABLE 9.—OTA SURVEY RESPONDENTS' OPINIONS ABOUT THE LEVEL OF FEDERALLY FUNDED AIDS/HIV RESEARCH BY WHETHER THEY RECEIVE EXTERNAL FUNDING OR FEDERAL FUNDS FOR AIDS/HIV RESEARCH [1]

Opinion about level of Federal AIDS/HIV funding	No external funding (n=62) (percent)	External funding: For non-AIDS/HIV research (n=48) (percent)	External funding: For AIDS/HIV Federally funded research (n=24) (percent)
Too low	32.3	22.9	50.0
About right	51.6	35.4	50.0
Too high	8.1	37.5	0.0
No opinion	8.1	4.2	0.0

[1] These differences in opinion are statistically significant as determined by the chi-square test ($p<.01$).

Source: Office of Technology Assessment, 1990.

The respondents to OTA's survey indicated that significant benefits from AIDS/HIV research have flowed to a wide variety of fields ranging from the basic sciences to clinical applications and public health. More than one-quarter of respondents, for example, reported that AIDS/HIV research has contributed greatly to advances in all of the basic sciences and half of the medical disciplines included on the survey. These findings are especially noteworthy given that, as one respondent commented, substantial lead time is needed for advances to influence other fields.

Although OTA employed a survey of biomedical and social scientists to learn of contributions of AIDS/HIV research to other fields, methods other than surveys may be used to evaluate the usefulness of research. For example, bibliometric methods can examine the extent to which certain publications are used by others, and economic evaluations can assess the returns to investment in research.

Bibliometric methods have been successfully used to measure how the publications of a particular researcher or a research institute are utilized.[1] The research discipline of bibliometrics evaluates scientific publications as a measure of research output and relies on the existence of large databases containing key information on the published literature. One bibliographic method that could be used to investigate the contributions of AIDS/HIV research to other fields involves identifying a set of articles representing federally funded research in the National Library of Medicine's literature database MEDLINE (or AIDSLINE) and examining to what extent the non-AIDS/HIV literature cite these articles by using the Institute for Scientific Information's database of articles and their references (the Science and Social Science Citation Indexes (SCI and SSCI)).[2,3]

[8] Five percent expressed no opinion regarding federal spending on AIDS/HIV research.

[9] The difference in opinion on AIDS/HIV funding by professional activity related to AIDS/HIV was statistically significant as determined by the chi-square test ($p=.01$).

[1] Bibliometric methods have also been used to study researcher productivity, the evolution of scientific fields, the diffusion of scientific ideas, program evaluation, and the identification of innovative areas of sceintific research (4, 5, 8, 10,11).

[2] Another approach would involve identifying a set of highly-cited AIDS/HIV research articles with SCI and seeing to what extent these articles are Economic analyses have been used to measure the "spinoffs" and "spillovers" of research conducted by some Federal agencies. For example, the overall benefits to society from four technologies stimulated by work at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA)—gas turbine engines, integrated circuits, cryogenics, and an advanced computer program dealing with structural analysis—were estimated to be about $7 billion over a 10-year period (12).[4] Another approach used to evaluate NASA spinoffs is to study how industry uses the licenses and patent waivers granted by NASA. Some benefits of federally funded research are difficult to measure. The creation of a multibillion dollar satellite communications industry and a tenfold reduction in the cost of satellite communications, for example, can be traced to NASA's space research and development program (12).

Because substantial Federal funding for HIV research is relatively recent, dating only from the latter part of the 1980's it would be premature to evaluate the economic implications of its applications in other fields. Even in the best of circumstances, one would expect several years to elapse from the start of research on HIV to applications to HIV disease and an even longer lag for advances from HIV research to be incorporated into other fields and produce tangible economic benefits.

Two studies exemplify approaches to address underlying issues related to funding for HIV research, namely the appropriateness of the distribution of resources between HIV and other research areas and the distribution of HIV research funding among different categories.

Using funding levels for fiscal year 1986, Hatziandreu and her colleagues compared Federal spending for biomedical research that was targeted to HIV disease with spending for other leading causes of death in the United States (2). Based on expected deaths and potential years of life lost for 1991, they calculated research expenditures per unit of desease burden for several conditions. They concluded that AIDS was receiving about the same priority as cancer and that there was no indication that funding for AIDS was excessive relative to cancer and heart disease. Compared with 1986, however, funding for HIV research has increased about fourfold. Comparable figures are not available for current Federal funding of research on cancer and heart disease.

To examine the allocation of funds for HIV research among alternative uses, Siegel and her colleagues surveyed members of the Institute of Medicine's Committee on AIDS, a multidisciplinary group that had studied Federal HIV policy (9). Compared with the distribution contained in the expected budget for fiscal year 1987, the dominant sentiment of these experts favored increased funding for research on behavioral and social science.

The findings of OTA's survey also address the issue of allocating resources among different research areas. Although over three-quarters of the respondents felt that Federal spending for AIDS/HIV research was about right or too low, nearly half felt that too much of available research funds has been diverted to AIDS/HIV research from other fields. These responses indicate not only support for current or augmented Federal AIDS/HIV research funding levels but also concern that other research areas are not adequately funded.

Not surprisingly, responses to questions about the level of Federal spending for AIDS/HIV research depend on whether scientists are engaged in AIDS/HIV research and whether they depend on Federal resources. Scientists in receipt of Federal funds for AID/HIV research are most likely to hold the opinion that Federal AIDS/HIV funding to too low, and more than two-thirds of scientists receiving external funding for other-than AIDS/HIV research felt that too much research funding has been diverted to AIDS/HIV from other areas.

Nearly one-half of OTA survey respondents received no external funding in 1989. The opinions expressed by these respondent are of particular interest because they are less likely to have vested interests in funding policies. Over one-half of these respondents felt that AIDS/HIV funding is about right, and nearly one-third felt that funding was to low. Only eight percent felt that AID/HIV funding was too high. On the question of diversion of research funds, more than one-half of scientists without external funding did not agree, but nearly one-third agreed that too much research funding has been diverted to AIDS from other areas. Over one-half of scientists who receive Federal support for AIDS/HIV research disagreed that research funds have been diverted to AIDS from others areas, but as many as 38 percent agreed that diversion has occurred.

In addition, in separate comments, survey respondents raised the issue of allocating resources to HIV and other targeted fields versus to basic research. One respondent, for example, pointed out that contributions from basic research conducted prior to the HIV epidemic had furthered advances in subsequent HIV research and, while questioning the contributions of HIV research to basic biology, felt that, ". . . our understanding of basic biology had made possible all AIDS research."

In conclusion, results from OTA's survey indicate that, in the opinion of the scientific community, HIV research has made many important contributions to advances in the biomedical and behavioral sciences. Furthermore, the dominant sentiment of survey respondents support current or augmented levels of HIV research. Opinion was divided on the question of whether too much research funding has been diverted to AIDS/HIV research from other fields. The results raise for continued consideration the appropriate allocation of research funds among HIV, other targeted areas, and basic science.

AIDS CASE PROJECTIONS

Participants concluded that AIDS cases in the United States will continue to increase through 1993 in each of the current principal transmission categories (i.e., homosexual/bisexual men, IVDUs, persons infected through heterosexual transmission, and children infected perinatally). An estimated 37,500 cases diagnosed from October 1988 through September 1989 eventually will be reported, a 14% increase over the corresponding count for October 1987 through September 1988 (6). Between 52,000 and 57,000 cases of AIDS will be diagnosed during 1990, and the annual count will increase to 61,000-98,000 cases diagnosed during 1993 (Table 2). These projections include an adjustment for the estimate that about 85% of diagnosed AIDS cases are eventually reported.

TABLE 2.—PROJECTED NUMBER OF AIDS CASES, DEATHS ATTRIBUTABLE TO AIDS, AND LIVING PERSONS WITH AIDS, AFTER ADJUSTMENTS FOR UNDERREPORTING [1]—UNITED STATES, 1989–93

Year	AIDS cases		Deaths
	New cases [2]	Alive [3]
1989	44,000-50,000	92,000-98,000	31,000-34,000
1990	52,000-57,000	101,000-122,000	37,000-42,000
1991	56,000-71,000	127,000-153,000	43,000-52,000
1992	58,000-85,000	139,000-188,000	49,000-64,000
1993	61,000-98,000	151,000-225,000	53,000-76,000
Through 1993 [4]	390,000-480,000		285,000-340,000

[1] Projections are adjusted for unreported diagnoses of AIDS by adding 18 percent to projections obtained from reported cases (corresponding to 85 percent of all diagnosed cases being reported: 1/0.85 = 1.18) and rounded to the nearest 1000.
[2] Number of cases diagnosed during the year.
[3] Persons with AIDS alive during the year.
[4] Rounded to the nearest 5000. Includes an estimated 120,000 AIDS cases diagnosed through 1988, 48,000 persons alive with AIDS at the end of 1988, and 72,000 deaths in diagnosed patients through 1988.

Editorial Note: Estimates of the number of HIV-infected persons, the number with laboratory evidence of immune dysfunction, and the projected number of persons with AIDS are used to assess current and future health-care needs. Although these estimates cannot be made precisely, ongoing studies will provide additional data to improve the estimates and test the assumptions on which they are based.

Current HIV prevalence estimates and AIDS case projects are influenced by the slowing of the rapid upward trend in AIDS incidence that occurred in 1987. The number of AIDS cases diagnosed per month continued to increase in 1987, but the rate of increase declined in the middle of that year, particularly in non-IV-drug-using homosexual/bisexual men (6). Reasons for this change in trend include: 1) a decline in the incidence of new HIV infections in homosexual/bisexual men in the early 1980s, leading to a subsequent decline in AIDS case incidence (12); 2) use of antiretroviral and other therapies by mid-1987, leading to a lengthening of the incubation period from infection to AIDS; and 3) possible decreases in the completeness or timeliness of reporting. The accuracy of HIV prevalence estimates and AIDS case projections depends in part on the determination of the relative contribution of these or other factors.

After the workshop, additional data became available on zidovudine use in mid-1987, and estimates were made of the possible effect of medical therapy on the change in trend in AIDS incidence that occurred in that year. One study estimated that zidovudine treatment given during early 1987 to 5000-7000 homosexual/bisexual men with severe immunodeficiency but without AIDS could account for the change in the trend in AIDS incidence in that group in the last cited by non-AIDS/HIV articles within both SCI and SSCI.

[3] The principal difficulty in conducting these analyses is distinguishing the AIDS/HIV literature from the non-AIDS/HIV literature. Any bibliometric analysis would require retrieving articles or their abstracts and reviewing them for content.

[4] The analysis was conducted in 1975 for the period 1975 to 1984. Economic benefits were measured in constant 1975 dollars (12).

half of 1987 (13). More than 10,000 persons received zidovudine from the manufacturer under a limited drug distribution system during March-September 1987. Data from a 4% systematic sample of this group indicate that about 4000 homosexual/bisexual men who were infected with HIV and had low CD4+ counts but who had not yet developed AIDS received zidovudine during that time (14). While this suggests that medical therapy could have made a substantial contribution to the change in trend in AIDS incidence in this group since 1987, the relative contribution of this and the other factors noted above requires further study.

Despite the apparent change in reported AIDS incidence in 1987, needs for current and future health-care services are expected to increase. AIDS has been diagnosed in no more than 10% of the approximately 1 million persons currently infected with HIV. Recent studies indicate that early treatment with zidovudine can slow disease progression in asymptomatic persons with CD4+ counts $<500/mm^3$ (NIAID, unpublished data). As discussed in the report, about 60% of the estimated 1 million HIV-infected persons in the United States-including about 500,000 persons without AIDS-may have CD4+ counts $<500/mm^3$ and may benefit from such therapy.

In addition to the suffering and health-care burden involving those already infected, a major concern is the number of new infections that continue to occur. Currently an estimated 1500-2000 new infections occur each year in newborns as a result of perinatal transmission, and a minimum of 40,000 new infections occur each year in adults and adolescents. Comparing the estimate of about 750,000 HIV-infected persons alive at the beginning of 1986 with the current estimate of about 1 million alive in mid-1989 suggests that an average of more than 80,000 new infections have occurred yearly since 1986.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, there are other points that I want to make, but I see the Senator from Arizona on the floor. I know he has an amendment. We appreciate his willingness to come over and consider this amendment. So I yield the floor so we might be able to consider that amendment.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 1614

(Purpose: To amend title II of the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990 to ensure that Native Americans too would be eligible to receive health and support services under this bill)

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN], for himself, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. CONRAD, proposes an amendment numbered 1614.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike the language in section 2548, (3)(D) of the underlying amendment and replace with the following:

"(D) create the capacity to deliver health and support services to individuals and families with HIV disease located in rural areas, and Indians (both Reservation and non-Reservation based), and/or deliver;

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, Senators INOUYE, ADAMS, DECONCINI, and CONRAD.

I thank my colleagues from Massachusetts and Utah for the work they and their staffs have done to bring this important bill before us today. I believe it important that resources be available for the care of people with AIDS.

While I support this legislation wholeheartedly, I am concerned that, for both our Nation's first citizens and those living in rural areas, this legislation may not offer as much help as was intended by the authors of the legislation.

I am grateful that the authors of the legislation are in agreement with this amendment, and I hope to be able to dispense with it in a very short period of time.

Mr. President, this amendment would ensure that Native Americans, and individuals living in rural areas, would also be eligible for the important health care and support services made available through this bill to people with AIDS and their families. It merely expands the language in the legislation to make sure that the possibility for delivery of services would exist—both for individuals living in rural areas and Native Americans.

With regard to Native Americans, they are one of the segments of the population at highest risk for contracting AIDS.

While the legislation allows the Secretary for Health and Human Services to award grants to "create the capacity to deliver health and support services to individuals and families with HIV disease located in rural areas and Indian reservations," no reference is made to the delivery of actual services. In addition, by only mentioning Indian reservations, the urban Indians would be excluded altogether; thus neither residents of rural areas nor Native Americans would be able to receive the services for which the capacity was created.

Mr. President, the statistics regarding Native Americans with AIDS and what is leading to infection are very telling. I do not want to take the time of the Senate at this point to enumerate the statistics, but at this time I ask unanimous consent that a letter in support of the legislation from Wayne Ducheneaux, president of the National Congress of American Indians, and an article on Native Americans with AIDS that recently appeared in a publication entitled "Winds of Change" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF AMERICAN INDIANS,
Washington, DC, April 27, 1990.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
Vice Chairman, Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: I am writing to express my appreciation and full support for the Indian amendment you are proposing to offer to S. 2240, the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act of 1990.

The amendment you are proposing is critically needed to provide better care for Indian AIDS victims. The Indian Health Service received less than a million dollars in FY 90 to provide education, counseling, testing and a limited amount of care for AIDS victims. Because of the lack of funds, we are not certain of the full extent of AIDS epidemic among the Indian population. On the other hand, I understand that IHS has documented approximately 200 cases, and these individuals will need care. Under current budgets constraints, the contract health care under which AIDS care is provided is severely inadequate. In the Aberdeen area, for example, we run a shortfall of several million dollars per year even without the additional high costs of AIDS treatment. As you know, about half of the Indian population resides in the urban areas and there is a need to provide treatment and drug reimbursement funds to urban Indian centers as well. At present the urban centers do not receive any funds for AIDS treatment.

I understand that S. 2240 as presently drafted does not clearly allow the Secretary to provide anything in the way of services and funds to Indians to treat AIDS. Therefore, I am pleased that you will be offering an amendment to ensure that Indians, both off and on reservation, are eligible for any new AIDS care funds provided as a result of S. 2240. I am confident that your amendment will be supported and appreciated by the Indian community.

Thank you for your continued interest in Indian health.

Sincerely,

WAYNE DUCHENEAUX,
President.

[From Winds of Change, Spring 1990]

AIDS AND NATIVE AMERICANS

(By Ronald M. Rowell, MPH, Choctaw/Kaskaskia)

An old enemy of Native American people has raised its head again in the late 20th century: epidemic disease. Not since the raging days of smallpox, typhoid, typhus and diphtheria have we faced an epidemic so serious to the future generations of our people. Acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), a disease caused by a virus, the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) is present among Native communities in every region of the U.S. HIV is spread through sex, sharing of contaminated needles, and from pregnant mothers to their children. The virus is found in sufficient quantities in semen, vaginal secretions and blood to enable the transmission from one person to another.

A HIDDEN VIRUS AND "US" GOOD GUYS VS. "THEM" BAD GUYS

The fact that individuals can be infected with HIV and capable of infecting others, but not show of illness either to themselves or others for an average 9.8 years has raised barriers to dealing with the epidemic. Even though diagnosed cases of AIDS among Native Americans already existed prior to 1984, the fact that so few Native Americans in comparison with Whites, Blacks and Hispanics were diagnosed meant that AIDS was not generally viewed by officials with control over resources as a problem for our population. Focusing attention primarily on diagnosed AIDS cases instead of on related risk indicators like substance abuse and rates of sexually transmitted diseases, or on rates of infection with HIV, resulted in a general dismissal of Native concerns. It also raised a policy formula which assumed that a certain number of Native Americans would have to die before funds for HIV prevention could be justified.

It has been difficult for many people to grasp fully the idea that a person can feel and look healthy and transmit a deadly virus. It is a characteristic quite different from our usual experience with other common diseases which show us some external evidence of infection.

The combination of the lack of external signs of infection with the fact that the epidemic primarily affected gay and bisexual men and intravenous drug users allowed many people to feel they were personally invulnerable. This assumption of invulerability has allowed a sense of community-wide denial of risk to prevail where there has been no HIV awareness or education effort. So long as the epidemic is viewed in terms of "them"—the bad guys—vs. "us" the good guys—the danger of the spread of HIV will remain particularly serious.

If we are to win the battle against HIV, we will have to convince individuals that neither heterosexual orientation nor the label one chooses to describe oneself are a guarantee against a sexually-transmitted virus, "It's what you do, not who you are." We will also have to convince alcohol and other non-IV drug abusers that the relationship between substance abuse and HIV goes beyond just not using and sharing needles. Substance abuse is indirectly related to HIV infection because of risk-taking sexual behavior (sharing semen or vaginal fluids) while under the influence.

The "good guy/bad guy" syndrome has led to some ridiculous propositions; quarantine of all those infected, testing everyone for HIV antibodies, running infected individuals off the reservation at gunpoint, and others. Without getting into the specific arguments from a public health perspective against each of these draconian measures, there is a more general argument to be made. We must be able to convince individuals to change specific behaviors which place them at risk for HIV infection. Therefore, our focus must be on the responsibility of each individual to act in his or her own interest by not participating with another person in sexual or needle-sharing activities which would place them in danger.

The "good guy/bad guy" position puts the onus on the other person to protect our health. That is entirely the wrong message to send. Except in cases of rape or other violence, no one can force a person into a high-risk activity. As AIDS educators have said many times, "It takes two to have sex, but only one to have a safer sex." The problem of the spread of HIV is not that infected persons are out and about with the purpose of infecting others. The problem is that the vast majority of individuals who are HIV infected do not know it and continue living their lives as they always have.

EVIDENCE OF RISKS: SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES AND SUBSTANCES ABUSE

Are Native Americans at risk? The evidence of high-risk behavior is strong. Native Americans have high rates of syphilis and gonorrhea, at least in some states. The Centers for Disease Control studied primary and secondary syphilis and gonorrhea in 13 states from 1984-88. That study found that Native American syphilis rates were over twice that of non-Natives, and that gonorrhea rates were similar. Native syphillis rates were 12.93/100,000 vs. 5.36/100,000 for non-Natives; and Native gonorrhea rates of 500.83/100,000 vs. 247.52/100,000 for non-Natives. In some states, Native rates were much higher. HIV is spread in exactly the same way as these sexually-transmitted diseases and they provide a clear indication of risk.

Thirty-seven percent of Native American people die before the age of 45. Of the top ten causes of death, at least four are directly the result of alcohol abuse, and most if not all the rest are indirectly the result of substance abuse. In at least some areas of the country, intravenous drug abuse among Native Americans has become a significant problem. Substance abuse is clearly the greatest health problem facing Native Americans and the fact that it is so is another strong argument for the danger of HIV in our population.

HIV INFECTION RATES

HIV infection rates by ethnicity can be gleaned from general population studies. Since October, 1985, the U.S. Department of Defense has tested all applicants for military service for HIV antibodies. The cumulative data from that study for the U.S. as a whole shows that Native American men have the third highest rate of infection after Blacks and Hispanics. In California, the state with the largest Native American population, Native Americans are in second place behind Blacks, but almost tied with them. This study is not a representative sample of the Native American male population, so the results cannot be viewed as a definitive measure of the rate of HIV infection. However, it is interesting to consider that since gay and bisexual men and intravenous drug users are specifically discouraged from joining the Armed Services, the infection rate is surprisingly high.

The Centers for Disease Control has been conducting a survey of blood samples taken from "sentinel" hospitals throughout the U.S. over the past year. Preliminary data from that study, which is more of a representative sample, also shows that Native Americans who are patients at hospitals for non-HIV related conditions have a much higher rate of infection than one would assume from the number of diagnosed AIDS cases.

The Indian Health Service and the Centers for Disease Control are in the midst of a special seroprevalence survey of the Native American population nationwide. The results of that study will give us even more precise information than we have now.

AIDS CASES AMONG NATIVE AMERICANS

By November 1989, Native American cases of AIDS had already doubled over the period of a year. The cumulative number of cases on November 30, 1989, was 156: 4 pediatric cases, and 152 adults. Just over half the adult cases were men infected through sex with infected men. A third of the cases were intravenous drug users of all sexual orientations. Women make up four times the number of diagnosed cases of AIDS in the Native AIDS caseload than they do in the White-Hispanic caseload. An analysis of Native women with AIDS shows that intravenous drug use and having sexual partners who are intravenous drug users in the main route of HIV transmission for women. IV drug use is directly responsible for HIV infection in Native children. There were 8 adult Native cases where transmission was the result of heterosexual sexual activity, 1 male and 7 female, AIDS is not just an urban or a California problem: there have been Native AIDS cases in every region of the U.S., both on reservations and in cities.

THE NATIONAL NATIVE AMERICAN AIDS PREVENTION CENTER

In the Spring of 1987, an effort was initiated from the San Francisco Bay Area to organize a national coalition of concerned Native people around HIV/AIDS prevention. Included in this coalition were Native public health workers, physicians, nurses, substance abuse personnel, tribal leaders, Native people with AIDS, and Native gays and lesbians. Begun as a volunteer effort, representatives sought opportunties to speak to national Indian conferences, provide workshops, involve themselves in policy discussions with government, establish linkages with AIDS efforts in other communities and provide interviews to media about the issue.

By Summer of 1988, the National Native American AIDS Prevention Center (NNAAPC) was organized as a California non-profit corporation and had succeeded in obtaining funds from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. NNAAPC is governed by a 12-member Board of Directors, all of whom are Native American. It has a staff of 7 with offices in Oakland, California, and Minneapolis, Minnesota.

NNAAPC's program design is based on the assumption that it is at the local community level where most of the difficult AIDS prevention work must occur. As a national organization, NNAAPC seeks to provide a stimulus for initiating local HIV prevention programs, to offer access to information, train front-line workers in the field, and provide technical assistance in program development.

In support of providing access to information, NNAAPC's program includes the operation of a national toll-free Indian AIDS Hotline, a clearinghouse for Native-specific HIV/AIDS health education materials, a quarterly newsletter "Season", and limited library and research services. NNAAPC's training program is focused on "Training of Trainers" in order to provide Native America with a pool of qualified Native individuals able to provide AIDS Basics workshops locally or regionally. The technical assistance program targets select Native communities which have expressed interest in developing HIV prevention activities through the involvement of community members in a planning process whose outcome is, ideally, the integration of HIV education into every facet of community life.

The National Indian AIDS Media Consortium (NIAMC), a cooperative effort by NNAAPC and the Native American Press Association, is involing Native-owned newspapers, newsletters, radio and television stations in HIV/AIDS prevention. NIAMC has opened up a new line of communication between the public health sector and the media which we hope will expand in the future to include other health issues.

The work of preventing the spread of HIV cannot be done by one agency or organization. In order to succeed, all of us must assume responsibility for ensuring that no one at risk in our communities becomes infected because they did not know HIV was a Native American problem too or the proper precautions to take. We must also ensure that the values common to us all of compassion, mutual assistance and ensuring the survival of the seventh generation are applied to Native people infected with HIV and living with AIDS the same as for people "suffering" from other diseases.

AIDS can be viewed as a symptom of a larger, underlying health problem. Other symptoms of this underlying problem include teen pregnancy, fetal alcohol syndrome, violence, sexual abuse, accidents and suicide. If we succeed at changing the behaviors which put people at risk for HIV, we will have succeeded at changing the behaviors which are at the root of these other symptoms.

Yes, AIDS is a tragedy. If there is a bright side to this tragedy, it is that we have before us an opportunity to organize to improve the overall health status of our people. Self-determination must include empowering community members to problem-solve and articulate alternative visions for the future, and helping to bring those visions to life. Taking charge of our own health is fundamental to self-determination. It is not health care professionals who will stop AIDS. It is we ourselves who will do so by working together to create the conditions for a healthy future.

(Ronald M. Rowell is with the National Native American AIDS Prevention Center.)

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I believe that this material vividly tells the story.

In the article in Winds of Change that is dated the spring of 1990, it makes some very interesting and compelling statements. Mr. President, 37 percent of native-American people die before the age of 45. I repeat, 37 percent of native-American people die before the age of 45. Of the top 10 causes of death, at least four are directly the result of alcohol abuse and most, if not all, of the rest are indirectly the result of substance abuse.

In at least some areas of the country, intravenous drug abuse among native-Americans has become a significant problem. Substance abuse is clearly the greatest health problem facing North American native-Americans and that fact is another strong argument for the danger of HIV in our population.

Mr. President, the article goes on to say that in California, the State with the largest native-American population, native-Americans are in second place behind blacks, but almost tied with them, clearly indicating that there is a severe and serious problem as far as AIDS and its affliction to our native-American population.

Mr. Wayne Ducheneaux, of the National Congress of American Indians, has stated that this amendment is "critically needed" to provide better care for Indian AIDS victims. The Indian Health Service received less than $1 million in fiscal year 1990 to provide education, counseling, testing, and a limited amount of care for AIDS victims.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I would like to applaud my colleagues on the Labor and Human Resources Committee who have labored long and hard to put together this important legislation—particularly Senators KENNEDY and HATCH. This legislation has literally been several years in the making, under the tireless efforts of our two colleagues. Without their dedication, and willingness to put partisanship behind them, I am sure this bill would not be before us today.

I am pleased to be a cosponsor and supporter of this legislation.

Mr. President, I am sure I am alone in the disbelief I have felt as I have watched this cruel disease spread among our population.

As of March 31 of this year, over 128,000 cases of AIDS have been reported to the Centers for Disease Control. The lives of over 78,000 Americans have already been taken by AIDS. We are told that this year, alone, 50,000 Americans will be diagnosed as having AIDS.

For some, AIDS is contracted due to high risk behaviors—a risk that is in large part preventable. For others, exposure to the human immunodeficiency virus does not involve matters of choice. A prime example is children. Children who are born to drug addicted mothers infected with HIV, or hemophiliacs who received infected blood.

Regardless of how one is exposed to the virus, what follows is tragic. Experts tell us that, while some medications may dramatically slow the progression of the virus, infection with HIV ultimately leads to the terminal illness called AIDS.

Just a couple of weeks ago, the life of a young man named Ryan White was lost to AIDS. We all share in the grief that his family and loved one's must feel over the loss of Ryan. But, his light will shine on, because through Ryan this country has learned a lot about AIDS.

Ryan contracted AIDS at the age of 13 as a result of receiving infected blood during a transfusion. This courageous young man, stricken with a terminal illness, first fought against unfounded fears and prejudice in his attempt to continue going to school with his peers. Then through his tireless efforts he sought to educate and explain the realities of his illness. Such courage for a young man. Such a mark he has left on his fellow man. Together, we learned a lot.

It is, in my opinion, a very fitting tribute that this bill be dedicated to him.

Much has been done in the area of education and prevention, and research into treatments since AIDS was first detected in the early 1980's. Other than repeatedly providing more money for the drug AZT, Congress has yet to address the issue of treatment. That's what this bill is all about.

The reality is that people who contract AIDS need health care and support services. Currently, there is little access to health care except for the assistance which is being provided at the State and local level. In many areas of the country, the only access to such services is through volunteer organizations. Needless to say, the expense of caring for people afflicted with AIDS is great. I have heard the figure of $100,000 quoted—for the treatment of individuals in the end stage of the disease. Most State and local governments find themselves unable to respond to this need given fiscal circumstances. While the Federal Government also has fiscal difficulties, there is need for a coordinated effort at the Federal level.

The core of this legislation is a program which will provide block grants to States for the funding of programs to provide health care and support services. This will ease the fiscal strain at the local level, while still keeping the decisions regarding what types of programs ought to be provided with those closest to the people needing the services.

My State of Arizona, for example, will receive a block grant of $2.7 million. Given the State's current budget crisis, and the need for increased health care and support services for people with AIDS, this support is surely needed.

While I wish there was not a need to be passing a bill like this—there is.

While I wish there was not a disease like AIDS—there is.

While I wish AIDS did not claim the lives of individuals such as Ryan White, for whom affliction is not due to behavioral choices of their own—it does.

Thus, I believe the only responsible thing to do is provide the type of assistance that is contained in this legislation.

Is it a cure all? No way. Individuals, not unlike Ryan, will continue to contract HIV, ultimately develop AIDS, and will perish as a result.

Is there something more we can be doing? You bet.

First, it is imperative that we continue to pursue what Surgeon General Koop referred to as the best weapon against the spread of AIDS—education. We must continue the efforts to inform the American people of how HIV is transmitted.

Second, people need to use this knowledge to make sure that the risk of contracting HIV is virtually nonexistent for them.

Third, we need to continue the research efforts for both a cure and more effective forms of treatment so that we might better serve those who are and do become infected with HIV.

And, fourth, we must continue to improve the safeguards of our blood supply, so that the risk of contracting HIV is nonexistent for those in need of transfusions.

I would like to inquire of my colleagues from Massachusetts and Utah whether I am correct in my belief that it is their intention in proposing this legislation that all Americans be eligible for the services contained in the bill, including native Americans. I yield to my colleague, the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY.

Mr. KENNEDY. The distinguished Senator from Arizona is indeed correct in his assertion. It is fully my intention that native Americans, too, be eligible for participation under this legislation.

I would like to thank the Senator from Arizona for joining us in sponsoring this bill, and for his bringing this particular issue to our attention. I am fully aware of the serious threat facing native Americans with regard to AIDS, and I share the Senators desire to see that native Americans, too, have access to the services authorized under this bill.

I yield to my colleague and good friend, the chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, Senator INOUYE.

Mr. INOUYE. I would like to associate myself with the remarks of my distinguished colleague, and vice chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, Senator MCCAIN.

Mr. President, Indian people have survived many terrible diseases since initial contact with the non-Indian population. Small pox, typhoid, cholera, measles, influenza and tuberculosis have wiped out millions of Indian people over the centuries. Today, we are facing another potential for an epidemic. How we respond to the threat of AIDS in the Indian population will mean the difference between life and death for many Indian men, women, teenagers, children and infants for decades to come.

The threat of HIV infection among the native American population is very serious. Recent studies by the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] have shown that the rates for sexually transmitted disease remain at least twice as high for Native people as for all other ethnic groups combined. This data is extremely troubling to public health officials, because it indicates that little progress has been made in changing behaviors that place individuals at risk for HIV infection.

Mr. President, the CDC estimates that as of January 1990, there were 159 Indian or Alaskan Native people diagnosed with AIDS. This figure does not include the many more who are HIV positive, but who have not yet developed the constellation of symptoms which define full blown AIDS. Public health officials tell us that we can safely estimate that up to 10 times the number of people with AIDS are HIV infected. This would mean that as many as 1,590 Indian people are likely HIV positive today. There are only 1.4 million Indian and Alaska Native people living in the United States. The potential explosion of HIV infection within Indian and Alaska Native populations is of great concern to me and the many Indian leaders with whom I work.

Alcoholism and substance abuse remain the most severe health hazards for native American people today. Our efforts to educate the Native population about the risks of HIV infection must also be done in close cooperation with efforts to those involved with substance abuse prevention. Indeed, the level of our success to preventing AIDS in Indian and Alaska Native populations will depend upon how well we can address alcoholism and substance abuse at the local level. Prevention efforts must work hand in hand to fight the spread of this terrible disease.

I call upon my distinguished colleagues on the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, and on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee to pool our efforts to fight the spread of AIDS among Indian people and to hold joint hearings in the near future to more fully examine what is being done and what needs to take place to better equip Indian communities to fight this disease.

Mr. President, too many of our young have died an early and painful death because of this disease. The Indian population is a young population. I stand in full support of this amendment and thank my colleague from the Indian Affairs Committee for his leadership on the serious threat of AIDS among the Indian and Alaska Native population. I yield to my friend and colleague from the State of Washington [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. I would like to join my distinguished colleagues in support of this important amendment. In the State of Washington there are over 600,000 Indian and Alaska Native people. Half of this population resides in the Puget Sound region, in or around Seattle. I discussed the problems of AIDS in the Indian community when I toured the Seattle Indian Health Board last fall. While I was impressed by the dedication of those providing health care to urban Indians, I was shocked to learn how little funding there is available for services to Indian people who are HIV infected.

The recent data from the Centers for Disease Control paints a bleak picture of the disease in Indian country. Proportionately, the rate of Indian women with AIDS is four times the rate for white women. The method of transmission of the HIV virus among the Indian population is different than for the general public. While only 8 percent of those from white populations infected with the virus became infected through IV drug use, for Indian people with HIV infection 17 percent of them were infected through IV drug use. IV drug use is a serious problem we must all face and deal with in our communities. I am proud to recognize Tacoma and Seattle, WA, as leaders in the effort to combat the spread of AIDS among IV drug users through their needle exchange programs.

The data indicates that for those Indian people who have been diagnozed with AIDS, the vast majority of them become infected in urban areas. For many of these people, they have chosen to return to their tribal reservation communities for the support of their families and to be within their traditional environment. We need to support urban Indian health centers so they can reach out to Indian people who may be infected and provide the counseling and support they need. We must support tribal governments to develop the education and prevention materials necessary to prevent the spread of AIDS, and to help those families who face the hard truth of caring for a loved one with AIDS. We must push the Indian Health Service to move more aggressively in its efforts to integrate an AIDS education and prevention program within its service delivery system.

Mr. President, my heart pours out to all those families and individuals who have to deal firsthand with this terrible disease. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to bring much needed resources to urban reservation Indian communities. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. I am pleased to join in this discussion about the importance of ensuring that native Americans are not denied access to the services provided under this legislation. Doing so was certainly not the intention of this Senator, nor do I believe was it the intention of my friend from Massachusettes. Accordingly, I believe we are prepared to accept this amendment.

But, before I yield the floor, I would first like to applaud the Senator from Arizona for bringing this issue to our attention. There are no stronger advocates in this body for native Americans than the distinguished vice chairman and chairman of the Senate

Select Committee on Indian Affairs. Their individual and collective leadership and bipartisan commitment to addressing the issues facing native Americans is an example to us all.

I yield to my friend, and chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we are indeed prepared to adopt this amendment. It reflects our intention that our Nation's first citizens be afforded the same opportunities under this bill as all others.

But before I yield the floor, I would like to thank my two distinguished colleagues from the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs for their work on this.

And, I would like to suggest that perhaps we take some time in the near future to explore the possibility of holding a joint hearing on the issue of AIDS and its effect of native Americans.

I yield to the distinguished vice chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, and author of this amendment, Senator MCCAIN.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would like to thank my distinguished colleagues, the floor managers and authors of this legislation, for their willingness to accept this amendment. I applaud their tireless efforts on the AIDS issue, and look forward to the possibility of working with them to put together a joint hearing on AIDS and native Americans.

Mr. President, again, I strongly applaud and appreciate the assistance and cooperation of my friend from Massachusetts, as well as that of my friend from Utah, in allowing this language to be inserted so that native Americans and those living in rural areas are able to receive, very frankly, the same services as other Americans.

This problem is one that is very gripping. It is one that is growing. It is one that I think clearly deserves the attention of all Americans.

I thank my friend from Massachusetts and I yield the floor. I ask that the amendment be favorably considered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be favorably considered. It was the intention of the Senator from Utah and myself that the program which we have developed would apply to native Americans. I think the language of the Senator from Arizona clarifies that we are intending not only to deal with individuals residing on the reservation but off the reservation. That is certainly our intention and our hope.

This language and the colloquy along with the excellent statements that are made in support of it by the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] who chairs our Special Committee on Indian Affairs. I know Senator ADAMS and others have taken a particular interest in this issue. I certainly support it. I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator for his concern about the Indian people and for this particular amendment which will ensure that Native Americans will be eligible to receive health care and support services under this bill. I have no problems with this amendment. In fact, I think it is a good amendment, and I hope we will accept it.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1614) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator PRYOR be added as a cosponsor. I believe Senator SIMPSON had already been included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. That brings the total number of cosponsors to 67.

Mr. President, I again reiterate our desire to move ahead with the legislation. There are four Senators who have indicated they have amendments. We are ready to consider those amendments. We hope we can get moving on this legislation which has such a strong and overwhelming degree of support.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1615

(Purpose: To provide for establishment of an intravenous drug abuse waiver that shall apply to certain ADAMHA block grant requirements)

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON], for himself and Mr. WALLOP, proposes an amendment numbered 1615.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER: Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill add:

TITLE —MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. . ADAMHA IV DRUG ABUSE WAIVER.

(a) INTRAVENOUS DRUG USERS.—Section 1916(c)(7) of the Public Health Services Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-4(a)(7)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Secretary shall waive the provisions of the preceding sentence for any State which has submitted application for such a waiver to the Secretary prior to September 30, 1989.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective as of October 1, 1989.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I present this amendment which I think is wholly in keeping with the thrust of the legislation we are considering today. I am pleased that my good friend from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] is a cosponsor of the amendment.

This amendment does one thing and one thing only. It clarifies congressional intent with respect to the waiver provisions under the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Block Grant—that is what it does—assuring that States can use the block grant funds to reach IV drug abusers in the most practical and efficient way.

My colleagues may recall that when Congress last reauthorized the ADAMHA block grant, it changed the allocation formula to target more money to the heavily urbanized areas—primarily the east and west coasts—and created new mandatory set-asides within the grants for specific programs and populations. Among the new set-asides were a requirement for a revolving loan fund to finance construction of group half-way treatment facilities, and a rather large earmark for the treatment of IV drug abusers. These changes to ADAMHA—the allocation formula and the set-asides—were created primarily in response to AIDS. In particular, Congress wanted to help focus States efforts on curbing the spread of AIDS through intravenous needle-sharing.

Congress also wisely included in that same legislation a waiver provision for States which could demonstrate that the set-aside requirements were inappropriate for them. Seven States applied for that waiver. They received them only early this year. The Department of Health and Human Services said that it was unclear about congressional intent with respect to the waiver—even though the record shows clearly that Congress intended the waivers to be presumptive. The Department also indicated that the waivers may, in fact, be withdrawn next year.

Mr. President, the State of Wyoming was one of the States to apply for the waiver. The State has neither an AIDS incidence nor and IV abuse problem of any great proportion, although certainly it is there. Yet under the ADAMHA mandates, the State would have to earmark $200,000 out of a $750,000 substance abuse allocation for treatment of IV drug abusers. Meanwhile, individuals who suffer from alcoholism and related disorders, or who abuse ingestible drugs, will continue to have to wait 6 to 10 weeks between treatment visits.

Mr. President, these bizarre results clearly subvert the intent of the ADAMHA block grant and of the recently enacted changes. When we are talking about grant amounts as comparatively small as those Wyoming and other small States receive, the set-asides and their administrative requirements become extraordinarily inefficient devices for reaching the groups Congress wants to help.

The legislation before us, the AIDS CARE bill, of which I am a cosponsor, clearly recognizes that flexibility is so important and it allows local health agencies to plan how best to meet the demand of AIDS patient care in their own communities. Providers and counselors can either see and treat people, or they can spend their time separating out the Federal money according to set-aside requirements and conforming their books and their practices to the Washington dictum. Certainly the Federal Government should play a leadership role in targeting substance abuse funds, but I certainly object to substituting Federal directives for local understanding of the problem. The sponsors of the AIDS legislation know that State and local health professionals are committed to halting the spread of AIDS, through IV drugs or other transmissions. They just need the resources. They do not want to split hairs on the allocation of funds. They want to treat people.

So this amendment would simply instruct the Secretary of HHS to enforce the letter of the law and grant waivers to those States which have applied for them and which qualify. The amendment thoroughly clarifies congressional intent that States which have documented that they cannot make efficient use of ADAMHA funds earmarked exclusively for IV drug abuse treatment will not be subject to the set-aside mandate.

That is the purpose of the amendment. I would hope that it might be acceptable or voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I urge the Senate to accept this amendment. I think the reasons for it have been well explained by the Senator from Wyoming. The ADAMHA Grant Program deals with drug treatment, alcohol, and mental health needs. This would give a greater flexibility to the States to make adjustments in utilizations of those funds, but it would also provide assurances that those funds would be targeted in particular areas. That is certainly consistent with the ADAMHA Block Grant Program.

I think for the reasons that have been well stated by the Senator from Wyoming we ought to accept that amendment. We are prepared to do so.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his understanding of the plight of the smaller States. He has always been courteous and helpful to me on those types of situations where we have the smaller population and we get caught in the formulas and they are not always efficient. It is very helpful to us.

It is the same amendment that passed the Senate in October of last year, and I appreciate very much the courtesy of the Senator from Massachusetts in including it at this time also.

Mr. President, I am sure that he will work diligently to preserve that in the conference activities.

Mr. KENNEDY. With that urging, it is almost assured of becoming law.

I thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment (No. 1615) was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the distinguished manager about whether they intend to proceed at this time on the bill for further amendments? If not, I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed as though in morning business, very briefly.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we are grateful to the Senator from Wyoming for responding to the invitation of Senator HATCH and myself to dispose of that amendment. We know that there are several more amendments that need to be disposed of and we are eager to address those amendments. But right now there is no current pending amendment and if the Senator would want to make comments on other matters, we have no objection.

Mr. DIXON. I thank the manager.

I see the distinguished Senator from North Carolina on the floor. I know he has contemplated amendments. I do not mean to impose on his or any other Senator's time. My matter will be brief, but will not be on the subject at hand.

Mr. HELMS. If the Senator will yield, there would be no imposition whatsoever. I suggest the Senator proceed.

Mr. DIXON. I thank my friend from North Carolina and I thank my friend the distinguished manager.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed as though in morning business for a brief period of time—and I assure the manager it will be brief—on another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LET PRIVATE LAWYERS PROSECUTE S&L FRAUD

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, in perusing the New York Times today, I noticed on the editorial page of the New York Times of today, Tuesday, May 15, page A24, a letter from an associate professor of economics at Georgia State University, Mr. Mark E. Schaefer, who wrote this letter from Georgia State University in Atlanta on May 5, 1990, entitled "Let Private Lawyers Prosecute S&L Fraud."

To the Editor:

Attorney General Richard Thornburgh says the Government is unlikely to prosecute all the more than 1,300 major savings-and-loan fraud cases for lack of staff (news story, April 27). I suggest that private lawyers bid to handle these cases for a percentage of the recovery. The higher they estimate the chance of winning a case or the size of the judgment, the more they will want that case and the lower will be the percentage they will bid as their contingency fee.

The taxpayer's burden will be eased a bit and the typical citizen's confidence in the legal system will be increased by seeing that justice was served upon the perpetrators of the biggest white-collar crime wave in the history of the United States.

MARK E. SCHAEFER,
Associate Professor of Economics,
Georgia State University.

ATLANTA, May 5, 1990.

Mr. President, I do not necessarily suggest that we follow the course suggested by Professor Schaefer, but I do suggest that the time has come for this administration to follow some course with respect to what is precisely, as described in this letter, "the biggest white-collar crime wave in the history of the United States."

Mr. President, when we had the confirmation debate on Timothy Ryan, I said, no reflection on the man, this is the biggest scandal in the history of this country. Teapot Dome, small potatoes; Watergate, small potatoes; Iran controversy, small potatoes. The biggest crime, the State of Idaho fields of potatoes, is the thrift scandal, the S&L scandal, with nothing being done.

This professor suggests something we ought to do. I remind my colleagues that in the debate on the supplemental appropriation bill the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] and this Senator from Illinois, suggested that we take $30 million, being in my view, squandered on tourist promotion for Panama, spend $30 million to hire FBI agents and assistant prosecuting attorneys and specialists to send people to jail that turned loose upon America this savings and loan scandal.

Mr. President, there are thousands of people out there right now sitting around sipping martinis and eating fancy lunches in all the best restaurants in America, driven there in chauffeur-driven limousines, who will spend the night on their yachts that ought to be in jail because of this scandal. There are billions of dollars out there that ought to be collected in the deep pockets of rich people who stole it from America in this scandal, and nothing is being done.

Now I want to just say this in conclusion. A week or so ago, I do not remember the precise date, we had Joe Corrigan, chairman of the New York Fed district—a very bright, smart man, who understands all about the financial institutions in this country and what needs to be done to improve the quality of our institutions, what needs to be done to improve regulation with respect to our financial institutions—testify and members of the Banking Committee, including this Senator, asked him questions.

We said, how did this scandal come about; this terrible thrift scandal, this scandal that even now has the leaders of the two parties meeting at the White House with the administration people trying to figure out what to do about the budget because of the impact of this scandal on interest rates, the budget deficit, and other important things that affects the pocketbooks of everybody in these galleries, and people all over America.

That man said the biggest reason for this scandal—there are other reasons—the major reason is the lack of supervisory and regulatory effort during this decade.

Now, I remind you, Mr. President, that is on this administration's watch. This is the decade, beginning with 1980, in which this tragedy has taken place. It is not unreasonable for Members of the Senate to come to the floor from time to time, and I hope others will, to say nothing is being done of importance and that the country demands prosecutions of the crooks, lawsuits under the reasonably prudent man rule against people of wealth, cunning people who set forth the forces in America to take this money and to cause this problem.

Other things will trigger me to come here again, Mr. President. This little article, which I am going to put in the RECORD, written by Professor Schaefer—I never met the man—associate professor of economics at Georgia State University, at least he is trying something, Mr. President. He has an idea. He wrote the New York Times. He went to a lot of trouble. Somebody has to have some ideas around here about what we are going to do.

I call upon those—and I do not point out any particular person—in this administration to send people to jail, to prosecute people, to sue people, so that the American public ultimately can say we did our best to correct this wrong that took place.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter from Prof. Mark E. Schaefer, Georgia State University, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LET PRIVATE LAWYERS PROSECUTE S&L FRAUD

To the Editor:

Attorney General Richard Thornburgh says the Government is unlikely to prosecute all the more than 1,300 major savings-and-loan fraud cases for lack of staff (news story, April 27). I suggest that private lawyers bid to handle these cases for a percentage of the recovery. The higher they estimate the chance of winning a case or the size of the judgment, the more they will want that case and the lower will be the percentage they will bid as their contingency fee.

The taxpayer's burden will be eased a bit and the typical citizen's confidence in the legal system will be increased by seeing that justice was served upon the perpetrators of the biggest white-collar crime wave in the history of the United States.

MARK E. SCHAEFER,
Associate Professor of Economics,
GEORGIA STATE UNIVERSITY.

ATLANTA, May 5, 1990.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to extend morning business for another 2 or 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

TOURISM

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise today to applaud my colleagues for joining with Senator ROCKEFELLER and me on S. 1791, the Travel Policy and Export Promotion Act of 1990.

I am proud to have been a part of updating the tourism policy for this great country of ours. Tourism is an industry that involves so many segments of our work force and yet it is taken for granted by leaders of our country, industry itself, and the general populous.

Those of us who rely on tourism for our States well-being and economic health need to work double time to increase the awareness and appreciation for what a large industry tourism is.

In March of this year, the Department of Commerce reported that travel and tourism commanded a trade surplus for the first time in 29 years, to the tune of $1.2 billion. It led agriculture in export earnings.

This gives us living proof that tourism is alive and well in America today. Now our job and commitment is to make sure that tourism is given every chance to maintain and even increase its performance.

It is only proper that we are passing this bill during National Tourism Week. I encourage all of my colleagues as well as those who make their living from tourism to get out and promote your industry. It all counts, and every little effort makes a difference.

Many people do not know they belong to such a fast growing and lucrative business. The guy who fries hamburgers at the local fast food restaurant, the housekeeper who cleans rooms in the local motels, the guy who works road construction in Montana, or the airline pilot who flies businessmen and vacationers into West Virginia; they are all a part of this great business of tourism and probably do not even think about it.

We have to make everyone working in these types of jobs aware of themselves and the important job they do to produce a $1.2 billion surplus in U.S. tourism. It takes all of us.

I am glad to see the efforts that USTTA and others are making to develop tourism through small business in rural America. Their national rural tourism study has been a great step foward in bringing growth to the rural areas of this country.

There are many States like Montana, Wyoming, the Carolinas, and others that have a hard time drawing visitors away from the crowded metropolitan hot spots. Especially the foreign visitors.

It takes a concentrated effort to build awareness and educate travelers, whether they are business or pleasure travelers, to the idea of venturing into the unknown, lesser traveled areas of our country. We are pretty good folks once you get out and meet us. I know they will like us once they find us.

Today it is more important than ever that rural States like my home of Montana and others look seriously at diversifying their economic development resources. In my home State we have miles and miles of open roads and beauty and splendor that not many States have left to offer.

It is important that we do not stop with this one piece of legislation to support tourism. In future months I will be working with my colleagues to bring about changes that will help support the changes that are needed to encourage growth and prosperity in tourism. We need to build incentive for business men and women to open businesses and take on leadership roles that will help build this industry's future.

We need to encourage innovative and creative thinking and action. But in order for this creativity to succeed we need to offer support and leadership in the right places. We need to be creative in our thinking here in the Congress.

I ask my colleagues here today to act with me in the future. I know we can make a difference.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY ACT OF 1990

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 1616

(Purpose: To amend title II of S. 2240 to allow the use of funds for chronic illnesses in States with fewer than 100 AIDS cases)

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP], for himself and Mr. SYMMS, proposes an amendment numbered 1616.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(a) On page 44, line 2, after the word "areas", add the following: ", and for other purposes".

(b) On page 44, line 4, strike "A State" and insert the following: "Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), a State".

(c) On page 45, after line 2, add the following new subsection:

"(b) CARE GRANTS FOR PEOPLE WITH CHRONIC OR TERMINAL DISEASES OR CONDITIONS.—

"(1) A State which fewer than 100 cases of AIDS have been reported to and confirmed by the Secretary for the two most recent fiscal years for which such data is available may use its allocations as determined under section 2548(b) to provide comprehensive care (such as home and community based services, therapeutic treatments, and early diagnosis and early intervention services) to people with severe chronic or terminal illnesses or conditions, including, but not limited to:

(A) HIV disease;

(B) Alzheimers disease;

(C) Diseases of the cardiovascular system;

(D) Cancer;

(E) Respiratory illnesses.

"(2) The Secretary shall not make a grant under this subsection for a fiscal year unless the State proposes and submits to the Secretary an application, in such time, in such form, and containing such agreements, assurances and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this subsection.".

(d) On page 45, line 3, redesignate subsection (b) as subsection (c) and insert after "A State" the following: "that receives a grant under subsection (a)".

(e) On page 53, line 25, after the word "under", insert the following: "subsection 2541(a) of".

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, there is said to be about 1 million Americans infected with the HIV virus. However, State-by-State infection and caseloads vary significantly. The virus is essentially concentrated in urban areas among the gay population and among low-income drug abusers. My State of Wyoming has had 13 AIDS cases, according to latest report from the Centers for Disease Control, and 13 cities in America accounted for 55 percent of all the AIDS cases.

So, as with many chronic diseases, those with HIV disease face limited home and community-based services due to problems with capacity and insurance coverage. The bill before us is obviously designed to fund a new financial assistance program to urban areas, an emergency bailout, if you will, for the cities. Funding essentially will only go to cities with at least 2,000 AIDS cases, and since the entire State of Wyoming has only 13, the State of Wyoming receives not one red cent under this title.

In order to gather enough support to pass this bailout, the bill also includes a title to provide health funding to all regions, urban, and rural, for a new HIV program.

The bill authorizes $300 million for the urban bailout program and $300 million for the national assistance program. Any State seeking to qualify for funding under title II must go through five hoops to receive any funds.

They must, first, establish an HIV CARE Program for the State. They must, second, provide home and community-based services for HIV patients. They must, third, develop a program to ensure continuation of health insurance coverage for HIV patients. They must, fourth, provide therapies for low-income patients, and fifth, and last, they must establish a diagnostic and intervention program for HIV patients.

Mr. President, if you would, contemplate for a minute how that would affect Wyoming with 13 cases. It is an incredibly complicated and expensive structure that we would have to create to deal with 13 AIDS cases. Even if my State could afford this vast new health infrastructure, many, many, many other health needs would have to be neglected in order to provide this service for 13 people. Those who have heart disease or cancer or all kinds of other chronic ailments in Wyoming are going to be robbed of the services the State could provide for them in order to qualify for any funds under this program. It is simply ludicrous that we would require a State to create such a structure.

The Wallop amendment, just introduced, would allow the funds provided under this bill to be used to develop services for all chronic illnesses including AIDS. It is a more effective use of the health resources in the small population of a rural State. It is a fair and intelligent application of the funds to be appropriated under this act to take care of the health needs of Americans, including those with AIDS, but in particular in those States and areas where the number of patients is so small and yet the number of patients with other chronic diseases is so large.

What makes AIDS so special that you must ignore the needs of the rest of Americans? What makes it so special that you have to abandon those with heart disease, with cancer, with lung disease, with chronic eye disease in order to take care of 13 people? The care network necessary to qualify for title II funding is incredibly expensive, a system completely unavailable to many individuals suffering from other chronic illnesses. States such as mine with small HIV populations simply will not have the resources to develop such an extensive program for this selected sick population.

The Wallop amendment would allow all States with small HIV populations, States with fewer than 100 AIDS cases—and there are about 10 States like that in all—to use the funds under this act for a program to assist any individual in the State with a chronic illness. The State, exercising its own sense of responsibility, would be able to assist HIV cases as well as other individuals with serious chronic illness. It is a more sensible expenditure of limited resources. It is a more humane, it is a more moral, it is a more intelligent use of resources than are going to take place under this legislation as it now exists.

The amendment would guarantee that those States such as mine and the other nine with very few HIV cases would be able to utilize resources provided by this legislation. Absent that, you condemn not only those patients within our States with HIV virus but the rest of Americans to a substandard health system because we have decided that AIDS and AIDS alone is special and deserving of another kind of treatment.

I do not know why the proposers of this legislation would do that, but I have an amendment which would resolve that inequity and resolve that lack of common sense inherent in this piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second. There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, addressing the concerns which have been expressed by the Senator from Wyoming, in the fashioning and shaping of this legislation, we have recognized that, for example, in Wyoming they may have a number of cases that are not formally reported. The fact remains, as the national commissions have pointed out, individuals will find out that they are HIV positive in a different part of the country and then move back to where they may have had an earlier residency or go back to their family or go back to their friends. And under these circumstances, the numbers are not reported or allocated to those particular States.

That is becoming an increasing phenomenon, the national commissions have recognized that, so have the Centers for Disease Control. What we recognize, or at least believe, is that is happening in all parts of the country. Given the flow line and the projections in terms of the expansion of this particular disease, the States need to develop the kinds of programs in the rural areas so that they can deal effectively with the expected demands.

We had addressed the issue earlier in the debate that this was only going to be targeted into major urban areas. We tried to point out in the committee's report that the greatest expansion is in the rural areas and in the smaller communities. That is a dramatic expansion over the period of the last years. In the urban areas, the increase is about 5 percent; in certain rural areas, 35 percent or more.

That is happening around the country. So many of our colleagues recognize that, and noticed that we were attempting to legislate in a particular way, not only to develop programs that are going to reach out to those rural areas but also to get ahead of the curve so that programs will be in place even in some areas where this particular disease has not yet emerged in full force.

We are finding, as we mentioned earlier, that people are contracting this illness in one part of the country and then going back to other communities, whether it is in Wyoming, or in other rural communities. That phenomenon is taking place.

The way that this has been addressed in the legislation for the State of Wyoming is a useful way to proceed. We therefore find that this amendment would not be justified.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a second? I think what he does not understand is what I am trying to do. Under the wildest set of circumstances any assumptions that he would lay down Wyoming would not be able to set up this kind of structure for the numbers of people that might come back to the States with AIDS. So in effect, first he is, No. 1, assigning them to die somewhere else if that is their fate or come back to the State of Wyoming without any care at all.

We could probably with this kind of flexibility set up an infrastructure for people with chronic diseases in other States with small populations in which AIDS patients could fit. Without it we simply are not going to have that as a situation. It seems dramatically unfair, and it seems dramatically lacking in sort of, I do not accuse the Senator of this, just the circumstances of structure—the lacking in common sense, whereas we could do a lot with this money by way of assisting in setting up these kind of structures for my State and those who might return to my State with this. We could have a structure in place. I can assure the Senator of that.

You are in essence saying anybody who might think to come home again to Wyoming or other small population States best stay away, best stay in the urban centers because the infrastructure will not exist. Yet, the dual purpose which my amendment seeks to be able to achieve just might make it possible for people of all chronic diseases to have the kind of benefits that one seeks just for AIDS patients, and there is a small population of infection. It happens.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments. I hear the message. The fact is those individuals who have AIDS are already in Wyoming. I certainly believe the Senator knows the situation much better than I would hope to know it, but what we are seeing in parts of the country is that people are moving back like we saw just a few years ago—moving back to their families, to their homes, to their home communities.

This is what we found in talking with the State health officials, and when reviewing this kind of a program the amount of resources that will be available under this measure are going to be limited, even in Wyoming's circumstance. They believe that it was valuable and useful to develop the kinds of systems for treatment and care. That is why this was shaped in that particular way.

But I see my friend and colleague from Utah who knows that area in that region of the country as well. I would be glad to hear what he has to say.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as I understand it there are 32 known cases of AIDS in Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. I think it is 13, if I may interrupt.

Mr. HATCH. Our figure from the Public Health Service is 32. But even if it is 13 let me just say that according to the Public Health Service, for each case that is known, there is at least 1 other case that is unknown—there may be as many as 10 other unknown cases. The estimated cost of health care for each AIDS patient ranges from a low of $27,000 to almost $150,000 per patient. We are hoping that this bill will help bring those costs down. We are hoping new pharmaceuticals will help bring the cost down. We are hoping competition will bring the cost down. We are hoping that by helping the major metropolitan statistical areas that have major cost problems due to caring for people with AIDS, this bill will help bring down the cost.

But right now as of today the cost to take care of a patient with AIDS is between $27,000 and $150,000 per patient. Part of the reason for that variance is the use of alternative health care delivery models, such as home health care, which in some cases has reduced the cost tenfold. Title II provides for the development and use of such alternatives.

The cost for just a 1-year supply of AZT is $8,000—actually $8,000 to $10,000 per year per patient. The cost of providing AZT to those who are currently infected with the virus could run up to $15 billion per year in 5 years if we do not get control of the AIDS problem. Should we pass this bill, we will be making an attempt to deter or stop these costs. Other promising drugs are on the horizon but unfortunately they will probably be just as costly as AZT at the outset.

Under title II of this bill, Wyoming would be entitled to as I understand it $100,000. If I am right that there are 32 known cases of AIDS in Wyoming, then there probably really are 64 cases and the likelihood is it could be as high as somewhere around 320. Wyoming is going to need not only every dime of the $100,000 they get under this bill, but they are going to need more help than that unless this bill is effective, along with the other AIDS bills, in bringing the AIDS problem under control and finally some way to resolve them.

Mr. President, as much as I respect what my colleague and good friend from Wyoming is trying to do, I regretfully have to oppose his amendment which would allow that funds under title II could be used to provide comprehensive care to people with chronic and terminal disease and conditions in addition to HIV disease. He would allow funds from the bill to be used for treating Alzheimer's disease, diseases of the cardiovascular system, cancer and respiratory illnesses if the State has less than 100 cases of AIDS.

I have to oppose this amendment because it is not consistent with the objective of this bill. The CARE bill is not only about caring for those who have the disease now, but also those who become HIV infected in the months and years ahead. Mr. President, we have been told that there may be one unreported care for every reported case of AIDS, and it could be as high as 10 unreported cases for every reported case of AIDS.

I think the 10 is a high figure, and one is certainly, in my opinion, a low figure. But as bad as this epidemic has already been, the worst is yet to come. The first 100,000 cases of AIDS occurred over the first 9 years of our knowledge of it. The next 100,000 cases of AIDS are expected to occur within the next 15 months—less than 1½ years from today. This bill will put into place needed services to meet the oncoming flood of AIDS.

I also want to point out that we have made a concerted effort in this bill to also make funds available for small towns and rural communities. We have heard that people are returning to their families for care during the terminal phase of their disease, and others in these communities are being diagnosed with AIDS. Right now in rural areas there are few services for them or their families.

So if my colleague would be willing, I would consider allowing the States to use the money for other AIDS-related activities, for instance public information and education programs. However, I cannot support the Senator's amendment in its current form, as much as I know it is sincere and well-intentioned. I also agree with him that we have to do more about Alzheimer's disease, cardiovascular disease, cancer and respiratory illnesses. However, this is one approach toward public health that we have to take, and we are doing a lot in those other disease areas. We passed an Alzheimer's bill back in 1984 or 1985, as I recall—maybe it was 1986. That bill was to help us with the Alzheimer's problem.

So to make a long story short, I would like to help my colleague. I could help if he would agree to a modification of his amendment. I cannot speak for the Senator from Massachusetts, but I would be favorably disposed to support the use of title II funds for educational and public information purposes, to help people to be more cognizant of and informed about the problems involving AIDS.

I want to keep the funds under this bill for AIDS programs because there are little enough moneys in this bill to take care of the AIDS problems around this country, as it is. I suggest that the minimum amount of money that the State of Wyoming will get is not going to be enough to help Wyoming to resolve its future AIDS problems. So I hope that my colleague would consider this suggested modification. Otherwise, I will have to oppose this amendment.

Mr. WALLOP addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. I thank the Chair.

Once in a while on the floor of the Senate, it just becomes sad to watch what we do. I have no illusions about where this amendment is going to go. The bill is tailored to the urban areas and, in fact, Salt Lake City may be an urban area of sufficient consequence; that is, they will get enough out of this bill to do something. I beg the Senators to remember that there are States in America that do not qualify on the same kinds of grounds and bases.

I can contest the figure of my friend. There has been 32 cases over the decade in Wyoming known to exist to date. We will never qualify for that $100,000 he so generously wishes to lay on us. And neither will most of the other States who have the same low populations, whether or not their people with AIDS come home again.

Let me read the five hoops that a State has to jump through and ask the Presiding Officer or the two people who sit in management of this bill if they think there is one chance in a thousand that these States are going to be able to utilize this money: To establish an HIV CARE Program for the State. We might be able to do that. To provide home and community-based services for HIV patients.

Where, Mr. President, are we going to find money to establish home and community-based services in all the hundreds of little communities in Wyoming when there is only 13 people known to have it now? How are we going to find and establish this thing statewide in order to qualify for our generous $100,000? How are we going to develop a program to ensure continuation of health insurance coverage for HIV patients with our and for our $100,000?

Probably, we already have therapies for low-income HIV patients. I do not really know that. But to establish a diagnostic and intervention program for HIV patients, Mr. President, when one looks at these requirements, they are absurd on their face for the small States, which we seek to address in this amendment. And the Senator from Utah should remember that.

Besides Salt Lake City, the rest of his State will be the same kind of model. You cannot sort of drop a program of community-based services all over a rural State and expect it to wait until somebody comes home. No State can afford that kind of money. So the Senator from Utah says that this amendment is not consistent with the objectives of his bill.

I have to add, what is so special about AIDS that others who suffer from chronic disease deserve to be ignored? What is so special about AIDS that these people have to be ignored? We could establish community-based services with the help of a little Federal money for people with chronic disease. But, no, you have to have AIDS before you can have assistance. You cannot have the chronic diseases that afflict the rest of Americans.

This piddly little $100,000 that is so generously bestowed upon them will not reach a soul, not one soul, because the requirements are too expensive, and they will take away from the health care aids of people who are sick from other causes. It will take away from the limited resources that Wyoming has to spend, and other rural States, I suspect, as well.

So if the managers of this bill cannot see it in their hearts to accept this amendment, they are saying in fact what some of us have believed from the beginning, that this is the bill for the urban areas, and it is designed to attract those folks and to ignore the health needs, chronic health needs, of the great vast majority of Americans who live in rural States or who live in rural circumstances in urban areas.

Why a system would be good for an AIDS patient but not for a cancer patient escapes the understanding of this Senator, just flat escapes me. We could be setting up the kinds of broad health-based coverage, especially in rural States, that would take care of chronic disease sufferers, but we cannot do that, because AIDS is too special.

So let the people who might come home to Wyoming with AIDS stay where they are; we are not going to have this kind of program. And if this is the kind of program you need, we are not going to be able to set it up. So stay away. Do not come home again.

My amendment seeks to address that without invading the bill's principle or purpose, just so that chronic disease sufferers in the rural States can have the same kind of treatment, and that we can begin to afford to set up the sort of infrastructure that works not only for AIDS sufferers but for patients who have other chronic diseases.

I urge the sponsors to reconsider and to listen to the arguments and not to be so stuck on the principle that they started with that they cannot deal with the real needs of Americans who live in States that do not have large populations of HIV sufferers. It is not an invasion on the objectives of the bill. It is meant to enhance and cooperate with them so that the Americans who live in my State might have the benefit of the flexibility that this amendment seeks to achieve.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to prolong this, but I was one of the original sponsors when we were so overrun by the Federal Government that we lost help especially in public-land States such as Utah, Nevada, Wyoming, almost all of the Western States. So there is nobody who feels more deeply about what we should be doing for the public-land States or the Western States or the smaller States than I do.

But this is a rural bill. It is both urban and rural. We do take care of the 13 largest cities because they have a crisis on their hands. They are being overwhelmed and they need the help. We also take care of other communities, including rural areas. We insisted on this in title II; half of the money of this bill goes to help with problems just exactly like the Senator from Wyoming is talking about.

Mr. WALLOP. Will the Senator yield for just a question?

Mr. HATCH. If I could just finish my statement, because I think I can make it clear. This legislation reflects the fact that AIDS is not just affecting citizens in urban areas where in the past public attention has been focused. But AIDS has penetrated rural America.

From figures from the Centers for Disease Control from 1989, show that AIDS increased at a rate of 5 percent in metropolitan areas, but in nonmetropolitan areas it increased at a rate of 37 percent. We are concerned about that in this bill.

True; Wyoming, because it has a minimum number of AIDS cases reported, gets less money. It gets the minimum amount of money. But even that amount of money will not take care of the AIDS problem that they have in their State. Nor will the amount of money that we give to all the other States. We are trying to do the best we can within budgetary constraints to do something about this horrendous problem.

I want to make it clear it is not just 13 cases. There were 22 new cases of AIDS in Wyoming in 1989 through 1990.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, I am happy to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Does the Senator not agree with me that the five examples that were proposed by the Senator from Wyoming are basically just options? There is no requirement in this legislation that requires the State of Wyoming to implement every one of those different proposals. That flexibility is left up to the State of Wyoming. They have 30-odd cases that are there in Wyoming. The minimum provided is $100,000. The public health officials in Wyoming may say let us provide the AZT and that can be it. That is meeting the requirements under this legislation.

I was concerned earlier in the course of the debate when they said we cannot use all the $100,000 and later in the debate they say, look, this is just a pitiful amount of resources and then to suggest that we are putting in five different requirements. That is not in the legislation.

Does the Senator not agree with me that those particular provisions are basically to guide the States in possibly areas where those resources can be used?

Mr. HATCH. I do agree.

Mr. KENNEDY. Under this legislation, if the State health authorities said that this should be used just for AZT or counseling or some visiting nurse programs, that would certainly meet the requirements.

So I think we want to disabuse our colleagues of the idea that we have established some rigid kinds of requirements under the legislation, because they just are not there.

Mr. HATCH. I think the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has said it appropriately. We tried to make this bill as nonintrusive as we can and tried to give the States flexibility.

I have to correct my earlier remark. I said in 1989 through 1990 there were 22 new cases of AIDS. It was from 1988 up to now there are 22 new cases of AIDS. This according to the surveillance report for Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

In fact, I will just read table 1, which says "AIDS cases and annual rates per 100,000 population, by State, reported April 1988 through March 1989, April 1989 through March 1990; and cumulative totals, by State and age group, through March 1990." From 1980 to March 30, 1990, there are 22 new cases. The Senator is correct that there are 32 cases of adults and adolescents cumulative totals since we have been keeping track of these things.

The point I am making is that Wyoming needs this money for the AIDS problem. We do not want to take away from the thrust of this bill. It will not be enough support even at that, but it is the best we can do under budgetary constraints. The amount we are giving to these large cities will not be enough to really solve their difficulties but it is certainly going to alleviate to the best of our ability a lot of the problems.

I caution the distinguished Senator from Wyoming that what he wants to do sounds good, but his people out there in Wyoming are not going to feel very good without receiving at least a minimum amount under this bill for their AIDS problem. They will not want to use it, it seems to me, for other purposes.

One of the major reasons for the dramatic 37 percent increase in AIDS in rural America is that people with AIDS are returning from the cities to their families in the small towns and rural areas to live until they die.

If we made an exception for Wyoming in this bill, does that mean the people from Wyoming who have AIDS are going to go to other States that are nearby that are going to accept this money? It would be preferable for us to raise the additional moneys that the Senator from Wyoming needs in the areas of Alzheimer's, cardiovascular disease, respiratory problems, or whatever else, and put them in appropriate bills to solve those problems. We are willing to do that.

I think we have been doing that. There have been omnibus health bills almost every year that I have been on the Labor Committee. I know, because when I was chairman of the committee we would include 9 or 10 bills at the end of each session of the Congress in one omnibus health bill and an Alzheimer's bill was one of them. We are doing work in this area.

I do not want to prolong this. I think we ought to vote on this and let the Senate work its will. My recommendation is to let this bill be for what it is supposed to be. Yes, we have taken into consideration the needs of 13 cities with the largest numbers of AIDS cases, but also half of the money is for community-based services, including home health care and including care for AIDS patients in rural communities.

I think we are going to find that the bill will work better if we do not try to put exceptions in it at this particular point and take away any amount of money from the purpose of helping with AIDS.

There is not one State that gets this money that will not be able to use it on their AIDS problem. There is not one State where the money is going to be everything they need to solve the problem. But all States will benefit if we pass this bill and move forward so that we can literally make a dent in what really is going on in our country with regard to AIDS.

I am prepared to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP].

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I hate to argue with two lawyers as to what their bill says. But I contend to them that they have established these as requirements and they well know it. Section 2541, general use of grants, it says the State shall use amounts provided under grants made under this subpart: First, to establish HIV care consortia; second, provide community-based service; third, develop assistance; fourth, provide therapeutic treatment, et cetera; and fifth, to integrate earlier diagnosis intervention for individuals.

The way I read this—and lawyer or no lawyer—it says that all of those things are requirements. It does not say "or." Their bill has these as requirements and Wyoming and the people in our State who have AIDS will never see a dime of this money. Neither will the other States who have these low populations of AIDS sufferers.

I do not want to get into an argument of reading statistics. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the statistics that have been reported to us—and we have the same as his—do not show us with the AIDS patients in the numbers which he has quoted. We have, I assume, the same thing that anybody else does. It is provided by the Centers for Disease Control.

Mr. HATCH. Why do we not put it in the RECORD? I will ask unanimous consent that we put table 1, HIV Surveillance Report, April 1990, in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. WALLOP. I am reading from it. It said they had nine from February 1988 to January 1989.

Mr. HATCH. I have 10. And then from April through March of 1989 to 1990, I have 12. So that makes 22.

Mr. WALLOP. We do not know what that is. I am reading from "HIV/AIDS Surveillance" issued in February of this year by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

It shows for the decade, cumulative totals, 31, no children under 13 years old have had it. It does not say how many are still alive out of all that. I am not even sure that makes a difference. Because the fact of it is that we have fewer than the 100 cases, as my amendment specifies, and their bill requires each of these hoops to be jumped through.

Perhaps the Senator might entertain changing the "and" on line 21, page 44, to "or" and they might have an argument that the bill does not require each of those hoops to be jumped through, that they are in fact voluntary and not specific.

Mr. HATCH. I request such modification.

Mr. WALLOP. My guess is the Senator would have to do that.

Mr. HATCH. I would be happy to do that. I do not have any problem with that.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I have made my arguments, and they are really rather simple, that these States that have small populations, these rural States, probably are not going to see a dime of this even with the modification. And principally they are denying other chronic disease sufferers as well as AIDS patients the kind of services that might develop out of this.

In fact, the amendment that they have agreed to place in the bill would make it even more likely that the AIDS sufferers in rural States would have these benefits if the other chronic disease sufferers of those States had to as well, because we could set up the infrastructure and afford it.

It is really the States with 450,000 people with 13 or 30 cases that are not going to be able to afford that kind of infrastructure even in part. But we could do it should it be within the capability of the State to provide that for chronic disease sufferers.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to clarify, if there is a need for clarification, those particular interrelated provisions.

In the report, at page 23, however, the committee does say that:

It is the committee's intent that the States use these dollars for only those purposes specifically defined in this statute. However, the committee does not require that each State implement all five of the eligible programs. In addition, the State need not set up separate district programs for infants, children, women, and families with HIV disease.

So that is clearly our intention in the language. We will consult with the staff to ensure that what is represented in that report is achieved in the legislation.

We do want to point out, Mr. President, that if you take pediatrics, a baby in a hospital, I do not know what the cost would be in Wyoming, but I would doubt very much whether it is under $1,000 a day. In most of the major urban areas, it is $1,200 or $1,300 dollars a day. We are talking about a lifetime care cost of $100,000.

It would just seem to me that in terms of looking at even the current kind of demand, what are we going to be facing in terms of the projections which have been made by those that have given this their close attention? From a demographic point of view, those resources could be effectively utilized or spent. We have tried to leave it up—as the Senator from Utah has mentioned—leave it up to the States to indicate how they best think that those resources could be spent in that particular area.

We have tried to respond to what my friend and colleague from Utah has pointed out, and that is the greatest growth for this is coming in rural communities around the country, and we wanted to be responsive to that particular fact. We clearly have not met all of the demands, I say to the Senator from Wyoming, but I think it is appropriate that we maintain this particular approach, which has the support of all of the health officials universally across the country, in rural areas and small States, as well as large States. They supported this particular approach.

For those reasons, I hope that this amendment will be defeated.

I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 1617

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has made a good point. The word "and" is in there. This was not the intention of either the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, myself, or anybody on our committee. So I send an amendment to the desk which will change that—which reads: "On page 44, line 21, strike the term 'and' and insert in lieu thereof 'or' "—and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment at this time?

If not, the pending amendment is set aside.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for himself and Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 1617.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 44, line 21 strike the term "and" and insert in lieu thereof "or".

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the adoption of this technical amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1617) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1616

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I presume we are ready to vote.

Mr. SYMMS. I would like to speak for a couple of minutes.

Mr. President, I compliment my colleague from Wyoming on behalf of myself and my constituents in Idaho for offering this amendment and making what I think is a very important point.

Mr. President, I rise today in support of the goal of this legislation. I agree that AIDS is a serious problem in many parts of the country. It is very difficult to watch innocent people suffer without being able to help them or ease their pain. AIDS has taken many lives in a relatively short time; it is a growing problem which must be dealt with.

It is especially painful to see children suffer from this devastating disease, through no fault of their own. Those who are born with the virus or were infected at a young age through a blood transfusion have no hope of living a full and happy life. My heart goes out to these kids and their families.

This bill provides for the treatment of AIDS victims. It authorizes funds to be available to States in the form of CARE grants. In applying for a CARE grant, each State must provide a comprehensive plan which includes: Establishing HIV care consortia to provide care, providing home and community-based services to people with the HIV virus, developing and supporting mechanisms to assure continued health insurance coverage, providing HIV therapies to low-income people, and integrating diagnosis of HIV disease and early intervention with existing primary care and support services.

The bill provides each State with a specified amount of money based on the number of AIDS cases reported within the past 2 fiscal years. If the bill is fully funded, I understand that my State of Idaho is eligible for about $170,000. While this money would be helpful, the comprehensive plan will be expensive and difficult to achieve with only $170,000.

Currently, Idaho has an office under the State division of health which provides services to HIV infected persons. It operates entirely on Federal funds and serves 30 HIV infected people in the State. Obviously, Idaho does not have the problem that many States are currently facing. It does however, have other needs in health care which need to be addressed.

This would include such things as Alzheimer's disease, cancer, cardiovascular disease, and respiratory illnesses. To put this in perspective, Idaho has had 36 deaths due to the AIDS virus within the last 2 years. In comparison, the number of deaths caused by cancer in 1988 alone was 1,615.

I join my colleague, the Senator from Wyoming, in introducing an amendment to this bill which would allow States which have fewer than 100 reported cases of AIDS in the past 2 fiscal years to use the funds allocated for other chronic or terminal diseases. This is not to say that the problem of AIDS should be ignored in these States—it is not being ignored. However, the problem does not have the same magnitude when compared to other areas of health which could use more funding. This amendment would give the State discretion to decide where the funds would be the most useful.

I want to emphasize that this amendment would not take away funds from the AIDS fight. It would simply give the States discretion to use the money where it is most needed, whether that be for AIDS, cancer, or another chronic illness.

As I stated earlier, this would affect those States which have fewer than 100 reported cases of AIDS. There are 12 States which fall under this category: Alaska, Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Dakota, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

I would urge my colleagues to give this amendment their strong consideration.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, just one statement on this.

Look, there is no question that the amount of money we have in this bill is not enough to solve the problems in any State. We are limited by financial concerns here. We have tried to be responsible in our committee. We wish we had unlimited funds and we could just put enough moneys out there to solve all the AIDS problems. But I guarantee that the amount of money that each and every State gets is going to be needed by that State for this problem. It is not going to be enough for that State for this problem.

This distinguished Senator from Wyoming has been quoting from the same report I have, except his is a March report and mine is an April report, so mine is more up to date.

So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that table 1 from the April 1990 report be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. WALLOP. I ask unanimous consent my table be printed in the RECORD at the same place as the others.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE 1.—AIDS CASES AND ANNUAL RATES PER 100,000 POPULATION, BY STATE, REPORTED APRIL 1988 THROUGH MARCH 1989, APRIL 1989 THROUGH MARCH 1990; AND CUMULATIVE TOTALS, BY STATE AND AGE GROUP, THROUGH MARCH 1990

State of residence	April 1988 to March 1989		April 1989 to March 1990		Cumulative totals		Total
	Number	Rate	Number	Rate	Adults/ adolescents	Children < 13 years old
Alabama	221	5.4	206	5.0	688	16	704
Alaska	16	2.7	22	3.6	81	2	83
Arizona	231	6.6	387	10.8	1,091	7	1,098
Arkansas	75	3.1	97	4.0	287	3	290
California	5,803	20.7	6,578	23.0	24,654	172	24,826
Colorado	295	8.7	412	11.9	1,310	8	1,318
Connecticut	432	13.4	460	14.2	1,533	53	1,586
Delaware	82	12.8	73	11.3	243	4	247
District of Columbia	534	85.8	504	8103	2,096	29	2,125
Florida	2,941	24.0	3,427	27.3	10,282	280	10,562
Georgia	969	15.4	1,211	18.9	3,387	41	3,428
Hawaii	94	8.4	211	18.4	521	2	523
Idaho	12	1.2	28	2.7	58	2	60
Illinois	999	8.6	1,189	10.2	3,673	55	3,728
Indiana	179	3.2	293	5.3	763	8	771
Lowa	53	1.9	49	1.7	171	3	174
Kansas	69	2.8	136	5.4	337	3	340
Kentucky	97	2.6	131	3.5	360	5	365
Louisiana	415	9.0	579	12.5	1,750	31	1,781
Maine	37	3.1	60	5.0	167	2	169
Maryland	607	13.5	797	17.5	2,342	55	2,397
Massachusetts	745	12.7	796	13.5	2,682	54	2,736
Michigan	463	5.1	512	5.7	1,534	23	1,557
Minnesota	185	4.3	173	4.0	663	7	670
Mississippi	143	5.4	192	7.2	448	7	455
Missouri	402	7.9	492	9.6	1,390	10	1,400
Montana	12	1.4	15	1.8	42	.....	42
Nebraska	46	2.8	40	2.5	143	1	144
Nevada	150	14.9	154	15.0	480	4	484
New Hampshire	40	3.8	56	5.3	152	4	156
New Jersey	2,372	30.8	2,194	28.4	8,231	225	8,456
New Mexico	56	3.7	106	6.8	260	1	261
New York	6,716	37.5	7,067	39.3	27,958	653	28,611
North Carolina	313	4.8	492	7.5	1,237	26	1,263
North Dakota	5	.7	6	.9	18	.....	18
Ohio	514	4.8	500	4.7	1,750	27	1,777
Oklahoma	151	4.5	173	5.0	539	9	548
Oregon	170	6.2	258	9.4	762	3	765
Pennsylvania	930	7.9	1,166	9.9	3,542	63	3,605
Rhode Island	90	9.2	87	8.8	305	7	312
South Carolina	189	5.4	373	10.6	781	19	800
South Dakota	7	1.0	2	.3	17	.....	17
Tennessee	269	5.5	302	6.2	834	12	846
Texas	2,223	12.8	2,579	14.5	8,732	74	8,806

TABLE 1.—AIDS CASES AND ANNUAL RATES PER 100,000 POPULATION, BY STATE, REPORTED APRIL 1988 THROUGH MARCH 1989, APRIL 1989 THROUGH MARCH 1990; AND CUMULATIVE TOTALS, BY STATE AND AGE GROUP, THROUGH MARCH 1990—Continued

State of residence	April 1988 to March 1989		April 1989 to March 1990		Cumulative totals		Total
	Number	Rate	Number	Rate	Adults/ adolescents	Children < 13 years old
Utah	77	4.5	84	4.8	261	6	267
Vermont	11	2.0	20	3.6	58	1	59
Virginia	390	6.6	515	8.6	1,556	32	1,588
Washington	390	8.5	560	12.1	1,683	11	1,694
West Virginia	22	1.2	62	3.3	129	2	131
Wisconsin	119	2.5	146	3.0	459	2	461
Wyoming	10	1.9	12	2.3	32	.....	32
U.S. total	31,371	12.8	35,984	14.5	122,472	2,064	124,536
Guam	1	.8	2	1.5	7	.....	7
Pacific Islands, U.S.	1	.7	.....	.....	1	.....	1
Puerto Rico	1,349	40.9	1,549	46.8	3,577	124	3,701
Virgin Islands, U.S.	40	35.4	19	16.5	70	4	74
Total	32,762	13.1	37,554	14.9	126,127	2,192	128,319

TABLE 1.—AIDS CASES AND ANNUAL RATES PER 100,000 POPULATION, BY STATE, REPORTED FEBRUARY 1988 THROUGH JANUARY 1989, FEBRUARY 1989 THROUGH JANUARY 1990; AND CUMULATIVE TOTALS, BY STATE AND AGE GROUP, THROUGH JANUARY 1990

State of residence	February 1988 to January 1989		February 1989 to January 1990		Cumulative totals		Total
	Number	Rate	Number	Rate	Adults/ adolescents	Children 13 years old
Alabama	222	5.4	217	5.3	659	16	675
Alaska	16	2.7	21	3.5	76	2	78
Arizona	238	6.8	361	10.1	1,013	6	1,019
Arkansas	82	3.4	78	3.2	250	3	253
California	5,674	20.2	6,588	23.1	23,585	167	23,752
Colorado	360	10.6	393	11.4	1,264	8	1,272
Connecticut	432	13.4	428	13.2	1,435	51	1,486
Delaware	75	11.7	75	11.6	227	4	231
District of Columbia	516	82.9	501	80.8	2,000	29	2,029
Florida	2,813	22.9	3,543	28.2	9,938	276	10,214
Georgia	910	14.4	1,103	17.2	3,110	37	3,147
Hawaii	99	8.8	192	16.8	486	2	488
Idaho	12	1.2	27	2.6	54	2	56
Illinois	1,013	8.7	1,091	9.4	3,466	51	3,517
Indiana	141	2.6	331	6.0	724	8	732
Iowa	49	1.7	48	1.7	163	3	166
Kansas	84	3.4	122	4.9	319	3	322
Kentucky	101	2.7	120	3.2	326	5	331
Louisiana	401	8.7	571	12.3	1,661	25	1,686
Maine	27	2.3	69	5.8	160	2	162
Maryland	538	11.9	763	16.8	2,191	47	2,238
Massachusetts	724	12.3	765	13.0	2,538	41	2,579
Michigan	443	4.9	497	5.5	1,450	22	1,472
Minnesota	147	3.4	191	4.4	635	7	642
Mississippi	124	4.7	172	6.4	393	7	400
Missouri	401	7.9	484	9.4	1,316	10	1,326
Montana	14	1.7	16	1.9	42	.....	42
Nebraska	43	2.7	36	2.2	130	1	131
Nevada	138	13.7	173	16.8	461	4	465
New Hampshire	38	3.6	52	4.9	143	4	147
New Jersey	2,511	32.7	2,262	29.3	7,889	218	8,107
New Mexico	51	3.3	96	6.1	240	1	241
New York	7,064	39.4	6,472	36.0	26,381	616	26,997
North Carolina	249	3.8	503	7.7	1,140	23	1,163
North Dakota	4	.6	7	1.0	18	.....	18
Ohio	523	4.9	503	4.7	1,646	25	1,671
Oklahoma	136	4.0	196	5.7	526	9	535
Oregon	168	6.2	218	8.0	697	3	700
Pennsylvania	923	7.8	1,141	9.7	3,324	57	3,381
Rhode Island	88	8.9	82	8.3	289	7	296
South Carolina	171	4.9	356	10.1	723	19	742
South Dakota	8	1.1	3	.4	17	.....	17
Tennessee	295	6.1	293	6.0	780	12	792
Texas	2,189	12.6	2,572	14.4	8,349	72	8,421
Utah	76	4.4	80	4.5	250	5	255
Vermont	13	2.4	18	3.3	55	1	56
Virginia	364	6.1	520	8.7	1,442	23	1,465
Washington	414	9.0	503	10.8	1,584	11	1,595
West Virginia	18	.9	61	3.2	122	2	124
Wisconsin	111	2.3	147	3.0	442	2	444
Wyoming	9	1.7	13	2.5	31	.....	31
U.S. total	31,260	12.7	35,074	14.1	116,160	1,949	118,109
Guam	1	.8	3	2.2	8	.....	8
Pacific Islands, U.S.	1	.7	.....	.....	1	.....	1
Puerto Rico	1,342	40.7	1,590	48.1	3,355	102	3,457
Virgin Islands, U.S.	48	42.4	15	13.0	66	4	70
Total	32,652	13.1	36,682	14.6	119,590	2,055	121,645

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this is not an issue of trying to dictate to the States what they can or cannot do. It is an issue of whether or not we are serious about this problem of AIDS and whether the States are serious about this problem.

Every State will get money. All they have to do, basically, is set up a basic program to utilize those funds to treat AIDS patients and their families. That can be a very tailored program, as I view this bill. I believe every one of us in this body ought to be voting to sustain the goals of this bill because this bill will alleviate pain, suffering, expense, and difficulties. It is a compassionate bill and both the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and I wish the funding could be much higher because it would work even better. But we have to live within the constraints we have. We are prepared to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, a year ago the most recent figure shows us as having more cases than the immediate year just past. The most recent figure shows us having one less. That tells us something about the nature of the statistics.

The Senator from Utah says, "I wish we had unlimited funds." I wish we had unlimited funds, too, although sometimes I think that we would not, even with unlimited funds, be able to figure out a way to spend them wisely. The wisdom in this instance would be to make those funds which we do spend available to Americans with chronic diseases in States with small populations of AIDS. That would be wise.

Since we do not have unlimited funds so we can take care of requirements for Alzheimer's sufferers and cancer sufferers and lung disease sufferers and limited vision sufferers and all kinds of chronic ailments from which Americans suffer, we have singled out AIDS as something for which you get extra privileges and extra funding. I believe Americans who suffer from chronic diseases in rural States, where the population of AIDS sufferers is not so much, deserve the kind of flexibility that a world without unlimited money cannot provide if we get so single-minded as to only provide it for those who suffer from AIDS.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to amendment of the Senator from Wyoming. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced, yeas 33, nays 65, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 92 Leg.]

YEAS—33

Armstrong	Garn	Murkowski
Baucus	Gramm	Nickles
Bond	Grassley	Pressler
Boren	Helms	Roth
Burns	Humphrey	Shelby
Coats	Jeffords	Simpson
Cochran	Lott	Stevens
Conrad	Lugar	Symms
Daschle	McCain	Thurmond
Dole	McClure	Wallop
Domenici	McConnell	Warner

NAYS—65

Adams	Bradley	Byrd
Bentsen	Breaux	Cohen
Biden	Bryan	Cranston
Bingaman	Bumpers	D'Amato
Boschwitz	Burdick	Danforth
DeConcini	Inouye	Nunn
Dixon	Johnston	Packwood
Dodd	Kassebaum	Pell
Durenberger	Kasten	Pryor
Exon	Kennedy	Reid
Ford	Kerrey	Riegle
Fowler	Kerry	Robb
Glenn	Kohl	Rockefeller
Gore	Lautenberg	Rudman
Gorton	Leahy	Sanford
Graham	Levin	Sarbanes
Harkin	Lieberman	Sasser
Hatch	Mack	Simon
Hatfield	Metzenbaum	Specter
Heflin	Mikulski	Wilson
Heinz	Mitchell	Wirth
Hollings	Moynihan

NOT VOTING—1

Chafee

So the amendment (No. 1616) was rejected.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI].

Ms. MIKULSKI. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 2240, the AIDS CARE bill. The relief this bill will provide is urgently needed. This is clear from the statistics we have heard in the course of this debate, but my purpose in rising today is not to recite more statistics. We are beyond statistics. The need is clear and compelling.

Mr. KENNEDY. May we have order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend.

The Senate is not in order. Several Senators are carrying on conversations. The Chair requests that Senators take their conversations to the cloakroom.

Ms. MILULSKI. The need is indeed clear.

My purpose in rising today is to talk about a very special family in Maryland who in the face of ignorance and fear fought this horrible disease with great courage. Ultimately, as always is the case with AIDS, they lost their battle but their strength and dignity shall serve as a beacon guiding us through the terrible times we face and the struggles ahead.

Let me tell you the story of Kedra, who was the first child diagnosed in Maryland with pediatric AIDS. She spent 3½ years in room 541 of the Baltimore City Hospital, now known as Francis Scott Key. There was no place for her to go, no family to take her in. Her only family was the physicians and the nurses and the support staff that cared for her on the ward.

One woman decided she could not stand to see a little girl live out her life like this. This woman was Lee Corey, who had been a ward clerk on Kedra's ward. She retired on disability after a heart attack and her husband was approaching retirement. They had raised five children already. But when Mrs. Corey left her duties at the hospital, she could not leave Kedra behind languishing without a family.

So Mrs. Corey opened her home and her heart. She took her as a foster child, knowing she was a very sick little girl. She had to fight with local health departments, local social service departments to get Kedra the care and services she needed. Why? Because of prejudice. You see, Mrs. Corey was white; Kedra was black. Kedra had AIDS. The people in the neighborhood were afraid. Mrs. Corey lost many friends and neighbors. Even one of her own children refused to visit her mother's home because Kedra was there.

Despite this, Mrs. Corey raised Kedra as her own child until Kedra died. She was not quite 6 years old. Even then the heartache and the discrimination and the bigotry did not end. Mrs. Corey told me that 27 funeral directors refused to bury Kedra. They refused outright or they demanded exorbitant fees because little Kedra had AIDS.

She searched the entire phone book until she reached the Z's. Finally, Charles Zeiler, a funeral director in my own neighborhood, buried Kedra.

Mr. President, S. 2240 would back up the efforts of people like the Coreys. We could not find a cure for Kedra, but we can at least find homes for the little Kedras and support the efforts of clinics and health care professionals by bringing resources and facilities into our communities. We must ensure its passage without weakening amendments.

The Corey story did not end with Kedra's death, Mr. President. They did not sadly move into retirement. This remarkable couple then took into their own home three more babies with AIDS. They were 7, 8, and 9 months old. Mr. Corey, a retired Navy man—Mr. President, I really cannot talk about this child in this atmosphere. This little girl died. This family risked their lives to care for this child. I would like the dignity of her memory to be preserved with some sense of dignity tonight within this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WIRTH). The Senator is correct. The Senate will be in order.

Ms. MIKULSKI. This is not some little speech to be a filler in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This little girl died. People were willing to face prejudice. There was no program in Maryland. There were more health inspectors running in and out of there trying to close down this home rather than to try too keep it open.

Mr. Corey, a retired Navy man, worked a night shift at the Library of Congress commuting from Baltimore, every day, in order to be able to buy the extra resources this little girl needed.

Mr. President, as we face the challenge in tragedy of the AIDS epidemic, we have to find a cure. We have to stop the spread of the disease, have compassionate care for the victims, and also we need to manage the fear that squanders desperately needed time and resources.

The Coreys are not saints nor do they want anybody to hand out halos but they sure want us to take this problem seriously. They would be the first to tell you that they wanted and needed the kinds of things that are in this bill.

Most people would call the Coreys average Americans. But what they did, Mr. President, was respond to an extraordinary situation with extraordinary courage and compassion.

Mr. President, all over this country today there are physicians, nurses working on cures and working on care, volunteers delivering services, dedicated professionals giving service, and ordinary Americans being able to do this. We hope this legislation passes.

AMENDMENT NO. 1618

Mr. President, I have some ideas to improve this legislation. I offer an amendment. I send it to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] proposes an amendment numbered 1618.

Strike the words "Title III on page 64, line 1 and insert the following:

"TITLE III

SEC. 301. Requirement of reporting and partner notification with respect to cases of infection.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

AMENDMENT NO. 1619 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1618

(Purpose: To facilitate treatment and notification of individuals with HIV disease and their families)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send a second-degree amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] proposes an amendment numbered 1619 to amendment No. 1618.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I object. I was trying to get the Chair's attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HELMS. Let us at least hear what the amendment says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will read the amendment.

The legislative clerk resumed reading as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment, add the following:

"(a) REPORTING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not make a grant under title II of this Act unless, with respect to testing for infection with the etiologic agent for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the State involved requires that—

"(A) any entity carrying out such testing confidentially report to the State public health officer information sufficient—

"(i) to perform statistical and epidemiological analyses of the incidence in the State of cases of such infection: and

"(ii) to perform statistical and epidemiological analyses of the demographic characteristics of the population of individuals in the State with such infections: and

"(B) the public health officer of such State establishes a system of reporting cases of individuals infected with the etiologic agent for acquired immune deficiency syndrome that is necessary, to the extent appropriate in the determination of such officer, for the State to carry out the notification of unsuspecting persons at risk for exposure to the etiologic agent for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"(2) PROVISION OF CERTAIN INFORMATION TO CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL.—The Secretary may not take a grant under title II of this Act unless the State involved agrees to provide to the Director of the Centers for Disease Control all information received by the State pursuant to the requirement described in clauses (i) and (ii) of paragraph (1)(A).

"(b) PARTNER NOTIFICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not make a grant under title II of this Act unless—

"(A) the State involved requires that the appropriate State or local public health officer (as determined by the State) carry out, to the extent appropriate in the determination of such officer, a program of partner notification with respect to cases of exposure to the etiologic agent acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and

"(i) advises all such individuals regarding the benefits to undergo testing for such infection; and

"(ii) provides to all individuals information on the medical benefits of diagnosing such infection in the early stages of infection and the availability of treatment and support services for individuals and families with HIV disease.

"(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION WITH RESPECT TO RESPONSIBILITY FOR MAKING NOTIFICATIONS.—With respect to compliance with paragraph (1) as a condition of receiving a grant under title II of this Act, such paragraph may not be construed to require that a State establish a requirement that any entity, other than the public health official referred to in such paragraph, make the notification required under such system.

"SEC. 302. EFFECTIVE DATE.—This title shall be effective for all fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1992.

"TITLE IV."

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we have had an opportunity to talk to a number of our colleagues about this public policy issue which involves spousal notification and contact tracing. We addressed the issue of spousal notification in S. 1220. The policies approved by the Senate at that time are effectively in effect at this time. The question that we seek to address with this particular amendment has been raised by Senator ARMSTRONG and concerns contact tracing.

This is the way the program would work: In all of the 50 States or jurisdictions that were to receive money, under this act the public health official of that State would have to certify that they had in place a contact tracing program that addresses local needs in that State, as determined by the public health officer, in the most effective possible way.

Effectively, what we are saying, Mr. President, is that the specifics of this delicate policy issue ought to be resolved by the States and the public health officials of that State—what might be effective in Colorado might not be necessary or cost efficient in New York. What might be effective in Buffalo, might not be necessary or valuable in New York City; that public health official ought to make that determination in New York exactly how to implement the program in that State; in Colorado, how it should apply to that State; and in Massachusetts, how it should apply in our State.

We insist that, under the provisions of the amendment, the public health official is going to make a determination as to how that best can be done in order to be able to receive any funding under this particular measure.

Mr. President, this particular approach which we have developed in response to Senator ARMSTRONG's concerns basically is supported by the American Medical Association. It has the support of the Association of State and Territorial Health Officers who caution against a broad Federal mandate.

We are leaving this matter up to the States. We are requiring that the responsible health official in that State make the judgment on how best to carry out the notification program in that particular State. And establish the precise procedures to be able to run an efficient program.

We believe that is the most effective way for us to come to grips with the issue which Senator ARMSTRONG has raised.

This approach also has the support of the Chairman of the AIDS Commission, Dr. June Osborne, who strongly supports this particular approach which we are advancing for the Senate's consideration today.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed the letter from the American Medical Association, and I will read this paragraph:

We do not support a freestanding requirement for reporting HIV-positive individuals where this information would not be used for actual contact tracing or epidemiological or statistical purposes. Nor does the AMA support a federally mandated contact tracing program for every jurisdiction. Our recommendation regarding contact tracing is just that—a recommendation and not a call for a Federal mandate.

They are supporting leaving these matters up to the States, and that is what we believe is the most effective approach in dealing with this particular issue.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Dr. Osborn which effectively supports this, along with other material.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY. For years now, the greatest enemy of public health in the HIV/AIDS epidemic has been discrimination and the fear thereof. While the Americans With Disabilities Act, should it pass in the House this week, will be an important step toward resolution of that dreadful feature of the current crisis, there is still a long way to go before persons, with HIV can seek to know their status without anxiety all across the country.

It is for that reason that federally mandated reporting of names or identifiers would constitute a negative contribution to the health of the public. In some States the protections in place against disclosure and discrimination have afforded a climate in which persons can comfortably seek to know their HIV status. But in many other States as of May 1990 the climate of fear still dominates, and any perceived risk of revelation would drive away the very persons at highest risk for whom counseling and testing would provide the greatest benefit to both individual and public health.

It is for this compelling reason that federal mandating of name or identifier reporting should not be adopted.

JUNE E. OSBORNE, M.D.

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, May 2, 1990.

Re contact tracing and reporting of HIV-infected individuals.

Hon. HENRY A. WAXMAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Committee on Energy and Commerce, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. WAXMAN: We are writing to reiterate the position outlined in the American Medical Association's testimony of April 18, 1990 regarding the reporting of HIV-positive individuals to health officials for purposes of partner notification/contact tracing.

Current AMA Policy strongly recommends reporting HIV seropositive individuals to departments of health for purposes of contact tracing and partner notification. We believe that your legislation, H.R. 4470, the "AIDS Prevention Act of 1990." adequately embodies this and a related AMA recommendation which strongly recommends that partner notification programs should be established in each community.

Reporting of an HIV-infected individual (the "index patient") to the public health authority is part of the contact tracing process. Section 2607(b) of the legislation requires contact tracing programs in each state receiving grants for HIV testing, to the extent deemed appropriate by the state public health officer. This requirement is all that is necessary for reporting and contact tracing. We do not find the epidemiologic reporting requirements in Section 2607(a) to be in any way inconsistent or limiting of a state public health requirement for reporting HIV-positive individuals for purposes of contact tracing.

We do not support a free-standing requirement for reporting HIV-positive individuals where this information would not be used for actual contact tracing or epidimiological or statistical purposes. Nor does the AMA support a federally mandated contact tracing program for every jurisdiction. Our recommendation regarding contact tracing is just that—a recommendation and not a call for a federal mandate. We recognize that no single type of contact tracing program can be designated for every state and local health department.

As our most recent policy report points out, the contact tracing portion of an AIDS program is most cost-effective in areas with low HIV prevalence or in identifiable groups with low prevalence. Financial resources, community seroprevalence rates, awareness levels in at-risk populations, differing transmission rates among infected populations and how recently the partners of index patients were exposed to HIV are all factors which must be considered by public health authorities in designing their contact tracing programs. It is for these reasons we advocate a flexible federal approach incorporating state-level discretion embodied in the contact tracing provisions of H.R. 4470.

Sincerely,

JAMES S. TODD, M.D.

STATEMENT ON THE FY '90 APPROPRIATIONS

We, the Members of the National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), strongly support the increase in AIDS funding endorsed by both Houses of Congress and the Administration. While we believe that much work remains to secure adequate funding for the national battle against AIDS, we also recognize the fiscal challenges facing the Congress.

We are particularly pleased that the Senate Committee on Appropriations has increased the total AIDS budget to accommodate humane and cost-effective programs designed to meet the burgeoning care needs resulting from the HIV epidemic. The Congress made clear the priority it places on the health care needs of people with AIDS and HIV in the AIDS legislation that was unanimously approved last fall. Being able to provide access to lifesaving medical treatment to those who face poverty and death is not only a compassionate response to the crisis but a sound public health strategy for bringing the epidemic under control. The most compelling incentive for individuals to step forward for HIV counseling and testing is the availability of effective treatment and appropriate medical care.

The Commission is most invigorated by the task of advising both the Administration and the Congress. It is a responsibility that we accept with great determination. Given the gravity of the HIV epidemic, we are fortunate to have an abundance of sound data on which to base our public health policy decisions. With this is mind, we urge the Congress to be deliberative in its policy-making processes and to resist fragmented approaches to public policy via amendments to the FY '90 Appropriations bill.

The National Commission on AIDS stands ready to review and comment on proposals under consideration by the Congress for addressing the challenges presented by the HIV epidemic.

THE NATIONAL HEMOPHILIA FOUNDATION,
New York, NY, May 2, 1990.

Hon. HENRY WAXMAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Committee on Energy and Commerce, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The National Hemophilia Foundation (NHF) supports the establishment of a nationwide program of providing preventive health services for persons with AIDS as provided for in H.R. 4470. The bill is comprehensive in scope which NHF believes is critical to achieving effective risk reduction. H.R. 4470 provides for confidentiality and informed consent protections for pre- and post-test counseling services, a prerequisite to encouraging individuals voluntarily to seek preventive health services.

The maintenance of confidentiality is a matter of utmost importance to patients with hemophilia, their families and partners, as well as the hemophilia treatment team. There is no question that inadvertent release of test results increases risk of discrimination, exclusion and expulsion for individuals with hemophilia, their family members and partners. The serious consequences of such disclosure encompass the loss of insurability, housing and employment for people with hemophilia. The most public examples of such acts of discrimination—the senseless expulsion of Ryan White from his school and the burning of the Ray family home—have tragically occurred to families with hemophilia.

For these reasons NHF would oppose any amendments requiring that the names of persons who test positive for HIV be reported to state or federal health officials. The members of the Foundation believe that persons within the hemophilia community at risk of AIDS will not avail themselves of testing and counseling programs, no matter how well conceived and no matter how accessible, if confidentiality is not guaranteed and the likelihood of discrimination eliminated.

We look forward to working with you as H.R. 4470 proceeds through the legislative process to ensure that the HIV/AIDS service needs of the hemophilia population are fully addressed.

Sincerely,

ALAN P. BROWNSTEIN,
Executive Director.

AMERICAN HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, May 1, 1990.

Hon. HENRY A. WAXMAN,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE WAXMAN: As the House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health and Environment begins its deliberations over H.R. 4470, "AIDS Prevention Act of 1990," I wanted to inform you of the position of the American Hospital Association regarding the legislation and possible amendments.

In developing sound policies to address the problem of AIDS, we cannot afford to let fear guide our actions or to ignore the real concerns that the possible spread of infection engenders. The primary focus of H.R. 4470 is to establish a federal grant program for AIDS prevention and counseling, including voluntary Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) antibody testing. The American Hospital Association supports this bill and would oppose amendments that would detract from its objectives. Individuals at risk for infection with the AIDS virus should be encouraged to seek testing and counseling in an environment that ensures that the confidentiality of this sensitive medical information will be maintained.

In particular, AHA opposes any amendments that would require hospitals to test hospital staff and patients for HIV. Similar initiatives have been soundly rejected by the House of Representatives in the past. To date, it has not been demonstrated that routine testing will increase the level of protection for workers or patients above that achieved by rigorous adherence to such infection control procedures as universal precautions.

AHA urges your careful consideration of the many arguments against such proposals.

ARGUMENTS AGAINST MANDATORY TESTING

PROTECTING THE PUBLIC'S HEALTH

Consistent use of protective measures, such as gloves, gowns, masks, and protective eyewear, is the best safeguard against the transmission of the HIV. Mandatory screening of patients or staff is unnecessary to reduce the risk of exposure to the HIV and should not be viewed as a substitute for universal precautions.

All major health organizations, together with the federal Centers for Disease Control, have endorsed universal precautions as the most effective means of reducing the risk of HIV infection for hospital staff and patients. Because the HIV is transmitted only by direct contact with blood or body substances, the treatment of all body substances as potentially infectious protects both patients and hospital staff, regardless of whether an individual's infection status is known.

Other arguments against mandatory testing of hospital admissions include: the time delay that accompanies the adminstration of the test; the time delay before exposed individuals manifest the HIV antibodies, both of which render any test results for immediate patient care useless; and the risk of inaccurate test results. False or premature test findings could give patients and health care workers a false sense of security and discourage preventive practices. Requiring hospitals to test admitted patients for the presence of the HIV removes the physician from directing the patient's course of treatment.

THE COST OF ROUTINE AIDS TESTING

An amendment to require hospitals to test for AIDS could further strain the current health care financing system. For example, the Illinois legislature approved legislation three years ago—legislation that was vetoed by Governor James Thompson—requiring AIDS testing of all hospital inpatients between the ages of 13 and 55. According to estimates of the Illinois Hospital Association, this requirement was estimated to have cost approximately $49.5 million per year. The State of Texas put the cost of a similar requirement at $41 million in 1988.

U.S. hospitals had more than 34 million admissions in 1988, including more than 22 million admissions involving individuals under the age of 65. Given that the average cost for the AIDS screening and confirmatory test is $45, according to the Centers for Disease Control, and $65, according to the Office of Technology Assessment, the breadth and the cost of such a proposal could be staggering. (These figures do not include the cost of any hospital counseling before or after administration of the test.)

Further complicating this policy is whether third-party payers and Medicaid would pay for the test if it is not medically indicated. The patient or more likely the hospital could be held responsible for meeting the test's cost any necessary counseling. This action could divert scarce health resources away from direct patient care, thus raising a new set of financial pressures on our nation's health care system.

AIDS presents new challenges to all of us. I urge you to reject any amendment that would impair a hospital's ability to deliver care.

Sincerely,

PAUL C. RETTIG,
Executive Vice President.

NATIONAL GOVERNORS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, May 3, 1990.

Hon. HENRY A. WAXMAN,
Committee on Energy and Commerce, House of Representatives, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE WAXMAN: I am writing on behalf of the National Governors' Association regarding H.R. 4470, the proposed "AIDS Prevention Act of 1990". The nation's Governors strongly oppose any amendments which may be offered to this legislation to place federal mandates on states affecting state policies for HIV testing or treatment.

The autonomy of state public health laws should be respected. The Governors and their health departments are in the best position to decide what testing policies are the most effective in prevention efforts. Placing requirements on state spending without regard to a state AIDS plan and ability to finance testing or treatment programs may prevent states from dealing with this problem in the most appropriate manner.

We ask for your help in opposing amendments which would place mandates on states. Such mandates would have adverse consequences and consume scarce state resources to effectively respond to the AIDS epidemic.

Thank you for your consideration of this issue. We look forward to working with you and other members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce to address our broader concerns on this important legislation.

Sincerely,

GOV. RICHARD F. CELESTE,
Chairman, Committee on Human Resources.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I appreciate what the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is trying to do here. I have to say, however, that I am concerned not only about reporting but about contact tracing.

I know the distinguished Senator from Colorado has an amendment that I think makes it mandatory for States to implement a system of contact tracing. I appreciate what the Senator from Massachusetts has attempted, because he is leaving it up to the States. As I understand it, this amendment with regard to contact tracing makes it discretionary in the States.

However, I do not see how in the world we are going to solve this problem and how we are going to notify people who are in jeopardy of getting AIDS, unless we have required contact tracing.

I understand the concerns of many who are afraid that disclosure of their identities will lead to even more pain in their lives, and more discrimination; but with regard to that, I want to cite an article which appeared in the New York Times recently. I quote:

Despite fears of confidentiality violations, critics have not documented breaches as partners have been traced for other sexually transmitted diseases. Public health officials say they have maintained strict privacy for the 117,000 patients whose diagnosis of AIDS have been reported to State health agencies. Unauthorized disclosures have occurred from other sources, like physicians, hospitals, insurance companies, and employers.

What this article says, Mr. President, is that we do need to have partner notification or contact tracing, and that the public health groups have not been responsible for the disclosure of names. Contact tracing is absolutely essential for the ending of this epidemic.

At the same time, confidentiality is important. I do not want anybody to be discriminated against. We have enough discrimination in our society. We have enough people denouncing other people. Confidentiality is important, but confidentiality will not keep a partner alive.

I have to say that I remember one specific case right here in the Senate where we have a wonderful Senate staffer whose mother is a tremendously good person but, unfortunately, the father, who was married to the mother, was bisexual. He contracted AIDS. His doctor knew about it. The doctor could have notified the mother but felt he did not have the obligation to do so; in fact, he might have had a legal obligation not to do so. As a matter of fact, he might have been legally liable if he had notified the wife. He did not do so, and today this lovely, decent, honorable human being, the mother of one of our Senate staffers, has AIDS.

I think the idea is really to let people know about their partners who have AIDS or are infected with the AIDS virus. I think we do have an ethical obligation to protect confidentiality, and somehow we have to resolve these inherent conflicts so that both partner notification and protection of confidentiality are possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this article from the New York Times, by Bruce Lambert, entitled, "As AIDS Spreads, So Do Warnings for Partners," be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AS AIDS SPREADS, SO DO WARNINGS FOR PARTNERS

(By Bruce Lambert)

After years of reluctance, a growing number of states have begun recording the names of people who test positive for infection with the AIDS virus and warning their sex and drug partners.

Such methods have been standard public health practice for diseases like syphilis and tuberculosis. That has not been the case with AIDS, however, because of fear of discrimination and the danger of discouraging people from undergoing a test for infection with the virus.

Tipping the balance, experts say, are broadened legal protections on confidentiality and bias as well as medical advances. The accuracy of the AIDS infection test, for example, was uncertain at first, and it was not known how many people shown to be infected would actually contract the disease. But now the test, which detects antibodies to the virus rather than the virus itself, is an accepted predictor of the disease.

"Earlier there was great resistance to reporting names and partner notification on civil liberties grounds," said Larry Gostin, a professor of public health at Harvard who is director of the American Society of Law and Medicines. "The consensus was that AIDS was so devastating and so stigmatizing that people would be afraid to come forward if lists of names were kept. That kind of consensus has shattered now. What changed the calculus of it all was the announcement of the benefit of early treatment."

VARIETY OF POLICIES

From the outset of the AIDS epidemic, the nation has had an array of conflicting policies. A few states, especially those like Colorado with relatively few cases, embraced the standard approach to communicable diseases by keeping track of people infected.

But now other states have begun to follow suit. The most recent is New Jersy, which ranks fourth highest in AIDS cases. A new law there requires the Health Department to keep a confidential list of infected people tested by physicians, hospitals and clinics. Anonymous testing is being retained as an alternative, but the 16 sites offering it are being cut to 6.

"States are clearly moving away from strictly anonymous testing," concluded a survey published in December by the AIDS Policy Center at George Washington University. "There is a clear trend to insure that public health officials have access to patient names." The idea is to allow follow-up care and to inquire about patients' sex partners and drug abuses with whom they may have shared needles.

The study found that 9 states were recording the names of people whom tests showed to be infected with the AIDS virus, 15 states were recording the names of infected people who had been tested by physicians and clinics but not of those who had used anonymous testing centers, and 4 states were recording names in special cases like infected blood donors.

Another study, by Dr. Gostin, showed that by the end of 1988, 11 states had laws requiring the tracing of sex partners and 15 had quarantine laws on AIDS that allowed the authorities to detain people who were knowingly spreading the disease. The study did not cover states that may have such provisions imposed not by law but through regulations issued by public health officials.

IDEOLOGICAL CLASH

Resisting the trend are New York and California, the states with the most full-fledged AIDS cases, together accounting for 42 percent of the 128,319 cases nationwide reported to the Centers for Disease Control as of March 31. The clash of public health versus private liberties flared anew in New York this year. Controversey over Dr. Woodrow A. Myers's partner-tracing and quarantine policies as Indiana State Health Commissioner nearly derailed his appointment as New York City's new Health Commissioner.

Major policy changes had already been proposed by the previous City Health Commissioner, Dr. Stephen C. Joseph. Speaking at last June's international AIDS conference, Dr. Joseph urged more aggressive testing, name reporting and tracing of those to whom the virus might have been spread. His speech prompted angry protests by gay rights advocates. AIDS victims and some medical experts. At a state legislative hearing in December, he urged a "shift to a disease-control approach, along the lines of classic tuberculosis practices."

Dr. Joseph's plan was shelved by Edward I. Koch, then the Mayor. The new Mayor, David N. Dinkins, has not revived it.

In an interview, Dr. Joseph said: "We're missing a critical opportunity, for the first time, to get ahead of the virus. We have clear health benefits to offer those who are infected. Early diagnosis is to the benefit of both society and the individual."

Dr. Joseph noted that one of the last things he did before leaving office in December was to order the detention of a tuberculosis patient who had failed to take the medicine prescribed to stop her from being infectious to others. There was no publicity, no debate and no protest over that order. Nor, he said, was there any controversey over the city's longstanding policy of collecting the names of thousands of people with syphilis every year and asking them to identify their sex partners.

GAY RIGHTS OPPOSITION

A prominent spokesman on the other side is Thomas B. Stoddard, director of Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, a gay rights organization. "The basic issue is, How do we protect the health of the largest number of people?" he said.

Arguing that standard disease-control methods are self-defeating against AIDS, Mr. Stoddard cited a drop in testing in South Carolina when it began taking names, and the rise in Oregon when it began offering anonymous tests.

To avoid driving people away, a growing number of states offer testing, with names or without. Dr. Joseph favors retaining anonymous procedures "for those who will not accept testing any other way."

The American Medical Association in December endorsed reporting to health officials the names of people infected with the AIDS virus and notifying sex partners.

As the policies evolve, these are the core questions that keep coming up:

Should the names of people who test positive for AIDS virus infection be recorded by government health officials?

Should their sex and drug partners be sought by the health agency and warned that they may be infected?

Should someone who knowingly spreads the virus to unsuspecting people be isolated or quarantined?

Or are keeping track of infected people and tracing their contacts counterproductive, driving away people who are likely to need testing and treatment?

STRICT PRIVACY REPORTED

Despite fears of confidentiality violations, critics have not documented breaches as partners have been traced for other sexually transmitted diseases. Public health officials say they have maintained strict privacy for the 117,000 patients whose diagnoses of AIDS have been reported to state health agencies. Unauthorized disclosures have occurred from other sources, like physicians, hospitals, insurance companies and employers.

Opponents of tracing sex partners argue that it has failed to eradicate venereal disease. A New York City study showed that people often withhold names when asked to identify partners. But proponents say no one ever maintained that partner tracing was the sole answer, and add that without it, the spread of sexually transmitted diseases would be far worse.

In Colorado, Health Commissioner Thomas M. Vernon praises partner tracing as a success in AIDS prevention. About 900 infected people have been interviewed, yielding the names of 1,500 sex or drug partners. Of those, 200 had already been tested and 700 were persuaded to do so, uncovering about 1200 new infections. In all, 1,200 people at risk were reached, and whether or not they took the test, they were counseled on how to avoid AIDS. "That's where you break the chain of future transmission." Dr. Vernon said.

Ronald Bayer, who teaches ethics at Columbia University and wrote a book on AIDS issues, said he did not understand how people could argue that notification was a profound violation of civil liberties.

ISSUE OF TRACING PARTNERS

"There's a moral obligation to notify people who might not know they're at risk," he said. "People have a right to know. To talk about partners notification as the first step to the gulag shows a real confusion."

Some who question the effectiveness of tracing partners for AIDS note the long lag from infection to symptoms, and the anonymity and multiplicity of drug and sex partners. Dr. Gostin of Harvard said, "in the New York or San Francisco gay community, it's almost an exercise in futility." Health experts recommend that every drug user who has shared needles and every man who has had intercourse with another man should assume they may be infected and consider being tested?

Warning partners is more useful for unsuspecting people who are at risk, AIDS experts say. "It's a real women's issue," said Dr. Vernon. "The individuals least likely to be aware are the female mates of closet bisexual men or secret or former intravenous drug users."

Even New York has moved gingerly toward partner tracing. AIDS counselors encourage, but do not require, infected people to alert their partners, and the health department offers to help notify them. A new law enacted last year gives physicians legal permission to notify their patients partners or to refer their names to the health department.

"The physician's so-called permission to warn has not worked," Dr. Joseph told a legislative committee in December. "There have been no referrals to the New York City Department of Health by physicians since the enactment of the law." He urged a tougher "duty to warn" law, requiring notification.

The issue involving infected people who knowingly spread the AIDS virus is especially difficult. No data exist on how often this happens, although there are anecdotal reports. The most celebrated case involved Marc Christian, who won a multimillion-dollar award from Rock Hudson's estate in a suit alleging that the movie star lied about his illness and continued having unsafe sex. Mr. Christian was not infected.

Although New York State health laws could be used to detain someone who was spreading the AIDS virus, they have never been invoked. Dr. Joseph said no one had ever brought such a case to his attention.

One longtime proponent of the traditional approach is the New York City Council's Health Committee chairman, Joseph F. Lisa of Queens, who said, "The public health approach in New York for the past years has been to encourage ignorance, and I can't believe it's in the best interest of the individual or society."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I have a number of observations about this, but I want to be sure I understand exactly where we are, both in a substantive and a parliamentary sense. I wonder if I could inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts a little information about the amendment. I have a copy of it, and I noted, as the clerk was reading it, that it had a somewhat familiar ring to it, and I wonder if the Senator from Massachusetts could tell me how it varies from the text of an amendment which I submitted to him and his staff for review yesterday. Could he describe those two so we could have that?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes. The distinction is that the previous amendment which had been proposed by the Senator from Colorado would have mandated to all of the States that they follow a certain procedure. The principal difference is that we are mandating that the States develop notification program, but we are leaving it up to the States as to what that procedure would be.

The amendment of the Senator from Colorado would outline the particular procedure he would want the Senate to follow. Effectively, what our amendment does is say that the States are required to develop the procedure, but that these procedures can be tailored to the local needs of the States.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Might the State do anything at all or be inclined——

Mr. KENNEDY. Under this, they would have to develop the program, but we leave it up to the judgment of the State about the nature of what would be included in that program. We have a number of States, seven or eight now, that have no name reporting requirements. The Senator from Colorado is familiar with the different kinds of requirements of many of the different States.

Basically, it is outlined in the report that I have before me. According to the Intergovernmental AIDS Project report, the States fall into five different categories, but there are some States that currently do not require across-the-board reporting of names. This would require that the States develop a partner notification program before they would be eligible for funds under this act. But the nature of that program would be decided by the public health official of that State.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, as I understand the distinction between the amendment which Senator HELMS and Senator NICKLES and I had hoped to introduce, which we did submit to the distinguished manager for his review, the only distinction between that amendment and the amendment which he is offering—well, really there are two, a minor change which I will come to in a moment; but the major change is four or five lines under the section which reads that "the public health officer of such State establishes a system of reporting" and so on. The key words are "to the extent appropriated in the determination of such officer."

So it seems to me that, inherent in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, is recognition that contact tracing, partner notification, is in general good public policy. At least as between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself, a possible bone of contention is the extent to which, if any, the Congress ought to require the States to do this.

So I want to just be sure I understood how far his amendment goes. For example, let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts, in a State where there is a legal prohibition at the present time, do I assume correctly that the State health officer would in that case not be required to develop such a program?

Mr. KENNEDY. They would not receive the resources under this program unless they did develop a program, in the judgment of the State or local public health official.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am a little confused, because as I see it, if you had a law which prohibited the disclosure of such information, literally exposed the disclosure to some kind of civil liability or even criminal liability, then would not the State health officer, if he disclosed it or set up a system for disclosing it, run afoul of such statute, or would this override the statute?

Mr. KENNEDY. It does not override. It is just eligibility for receiving funds under this measure. I am not familiar with a particular example that the Senator might mention, but what this amendment does is tie eligibility to this requirement.

But effectively, we are leaving up to the public health officer how they are going to deal with the identifiers, the names, the phone numbers. And we leave the specifics of that contact tracing to the various programs that are developed by the public health officer of that particular State, recognizing the enormous diversity that exists in not only the States but in various parts of the States.

In New York City, in what they call the shooting galleries, to have people who are up there trying to go through an elaborate, expensive contact tracing, certainly would not be, I suppose, in many people's opinion, a very wise or meaningful allocation of resources.

In another particular community, it may make a good deal of sense. So, we are leaving it up to the public health officials in those States.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is perfectly possible that I am a little dense, but I want to be sure we understand the issue here. It is my understanding, and I am briefed to believe that a number of States have a legal prohibition on physicians telling partners of affected persons they are at risk of contracting a disease from this virus.

My question is this: In such a State, if the Kennedy amendment were to pass, what is the duty of the State public health officer? Does the State public health officer in that State have the discretion to override the State statute, or would his State qualify for aid under this program, notwithstanding the failure to report such danger to partners? Or could the State public health officer simply say, "Well, I cannot do anything, because the State law prohibits it."

It seems to me, logically, there are those three possible outcomes, although there might be another one that I have not considered.

Mr. KENNEDY. The fact is there is already a duty to warn under the Tarasoff holding, so there is a responsibility for the notification under that. In a case in which there is clear and present danger, there is a duty to warn. I am not familiar with the circumstances where there are prohibitions at the State level, and that is in conflict with the responsibility to warn. Does the Senator give us examples of that?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I think I am going to yield the floor for a moment while I look into that, because I am not familiar with the legal document that the Senator has just cited. I would like to ask my staff or perhaps the Senator's staff to brief me on that because this is the essence of it. If all we are talking about here is flexibility and the reasonable degree to local self-determination, I find nothing about that that is offensive.

What I am afraid of is, however, that as a practical matter, the amendment sets forth a lot of duties and responsibilities to warn and contact tracing, and so forth, then says in effect if you do not do it, it does not matter. If that is the case, I want to be sure I understand it. But I think the Senator is implying there is more to it than that.

Rather than take the Senator's time, I will yield the floor if others desire to speak. If not, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I have been getting a little briefing on the Tarasoff versus the Regents of the University of California case, and I will defer to anyone who wants to explain this to the Senate. But if no one else is forthcoming, I will tell you what I have been briefed in the last couple minutes.

Apparently, this is a case involving a psychiatrist who was told by one of his patients that the patient intended to kill another person and in fact, as it is explained to me, the patient did indeed do so.

Subsequently, the doctor was sued for his negligence in not warning the threatened person. The California Supreme Court evidently held that the doctor was indeed liable for money damages because of his failure. The doctor asserted some kind of argument about confidentiality or privilege, but the court rejected that. So, in that particular case at least, the doctor was held liable for damages.

It is hard for me to see—and I will say this to the Senator from Massachusetts when he returns to the floor in a moment—that that has a lot to do with this particular issue. Because the point I made was this: that some States actually prohibit the disclosure of the risk to the partner of an AIDS victim.

Now, let me just say that again. In some States—Wisconsin is one that has been cited to me as a specific example; I understand that at some time or another there had been others—but in that kind of a situation, a doctor who tells the partner, the sexual partner, of an AIDS victim that they may be at risk exposes himself to not only the possibility of civil damages but to the possibility of a criminal prosecution. That has nothing to do with the Tarasoff case because there was no such statute prohibiting the disclosure of the information about a threat to another person's life in California.

I do not know what the facts of the Tarasoff case are as a matter of law, but two things are very obvious. First of all, it is a California precedent and applies only to California, and second, it has nothing to do with this situation. It is not factually similar.

So unless there is more to it than that, I guess, having made that brief explanation, I will again suggest the absence of a quorum, and, if somebody wants to come in and discuss it further, I will be glad to do that.

Mr. President, I do not hear any takers at the moment, so I do suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INCREASED TENSION IN LATVIA

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the situation in the Baltic States is worsening daily. Today the Soviet military attempted to take over the Latvian Parliament Building twice, according to the American Latvian Association in the United States. Both times, the people of Latvia—the people, Mr. President—peacefully, nonviolently, prevented the Soviet miltiary from storming the parliament. The people of Latvia, who are trying to solidify their hold on their justly declared independence, are finding out from Moscow that it does not matter to Moscow the pace at which they secede. Moscow will simply not allow it to happen.

Latvia made a conscious effort to structure their declaration of independence in such a way as to avoid the problems Lithuania faced. A transitional period was planned. Four key articles of the 1922 Soviet constitution were kept intact. Laws of the Latvian republic that do not contradict those articles would also be kept intact. The Latvians actively sought negotiations with Moscow on their independence.

In short, Latvia played by the rules, Mr. President. They played by the Soviet's own rules.

Lithuania also played by the rules. Latvia and Lithuania are now paying the price of playing by those rules. They are suffering economic hardship, intimidation and confrontation. The Soviet bear is alive and well and living in Latvia and Lithuania.

And where is the United States?

Mr. President, while the Soviets drop leaflets from their helicopters on the people of Latvia urging them to, "rise up in defense of Soviet power in Latvia * * * it is time to go over from words to deeds," this administration is actually supporting the Soviet's bid to be granted observer status at the GATT negotiations. The administration is making deals with the Soviets while the Soviets are attempting to reannex the Baltic States. What is going on here?

The President has said he favors self-determination for the Baltic States. I believe him. I favor self-determination for the Baltic States, as well. All Americans do. But I believe we must do more than just say we support it. We must show that we support it.

There are efforts around the country to attempt to get medical supplies and humanitarian assistance to Lithuania. I support those efforts. The list of goods no longer available in Lithuania is extensive. Mr. President, I put that in the RECORD last week, the whole list. Thousands of people in Lithuania are out of their jobs because Lithuania had the courage to declare herself free.

Will Latvia suffer the same fate? Will Estonia endure similar bullying? And if so, what will be the administration's response?

I realize the President is trying to balance his interest in supporting President Gorbachev with his interest in Baltic independence. I have said that President Gorbachev is a whole lot better than the Soviet leaders we have had in the past, but we should not place him on a pedestal. The administration's policy toward the Baltics seems to me, as the Soviet economy rises, so rises the Baltics. Well, Mr. President, the Soviets could have a booming economy and President Gorbachev would still not want to release the Baltic States. That is the reality of it.

The people of the Baltic States, however, believe the window of freedom is open now, and will not be in the future. They are looking for our support now. Will the administration give it to them?

The President announced on April 24 that he would not order sanctions against Moscow, but the situation in the Baltic republics was having significant impact in Washington. How so? To this point, Soviet crackdowns have been met by American expressions of concern, and American agreements on trade matters with the Soviets. Our words and our actions do not mesh, Mr. President. Our actions may boost Gorbachev, but our words may sink the Baltic States.

The administration must make it known in no uncertain terms its outrage over the actions of the Soviet military in Latvia, and its actions in Lithuania. The Soviets must know that actions have consequences. This is the heart of the matter.

Actions have consequences, Mr. President.

At the moment, Soviet actions against the Baltic States have suffered no consequences, despite the fact that the Baltic States legally declared their independence and are being squeezed by the minute. The Baltic nations have suffered the consequences of Soviet actions, and administration inactions.

The President must reassess his course. He should not support Soviet observer status at the GATT negotiations at this time. He should not press for Soviet most-favored-nation status at this time. And he must not allow the Baltic States to suffocate under Soviet military and economic pressure.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the leaflet dropped over Riga, Latvia, by Soviet helicopters be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of leaflet was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Leaflet scattered from helicopters over Riga on May 14]

COMRADES

Let us rise up in defence of Soviet power in Latvia. The time for orators has passed, it is time to go over from words to deeds.

Our fate is being decided today. The honor and self-respect of the Soviet person does not give us the right to hide behind the backs of those who are fighting for our future. Let disdain and shame cover the descendents of those who in this decisive hour do not come out against counter-revolution. Men-look into the eyes of your children, mothers and wives. Can you leave them defenseless?

At 10 o'clock, May 15, 1990, stop the factories and plants and come out onto the streets of the city. All together we will go to the building of the Supreme Soviet with the demand for the reestablishment of Soviet power in the Republic. Let the handful of traitors and political adventurers who are making decisions for us hear the voice of the working people.

Long live the Latvian Soviet Socialist Republic.

The Republican Soviet of Interfront.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPREHENSIVE AIDS RESOURCES EMERGENCY ACT OF 1990

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I was deeply moved by the observations of the Senator from Utah. His discussion of this issue, partner notification and contact tracing, and the very great compassion which he expresses not only for those who contract the disease, but for those who are at risk, for people who are the sexual partners or in some other way become threatened by those who are at risk as a result of this dread disease, I found not only thoughtful but very, very persuasive—particularly when he related it to a person who is in fact a member of the family of the U.S. Senate. It strikes pretty close to home.

I judge, indeed I fear, all of us in our own lives are going to have more and more instances where the AIDS epidemic is not going to be something that is theoretical or just something we read about in the paper or see on television, but it is going to affect families, men, and women who are friends, who are neighbors, young babies and people who contract this disease from blood supplies and in other ways.

So, Mr. President, what Senator HATCH has said here this afternoon, I think is not only on point, it seems to me it is very, very persuasive. I am particularly inclined to agree with him that the provisions of this amendment, which in large part are the amendment which Senator HELMS and Senator NICKLES and I intended to submit, are very useful. But I also share his concern, if we leave a loophole which permits the States to ignore the need for contact-tracing, for spousal notification, for sex partner notification—that of course is a little different than spousal notification—that we may regret it.

Mr. President, I also acknowledge the leadership and the scholarship on this matter by the Senator from North Carolina. Yesterday, and again today, Senator HELMS has spoken on this matter and has really pinned down some issues that concern and trouble all of us. This is not a simple matter.

This bill—the underlying legislation, not just the pending Kennedy amendment—is troubling to many of us for a lot of reasons; first of all, just the human compassion that we feel for those who are afflicted by or threatened by this disease. I think there is, in some quarters, a sense that some of the people who suffer from this disease brought it on themselves.

Although there is an element of truth in that in some cases, I guess that is true of most human misery. Most of the ills we have to bear are things that in one way or another we bring on ourselves, and it does not lessen the suffering nor in my view does it lessen the sense of compassion we ought to feel or the sense of responsibility we ought to feel, as legislators, to deal with this problem.

But I do not think we should be so concerned with the needs of today's victims that we ignore the threat to those who may become victims tomorrow. At this moment there are many, many people who are at risk of becoming infected and they do not know it. In some cases they are married people who do not realize their wives or their husbands are infected with the AIDS virus. Some of these cases were discussed at length in a very interesting and thoughtful way on the ABC news program, "Prime Time Live."

In one instance, a woman who at one time was prepared to donate blood to her infant grandchild, subsequently learned that she was sero-positive. She had acquired the condition from her husband, whom she did not know was infected. Only when his condition had seriously deteriorated did doctors tell the woman that her husband had AIDS. By then it was too late. She had already been infected.

Even so, even at that late stage, doctors violated State law by telling the woman that her husband had AIDS.

Mr. President, one way or another we need to get into this bill language that makes it absolutely clear that no health care provider will be civilly or criminally penalized for telling someone's wife that she has been exposed to the AIDS virus. Indeed, it seems to me the public health concerns and human compassion are at an intersection on this issue. We ought to let people know if their health is at risk.

Yet, most States do not have programs to notify partners of people with the HIV infection that they have been exposed to this deadly virus. Some States actually prohibit notification unless the infected person can be persuaded to sign a written consent form.

Mr. President, we were talking a few minutes ago about a California case, Tarasoff versus the Regents of the University of California. If we seek the legal advice from one corner of the room, we are told this establishes a clear duty on the part of physicians, at least—and maybe other health care providers, but at least physicians—to warn those who are at risk as a result of the AIDS virus.

If we consult other attorneys who are knowledgeable on this matter, they say, well, that is not true at all. In fact, to cite Tarasoff, is a non sequitur.

Mr. President, I guess I do not pretend to know that because I never heard of Tarasoff until a little while ago, I have not read or studied it or know the implications of it, and I actually do not want to get into the position of trying to second guess the fine points of some California case.

Before we get done with this bill, I want to make it absolutely clear that no physician will be held criminally or civilly liable for disclosing that information and, in fact, to give physicians the responsibility to do so. I think partners ought to be notified. I do not think physicians ought to ignore that responsibility. I think they ought to have that as a duty.

The best way to do that, in my opinion, is the same way we have done for decades with other similar diseases: syphilis, gonorrhea, and so forth. As I understand it, and I believe this is true in every jurisdiction of the country, essentially in all the States they report it to the health service. Then there is a contact-tracing operation that ensues. That seems to me to be the right idea.

That, in fact, is the theory of the amendment which Senator HELMS and Senator NICKLES and I inteded to offer. It is the body of the amendment which Senator KENNEDY has offered, because, as I pointed our earlier, what he has done is taken our amendment and just changed two details.

One is just a minor thing, and I will mention it for the sake of the record. My amendment referred to "State jurisdictions" and he has, I think at the request of the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] changed that to say "State or local public health agency," to make it clear where the local public health agency has the responsibility, that is what we are talking about. And I think that is an appropriate and a proper correction.

The other change he has made, I am much less sure about. That is a change which, to some degree, makes partner notification and contact tracing discretionary. I understand the argument that, if we are too insistent on contact tracing, we will discourage people from coming in for testing and for treatment.

Mr. President, I would like as we think about this, to call attention of my colleagues to an article in the New York Times of May 13 which describes in some detail the evolution of thought on this matter and, in fact, really makes it clear why so many jurisdictions have come, some with reluctance, some, as in my own State of Colorado, with some unusual procedural safeguard to protect the confidentiality of those who may contract the disease, but step by step, some grudgingly, some with more enthusiasm, but step by step, State after State is being drawn to the realization that if you are going to curtail this disease, you have to have notification, contact tracing; you have to have decent respect for the risk of those who are subjected to danger and do not know it.

Mr. President, rather than reading this article, I am just going to send it to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I think the correct way to resolve this for the present is simply to accept the Kennedy amendment. I cannot see there is any harm in doing so. There is nothing in the Kennedy amendment except this one provision which seems to make the whole issue a little less than absolutely a requirement that I find offensive. In fact, since it is largely the amendment I was going to offer anyway, I guess it would be unbecoming of me to quarrel too much about the other language in the amendment.

So I think that is what we ought to do. I think we ought to take the Kennedy amendment. Then I think we ought to take the Mikulski amendment. Then overnight I am going to read the thing some more and, if I believe it needs a little more surgery on it, we will have plenty of time to do that tomorrow.

The two areas where we might want to look to make some changes tomorrow are: First of all, the question of the language which says that the State public health officer shall implement the program to the extent he thinks it is appropriate; and, second, a question of whether or not we have gone far enough to relieve physicians and other health care providers of their responsibility, any liability they might have if they decide to notify a partner who is at risk of contracting the AIDS virus. So Mr. President, that is my suggestion.

I see the Senator from Massachusetts has returned. Let me just say to him since he has, my suggestion is we accept his amendment; that we accept the Mikulski amendment and if I or other Senators want to take a further look at this in the morning, we would be free to do so, but we would have the basic pattern of it taken care of. If somebody wants to go further tomorrow, we can do that at that time.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the New York Times, May 13, 1990]

AS AIDS SPREADS, SO DO WARNINGS FOR PARTNERS

(By Bruce Lambert)

After years of reluctance, a growing number of states have begun recording the names of people who test positive for infection with the AIDS virus and warning their sex and drug partners.

Such methods have been standard public health practice for diseases like syphilis and tuberculosis. That has not been the case with AIDS, however, because of fear of discrimination and the danger of discouraging people from undergoing a test for infection with the virus.

Tipping the balance, experts say, are broadened legal protections on confidentiality and bias as well as medical advances. The accuracy of the AIDS infection test, for example, was uncertain at first, and it was not known how many people shown to be infected would actually contract the disease. But now the test, which detects antibodies to the virus rather than the virus itself, is an accepted predictor of the disease.

"Earlier there was great resistance to reporting names and partner notification on civil liberties grounds," said Larry Gostin, a professor of public health at Harvard who is director of the American Society of Law and Medicine. "The consensus was that AIDS was so devastating and so stigmatizing that people would be afraid to come forward if lists of names were kept. That kind of consensus has shattered now. What changed the calculus of it all was the announcement of the benefit of early treatment."

VARIETY OF POLICIES

From the outset of the AIDS epidemic, the nation has had an array of conflicting policies. A few states, especially those like Colorado with relatively few cases, embraced the standard approach to communicable diseases by keeping track of people infected.

But now other states have begun to follow suit. The most recent is New Jersey, which ranks fourth highest in AIDS cases. A new law there requires the Health Department to keep a confidential list of infected people tested by physicians, hospitals and clinics. Anonymous testing is being retained as an alternative, but the 16 sites offering it are being cut to 6.

"States are clearly moving away from strictly anonymous testing," concluded a survey published in December by the AIDS Policy Center at George Washington University. "There is a clear trend to insure that public health officials have access to patient names." The idea is to allow follow-up care and to inquire about patients' sex partners and drug abusers with whom they may have shared needles.

The study found that 9 states were recording the names of people whom tests showed to be infected with the AIDS virus, 15 states were recording the names of infected people who had been tested by physicians and clinics but not of those who had used anonymous testing centers, and 4 states were recording names in special cases like infected blood donors.

Another study, by Dr. Gostin, showed that by the end of 1988, 11 states had law, requiring the tracing of sex partners and 15 had quarantine laws on AIDS that allowed the authorities to detain people who were knowingly spreading the disease. The study did not cover states that may have such provisions imposed not by law but through regulations issued by public health officials.

IDEOLOGICAL CLASH

Resisting the trend are New York and California, the states with the most full-fledged AIDS cases, together accounting for 42 percent of the 128,319 cases nationwide reported to the Centers for Disease Control as of March 31. The clash of public health versus private liberties flared anew in New York this year. Controversy over Dr. Woodrow A. Myers's partner-tracing and quarantine policies as Indiana State Health Commissioner nearly derailed his appontment as New York City's new Health Commissioner.

Major policy changes had already been proposed by the previous City Health Commissioner, Dr. Stephen C. Joseph. Speaking at last June's international AIDS conference, Dr. Joseph urged more aggressive testing, name reporting and tracing of those to whom the virus might have been spread. His speech prompted angry protests by gay rights advocates, AIDS victims and some medical experts. At a state legislative hearing in December, he urged a "shift to a disease-control approach, along the lines of classic tuberculosis practices."

Dr. Joseph's plan was shelved by Edward I Koch, then the Mayor. The new Mayor David N. Dinkins, has not revived it.

In an interview, Dr. Joseph said: "We're missing a critical opportunity, for the first time, to get ahead of the virus. We have clear health benefits to offer those who are infected. Early diagnosis is to the benefit of both society and the individual."

Dr. Joseph noted that one of the last things he did before leaving office in December was to order the detention of a tuberculosis patient who had failed to take the medicine prescribed to stop her from being infectious to others. There was no publicity, no debate and no protest over that order. Nor, he said, was there any controversy over the city's longstanding policy of collecting the names of thousands of people with syphilis every year and asking them to identify their sex partners.

GAY RIGHTS OPPOSITION

A prominent spokesman on the other side is Thomas B. Stoddard, director of Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, a gay rights organization. "The basic issue is, How do we protect the health of the largest number of people?" he said.

Arguing that standard disease-control methods are self-defeating against AIDS, Mr. Stoddard cited a drop in testing in South Carolina when it began taking names, and a rise in Oregon when it began offering anonymous tests.

To avoid driving people away, a growing number of states offer testing, with names or without. Dr. Joseph favors retaining anonymous procedures "for those who will not accept testing any other way."

The American Medical Association in December endorsed reporting to health officials the names of people infected with the AIDS virus and notifying sex partners.

As these policies evolve, these are the core questions that keep coming up:

Should the names of people who test positive for AIDS virus infection be recorded by government health officials?

Should their sex and drug partners be sought by the health agency and warned that they may be infected?

Should someone who knowingly spreads the virus to unsuspecting people be isolated or quarantined?

Or are keeping track of infected people and tracing their contacts counterproductive, driving away people who are likely to need testing and treatment?

STRICT PRIVACY REPORTED

Despite fears of confidentiality violations, critics have not documented breaches as partners have been traced for other sexually transmitted diseases. Public health officials say they have maintained strict privacy for the 117,000 patients whose diagnoses of AIDS have been reported to state health agencies. Unauthorized disclosures have occurred from other sources, like physicians, hospitals, insurance companies and employers.

Opponents of tracing sex partners argue that it has failed to eradicate venereal disease. A New York City study showed that people often withhold names when asked to identify partners. But proponents say no one ever maintained that partner tracing was the sole answer, and add that without it, the spread of sexually transmitted diseases would be far worse.

In Colorado, Health Commissioner Thomas M. Vernon praises partner tracing as a success in AIDS prevention. About 900 infected people have been interviewed, yielding the names of 1,500 sex or drug partners. Of those, 200 had already been tested and 700 were persuaded to do so, uncovering about 100 new infections. In all, 1,200 people at risk were reached, and whether or not they took the test, they were counseled on how to avoid AIDS. "That's where you break the chain of future transmission," Dr. Vernon said.

Ronald Bayer, who teaches ethics at Columbia University and wrote a book on AIDS issues, said he did not understand how people could argue that notification was a profound violation of civil liberties.

ISSUE OF TRACING PARTNERS

"There's a moral obligation to notify people who might not know they're at risk," he said. "People have a right to know. To talk about partner notification as the first step to the gulag shows a real confusion."

Some who question the effectiveness of tracing partners for AIDS note the long lag from infection to symptoms, and the anonymity and multiplicity of drug and sex partners. Dr. Gostin of Harvard said, "In the New York or San Francisco gay community, it's almost an exercise in futility." Health experts recommend that every drug user who has shared needles and every man who has had intercourse with another man should assume they may be infected and consider being tested.

Warning partners is more useful for unsuspecting people who are at risk, AIDS experts say. "It's a real women's issue," said Dr. Vernon. "The individuals least likely to be aware are the female mates of closet bisexual men or secret or former intravenous drug users."

Even New York has moved gingerly toward partner tracing. AIDS counselors encourage, but do not require, infected people to alert their partners, and the health department offers to help notify them. A new law enacted last year gives physicians legal permission to notify their patients partners or to refer their names to the health department.

"The physician's so-called permission to warn has not worked," Dr. Joseph told a legislative committee in December. "There have been no referrals to the New York City Department of Health by physicians since the enactment of the law." He urged a tougher "duty to warn" law, requiring notification.

The issue involving infected people who knowingly spread the AIDS virus is especially difficult. No data exist on how often this happens. although there are anecdotal reports. The most celebrated case involved Marc Christian, who won a multimillion-dollar award from Rock Hudson's estate in a suit alleging that the movie star lied about his illness and continued having unsafe sex. Mr. Christian was not infected.

Although New York State health laws could be used to detain someone who was spreading the AIDS virus, they have never been invoked. Dr. Joseph said no one had ever brought such a case to his attention.

One longtime proponent of the traditional approach is the New York City Council's Health Committee chairman, Joseph F. Lisa of Queens, who said "The public health approach in New York for the past years has been to encourage ignorance, and I can't believe it's in the best interest of the individual or society."

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ARMSTONG. Of course.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I want to compliment the Senator for his willingness to do that because I think the Kennedy amendment is basically a good amendment. What he is saying is we will leave it up to the States as to how they handle these matters and then he provides for a contact tracing approach for the States to choose. He does not make it mandatory. He leaves it in their discretion.

I believe this is probably the best step we can take now because there is still a tremendous argument on the other side that people will be afraid to come in for testing if we make this too onerous. I, at least, would like to look at what the best approach may be. Over the next year we can look to see how it does work and see if people will come in. The one thing that is going to entice them in for testing is going to be the fact they are going to be able to get treatment and care.

So I personally would like to appeal to the distinguished Senator from Colorado and tell him that I appreciate, first of all, that he is willing to accept these two amendments, and so am I, and that he is willing to let this sit overnight and see if he feels that the Kennedy amendment will be enough for this year.

I would be very appreciative of the idea of accepting these amendments and letting this matter be reconsidered overnight with all of us looking at it in good faith to see where we are going from there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I appreciate both the concern that I know the Senator from Colorado has on this particular issue and the comments of the Senator from Utah.

This is, as we have known even in the brief discussion here and at other times, an enormously complicated issue. There is justification for concern on all sides of this issue, and it is a difficult call. It is difficult to argue against doing the utmost in terms of partner notifications. Certainly, there is a compelling case for that.

There is also the practical reality, Mr. President, that when you move from going from an anonymous type of testing even into a confidential type of testing, we have seen dramatic changes in results. I understand the State of Colorado has just altered and changed its program to facilitate anonymous testing. What we have seen is when we have the anonymous testing, there has been a significant increase in participation in various testing programs. Even when you have confidentiality protections in some instances, there has been a general decline in participation. That has been the medical results.

So if you have a decline of those who are at the greatest risk, even if you have partnership notification, in terms of a public health question, you have to ask are you reaching more people that way or through the way we are attempting to devise, that is the greatest degree of flexibility in terms of the States so that in different parts of the States they can fashion and shape a type of program that will achieve the desirable outcome that I think all of us are interested in.

